That is, if a Kentiſhman ſhall buy any Thing in Lundenwyc, let him get Two or Three Honeſt Men, or the King's Portreeve, to bear Witneſs, &c. From whence Somner infers, that this was not only a Market-Town then, but the Principal one in Kent. R. Forts, p. 10. From which Port the Ships were uſually bound for London, and then they went in at the Eaſt End of Sandwich Harbour, or rather of the Portus Rutupenſis, and went out of it at Reculver, or Northmouth; and ſo avoided going round by the North-Foreland.

And from hence a good Reaſon may be given for the Fame and Credit of St. Mildred, in the City of London, where Two Churches are Dedicated to her; one in Bread-ſtreet, and another in the Poultrey; for the Merchants being obliged to pay a Duty to the Nunnery of St. Mildreds in Thanet, would no doubt Celebrate her, and ſpread about her Fame in London; and according to the Humour and Run of thoſe Times, would think it the beſt way to ſecure her Bleſſings and Favours to them, and their Traffick, to Erect Churches to her, and Dedicate them to the Honour of this Royal Saint; and the ſame Thing alſo was actually done in Canterbury, and in ſome other Places of this County.

There can be no doubt but that Sandwich was once a very good Port, as appears from abundance of Paſſages in Hiſtory, ſome of which I have above given you: And the Writer of Queen Emma's Life, when he ſpeaks of King Cnute's Landing here, ſaith it was the moſt Famous of all the Ports in England.

The Old Mouth of the Haven of Sandwich, lies, as I am informed, near Two Miles Eaſt South-Eaſt of the preſent one, and about Two Miles and a half from Sandown-Caſtle. Camden and Plott ſay, it was ſpoiled by the ſinking of the great Ship of Pope Paul the IVth, but I gueſs it was done long before.

I make no manner of doubt, but that ſomewhere hereabouts, was the Place where Cæſar Landed at both his Deſcents upon Britain, and where his Caſtra Navalia were placed (z), as well as the Caſtrum of his whole Army, which he ſaith was all included within one Line.

And I agree with the Learned Dr. Batteley, (a) that there is more Reaſon to fix the Place of Cæſar's Landing here, than at Deal: For beſides, that the Diſtance of his real Landing-Place from that where he firſt attempted it, and which is ſuppoſed to be Dover, is not in all Editions of Cæſar's Commentaries expreſſed by the ſame Number of Eight Miles; nor the Place of his firſt Attempt to Land ſo accurately deſcribed, as that it can be no other Place but that, in all that Tract of wonderful Cliffs, Mirificæ Moles: (b) Beſides this, I ſay, ſince Cæſar Sailed, as he ſaith ſaith he did both with Wind and Tide, Ventum & Æſtum uno tempore nactus ſecundum; it will be no Diſparagement to the Judgment and Skill of that very great General, if we ſuppoſe he might not compute the Diſtance right, but that he Sailed further than he thought he did; for he had not been uſed to Computations of this Kind, and I dare ſay had no Log-Line to Eſtimate the Diſtance by.

And Dr. Batteley ſhews, that the Learned Dr. Halley, who hath been very accurate in his Calculation of the Time of Cæſar's Landing here, (of which more in its proper Place,) hath not been equally happy in pitching upon the Downs, or Deal, for the Place of it: And the Authority of Dion Caſſius, which he cites to confirm it, makes really againſt him. (a) For as the Latin Verſion of Dion ſaith, that the Place where, in the Action between the Romans and the Britains, they diſputed the Landing of the former, was in Paludibus: So that muſt be allowed to be a better Verſion of the Word πνάγη uſed by Dion, than Dr. Halley's Interpretation of Arenæ madefactæ maris affluxu; for as Batteley ſhews, that Ariſtotle oppoſes ἀμμώδες and πναγῶδες one to another, as ſignifying very differently; the one Sandy, and the other Slabby: So you will find by the Lexicons, that πνάγος is generally uſed for a Muddy and Slimy Place, and therefore can hardly be ſuppoſed to mean ſuch a hard Shore as that about Deal is: Cæſar himſelf ſaith of his Men, that they could not firmiter inſiſtere, which implies the Ground was not Hard, Solid, and Good. And Plutarch ſaith expreſly, that the Place where Scæva leaped on Shore, was ἐν πηφ ελώδει καὶ μετὰ ὕδατος, and near Ῥεύματα πηλώδη; which exactly falls in with the ſame Notion of the Place, that it was Muddy or Slubby.

From this therefore I would ſuggeſt, that the Place where Cæſar Landed, was at or near the Old Mouth of the Portus Rutupenſis, and perhaps nearer to that, than to the Place where Sandown-Caſtle now ſtands: Of this Opinion was Dorell, and Dr. Plott, and I think the Circumſtances will fix it here.

I have been ſeveral Times to view this Place; and could I think, as I do not by any Means, that the Situation of the Neſs here, and of the Shore about it, is the ſame now as it was in Cæſar's Time, I ſhould make no doubt of aſſerting, that the Place of his Landing was between the Sand Hills and the Neſs; where the Shore is ſoft and open, without any Beach, and where his Ships might lye ſafely on the Ouzy Bottom. And this Situation alſo, would account for his Veſſels being filled with the Sea, at the tumbling in of the Water at the next Spring Tide. Which Thing Cæſar was entirely ignorant of: as probably he was in Part about the Nature of the common Tides, having not been much uſed to the Sea. After this Accident he drew up his Ships higher upon the Shore, and ſecured them againſt the Invaſion of the Tides any more. But I can't think that thoſe Sand-hills which we ſee near this Place, are the Remains of that Work; though the great Cambden incline to that Opinion, and ſaith, that they have been called Romeſwork; indeed I can't hear of any ſuch Name, but they are called the Sandhills, and the little Downs; and theſe Sand Banks are ſo numerous, and do take up ſuch a Length, (for they run along the Shore, I believe for near Four Miles together, beginning juſt at Sandown-Caſtle;) and they are placed ſo very irregularly; that I rather take them to have been accidentally caſt up there by the Winds and Tides, than to have been the Product of Mens Hands, and placed there out of any Deſign. But if the Shore were of the ſame Nature in Cæſar's Time, as it is now, and its Situation not much different, it will afford us an eaſy Account how Cæſar might come by Sand enough to form his Caſtra Navalia, and to ſecure his Shipping in the way that he tells us he did.

Edward Mountague, Eſq; who had the ſole Command of the Engliſh Fleet, in the late Uſurpation, and who delivered it up to King Charles the IId, on his Reſtoration, was by that King made Lord Montague of St. Neots, Viſcount Hitchingbrook, and Earl of Sandwich.

Lambard is of the Opinion, and for it he quotes Leland's Authority, that this Town of Sandwich grew up upon the Ruins of Richborough, which they are inclined to think was once a City, and a Port; but this I ſhall further conſider, when I come to ſpeak of that Place in the Chapter of Caſtles.

A. D. 1580, April 6. ſo great an Earthquake was felt here, that the Ships on the Sea were ſhaken, and the Sea put into a very great Diſorder. Kilburn.

Since Archbiſhop Uſher, and Biſhop Stillingfleet, have made it probable that St. Paul, the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, was in Britain, (a) it is very likely that he landed hereabouts; this Harbour being then the moſt uſual Place of Landing for Perſons who came from the Continent; which Opinion Dr. Batteley (b) ſtrengthens alſo from this Line of Venantius Fortunatus, in his Life of St. Martin, in which, ſpeaking of St. Paul's coming hither, he ſaith,

An ABSTRACT of the Charter for the Town of Sandwich, granted March 5. 1685.

1. THE Town to be a Free Town and and Port of itſelf.

2. The Firſt Mayor, and Twelve Jurats, to be named by the King; as alſo the Firſt High-Steward, Recorder, and Common-Clerk; the Land and Water-Treaſurer, the Common-Wards-Man, and the Twenty Four Common-Council.

3. For the Time to come, the Mayor to be choſen the Morrow after St. Andrew's-Day, in the Guild-Hall.

4. In Caſe of the Death of the Mayor, any Jurats, Common-Council, &c. others to be choſen in their Room; and ſo for High-Steward and Recorder.

5. The Recorder, and his Deputy, to be Sworn to execute their Office well; and to be Juſtices of the Peace.

6. The Land-Treaſurer, Common-Wardſman, and other Inferior Officers, to be choſen by the Mayor; and the Water-Treaſurer by him, with the Jurats and Common-Council.

7. They alſo to appoint or chuſe the Attorneys in the Court of Record.

8. The Mayor, his Deputy, and Jurats, to be Juſtices of Peace, to hold Seſſions; and to be Sworn before Sir Henry Palmer, William Rook, Walter Braems, and John Caſon, or any Two of them.

9. The King reſerves a Power of removing any Officer by an Order of Council.

10. Two Fairs, April the 1ſt, and October the 1ſt, for Buying and Selling all manner of Cattel.

11. To have Power to make By-laws to govern the Town, its Artificers, &c. to Levy Money for the King's or Town's Uſe, and to Impoſe and Levy Fines, and Penalties.

12. A Court of Record to be kept every Thurſday.

13. Liberty

13. Liberty to purchaſe Lands not exceeding 200 l. per Ann.

14. All Freemen to take the Oath of Allegiance, and to produce Certificates of their receiving the Sacrament.

15. To enjoy all former Rights and Privileges not altered by this New Charter; and if any ſuch are loſt, the King is to reſtore them, on their Petition.

The Mayor of Sandwich carries a black knotted Staff; whereas the Mayors of the other Ports wear uſually white Staves.

There is a Pariſh called Brightlingſea in Eſſex, Eight Miles from Colcheſter, which is under the Juriſdiction of the Mayor of Sandwich.

To this Port of Sandwich there do belong as Members or Limbs, Fordwich, Reculver, Serre, and Dele: And their Complement of Ships which they were to fit out in the Navy of the Ports was Five. As Lambard gives it us from the Latin Cuſtumale of Hithe. Peramb. Kent. 122.

And in another old French Record mentioned by him, Stonar is alſo reckoned as a Member of this Port. But I ſhall ſpeak of theſe Matters more fully when I come to the Cinque Ports.

SARRE, anciently Serre; in the Iſle of Thanet.

This was once a diſtinct Pariſh by it ſelf, and the Church was dedicated to St. Giles; but it is now accounted as a Part of St. Nicholas's Pariſh: Under which I have given you an Account of the Parſonage and Manor.

Twine ſaith, that anciently here was a good Haven, (i. e.) when the famous Portus Rutupenſis was in Being; that Haven or Road for Ships ran by this Place in its Way out into the Sea at Norhmuthe, near Reculver; but now there is only a ſmall Brook, with a little wooden Bridge over it, by which there is a Paſſage into the Iſle of Thanet for Carriages. Perhaps the old Name of this River in the Romans Time was Sarræ; there being mention made in the Notitia, of a Britiſh River of that Name. And in a Charter of King Eadbert, recorded among the Annals of St. Auſtin in Canterbury, are theſe Words:

Do duarum Navium tranſvectionis 'cenſum in loco cujus vocabulum eſt ad Serræ, ſicut à Regibus Merciorum Ethelbaldo & Offa longe ante conceſſum eſt Tributum in loco cujus vocabulum eſt Lundenwic.

Which is ſomething in Confirmation of the Tradition, that anciently at Sarre was the middle Station for Ships between the Two Mouths of the old Portus Rutupenſis.

SEALE, lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Part of Kent, about two Miles Northward from Sevenoak, in the Bailiwick of Sutton-Bromley, Hundred of Codſheath, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and lower one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church (which was ſome time a Chapel of Eaſe to Kemſing,) is dedicated to St. Peter, and not rated apart in the King's Books.

In the Church are or were Memorials of the Interment of Thomas Brenton, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Confeſſor to King Richard the IId: And of Bryene or Bruin a Knight, Lord of Seal and Kemſing, both above 400 Years ſince.

The Liberty of Sevenoak claims here; and That of the Dutchy of Lancaſter claims over the Manor of Seale.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor of Seale; this belonged to the Crown till the firſt Year of King John; and then it was paſſed away by Grant to Baldwine de Betune Earl of Albemarle; whoſe Daughter Hawis carried it in Marriage to William Marſhal Earl of Pembroke; but his Son Gilbert Marſhal dying without Iſſue, Roger de Bigod Earl of Norfolk, in Right of his Mother Maud, who was Siſter to this Gilbert, got Poſſeſſion of this Manor: And in the 11th Year of King Edward the 1ſt, ſettled it by Deed of Gift on Otho Lord Grandiſon. About the Beginning of King Richard the IId, this Eſtate went from the Grandiſon Family, to that of Bryan or Bryene; one of which, a Knight as is above-mentioned, had a Monument of him in Armour in Seale Church; and died in the Year 1395. At his Head on the Monument was a Horn, which made the Vulgar think him to have been a great Hunter; but Philpot ſaith it was to ſhew, that he held his Land in Cornage Tenure, which was a kind of Grand-Serjeantry: And the Service was to blow a Horn, on any Invaſion from Abroad. In proceſs of Time this Service came to be compounded for in Money; as many others of this Nature were: And then the Sheriff accounted for it to the King, under the Title of Cornage, Cornagium. From this Name of Bryenne it went into the Poſſeſſion of another equally Honourable; viz. That of Fiennes about the End of King Henry the IVth: And James Fiennes in the 25th Year of King Henry the VIth was ſummoned to Parliament as Baron of Say and Seale. But William Lord Say in the ſecond Year of King Edward the IVth, ſold this Eſtate to Geoffrey Boleyne, Grandfather to Sir Thomas Boleyne, who was created Viſcount Rochford by King Henry the VIIIth; whoſe unfortunate Son George Viſcount Rochford being beheaded, and leaving no Iſſue, this Manor went to Queen Elizabeth in Right of her Mother Queen Anne of Boleyne: And ſhe in the firſt Year of her Reign granted it to her Kinſman Henry Cary; whoſe Grandſon Henry Cary Earl of Dover, ſold it to Richard Sackville Earl of Dorſet; and he to Richard Smith commonly called Dog Smith, who dying without Iſſue, bequeathed it with other Land to St. Thomas's Hoſpital in Southwark.

2. Hall Place in Seale; this was in the 36th Year of King Edward the IIId, in the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Champneys; but he ſold it to Sir William Wroth of Enfield; and he did the ſame by it in the 2d Year of King Richard the IId to Thomas Lovell: And in the 11th Year of King Henry the IVth it paſſed the ſame Way from the Lovells into the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Theobald; where it ſtaid but till the 24th Year of King Henry the VIIth, and then was alienated to William Porter; in which Name it continued till Elizabeth, an Heir of that Family, carried it in Marriage to Mr. Peter Stowell, Regiſter of the Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

3. Stidulfe is another Manor in Seale, which once, and that very early, was the Seat of a Family of that Name: But about the 11th Year of King Henry the VIth, William Stidulfe ſold it to William Quintin; who, for Reaſons mentioned in our Account of Leybourn, changed his Name to Oliver: And here it ſtaid till the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth, and then was alienated to Richard Theobald; whoſe Son John exchanged it with his Kinſman Stephen Theobald; who left only two Daughters Catherine, one of whom married Edward Mitchell; and the other Margaret was married to David Pollhill; and they ſhared his Inheritance: And this Eſtate went to Mitchell; in whoſe Family it was in Philpot's Time.

4. Nulcomb is an Eſtate here which in King Edward the IIId's Time, was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Thomas Cawne, who lies buried under an Arch in the Wall of the Chancel of Igtham Church.

SEASALTER, Seſultre, lies at the North Side of Kent, adjoining to the Sea, about Four Miles North Eaſtward from Feverſham, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. It is in no Hundred, but hath a Conſtable of its own.

'Tis in the Deanery of Weſt Bere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. The Church is called St. Alphage, and was appropriated to Chriſt-Church in Canterbury by Pope Gregory, A. D. 1234. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 11 l.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims over the Manor of Seaſalter, it being given to that Church by King Henry the VIIIth, in the 33d Year of his Reign.

There are four yearly Fairs kept here; on March 25, June 24. Sept. 29. and Dec. 25.

Places of Note here:

1. Seaſalter Manor; this belonged of old to the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, but by whoſe Donation I can't find. In Domeſday Book 'tis valued at two Plow-Lands, and rated at 5 l. At the Diſſolution, King Henry the VIIIth ſettled it on the Cathedral Church of Canterbury.

2. Ellenden is a Place here which anciently belonged to the Monaſtery of Feverſham, being given to it by one John Ellenden. After the Diſſolution it was granted to Mr. John Arden, who was miſerably aſſaſſinated by his Wife at Feverſham: But firſt he had ſold this Place to John Needham; whoſe Son of the ſame Name in the 32d Year of Queen Elizabeth, ſold it to Mr. Michael Beresford of Weſtram; who alſo not long after paſſed it the ſame Way to Sir George Newman, D. LL. in whoſe Son's Poſſeſſion Mr. George Newman of Rocheſter it was in Philpot's Time.

It appears by Mr. Symondſon's old Map of Kent, which I believe was very exact then; that the Courſe of the Water here was very different from what it is now; for he makes it to turn away Eaſtward from Seaſalter; whereas in the new Maps it comes by Hearne Hill, and Graveny, and tends from the South thither.

SELLINDGE, lies towards the South Eaſt Side of Kent, by the River Stoure, about three Miles and an half North Weſtward from Hithe; in the Lath of Shipway, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. Part of it is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Stouting, and the Reſt is in the Bailiwick of Shipway, and Hundred of Streete. 'Tis all in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Streete, and is called St. Mary's. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 4 s. 5 d. per Ann.

In the Church are Memorials of ſome of the ancient and eminent Family of the Godfreys: As alſo of the Henmans, and of the Barns. Mr. Mantle of Horton Priory built a Gallery in this Church, A. D. 1630.

Places of Note here:

1. Wilmington, 2. Somervill, theſe formerly gave the Seat, and the former of them the Sirname, to a Family of Note in theſe Parts. Roger de Wilmington died poſſeſs'd of them in the 11th Year of King Edward the IIId; he left Four Daughters Coheirs, who were married to Ordmero, Bromming, Brockhall, and St. Lawrence; and on the Diviſion theſe Manors went to St. Lawrence; and John, Son of Thomas St. Lawrence, held them at his Death, in the 10th Year of King Richard the IId; but his Son Thomas St. Lawrence leaving only a Daughter Catherine, by her they went in Marriage to Sir William Apuldrefield; who, about the latter End of King Henry the VIth, ſold them to Aſhburnham and Till; the latter of theſe bought out the former, and in the Deſcendants of Till's Family they both continued, till King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and then by a Daughter they went to Peter Henman, Eſq; whoſe Great Grandſon Sir Henry Henman, Baronet, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Haringe. This, as long ago as the Reign of King William the Iſt, was in the Poſſeſſion of Hugh de Gurney, a Norman, who came in with that Victorious Prince: Next it became the Inheritance of the Sharſtedes; and Robert de Sharſtede, who lived in King Edward the Iſt, and King Edward the IId, and King Edward the IIId's Reigns, died poſſeſs'd of it in the 8th Year of the laſt named King. But after this it came ſomehow into the Poſſeſſion of the Brockhalls of Saltwood; and from that Name went by Sale into that of Aſhburnham; and continued here till about the End of King Henry the VIth, and then was ſold to Ingleſthorp; whence in the Beginning of King Henry the VIIth it paſſed the ſame Way to Morton; and hence, after a pretty long Stay, it was alienated to Willoughby; and Sir Francis Willoughby ſold it to Ralph Heyman, Eſq; whoſe Son Sir Peter Heyman ſettled it on his Second Son Peter Heyman; and in his Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time.

4. Hodiford; This formerly had Proprietors of its own Name, and who reſided here; but next it went into the Name of Carden, and thence by Sale to Cobbe; and from that Family it paſſed the ſame way to Thomas Godfrey, Eſq; who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time, who ſpeaks of him as a Man of Learning, and as a friendly Aſſiſtant to him.

5. Selling Manor, of this Philpot ſaith Nothing: But I find by the Records of the Proceedings before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, that it was then rated at 10 l. per Ann. And that Hugo de Vynon claimed it by a Grant made from King Henry the IIId, to his Anceſtors; and the Jury allowed the Claim to be good. It had before this Grant been the Eſtate of William de Planes a Norman, and after that of William de Putot.

SELLING lies towards the North Part of Kent, about two Miles and an half South Eaſtward from Feverſham, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. Part of it is in the Hundred of Feverſham, where the Liberty of St. Auſtin claims, as it doth alſo over the Manor of Selling. The Reſt of the Pariſh is in the Hundred of Boughton, under Blean. 'Tis all in the Deanery of Oſſpring, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 6 l. 13 s. 2 d. per Ann. The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Boughton, and is dedicated to St. Mary. In its Windows are fine painted Glaſs: And on the Floor a Braſs Plate, with two Figures of John Gate and his Wife, in 1522; another over William Norwood, B. D. in 1596.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, the King claimed the Advowſon of this Church; but the Jury gave the Right to be in St. Auſtin's Abbey: which then alſo claimed to have all the Privileges of a Manor here.

Places of Note here:

1. Selling Manor. This in the 14th Year of King Henry the IIId, was in the Poſſeſſion of William de Putot; and from that Name it went into the Badeleſmere Family: Guncelin de Badeleſmere, who lived here in the 29th Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, left it to his Son Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere, who forfeited it with his Life to the Crown, in the next Reign. But King Edward the IIId, graciouſly in his 2d Year reſtored this Manor to his Son Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere: But in Ten Years after he died Childleſs, leaving his Eſtate to be divided between Four Siſters: Of whom the Eldeſt Margaret, carried this Eſtate to her Husband Sir John Tiptoft; his Deſcendant Tiptoft was created Earl of Worceſter, A. D. 1450; and was alſo Lord Treaſurer, and Lord High Conſtable of England; but eſpouſing the Intereſt of the Houſe of York, he fell a Sacrifice to the Fury of the Earl of Warwick, and was Beheaded on Tower-Hill in the Year 1469; on which this Eſtate was forfeited to the Crown; where it ſtaid till King Edward the VIth's Reign, and then was granted in his 4th Year to Sir Anthony St. Leger; who ſoon after ſold it to Sir Anthony Sondes of Throwley, who was of the Bed-Chamber to that King, as he had alſo been to his Father; and his Deſcendant Sir George Sondes, Knight of the Bath, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time: He was afterwards by King Charles the IId created Earl of Feverſham: And by his 2d Daughter and Coheir, the Lady Catherine Sondes, it went in Marriage to Lewis Earl of Rockingham, the Preſent Worthy Lord Lieutenant of this County; and his Son and Heir Edward Lord Sondes of Lees-Court in Shelwitch, is the Preſent Poſſeſſor of this Manor.

2. Oven-Court. This was as early as King Henry the IIId's Time, poſſeſs'd by a Family of the Name of Oven: After this it became the Eſtate of the Drylands of Cokes-Ditch in Feverſham: Next the Foggs were the Proprietors of it, where after a Stay of divers Years, it was ſold to Crouch; and Giles Crouch, A. D. 1588, alienated it to Michael Sondes, Eſq; who was afterwards Knighted. And hence again it went by Sale to Mr. Franklin; and thence the ſame way to Lamb; in which Name it continued in Philpot's Time.

3. South-Houſe. This was formerly a Seat of a Family of this Name, who had a Vault in the Church, where ſeveral of them were buried.

Mr. Philpot ſaith, that William Selling, who was educated in, and afterwards Prior of the Monaſtery of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, was born here.

He had a Licenſe from his Convent to travel into Italy, where he much improved his Studies, and got ſo good a Reputation, that King Henry the VIIth ſent him Ambaſſador to the Court of Rome. He died in the Year 1494.

More of him in my Account of that Convent.

SEVENOKE, vulgarly Sennock; in the Textus Roffenſis Seoven Aca; i. e. Seven Oaks, becauſe anciently there were Seven ſuch Trees here of a great Height and Bigneſs: Lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Part of Kent, about Four Miles and an half North Eaſtward from Weſtram, in the Bailiwick of Sutton-Bromley, Hundred of Codſheath, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Lower one of Juſtices in that Lath.

The Liberty of Sevenoke claims over it; and That of the Dutchy of Lanceſter claims at Bradbourn in this Pariſh.

'Tis in the Deanery of Shoreham, and conſequently a Peculiar of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but 'tis in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

The Rectory is valued in the King's Books at 13 l. 6 s. 8 d. and the Vicarage at 15 l. 3 s. 0 d. per Ann. The Church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. In this Church was formerly a Chapel or Chantry, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary; of which one Robert Law was Prieſt, and was buried here in 1400. In the Church alſo are or were Memorials of the Interment of Edward Bowrochier or Bourchier, commonly called Bowſer, Son of Sir Thomas Bourchier, Lord of Berners; and of Agnes his Wife, Daughter of Sir Thomas Carleton; he was Grand Nephew to Thomas Bourchier, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who bought Knoll Houſe of the Lord Say and Seale, and which he built almoſt anew, and left to his Relations, in 1496. Of Thomas and Clemence Brook, in 1510. Of John Yardly, Serjeant at Arms to King Henry the VIIIth. Of Robert Totleburſt, Servant to Cardinal Bourchier, in 1512. Of William Potkine, in 1499, whoſe Deſcendant John Potkine was a great Benefactor to the Free-School here. Here are now alſo Memorials of the Interment of ſome of the Families of Lambert and Farnaby; and of Baſwell and Clark.

A Market is kept in this Town on Saturdays, and Two Fairs yearly; on June 29. and on December 6.

In this Pariſh about the Year 1450, did Jack Cade, that inſolent Rebel, after a long Fight, ſlay Sir Humphrey Stafford, William Stafford, Eſq; and ſeveral other Gentlemen of Note, who were ſent by King Henry the VIth to ſuppreſs the Rebellion: Of which more in another Place.

This Town is a Kind of a Corporation, and their Stile is, The Wardens and Aſſiſtants of the Town and Pariſh of Sevenoaks, and of Queen Elizabeth's Free-School here; of which, and of the Hoſpital here founded by William Sevenoke, I ſhall ſay more in its proper Place.

Places of Note here:

1. Blackball. This was anciently in the Poſſeſſion of a Family of the Name of Totiburſt: For William de Totiburſt enjoyed it in the Reigns of King Edward the IIId, and King Richard the IId; and his Deſcendant Robert Totiburſt was Servant to Cardinal Bourchier, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and lies buried in this Church. But his Son Thomas Totiburſt, Eſq; Juſtice of the Peace for this County, did about the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign alienate it to Mr. Ralph Boſwell, whoſe great Grandſon Sir Leonard Boſwell died without Iſſue: And his Siſter, Widow of Sir William Boſwell, was as Heir General the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

2. Bradbourn. This was once Part of the Poſſeſſions of Baldwin de Betun, Earl of Albemarle; and came to him thus: Falcatius de Brent, who ſo vigorouſly defended and ſupported King John againſt his Barons, and who defeated the Deſigns of thoſe Forces which Lewis the Dauphin of France had brought over hither, againſt that King; afterwards engaging againſt King Henry the IIId, and ſeizing on the Caſtle of Bedford, which was got out of his Hands with great Difficulty, forfeited his Eſtate here to the Crown; which King Henry the IIId, in his Fifth Year, granted to the Earl of Albemarle above-named. His Daughter and Heir Hawiſe, carried it in Marriage to her Husband, William Marſhall, Earl of Pembroke; whoſe Deſcendant Gilbert Marſhall dying without Iſſue, Roger de Bi-

Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, entred upon it in Right of his Mother Maud, Marſhall's Siſter and Heir, and in the 11th Year of King Edward the Iſt, ſettled it on Otho Lord Grandiſon; from which Family it went ſome-how into that of Pevenly or Pemley; for Walter de Pevenly was poſſeſs'd of it in King Edward the IIId's Reign, and probably built the Houſe called in Old Deeds, Pevenly or Pemley Court: But before King Henry the VIth's Time, this Name was extinct here; and thence it went into that of Aſhe, a Family which had large Poſſeſſions in theſe Parts, and in ancient Deeds are written de Fraxino. And Philpot thinks they were deſcended from Thomas de Eſhe, who was one of the Recognitores Magnæ Aſſiſæ, in the 4th Year of King John's Reign: The Aſhes probably built a good Part of this Seat; for their Arms, viz. Az. 3 Cheverons Argent, were formerly in many Places of the Windows here. At length in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, it was ſold out of this Family to Mr. Ralph Boſwell: and from him went, as Blackhall above-mentioned, to the Lady Margaret Boſwell, his great Grandſon's Siſter: And in her Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time.

3. Rumpſtede, in very old Evidences written Rumſhot, was once the Inheritance of a Family of this Name; amongſt whom Sir William de Rumſtede was eminent in King Edward the IIId's Time, being, as conſtant Tradition hath it, the Foſter Father to William de Sevenoke abovementioned, Founder of the Hoſpital here.

In King Henry the VIth's Reign, this Eſtate was in the Family of Niſell, a Female Heir of which Name marrying with Bere, carried it into that Name; from whence about the Beginning of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign it was demiſed to the Peckhams; and thence to the Bedells: Nicholas Bedell, in the 3d and 4th Years of Philip and Mary, demiſed it to John Stacy of Hollenden; who, about a Year after ſold it to Richard Lane; whoſe Succeſſor Mr. Richard Lane, parted with it to Thomas Lambert, late of Weſtcombe in Greenwich, Eſq;.

4. Knoll, which of old had the ſame Proprietors with Bradbourn and Seale, not far diſtant from it: As Falcatius de Brent, Baldwin de Betun, Earl of Albermarle; William Marſhall Earl of Pembroke, and Roger de Bigod Earl of Norfolk, who in the 11th Year of King Edward the Iſt, granted it to Otho de Grandiſon, with a good deal of other Land. In his Family it ſtaid till the Beginning of King Richard the IId, and then it was conveyed by Sir Thomas Grandiſon to Geoffery de Say: Yet Philpot ſaith, he doth not find that Grandiſon had the entire Poſſeſſion of this Eſtate; for an Inquiſition taken after the Death of Reginald de Cobham, repreſents him (in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId) to have had ſome Part in it. But however the Inheritance was fully in Geoffery de Say, as appears by the Court Rolls, which commence from the Time of King Richard the IId. Joan, one of Geoffery de Say's Daughters and Heirs, carried this Eſtate by Marriage to Sir William Fiennes; whoſe Succeſſor Sir William Fiennes, alienated it to Thomas Bourchier, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who added much to the Magnificence of the old Houſe, and at his Death bequeathed it to the See of Canterbury, as a Palace for his Succeſſors. And Archbiſhop Morton built much here.

But afterward in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, not William Warham, as Philpot ſaith, but Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury obſerving that the Grandeur of it occaſioned the Envy and Murmur of ſome of the Lay Courtiers, he, in the 29th Year of that Reign exchanged it with the Crown for other Lands; as he did alſo the ſumptuous Palace at Otford, built by Archbiſhop Warham, at the Expence of 33,000 l. And there it continued, till King Edward the VIth, in the 2d Year of his Reign, granted it to Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerſet, Protector of the Kingdom, during that Prince's Minority; but on his Conviction of Felony it eſcheated to the Crown again; and was that Year granted to John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland; on whoſe Execution it returned once more to the Crown; and then was by Queen Mary granted to her Couſin Reginald Pool, Cardinal, for his Life, and a Year after, as he by Will ſhould determine. After his Death it came to the Crown a third Time; and then Queen Elizabeth in the IIId Year of her Reign, granted it to Robert Dudley, Earl of Leiceſter; who the ſame Year reſigning it back into the Queen's Hands, ſhe leaſed it firſt to John Leonard of Chevening, Eſq; and in the 7th Year of her Reign gave it to Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurſt, afterwards Earl of Dorſet, and then Lord Treaſurer to that Queen. In whoſe Noble Family it ſtill continues: Being now the Seat of the Right Honourable the preſent Earl of Dorſet and Middleſex; is a very large Houſe, and finely ſituated in a noble Park.

4. The Honour of Sevenoke was granted by Queen Elizabeth to her Kinſman Henry Carey Lord Hunſdon, in the firſt Year of her Reign; whoſe Grandſon Henry Carey Earl of Dover, alienated it to Richard Sackville Earl of Dorſet, Grandſon to Thomas Sackville Earl of Dorſet, abovementioned.

5. Kepinton is a Place which of old belong'd to the Lords Cobham of Cobham; as appears by an Inquiſition in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId, Rot. Eſc. N. 62. And at long Run, by a Daughter of that Family, came into that of Brook; one of whoſe Deſcendants, about the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth, conveyed it to Burges, by whoſe Siſter and Heir it came to Hanger; who alienated it to Cowper, and he to Mr. Thomas Farnaby. And 'tis now the pleaſant Seat of Sir Charles Farnaby.

6. Petthouſe was a Seat anciently belonging to a Family of the Name of Pett: For Pett of this Place in the End of King Henry the VIIth, bought the Manor of Woodland in Kingſdown by Wrotham, of the Family of St. Clere.

In the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt, a Complaint was brought before the Juſtices Itinerant againſt Ralph de Bernes, David le Gaunt, and others whom the King had appointed Guardians of the See of Canterbury, on the Deceaſe of Archbiſhop John Peckham; by William, Jordan, and Henry, Sons of Thomas de Morant; that they had unjuſtly detained from them ſeveral Lands, Tenements, &c. of Right belonging to them in Sevenoke and Chevening. The Guardians pretended, that the Lands held of the Archbiſhop; and that therefore they were to have the Poſſeſſion of them, till the Children of Morant, who were Minors, ſhould come to be of full Age. The Jury found that the Tenure was of Gavel-Kind; and that this did not hold of the Archbiſhop immediately any more than one Meſſuage, 27 Acres of Arable, 9 of Meadow, and 3 of Woodland; and that becauſe of that Kind of Tenure, there could be no Wardſhip to the Archbiſhop; and alſo that the Archbiſhop had no Right to Wardſhip on the Weſtern Side of the Water of Medway.

SEVINGTON, lies towards the South-Eaſt part of Kent, by the River Stoure, about Two Miles South-Eaſtward from Aſhford, in the Baliwick and Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway. Wye claims over this Place, by the Name of the Yoke of Develand.

'Tis in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury, and the Church is Dedicated to St. Mary; is ſmall, but hath a Spire-Steeple. In it are, or were, Memorials of the Interment of ſeveral of the Knightly Family of the Barries, moſt of them about Three Hundred Year ago; and of John Finch Eſq; of above Two Hundred and Sixty Years ſince.

Wever takes this to be one of the younger Branches of the Finches Family, whoſe Name was originally Herbert, and were deſcended from Henry Fitz-Herbert, Chamberlain to King Henry the Iſt. They changed their Names to Finch, about the Reign of King Henry the IIId.

A Rectory, valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 14 s. 6 d.

Places of Note here:

1. Sevington Manor; this was long ago the Property of the Barries, an Eminent Family in theſe Parts. Sir Robert de Barrie, was in Poſſeſſion of it in King Henry the IId's Reign, and attended that Prince in his Wars in Ireland; and as Camden ſaith, (a) was the firſt that Manned and brought the Hawk to Hand; I ſuppoſe he means in that Kingdom, for I believe Hawking was in Uſe in England before.

(a) See Wever's Fun. Monuments, p. 297.

This Barry was in ſo great Repute in Ireland, that Philpot ſaith they called him then Barrymore, or the great Barry.

2. The Moat; his Deſcendant, William de Barrie, was one of the Recognitores Magnæ Aſſiſa, for this County, in King John's Reign, and lived at the Moat in this Pariſh, as many of his Succeſſors did; ſome of which were Lieutenants of Dover-Caſtle, and others Conſervators of the Peace in this County. The laſt of them was Richard Barry, by whoſe Daughter and Coheir, it went in Marriage to Vincent Bois, Eſq; and his Son Edward Bois, of Betſhanger, Eſq; ſold the Moat here, with the Advowſon of the Church, to his Tenant Alcock, whoſe Daughter marrying a Bois, it came again into that Name, and deſcended to Edward Bois, of Wellesborough, Gent. who is the preſent Poſſeſſor.

SHADOXHERST, lies towards the South Side of Kent, about Three Miles and an half Southward from Aſhford, in the Lower Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Scray; ſo much of it as is in the Burgh of Old Harlackenden, is in the Baliwick of the Seven Hundreds, Hundred of Blackborn, Lath of Scray, and Weſt Diviſion of the County: Another Part is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, Lath of Scray, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County: The reſt is in the Baliwick and Lath of Shipway, Hundred of Ham, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County.

'Tis all in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Limpne; and the Church ſtands in the Hundred of Blackborne, and is Dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

A Rectory, and valued in the Kings Books at 7 l. 13 s.

Places of Note here:

1. Shadoxherſt-Manor; This Place was once the Inheritance of a Family of the Name of Forſtall; and in the 3d of King Henry the Vth. John Forſtall ſold this Manor to Stokis, vulgarly called Stokes; and in this Name it ſtaid a conſiderable Time, but at length was Sold to Randolph, who had an Eſtate alſo about Burham, near Maidſtone. From hence, about the Beginning of King Edward the VIth, it went by Sale to Sir John Taylor, who in the 25th of Queen Elizabeth, paſſed it away to John Taylor, Eſq; Anceſtor to Thomas Taylor, Eſq; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

2. Criolls-Court, in this Pariſh, was one of the Seats of the great Family of that Name of Criol, and Bertram de Criol, died ſeized of it in the 23d of King Edward the Iſt. His Son died without Iſſue, about the Beginning of King Edward the IIId, and Joan, his Siſter, becoming his Heir, carried this Eſtate to her Husband, Sir Richard Rokeſley, one of whoſe Two Daughters, Agnes, carried it to Thomas de Poynings: His Deſcendant, Sir Edward Poynings, fought bravely for King Henry the VIIth at Boſworth, and was by him made a Privy-Counſellor: He died in the 12th of King Henry the VIIIth, without any lawful Iſſue, (for Sir Thomas Poynings was his Natural Son) and by that Means it Eſcheated to the Crown; and King Henry the VIIIth not long after granted it to William Taylor; but by Anne, an only Daughter of this Name, it went in Marriage to Whitfield, then by Sale to More, and in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, the ſame way to Thomas Taylor, Eſq; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Mincing-Court, as 'tis vulgarly called, for Minikens-Court, is a Place here, which once was part of the Revenue of St. Jacobs Hoſpital, in Tannington, by Canterbury: But after the Suppreſſion, it was granted by King Edward the VIth, to Robert Tatteſhall, Eſq; to hold of the Manor of Eaſt Greenwich; from him it went by Sale to Sir Edward Wotton; and by his Succeſſor, the Lord Thomas Wotton's Daughter, it went in Marriage to Henry Lord Stanhope, Son to the Earl of Cheſterfield; and from thence, in King Charles the Iſt's Time, was Sold to Mr. Thomas Harfleet, of Canterbury.

SHEBERTSWOLD, Sybertſwood, Shepherdſwell, lies towards the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Four Miles and a half North-Eaſt from Eleham, in the Bailiwick of Stowting, Hundred of Bewsborough, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; the Church is Dedicated to St. Andrew.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of St. Auſtin, claims here.

A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 6 l. per Annum.

Places of Note here:

1. Weſt-Court; this is a Manor here, which in A. D. 944, was given by King Etheldred, to Alfric, Abbot of St. Auſtins; and not long after, by Scotlandus, his Succeſſor, was given to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and hath ever ſince been a Branch of the Revenue of that See.

2. Upton-Court, is a Place here, which was once the Eſtate of a Family of the Name of Upton; but before the End of King Edward the IIId's Reign, this Family was extinct here; and the Goldburghs ſucceeded, who continued in Poſſeſſion of it till about the beginning of King Henry the VIIth, and then it was Sold to the Guldfords, but ſtaid there only till about the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then went the ſame way to John Bois, Eſq; Anceſtor to John Bois of Fredville, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Wever, p. 266, ſaith, that in this Church were ſome Ancient Monuments of the Philipots, or Philpots; a Family which reſided a long while at Upton-Court, above-mentioned; of which was Sir John Philpot, Lord-Mayor of London, and Knighted in the Field by King Richard the IId, for his good Services againſt Wat Tyler, and the the other Kentiſh Rebels. And this Gentleman, in the 2d Year of King Richard the IId, fitted out a Fleet of Ships at his own Charge, and cleared the Sea of many French, Spaniſh, and Scottiſh Pirates, which did much Miſchief before; taking their Principal Commander, John Mercer, (a Scot) Priſoner.

But for this brave and uſeful Action, he was envied, hated and traduced by the Lazy Nobility of that Time, ſo that his Trouble was a ſufficient Balance to his Glory.

Philpot takes no Notice of this Family's having ever been at Upton-Court, though his Name-ſakes.

In the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt, the Abbot of St. Radigunds complained to the Juſtices Itinerant, that he was diſſeiſed of a common Paſture belonging to the Manor of Sibbertſwold, wherein he had a Right to the running of one Horſe, Four Cows, and a Bull; and on Enquiry the Jury gave it for him, againſt John de Wyneſham, Precentor of St. Pauls in London, Walter de Baldock, Richard de Ken, &c.

SHELDWICH, Shelwich, Scheldwich, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about Three Miles Southward from Feverſham, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Upper one of Juſtices in that Lath: The Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over it, becauſe it is in the Hundred of Feverſham, which belonged to the Abbey of St. Auſtin in Canterbury. 'Tis in the Deanery of Oſpringe, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church was called St. Auſtin James.

A Vicarage, and rated in the King's Books at 6 l. 16 s. 8 d. per Annum.

In the Church are Memorials of the Interment of Sir Richard Atte-Leeze, Knight, and Dyoniſia his Lady, 1394. Of John Cely, 1426; and of Richard Liſle, and Reynold Depre, about that Time.

Places of Note here:

1. Lees-Court: This Place was Anciently Part of the Inheritance of the Family of the Att-Leezes. Sir Richard Att-Leeze was Sheriff of Kent in King Edward the IIId's Reign, and ſeveral Times a Member of Parliament; but he dying without Iſſue, his Brother, Marcellus Att-Leeze, became his Heir; and not long after died, and left only Two Daughters; Lucy, who married John Norton, Eſq; and Cicely, who became the Wife of Valentine Barret, of Perry-Court: Norton had this Eſtate, and in his Family it ſtaid, till Sir Thomas Norton, of Milton, ſold it to Sir Richard Sondes, a Family, which in King Henry the IIId's Reign, reſided at Sondes-Place, at Darkin, in Surrey. This Gentleman's Son and Heir, Sir George Sondes, was Knight of the Bath, and on the old Foundation at Lees-Court, built a very Large and Magnificent Houſe. By King Charles the IId, he was created Earl of Feverſham, and left only Two Daughters Co-heireſſes, Lady Mary, who married the Right Honourable Lewis Lord Duras, Baron of Holmsby, and afterwards Earl of Feverſham, who died without Iſſue; and the Lady Catherine, who married the Right Honourable Lewis Earl of Rockingham, now Lord Lieutenant of this County, whoſe Son and Heir, Edward, Lord Sondes, is the preſent moſt worthy Poſſeſſor of this Noble Seat and Manor.

2. Coperham's-Sole; this Manor for many Years had been, and was in Philpot's Time, in the Poſſeſſion of the Family of Belk, which he judges came out of Denmark hither. Stephen de Belk paid Aid for this Manor, at the Marriage of Iſabella, Siſter to King Henry the IIId, in his 20th Year. And in the Chancel I ſaw a Stone over John Belk, 1633.

4. Shepherds-Forſtall; was for many Deſcents the Inheritance of the Rucks; one of which lies buried in Rye-Church, in Suſſex, and was Bow-Bearer to King Henry the VIIIth. His Arms, Sable, a plain Croſs Argent, between Four Flower-de-Lis's Or. About the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, Nicholas Rucks Dying without Iſſue, gave it to his Nephew, Mr. Nicholas Oliver, who in Philpot's Time, ſold it to All-Souls-College in Oxford.

5. Lords; this in the Reigns of King Edward the IId and IIId, had Poſſeſſors of its own Name. But in King Richard the IId's Reign, it was got ſomehow into the Poſſeſſion of Giles; and one of this Family was Steward to the Abbot of Leſnes in King Edward the IIId's Reign, and here it ſtill abideth.

Among the Donations to the Church of Canterbury, Printed in Somner's Appendix, N. 36. there is this Account of Sheldwich.

A. D. 784, Eadmundus Rex Cantiæ dedit Hwatrede, (perhaps Wightrede) Abbati de Reculare & ejus familiæ ibidem degenti Scheldwic, viz. Terram xij Aratrorum Liberè ſicut Adiſham.

6. Selgrove; this Manor I have given you an Account of in Preſton, lies partly in this Pariſh, and is by Philpot erroneouſly placed in Oſpringe.

SHEPEY-ISLE. This Camden takes to be the Toliatis of Ptolemy; and Lambard ſaith it was ſometimes called Counos, and Couennis; in Latin, Inſula Ovium, and Ovinia; in Saxon Sceapige, the Iſland of Sheep; ſo called, perhaps from its being the Place where the firſt Sheep were kept which were brought hither, or from its affording Plenty of that Species of Animals. But 'tis probable they were firſt brought into this Iſland from abroad; for Cæſar makes no mention of any Sheep being in Britain in his Time, though he reckons up their other Quadrupeds.

Shepey is compaſſed as it were round with the mixt Waters of the Thames and the Medway on the Weſt: with the Genlade, or Swalle on the South, and with the Main Ocean on the North and Eaſt.

It hath great Plenty of good Corn, but wants Wood.

The particular Pariſhes, and Places in it, are deſcribed in their Alphabetical Order: And Queenburgh-Caſtle, and the Coperas Works, will alſo be taken Notice of in their proper Places. 'Tis about Twenty One Miles in Compaſs, and is a Baliwick in the Hundred of Milton.

I ſaw in ſeveral Parts of the Marſhes here, all over the Iſland, many large Tumuli, ſome of which the People call the Coterels; I judge them to have been caſt up in the Memory of ſome of the Daniſh Leaders, who were Buried here: And indeed the Danes have often made this poor Iſland the Scene of their Ravages and Plunder.

A. D. 832, Five and Thirty Sail of them came hither, and ſpoiled the Iſle as much as they could.

A. D. 851, they came and Winter'd here with a great Army.

And again but Four Years after, A. D. 855.

Earl Godwin and his Sons landed here alſo, and haraſſed it grievouſly, A. D. 1052.

There was anciently a Bridge and Cauſeway between this Iſle and Harty: See Harty. This was called Thremhethe-Bridge, as afterwards the Ferry was called Tremod-Ferry.

The common Way into this Iſland from the Main Land of Kent, is by King's-Ferry: where a long Cable of about One Hundred Fathom, (and ſometimes Two, are ſpliced together, ſo as to make a Length of One Hundred and Fifty Fathom) Fathom) being faſtened at each End acroſs the Water, ſerves to get over the Boat by Hand.

On the Main Side of the Ferry there is a ſmall Houſe, or Hut of Stone, Erected by one George Fox; who ſtaying once there a long while in the Cold, waiting for the Boat, and being much affected with it, built this Place to Shelter others from the like Inconvenience. The Houſe will hold about Nine or Ten Perſons.

In the Third of Henry the IVth, the King, in his Letters Patents to the Inhabitants of this Iſland, takes Notice of a certain Sea-Bank, lying from a Place called Tremod-Ferry, to another called Cothelles; which before the Building of Queenborough-Caſtle, being only Four Foot in Breadth, and afterwards by King Edward the IIId, for the Benefit of Carts and Wagons paſſing between the ſaid Ferry, to the ſaid Caſtle, was made Thirty Foot Broad, had ſuffered ſo much Decay, that a ſingle Perſon could ſcarce go upon it; and that the Inhabitants were not able to Repair the ſame, without Aſſiſtance from others; the King therefore grants to them, for the better undergoing the ſaid Work, for the Space of Three Years, theſe ſeveral Cuſtoms; for every Horſeman, being a Stranger, that ſhould go in and out of the Iſland by this Bank, one Penny; for every Footman a half Penny; every loaded Horſe a Penny; and every empty one an Half-Penny. Dugdale's Imbanking, p. 47.

The Statute of the 18th of Elizabeth, Cap. 10. recites, That the Paſſage called King's-Ferry, had been maintain'd Time out of the Memory of Man, at the Charge of all the Inhabitants and Land Occupiers, in the Iſle of Sheppey, by Taxation or Aſſeſſment, at one Court or Law-day, Time out of Mind, Yearly holden on the Monday next after the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, at Kingsborough, within the ſaid Iſle, in the Name of the Queen's Majeſty, and her Progenitors; and enacts, that it ſhall ſtill be duly kept, and that the Jury there Impannel'd and Sworn, ſhall indifferently Tax themſelves, and all other Inhabitants of the Iſle, and Land Occupiers, not exceeding one Penny per Acre for freſh Marſh, and one Penny for Ten Acres of Salt Marſh Yearly; and that the Ferry-Warden, ſhall have full Power to levy the ſame by Diſtreſs, upon the Eſcheats made out by the Steward of the ſaid Court.

At this Law-day, a Ferry-Warden, Two Ferrymen, and a Conſtable, are Yearly choſen; which Officers have Power to appoint a Ferry-keeper, and to remove him on Miſdemeanor, and with the Homage likewiſe, to make Rules and Orders for the good Government of the ſaid Ferry.

By Virtue of theſe Aſſeſſments, and with the Rent of ſome Lands belonging to the Ferry, it has from Time to Time been maintain'd, and the Highway leading to it, through the Marſhes of the Iſland, above a Mile in Length, with a Wall and Wharf againſt the Sea, and a Houſe for the Ferry-keeper, and his Able-bodied Servant, or Servants (for he has always been obliged to keep one at leaſt) to dwell in; Two large Storeboats, and a Skiff, with a Cable of One Hundred and Forty Fathom long, to Tow the Boats from Side to Side with Safety; as a free Paſſage for all Travellers without paying any Thing, except on Four ſet Days Yearly, viz. Palm-Monday, Whit-Monday, St. James's-Day, and Michaelmas, when a Horſeman pays Two-pence, and a Footman one Penny; and excepting all Sundays, and every Night in the Year after Eight a Clock, at which times the Ferry-keeper has of old been allowed to take Six-Pence of every Horſeman, and Two-Pence of a Footman; and in all theſe Caſes, the Inhabitants, and Land-Occupiers to pay, as well as Strangers. A Horſe likewiſe loaded with Goods for Sale, pays Two-Pence always at coming in.

There is one Perquiſite more of old belonging to the Ferry-keeper, which is, a Priviledge to drudge for Oyſters, excluſive of all others within the Compaſs of the Ferry-loop, which extends one Tow's Length, (as they call it) i. e. Sixty Fathom on each Side of the Caſtle. In this Privilege he was lately diſturbed by ſome of the Queenborough Drudgers, who being called to Account in Law for the Treſpaſs, paid the Charges, and ſubmitted without coming to a Trial.

For the ſpace of Eighty Four Years at leaſt, after that Act of 18 Elizabeth was made, there was little Reſort to this Ferry, but what was owing to the private Occaſions of the Iſland: But ſince the Building a Fort, and fixing a Gariſon at Sheerneſs in that Iſland, and ſettling a Yard and Dock there for the Uſe of the Royal Navy of England, ſome Time after the Reſtoration of King Charles the IId, the Traffick to and fro by the ſaid Ferry upon the Publick Account, has vaſtly increas'd. The Effect whereof has been ſenſibly felt in a great Increaſe of Expence and Charge to maintain it. The Horſe-boats have been built larger than of Old, and the Prime Coſt advanc'd from Fifteen Pound, and Seventeen Pound a-piece, to Fifty Pound, and Fifty Seven Pound, and yet they wear out in fewer Years than formerly: As may appear, in that for Ninety Two Years, from the Eighteenth of Queen Elizabeth, there were but Seven new Horſeboats built, and the prime Coſt of 'em all together, amounted to no more than One Hundred Sixty Three Pounds Twelve Shillings; but in Thirty Eight Years following, Six new ones coſt Two Hundred Sixty Three Pounds Ten Shillings: And as for the Aſſeſſments in thoſe Ninety Two Years, there were Five made at the full Extent of One Penny per Acre, but the next Forty Five Years there have been Twenty Five, at the full extended Rate. The Ferry-keeper's Wages is advanc'd likewiſe, from Nine Pounds to Twenty Four Pounds per Annum.

N. B. This Account was carefully extracted out of the Books and Court-Rolls belonging to the Ferry, by the Reverend Mr. Richard Forſter; in which the Aſſeſſments, Diſburſments, Election of Officers, Preſentments, and Orders relating to it, are Yearly enter'd by the Steward.

The Highway leading to this Ferry through the Marſhes, from the Town of Milton, is by the ſame Statute of the Eighteenth of Queen Elizabeth, and another ſubſequent one, 27. Eliz. 26. to be maintain'd by the Occupiers of the Lands lying within Four Miles of the ſaid Ferry on that Side, and at the ſame Rate aſſeſs'd as thoſe in the Iſle, by the Juſtices of the Peace who live within Eight Miles of Milton, or any Three of 'em.

The Manor of Shepey anciently belonged to the Nunnery here, which will be conſidered in its proper Place.

SHIPBORNE, Shepebourn, lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Side of Kent, about Three Miles and a half South Weſt from Wrotham, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Wrotham, Lath of Ailsford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter, and the Church is called St. Giles, which is eſteem'd as a Curacy only, and ſo not Rated in the King's Books.

And there is a Fair here on the firſt of September, being the Day of Giles Abbat.

The Liberty of Wrotham claims here.

Places of Note here :

1. Shipborne Manor; this was formerly the Inheritance of an Ancient Family of the Name of Bavent, but whoſe chief Eſtate lay in Suſſex and Surrey. Adam de Bavent had a Charter of Free-Warren for this Manor, in the Thirteenth Year of King Edward the Iſt, and a Grant of a Market on Mondays, and the Fair above-mentioned. And his Son of the ſame Name, was with that great Prince, in his Expedition into Scotland, and was Created a Banneret at the Famous Siege of Carlaverock there. Roger de Bavent was Summoned as a Baron to Parliament, in the Fourteenth Year of King Edward the IId. And 'tis not unlikely that he ſettled this Eſtate on the Priory of Leeds; for to that Houſe it belonged in King Edward the IIId's Reign. And here it ſtaid till the general Suppreſſion in the Thirty Sixth Year of King Henry the VIIIth, and then was granted to Sir Ralph Vane, and Anthony Tutſham, Eſq; the latter of which paſſed his Intereſt to Vane; and in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Henry Vane it was in Philpot's Time.

2. Fair-Lane is an Eminent Seat in this Pariſh, which Anciently alſo belonged to the Bavents: But before the End of King Edward the IIId's Reign, it was got into the Poſſeſſion of the Colepeppers, who kept it till about the End of King Henry the IVth's Reign, and then it went by Sale to Chown, in which Name it continued till King Charles the Iſt's Time, and then was Sold by Sir George Chown to Sir Henry Vane, who at his Deceaſe ſettled it by Will on his Lady, and is now in the Poſſeſſion of the Right Honourable Chriſtopher Lord Barnard, Baron of Bernard-Caſtle.

SHOLDON lies at the Eaſt Side of Kent, near the Sea, about Three Miles South Eaſtward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Eaſtry, Hundred of Cornilo, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath: In the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

The Church is called St. Nicholas, in which I could find nothing at all remarkable.

'Tis a Chapel annexed to Norborne, and ſo not valued in the King's Books.

The Liberty of St. Auſtin, and of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, claims here.

Places of Note here :

1. Hull; which formerly belonged to the illuſtrious Family of Ratling, or Retling, in the Pariſh of Nonington; Thomas de Retling paid Aid for it in the Twentieth of King Edward the IIId. By his Son, Sir Richard Retling's Daughter Joan, it went in Marriage to John Spicer, and by his Daughter and Heir, it paſt into the Name of Iſaack, but before the Twenty Firſt of King Henry the VIth, it was ſold to John Breſtland, who about the Beginning of King Edward the IVth, parted with it the ſame way to Phineux of Swinkfield, and from thence by Robert Phineux, about the Beginning of King Henry the VIIIth, it was ſold to George Monins, Eſq; whoſe Succeſſor, in King James the Iſt's Time, conveyed it by Sale to Mr. Brayford, of great Mongham.

2. Cotmanton; this was Anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Noble Family of Crioll, or Keriel, but before the End of King Edward the IIId, it was ſold to Roger Digg, Eſq; in whoſe Family it continued till the Reign of Henry the VIIth, and then was ſold to Barton; and from thence, about the End of King Henry the VIIIth, to Brown, and thence to Richardſon, and thence at laſt to Smith, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

SHOREHAM, Shoram, in the Textus Roffenſis Schorham, lies towards the middle of the Weſt Side of Kent, by the River Darent, about Four Miles North-Weſtward from Sevenoke, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Bromley, Hundred of Codſheath, Lath of Sutton at Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Lower one of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis a Rectory, and with the Chapel of Otford annexed, is valued in the King's Books at 14*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*

In the Church is, or was, a Memorial of the Burial of Thomas Buckland, Founder of one of the Chancels.

'Tis in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter, but gives Name to the Deanery of Shoreham, in which all the Livings are Peculiars to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; that is, are under the Juriſdiction of that Prelate, who holds his Prerogative whereever his Lands lie: And in this Deanery he hath had formerly both Manſion-Houſes, with Parks and Demeſnes, and divers other large Lands, Rents, and Revenues. There are about Thirty Churches in this Deanery, which are thus Peculiars to the Archbiſhop, and over which the Biſhop of Rocheſter hath no Power; of which Mention ſhall be made under their ſeveral Names.

In Shoreham Pariſh are theſe Places conſiderable.

1. Preſton, which was Anciently the Seat of the Eminent Family of Buckland. Alan de Buckland, was Lieutenant of Dover-Caſtle in King John's Time. Sir Thomas de Buckland, of this Place, was Owner of Buckland in Maidſtone, and of Buckland in Ludſdown, in the Reign of King Edward the IIId. But in the latter End of King Henry the VIth, Thomas Buckland dying without Iſſue Male, by his Daughter Alice it went to the Polhills, of Polhill-ſtreet in Detling, and continued there in Philpot's Time.

2. Palſters, alias Planers; and,

3. Sepham, are Two Ancient Seats alſo in Shoreham, and had once Owners of thoſe Names: But about the Beginning of King Henry the VIth, the Planers parted with the Manor of that Name, to Sepham of Sepham. About the End of King Henry the VIIth, Mr. John Sepham ſold Sepham to Mr. William Martin; and Planer, or Palſters, to Cobbe; in which Two Families they remained but towards the End of King Henry the VIIIth, and then were both ſold to Mr. Francis Sandbach, by whoſe ſole Heir, Mrs. Alice Sandbach, they went into the Poſſeſſion of David Polhill, Eſq; in whoſe Family they were in Philpot's Time, and I ſuppoſe are ſtill.

4. Vilſon, or Vielſton, is another Seat in Shoreham, of good Account; which had long ago Owners of that Name: Hamon de Vielſton poſſeſs'd it in King Henry the IIId's Time. John de Vielſton paid Aid for it at making the Black Prince Knight; and was Sheriff of Kent in the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th Years of that Prince; but his Son (John) dying without Iſſue, his Nephew, John Roſſe, became his Heir, about the End of King Richard the IId's Reign. His Son alſo died Childleſs, about the End of King Henry the VIth, bequeathing this Place to his Kinſman, Mr. John Bird, who, in the 14th of King Edward the IVth, ſold it to Mr. John Palmer, and he Four Years after, to Richard Page; and here it ſtaid till the 19th of King Henry the VIIth, and then this Man's Son, Edmund Page, ſold it to Richard Wood, who, in the Fourth of King Henry the VIIIth, ſent it the ſame way to Robert Blague, and he in Two Years Time parted with it to Mr. William Petley of Halſted, who bequeathed it to his Second Son, Son Thomas, in whose Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

5. Shoreham Castle, an old House so called, because built with Battlements, &c. was, in the 8th Year of King Henry the IIId, possessed by the Family of Aldham, of Aldham St. Cleres in Kemsing; one of this Name being then Castellan of this Place.

But in King Edward the IId's Reign, this Name ended in Three Daughters; one of which marrying Newborough of Dorsetshire, carried this Place into that Family; where it continued till King Henry the VIIIth, and then was some-how derived into that of Polhill; where it remained in Philpot's Time.

Of the other Two Daughters, one married Francis St. Clere, and the other Martin de Peckham.

The Churches within the Deanery of Shoreham, and which are the Archbishops Peculiars, and now standing, are these: Shoreham, Ottford, Eynesford, Darent, Farningham, Bexley, Earith, Northfleet, Mepham, Cliff, Grean, Farley, Hunton, Peckham, Wrotham, with Stanstede Chapel, Ightham, Sevenoke, Pensherst, Chidingstone, Hever, Gillingham, Brasted, Sundriche, Chevening, Orpington, with Farnborough Chapel, Hayes, Keston, Halstede, East Malling and Ifield. Lambard's Peramb. p 366.

In the 21st Year of King Edward the Ist, John Son of Peter Butiller and his Brethren complained to the Justices Itinerant against Hugo Wiceius, Parson of this Parish, for detaining from him a Part of Messuage, and 50 Acres of Arable Land in Shoreham, which of Right did belong to them: But Hugo appearing, answered, That the Archbishop of Canterbury for the Time being, was his Patron and Diocesan; and therefore he ought not to answer till the See was filled again, for John Peckham was then newly Dead: And the Court agreed to it.

SHORNE, in the Textus Roffensis, Scorene, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about Three Miles and an half South Eastward from Gravesend, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Shamel, Lath of Aylesford, West Division of the County, and North one of Justices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Bishop of Rochester claims here.

It is in the Deanery and Diocese of Rochester; a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 13 l. 1 s. 8 d. The Church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. Near the Communion Table in it is an old Stone Statue of Sir Henry Cobham Le Uncle, Lord of the Manor of Roundall in this Parish; it lies cross-legg'd, and seems as ancient as the Time of the Holy War. The Inscription was in French. Wever from the Leiger Book of Feversham Abbey, mentions one Henry Lord Cobham, who flourished in the Reigns of King Edward the Ist and IId, and was Justitiary of England, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Governor of the Castles of Dover, Rochester, and Tunbridge; he married Joan, one of the Daughters of Stephen de Penchester. Alice the Younger married Philip de Columbers.

In this Church is also a fair Monument with four Figures of Sir William Page, and his Family in 1625; he married an Edolph: There are also other ancient Memorials of this Name; as of Edmund Page, in 1450; Thomas Page, in 1558; of George Page, who married a Somers, in 1639. Memorials also of — Porten, Lord of the Manor of Roundall: Of Smith in 1427; and of another in 1457; Of one Sharpe a Lawyer in 1493; and of Herneden in 1527.

Here is an ancient Stone Font, with Images of our Saviour in the several Actions of his Life on it, in a kind of Rude Relief, after the Gothick Manner. The North Chancel belongs to the Family of Maplesden, and in it lye two of the Name of Gervas Maplesden.

I find by the Textus Roffensis, that there was anciently in this Parish a Chapel called Mercstune, which paid 6 d. Chrism Money per An. to Rochester Cathedral.

Places of Note here:

1. Shorne Manor. This was as early as King John's Reign, Part of the Inheritance of the Noble Family of Nevill; and Jordanus, in some old Deeds written Jollanus de Nevill, was in Possession of it in the 26th Year of King Henry the IIId: But before the End of that long Reign it was become by Deed of Gift, as I find by the Tower Records, the Property of Roger de Northwood; and his Grandson John, Son of Henry de Northwood, claimed Freewarren, and the usual Privileges of a Manor here, in the 21st Year of King Edward the Ist; and then also the King brought a Writ of Right, and claimed this Manor; but the Jury gave it for John de Northwood. After this the King claimed of the said John de Northwood Four Marks, and Four Pence of Annual Rent; but the Jury gave it against the King, and said that the Rent belonged to this Manor: John de Northwood changed the Tenure of it from Gavel-kind to Knight Service, and whose eldest Son and Grandson were both with King Edward the Ist, in his Expedition into Scotland, in the 28th Year of his Reign; and after that the Manor of Shorne held by this Tenure to carry a white Banner for 40 Days together at their own Charges, whenever the King should commence a War with Scotland (a). There were some Appendages to this Manor at Oisterland in Cliff, and at some other Places, as Philpot suggests, which, with the Manor, descended down to John de Norwood, the last of this Name here, who died possess'd of it in the 2d Year of King Richard the IId. Hence it went by Sale to the Savages of Bobbing-Court; and by Eleanor, Sir Arnold Savage his Daughter, it went first to Sir Reginald Cobham, and afterwards to William Clifford, Esq;: After the Cliffords this Estate came into the Possession of the Brooks, Barons of Cobham; but on the Attainder of Henry Lord Cobham, in King James the Ist's Reign, Robert Earl of Salisbury purchased it of the Crown, and then sold it to Sir John Lewson; whose Son Sir Richard Lewson passed it the same Way to Mr. Woodier of Rochester, in whose Descendant the Possession continued in Philpot's Time, and I suppose doth still.

2. Ockington is a Manor here, which formerly was Part of the large Estate of the Cobhams; and Stephen de Cobham (b) died possess'd of it in the 6th Year of King Edward the IIId; and in this Family it continued till King Henry the VIIth's Reign, and then was sold to Sir Henry Wyatt; and in this Name it staid till the 4th Year of King Edward the VIth, and then was alienated to Sir Anthony St. Leger: And he in two or three Years after sent it the same Way to George Brook Lord Cobham; whose great Grandson, Sir William Brook Knight of the Bath, dying in the Year 1643, without Issue-Male, it descended to Sir John Brook, who, the next Year, was restored to the Barony of Cobham by King Charles the Ist, as being Reversioner in Tail.

(a) Rot. Esch. N. 45.

3. Roundall. This Place though now so ruined and gone that scarce any Footsteps of its ancient Grandeur appear, yet was once the Seat of the Noble Family of Cobham; and on its Decay they transplanted themselves to Cobham-Hall. It had formerly for its Possessors several Men of great Eminence: Henry de Cobham was among those Kentish Gentlemen who assisted King Richard the Ist, at the Siege of Acon in Palestine;

Reginald de Cobham was with King Henry the IIId in his Expedition againſt the Welch, in the 42d Year of his Reign: Sir Henry, Sir Reginald, Sir Stephen, and Sir Henry de Cobham, were all with King Edward the Iſt in his famous Expedition into Scotland, and at the Siege of Carlaverock. John de Cobham ſat frequently in Parliament as a Baron in King Edward the IIId's Reign; and Richard de Cobham was made Knight Banneret by that King, for his good Services againſt the Scots. But on the Attainder of Henry Lord Cobham in the 2d Year of King James the Iſt, that Prince granted it to Lodowick Duke of Lenox who bequeathed it to his Nephew James Duke of Lenox; whoſe Son Eſme, Duke of Lenox, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

4. Cobham-Hall. This is a very noble and ſtately Seat, and ſtands in the Middle of a fine large Park; and is now in the Poſſeſſion of —— Blithe, Eſq; by the Marriage of the Lady Iſabella, Daughter of the late Lord Cornbury.

SITTINGBOURN, Sedingborne, Sydingbourne, lies about the Middle of the North ſide of Kent, in the Road between Rocheſter and Canterbury, and about a Mile Southward from Milton, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Milton, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath: It is in the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 10 l. per Ann. The Church, which is a large and handſome Building, and in good Repair, is dedicated to St. Michael. In it are Memorials of the Interment of John Crowmer in the Year 1539; this was once an eminent Family in Kent; one of which William, Son of Sir William Crowmer, was Sheriff of Kent, and Lord Mayor of London, in the Time of Jack Cade's Rebellion; and had the Misfortune to be beheaded at Mile-End, A. D. 1450. by thoſe inſolent Rebels, becauſe he had married the only Daughter of Sir James Fiennes, Lord Say and Seale, whom they had the Day before treated after the ſame Manner. Here are Memorials alſo of John Septvans, in 1458; of James Bourn, in 1400; of Henry Stoneſtreet, in 1451; of Lawrence Garrard, 1493; of Thomas Garrard, in 1487; and of John Garrard, in 1531. Several Memorials of the Name of Catelet. A Monument of Sir Richard Lovelace, richly inlaid with Braſs was here, but defaced in the Civil Wars; he was a great Soldier, and Marſhal of Calais in King Henry the VIIIth's Time. In the Chancel lies Matthew, Son of Sir John, and Grandſon of Archbiſhop Parker, A. D. 1645. In Sir John Hales's Chancel, which belongs to Fulſan Farm, lies Warrenus Gerrard, in 1483; and Thomas Thomas, in 1491. Here are alſo ſeveral Memorials of the Family of Luſhington; and a Monument of Dr. Thomas Luſhington, great Uncle to the preſent Stephen Luſhington, Eſq; This Gentleman, as alſo did Robert Gore, Eſq; gave 5 l. to the Poor of this Pariſh: And one Hedſoll of this Town gave 10 l. per Ann. and out of the Parſonage are paid, every Chriſtmas, 5 Quarters of yellow Peaſe to the Poor.

'Tis ſaid that in Queen Elizabeth's Reign there was an Organ here.

One Mr. Norwood treated King Henry the Vth at the Red-Lion Inn in this Town; and ſo cheap were Things then, that all the Wine drank by the King and his Retinue, came but to Nine Shillings and Six-pence.

In Queen Elizabeth's Reign, this was made a Mayor Town; but the Juriſdiction is now diſuſed; as is alſo a Market, which was formerly here: But here are ſtill two Annual Fairs; viz. one on Whitſun-Monday, which laſteth Three Days; and another of Five Days, beginning on Michaelmas-Day.

Places of Note here:

1. Bayford, and 2. Goodneſton; the latter of which had anciently a Caſtle, whoſe Banks and Ruins were ſtill viſible in Philpot's Time: Theſe both did formerly belong to a Family of the Name of Nottingham: Robert de Nottingham flouriſhed here in King Edward the Iſt's Reign: And his Deſcendant of the ſame Name was Sheriff of Kent, in the 48th Year of King Edward the IIId; and held his Shrievalty here at Bayford: He had alſo Lands at Sharſtede, at Pedding in Tenham, at Newland, at la Herſte, at Higham in Milſtede, and at Bixle in Tong, now called Bix. But his Son John Nottingham leaving only a Daughter Eleanor; by her all this Eſtate went in Marriage to Simon Cheyney, ſecond Son of Sir Richard Cheyney of Shurland: And the Arms of theſe Two Families do or did ſtand impaled in the Glaſs-Windows of Milſted Church. About the End of King Henry the VIth, theſe Manors were ſold to Lovelace; and his Grandſon Thomas Lovelace of Kingſdown, in the 10th Year of Queen Elizabeth, ſold them to Mr. Ralph Finch; from which Name they paſſed the ſame Way to Alderman Garret of London; and in Philpot's Time they were in the Poſſeſſion of the Lady Dowager Garret, Relict of Sir John, Son to Alderman Garret. But they are now in the Name of Drake.

2. Chilton. This once had Proprietors of its own Name, and who had alſo Chilton in Aſh: For William de Chilton died poſſeſs'd of it in the 31ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt. But in the Beginning of King Edward the IIId, it went by Sale to Corbie; and Robert Corbie died ſeized of it in the 39th Year of King Edward the IIId. Joan his Son's only Daughter, carried it in Marriage to Sir Nicholas Wotton, who was Twice Lord Mayor of London: But there was an old Family of the Name of Maris, which had ſome Intereſt in Chilton: John de Maris held a Knight's Fee at Wychelling, and much other Land at Harrietſham, in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId; he had alſo the Manor of Ackmere in St. Mary Cray, which he held in Caſtle-Guard of Dover Caſtle; and his great Grandſon William Maris was Sheriff of Kent, in the 21ſt Year of King Henry the VIth, and lies buried in Preſton Church: This Gentleman ſold what Intereſt he had in Chilton to Nicholas Wotton, Eſq;; and from him the Manor deſcended entire to Thomas Lord Wotton; who ſettled it in Marriage on his eldeſt Daughter Katherine, who married Henry Lord Stanhope, Son and Heir to Philip Earl of Cheſterfield, in which Noble Family it ſtill continues.

4. Dunſtall. This Manor, as I find by the Dering Manuſcripts, though omitted by Philpot, was formerly the Eſtate of John, Son of Hubert de Burgo, and by him was given to his Father-in-Law Stephen de Penchеſter: Afterwards it became the Poſſeſſion of Crowmer, and by an Heireſs of that Name went to Sir Edward Hales, and in that Family ſtill continues.

SMARDEN, Smardene, lies towards the Middle of Kent, by the River Medway, about Five Miles Southward from Leneham, in the Lath of Scray, but Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway.

Some Part of this Pariſh, which lies in the Burgh of Poveden, is in the Hundred of Blackborne; Another Part, lying in the Burghs of Omenden and Stepherſt, is in the Hundred of Barckley: And both theſe Parts are in the Bailiwick of the Seven Hundreds, and Weſt Diviſion of the County. The reſt is in the Bailiwick of Chart and Longbridge, Hundred of Calehill, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County.

The Liberties both of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, and of St. Auſtin claim here: And That of the Archbiſhop over the Den of Holnherſt, which is held of the Manor of Shurland.

'Tis all in the Deanery of Charing, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 24 l. 2 s. 6 d. per Ann. The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Calehill, and is dedicated to St. Michael.

In this Church, as Fox takes notice in his Acts and Monuments, fol. 971. and in the Year 1558, which was the laſt Year of Queen Mary, one Drayner, a Juſtice of Peace, made uſe of the Rood-loft, which then was ſtanding here, to place Spies and Informers in, in order to take an Account who did not duly perform the Popiſh Ceremonies; and that they might diſcover this the better, he made for them 9 peeping Holes in the Loft: And becauſe he was ſevere, and puniſhed ſuch as did not conform, the People hated him, and gave him the Name of Juſtice Nineholes; and that Expreſſion is ſtill retained as a Mark of Contempt in this County.

A Market is kept here on Fridays, and a Fair on Michalmas-Day.

Places of Note here:

1. Smarden Manor. This did anciently belong to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and one of them, John Stratford, obtained for this Place the Grant of their Market in the 6th Year of King Edward the IIId; but I ſuppoſe it was given to the See, or purchaſed ſince the Conqueſt; becauſe it is not among the Archbiſhops Manors regiſtred in Domeſday Book.

2. Romeden. This was once the Inheritance of an ancient Family, whoſe Name was Hengherſt, and latterly Henhurſt: And they had a large Eſtate about Wood-Church, Stapleherſt, Yalding, and other Places in theſe Parts; from this Name Romeden was ſold to Calch, and continued in that Name till the End of King Richard the IId's Reign; but in whoſe Poſſeſſion it was then, Philpot could not find: In the 24th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, it was become the Eſtate of John, Son of Stephen Rogers, who ſold it to Stephen Drayner: 'Tis probable that Rogers purchaſed it of Norton, which Family had a good Eſtate in this Pariſh. In the 17th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, William Drayner ſold it to Sir Roger Manwood; and he the next Year to Martin James, Eſq; Remembrancer of the Exchequer; in one of whoſe Deſcendants the Poſſeſſion continued in Philpot's Time.

SMEETH, Smede, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles and an half South Eaſtward from Aſhford in the Bailiwick and Lath of Shipway, Hundred of Birchbolt Franchiſe, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: But being accounted only as a Chapel to Aldington, 'tis not valued apart from that in the King's Books. The Church is dedicated to St. Mary.

Places of Note here.

1. Scotts-hall. This hath been for very many Deſcents the Inheritance of an Ancient and Eminent Family in Kent, whoſe Name is Scott. Though Philpot ſaith he can aver, on probable Grounds, that their Original one was Baliol, (and the Family, as I am informed, derive themſelves from that Baliol, whom Bruce drove out of Scotland); for William Baliol ſecond Brother to Alexander Baliol, frequently, he ſaith, wrote his Name William de Baliol le Scott; and he fancies that they changed their Name to Scott, about the Year 1306, or 1307, after the diſhonourable Execution of John Earl of Athol, who had been taken Priſoner in King Edward the Iſt's laſt Expedition into Scotland, and hanged upon a high Gallows: After this, and the great Ravage which the Engliſh Army made in Scotland, Philpot thinks they called themſelves Scott, to avoid the Fury of that victorious King. He ſhews alſo that the Arms of Baliol and of Scott was originally the ſame: and that David Baliol, who was Son and Heir to this unfortunate Earl of Athol, changed his Name to Strabolgie, which was a Lordſhip that came to him by his Lady; being ſtruck with Terror on this Occaſion: And thirdly he ſhews, that the Earls of Buccleugh, and the Barons of Burley in Scotland, tho' both derived originally from Baliol, took alſo the Name of Scott, and bore the ſame Coat-Amour with our Scotts of this Place; viz. a Catherine-wheel, allowing for proper Differences. After this, Philpot enumerates ſeveral eminent Gentlemen, who were either directly or collaterally of this Family of Scott of Scotts-Hall.

Sir William Scott was Knighted in the 10th Year of King Edward the IIId, and was Lord Chief-Juſtice and Knight-Marſhal of England; Sir Robert Scott Lieutenant of the Tower, in 1424. Sir John Scott Comptroller of the Houſhold, and Privy-Counſellor to King Edward the IVth, and Marſhal of Calais. Thomas Scott was firſt Biſhop of Rocheſter, then of Lincoln, Provoſt of Beverly, Archbiſhop of York, Lord Chancellor and Privy-Counſellor to King Edward the IVth; who though he altered his Name from Scott to Rotheram, the Place of his Birth and Education; yet as Philpot ſaith, was probably of this Family. Sir William, Son to Sir John Scott above-mentioned, was Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. His Son Sir John was Knighted by the Prince of Caſtile, for ſignal Services performed againſt the Duke of Gueldres.

Sir Reginald Scott was Captain of Calais Caſtle. Sir Thomas Scott was Commander in Chief of the Kentiſh Forces, who aſſembled on the Plains about Northbourn, to oppoſe the Spaniſh Invaſion, A. D. 1588. And the Poſſeſſor of this Seat in Philpot's Time, was Edward, Son of Sir Edward Scott, who was made Knight of the Bath, at the Coronation of King Charles.

2. Thevegate. This was once the Inheritance of the Eminent Family of the Paſſeleys, or Paſſelews; Roger de Paſſeley was Treaſurer of England under Peter de Rivallis, in King Henry the IIId's Reign; and in this Family it continued, till by Elizabeth Daughter of John Paſſeley, Eſq; it went in Marriage to Reginald Pimp, Eſq; whoſe Female Heir Anne, brought it the ſame Way to Sir John Scott, of Scotts-hall: And in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of Edward Scott of Scotts-hall, Eſq;.

SNARGATE lies towards the South Eaſt Side of Kent, about Four Miles North Weſtward from New Romney, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Shipway, Hundred of Aloesbridge, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County. Part of it is in the Diviſion of Juſtices of the Corporation of Romney Marſh, and in the Liberty of the Marſh: Another Part of it, which lies on the Ree-wall, is in the Liberty of New Romney, and Diviſion of Juſtices of that Town. And the Reſt is in the Diviſion of Juſtices of the Lath of Shipway.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims alſo in this Pariſh: 'Tis all in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

The

The Church ſtands in Romney Marſh, and is dedicated to St. Dunſtan.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 17 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann.

Places of Note here:

1. Snargate Manor, this was once the Inheritance of an Ancient Family of the Name of Alarar: Gervas Alarar was Captain and Admiral of a Fleet of Ships, ſet out by the Cinque Ports, in the 14th Year of King Edward the Iſt; and his Grandſon Gervas Alarar's Widow died poſſeſs'd of Lands here, in the 42d Year of King Edward the IIId. But before the End of King Henry the IVth, it was gone from this Family into that of Moyle: For Walter Moyle, who was a Judge in King Henry the VIth's Reign, by a Fine levied in the 36th Year of that King, ſold it to Hugh Brent; and thence about the End of King Edward the IVth it went to Cheyney; in which Name it ſtaid till the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and then Henry Lord Cheyney ſold it to Henry Nevill Lord Bergavenny: By Mary, a Daughter of which Family in the 29th Year of Queen Elizabeth, it went to Sir Thomas Vane; whoſe Son Sir Francis Vane, who was made Earl of Weſtmorland in the 22d Year of King James the Iſt, ſold it Jackman; and he to Sir Edward Henden, Baron of the Exchequer; in whoſe Family it continued in Philpot's Time, being in the Poſſeſſion of Edward Henden, Eſq;.

SNAVE, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles and an half North Weſtward from New Romney, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Shipway, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of the Juſtices of the Corporation of Romney Marſh: The Liberty whereof claims over it. But the Liberty alſo of St. Auſtin claims over the Manor of Snave; and that of the Dean and Church of Canterbury over that Part of the Pariſh which is within the Manor of Ickham.

Part of it is in the Hundred of Aloesbridge; another Part in that of Ham; and another in the Hundred of Newchurch; but 'tis all in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Aloesbridge; and is dedicated to St. Auſtin.

The Pariſh is a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 19 l. 7 s. 9 d. per Ann.

Places of Note here:

1. Snave Manor. This once belonged to the Eminent Family of Haut; till by Joan, Daughter and Coheir of Sir William Haut, it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Wyatt; but by his unfortunate Attainder and Execution in Queen Mary's Reign, being forfeited to the Crown, it was by that Princeſs granted to Sir Henry Sydney, Knight of the Garter, and Lord Deputy of Ireland; whoſe Deſcendant the Earl of Leiceſter, in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, alienated it to Sir George Stonehouſe, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

2. Snavewick. This Manor anciently belonged to the Abbey of St. Auſtin in Canterbury, and they claimed the uſual Privileges here before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, and had them allowed; but at the general Suppreſſion of the Religious Houſes it was by King Henry the VIIIth, in his 35th Year granted for Life only to Sir Walter Henley; and on his Deceaſe returning to the Crown, it ſtaid there till King Charles the Iſt, in the Beginning of his Reign, granted it to Mr. Patrick Black a Scottiſh Man, though it was by the Crown, ſaith Philpot, long before granted in Leaſe to Mr. Yates of Berkſhire; and conveyed the Fee-Simple in Reverſion to Mr. Robert Auſtin of Hall-Place in Bexley.

In the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt, Margery and Iſabella, Daughters of William de Reverſh, complained againſt Peter Lehard, that he did not pay the proper Services which were due to them for Lands which he held of her Father, while living in this and ſome adjacent Pariſhes; and it was ordered that he ſhould do ſo for the future.

SNODLAND, Snodiland, Snodeſland, lies towards the North Side of Kent, by the River Medway, about Four Miles and a half North Weſtward from Maidſtone, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Larkfield, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims over it; and it was Twice given to the Priory of Rocheſter; firſt by the Will of Birthrick, and his Wife, as you may ſee under Mepham, above Seven Hundred and Fifty Years ago, and afterwards by the Charter of King Ecgbert, Regiſtred in our Textus Roffenſis, Fol. 138; who by the Conſent of King Ethelwalf, grants to Beormund, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Four Plow-Lands in the Place which is called Snoddingland, and at Holanbeorge, A. D. 838; he gives alſo the Mill at Holanbeorgesburna, or the Water at Holborow; Et in Monte Regis quinque Carrabas Lignorum, adjectis iiij Denberis; viz. Whetenſtede, Headen, Heſe, & Helman bijrſh. And at laſt, after the Witneſſes, is added, Et Moriente civitatis Hrovi unum viculum; i. e. on his Death-Bed he gave alſo one Street of the City of Rocheſter, to the Priory of St. Andrews.

This Pariſh is in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Rocheſter, a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 20 l. per Annum.

The Church is Dedicated to All-Saints; in the Porch of which, Wever tells us, lies buried one William Aliſander, 1469, who gave a Weekly Stipend of Bread to the Poor for ever: Memorials in the Church of John, 1487, and of William Palmer, of Otford, Eſq; above Three Hundred Years ago, viz. 1407, of Roger Perot, 1486, Walter Shagry, 1430, of Thomas Dalby, 1472, and of Godard Belchopt, 1487.

In our Textus Roffenſis alſo, Fol. 209. b. I find this Note, which I ſuppoſe is from Domeſday-Book; Snodlunda defendebat ſe in T. E. R. pro iij ſolinis & nunc ſimiliter; & eſt appretiatum ix Libr.

This Pariſh ought Anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the Ninth Arch, or Peer of Rocheſter-Bridge.

Places of Note here:

1. Snodland-Manor; this Philpot ſaith is a kind of Appendage to Halling; and on the Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries, was ſettled by King Henry the VIIIth, on the Dean and Chapter of Rocheſter.

2. Court-Lodge; this Manor was once part of the Inheritance of the Palmers; William Palmer owned both this and the Rye-Houſe in Otford, in the Reign of King Edward the IIId; and his Picture was in the Windows of this Church formerly, with his Arms on his Tabard, or Surcoat; and another I mentioned above, as lying buried in the Church: When this Family went out, that of Leeds ſucceeded in the Poſſeſſion of this Eſtate: And Glover mentions one William Leedes Interred here, whoſe Arms were, a feſſe between Three Eagles: From this Name it went by Purchaſe to the Whitfields of Canterbury, who ſeem to have been in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

3. Hol-

3. Holloway-Court; Philpot ſaith, that by the Book of Ayde it appears, that one Henry de Holoway held this in the 20th of King Henry the IIId. Afterwards, in King Edward the IIId's Reign, it came into the Poſſeſſion of the Tilghmans, whoſe Arms are born by ſeveral very old Panes of Glaſs in the Windows of this Seat. In this Ancient Family did it for many Deſcents continue, till about One Hundred Years ago it was ſold to Clotworthy of Devonſhire, who by Will bequeathed it to Mr. Thomas Williams, and he ſold it to Richard Manley, Eſq; and thence it went the ſame way to Mr. John Coney, and is now in the Poſſeſſion of his only Son, Dr. Robert Coney, of Rocheſter. There was alſo another Eſtate here enjoyed by Mr. Whetenhall Tilghman, and the Deſcendants of that Name, till about the Year 1680, and then it was ſold to Marſham, one of the Anceſtors of the preſent Lord Romney.

4. Holboroe, Anciently Holanburgh; this Place, with a Mill belonging to it, is part of the Revenue of the See of Rocheſter; and it ſeems to have taken its Name from the Royal Beorg, or Hill of Burial, which ſtandeth over it; for in our Textus Roffenſis, this Hill is called Mons Regalis: And Mr. Lambard, in his Perambulation of Kent, p. 447, ſaith that his Neighbour Mr. Tilghman, digging in this Hill for Chalk, diſcovered a Roman Urn filled with Aſhes.

This Land at Holboroe was given to Rocheſter Church by Ethelwulf, King of the Weſt Saxons, and valued at Two Plow-Lands, Beormund being then Biſhop of Rocheſter, A. D. 841.

SOUTHFLEET, Suthflete, Suthfleot, ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from Northfleet; for Anciently a Fleet, or Branch, or Arm of the River Thames, ran up as far as this Town, as it doth now to Northfleet, and probably was then Navigable a great way up.

This Pariſh lies at the North Side of Kent, about Two Miles and a half Southward from Graves-End, in the Bailiwick of Sutton-Deptford, Hundred of Axtone, Lath of Sutton at Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims over it; becauſe it Anciently belonged to the Priory of Rocheſter.

'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Rocheſter, and the Church is Dedicated to St. Nicholas, which Saint our Saxon Anceſtors believed to have a peculiar Regard to the Sea, Traffick and Fiſhery; and therefore generally Dedicated the Church to him in Places near the Sea, or large Rivers.

This Pariſh ought Anciently to have paid towards the Repair of the Third Arch or Peer of Rocheſter-Bridge.

In the Chancel of Southfleet Church, are Six Stalls, like thoſe in a Collegiate one; and no doubt here was formerly ſome Fraternity, or College of Prieſts, either Secular or Regular, as there were in a great many other Places in this County, of which our Hiſtorians take no Notice, and the Memory of whoſe Founders, Rules and Orders, are now loſt.

In the Church Windows are Remains of good Painted Glaſs; and ſome very old Tombſtones, with Croſſes on them, lie on the Floor of the Church; and in the North Chancel is an Alter-Tomb, with a Croſs on it very Ancient. A Braſs Plate on a Stone over John Tulman, Rector here, and Archdeacon of St. Aſaph, which muſt be about the Year 1450, becauſe 'tis ſaid he was Chaplain to Biſhop Lowe. Memorials of John Urban, 1421; an Altar-Tomb over John Sedley, Eſq; 1500; he was Auditor of the Exchequer. A very fair Monument, with the Figure in White Marble of John Sedley, Eſq; born 1561, and died 1605.

Here is a Free-School, with a Salary of Twenty Pounds per Annum, which was founded by Sir John Sidley, Baronet, A. D. 1637; Augmented by his Daughter Elizabeth, A. D. 1639; Poliſhed and Maintained by Sir Charles Sidley, his Son, A. D. 1657, as is expreſſed on a Stone placed over the Porch of the School.

The Church of Southfleet was given to the Priory of St. Andrew by Aſedinus, Biſhop of Rocheſter. Hadenham Annal. Roff.

Places of Note here:

1. Southfleet-Manor; this ſaith Kilburn was given to the Priory of Rocheſter by Gundulfus, Biſhop of that See, and confirmed thereto by King Henry the Iſt; and I find by the Records, that the Biſhop of Rocheſter claimed all the Privileges of a Manor here, by Virtue of that King's Charter, before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 7th of King Edward the 1ſt: And Philpot makes the Donation much later, and ſaith it was given by Hamo de Heath, another Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the Year 1346; and that the Priory had alſo a Charter of Free-Warren for this Manor. But certain it is, that the Convent was in Poſſeſſion of it much ſooner; for in our Famous Textus Roffenſis, I find this Entry from Domeſday-Book, Fol. 209.

(a) The Lowy of Tunbridge. S e Tunbridge.

And in the Cuſtumale Roffenſe, Fol. 12. I find this Note; Suthflete ſe defendit pro v. ſulings, cum dimidio ſuling; de Pole.

And as Southfleet Manor ſtaid in the Poſſeſſion of this Convent till the General Diſſolution, ſo it was then ſettled by King Henry the VIIIth, on his newly Erected Cathedral of Rocheſter, and is mentioned accordingly in our Erection and Foundation Charter. But for ſome Reaſons, which don't now appear, he afterwards took it away from the Church, and had it reconveyed to himſelf: And Philpot ſaith it continued in the Crown till the 37th of Queen Elizabeth, and then was granted to Wil. Peter, of Writtle, Eſqr. who was Son to that Sir William Peter, who was Secretary of State to King Edward the VIth, Queen Mary, and to that Princeſs. This Gentleman ſoon after ſold it to Alderman Garrett, of London, and his Deſcendant paſſed it the ſame way to Sir William Sidley, of Scadbery, whoſe Grandſon, Sir Charles Sidley, Baronet, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

I find by the Records, that very Anciently there was a Fair at Southfleet, which the Prior of Rocheſter claimed the Benefit of, in the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt.

In the Cuſtumale Roffenſe, above-mentioned, is a large Account about the Cuſtumary Service of the Tenants of the Manor of Southfleet, during the Time of the Ancient Tenures; which in the general are like thoſe of Fiendsbury and Darent, of which I have already given you ſome Tranſcripts.

But there is one pleaſant Cuſtom about Alehouſes, which ſeems peculiar to this Manor, and is Regiſtred thus.

'Eſt & alia Conſuetudo in predictâ villâ de 'Suthflete, ſc.

'Quod

'Quod quælibet Domus quæ facit Tabernam 'quæ Anglice vocatur Cheaphale, (i. e. a Place 'where Ale is cheapened, or ſold,) dabit Curiæ 'de Suthflete dimidium Sextarium Cerviſiæ de 'ipſâ Tabernâ, & Ipſe vel Ipſa cujus Taberna 'fuerit habebit tres faſciculos de farragio de 'predictâ Curiâ de Suthflete. Si aliquid autem 'extribus faſciculis ceciderit infra Curiam aut 'infra Quarentenam, Curia habebit farragium & 'Cerviſiam. Si vero Cerviſia non fuerit ſuffi-'cienter bona; ſerviens de curiâ, accipiet ubi-'cunque voluerit aliam Cerviſiam magis ratio-'nabilem; & ipſi qui braciant adquietabunt. 'Et ſi Dominus Villæ voluerit in loco predicto-'rum trium faſciculorum habebunt Dimidiam 'acram de Stubles in autumpno.

'Si quis autem in predictâ villâ maritare filiam 'ſuam alicui de ipſâ villâ, tantummodo oſtendet 'illud Cuſtodi villæ & rogabit cum ut veniat ad 'Nuptias; & maritabit eam ſic: Si quis vero fi-'liam ſuam extra villam dare voluerit, non lice-'bit ei hoc facere niſi per Licentiam & voluntа-'tem Domini ſui. Similiter ſi quis habuerit 'filiam Heredem, vel filias non poterit eas maritare 'intra villam nec extra niſi per licentiam & vo-'luntatem Domini.

'Siquis habuerit pullum de proprio Jumento, 'aut vitulum de proprià vaccâ, & pervenerit ad 'perfectam etatem, non poterit illos vendere 'niſi prius oſtendat Domino ſuo & ſciat utrum 'illos vellet emere.

'Et notandum quod monachi habent in Do-'minico duas carrucas & Ruſtici octodecim.

'Hæc predictæ conſuetudines de Maritagio, '& de Emptione Pullivel vituli, &c. ſunt ſimi-'liter in Frendesberia, Stokes, Danitun & Wuld-'ham.

2. Pole, uſually called Pool, is another Manor in Southfleet, which did Anciently belong to a Family of the Name of Bereſe; for it appears by a Fine levied in the 37th of King Henry the IIId that Richard de Bereſe ſold this Manor then Eſtimated as an entire Plow-Land, to Reginald de Cobham, of Roundall in Shorn; and from him it deſcended to John Cobham, Eſq; who died ſeized of it, in the 9th of King Henry the IVth; but by his only Daughter Joan, it went in Marriage to Three ſucceſſive Husbands; by the laſt of whom, Reginald Braybroke, ſhe had alſo an only Daughter of her own Name Joan, who carried this Eſtate, and a very great one in other Places, to Thomas Brooke, Eſq; of Somerſetſhire; and this Gentleman, in the beginning of King Henry the VIIth, ſold it to Sir Henry Wiatt, Privy-Counſellor to that Prince. But by his unfortunate Grandſon, Sir Thomas Wiatt, it was forfeited, with his Life, to the Crown in Queen Mary's Reign, and here it ſtaid till the 25th of Queen Elizabeth, and then ſhe granted it to his Relict, the Lady Joan Wyatt, and to George Wyatt, Eſq; his Son and Heir; and in Philpot's Time, it was in the Poſſeſſion of the Widow of Sir Francis Wiatt.

3. Scadbury; this Place, though now only a Farm-houſe, hath been, for ſome Hundreds of Years part of the Eſtate, and the Seat of the Family of Sidley, which Philpot thinks was once ſeated in Romney-Marſh; but I think the Reaſon he aſſigns for it, that there are Lands in the Marſh which bear the Name of Sedley, doth by no means conclude it; for their being the Eſtate of the Sidleys, is enough to denominate them. But certain it is, that this hath been very Anciently their Seat: For Philpot ſaith, that the Family preſerve a Pannel of Wainſcot which was taken from a Room in this Houſe, on which were the Arms of Sidley, W. S. and this Date, 1337. And in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Charles Sedley, a Deſcendant of this Honourable Family, this Place was, when Philpot publiſhed his Villare Cantianum.

4. Hook. This Place hath been for ſome Centuries, the Seat of the Family of Swan; who Philpot ſaith, were written Gentlemen as long ago as the Reign of King Richard the IId.

In the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt, Richard de Scoland, and Roſe his Wife, had unjuſtly Diſſeized William de Gombe, of his Free Tenement in this Pariſh, as alſo in Faukeham, Farningham, Stone, &c. but the Jury found for the ſaid William, and gave him Twenty Pounds Damages; this was before the Juſtices Itinerants for that Year.

I have ſeen an old Dateleſs Deed, by which Henricus de Mara, conveys to Johannes de Kentilo, all the Eſtate which he had in Southfleet, lying at a Place called Bedeſham, and I gueſs the Deed to be as old as King Edward the IId; as alſo another Deed, whereby William Tanner demiſes Land here to the ſame Perſon.

T. Blunt, in his Ancient Tenures and Cuſtoms of Manors, p. 161, gives us what follows, from ſome Monuments of the Church of Rocheſter which he had ſeen, of the Year 1200.

'Duæ mulieres in villam de Sufflete in Comi-'tatu quæ furatæ fuerunt multos Pannos in villâ 'de Croindene; & ſecuti ſunt eas homines ejuſdem 'villæ de Croindene; quorum Pannos furtive 'aſportuverunt uſque in villam de Sufflete, & 'ibi captæ fuerunt & incarceratæ; & habuerunt 'Judicium ſuam in Curiâ de Sufflete ad portandum 'calidum ferrum; quarum una fuit valua & altera 'damnata; unde ſubmerſa fuit in Bikepole (i. e. 'in ſtagno quod vocatur Bike.)

'Et hoc totum contigit tempore Gilberti Do-'mini Epiſcopi Roffenſis: Et in quolibet judicio 'fuerunt Coronarij Domini Regis.

'Et Paules de Stanes fuit tunc Cacherellus (a) de 'Hundredo de Achſtane. Et per illud Tempus 'Robertus de Hecham monachus fuit Cuſtos Ma-'nerij de Sufflete.

'Et ad mulieres judicandas fuit Dominus Hen-'ricus de Cobham & alij plures diſcreti homines 'de Patria. (b)

(b) Rot. Pat. 3. H. 3. M. 5.

In this remarkable Account there are ſeveral Things well worth obſerving.

1. That the Women were tried, and one of them executed, where they were taken; and not in the County where the Fact was committed; if, Croindene be Croyden in Surrey, as is very probable.

2. That this Court of Southfleet, though but belonging to the Manor of that Name, had a Power of Trying and Executing Felons: which was not unuſual in Ancient Times.

3. That the Trial and Judgment of theſe Women was very Solemn, and before a great many Eminent and Sober Perſons.

4. That ſhe who was found guilty, was not Hanged, but Drowned; which was a way of Execution (I believe) peculiar to that Sex; and I take it, that She-Thieves were uſually Drowned: which perhaps they judged to be a modeſter way of putting Women to Death.

5. Though the Goods were taken upon them, as it appears by this Account, yet they were both put to the Ordeal Trial of carrying a hot piece of Iron in their Hands, to a certain Diſtance, of which more by and by; and ſhe that was burnt by it, was adjudged guilty and Drowned; and the other, who we muſt ſuppoſe was not burnt by the Iron, was acquitted.

Theſe Trials of Ordeal were in conſtant Uſe in the Saxons Time, and in moſt Places in the Northern Regions; and were not aboliſhed here in England, till the Third Year of the Reign of King Henry the IIId; but then all Kinds of it were taken away by Act of Parliament, as they had been before condemned by Pope Stephen the IId.

The

The Word Ordell, Ordeal, Ordale, ſome think is Saxon, and derived from Or magnum, & Dele Judicium; others fetch it from the Saxon, Or, which in that Language is privative; and dæl, a part, Difference or Diſtinction; and therefore ſuppoſe it ſignifies Equal or Impartial Judgment. But Dr. Hicks (c) will have it to be an old Francick Word Urdell, and to ſignify any Judgment in general; though more eminently theſe Kinds of Trials, in which they thought there was ſomething Divine, Supernatural, or Miraculous; and therefore they called them Judicia Dei.

(c) Diſſert. Epiſtol. p. 149.

In that moſt valuable Manuſcript, called the Textus Roffenſis, is a very full and exact Account of the Solemn Way and Manner of theſe Trials, with Prayers, &c. ſuitable for ſuch Judgments; and which, becauſe I don't know that it's any where ſo fully done, I will here give you at Length.

But firſt, it will be proper to premiſe ſomething about the ſeveral Sorts and Kinds of theſe Ordeal Trials.

The Deſign of the Ordeal in general, was to try and examine whether ſuch Perſons as were vehemently ſuſpected of Crimes which they would not confeſs, were really guilty or not.

Of theſe Ordeal Trials there were, ſaith Lambard and Verſtegan, Two Sorts; one by Fire, and the other by Water. The Fire Ordeal was uſually made by their carrying a Piece of red hot Iron in their Hands, to ſuch a determinate Diſtance. This Piece of Iron was uſually of a Pound Weight, and then the Trial was called Simple Ordeal; but if the Weight were tripled, it was called accordingly Triple Ordeal. This kind of Purgation the Saxons alſo called Lade, Lada, from Ladian, to purge, clear, or acquit: And in the old Saxon Laws, you will find frequent Mention of the Simplex and Triplex Lada, or Purgatio. There was alſo another Way of making the Ordeal by Fire; and that was by making the ſuſpected Perſons to walk blinded and bare-footed, over a certain Number of red hot Plow-ſhares, laid on the Ground at unequal Diſtances one from another; and then, if they eſcaped burning their Feet, they were judged innocent.

There were alſo two Kinds of Water Ordeal, by hot and by cold Water: Into the cold Water the accuſed Perſon was thrown, with a Rope tied about his Waſte, as our Countrey Mob now try Witches; if he ſunk, he was judged innocent; but if he ſwam, or kept above-water, he was condemned as guilty; becauſe they judiciouſly concluded, that the pure Water would not admit a guilty Wretch into it. Into the hot Water the ſuſpected Perſon was to thruſt a bare Arm as high as the Elbow; and if he was not ſcalded or burnt by it, he was judged innocent.

And Lambard ſaith, that the Fiery Ordeals were for Perſons of ſome Faſhion and Diſtinction; but the Water Purgation was only uſed for Peaſants and inferior People: But I don't find that Diſtinction always to have held; if it had, our two Thieves at Southfleet, muſt have been Wenches of Rank and Quality.

And as the Way of walking Bare-foot over red hot Plow-ſhares is not mentioned any where in our Saxon Laws; ſo neither, as Mr. Somner obſerves, is the famous Story of Queen Emma's Purgation this Way, ſufficiently atteſted from Hiſtory. The Writer of her Life, who was her Cotemporary, ſaith nothing of it: And 'tis ſtrange he ſhould omit ſo remarkable a Tranſaction; nor do any of the elder Hiſtorians mention a Word about it: It is not unlikely therefore, that it is a pure Monkiſh Fiction, or an old Wife's Fable, notwithſtanding the great Pomp with which ſome tell the Story.

But there was however another Ordeal Trial in uſe here in the Saxon Times, which is not uſually mentioned; and that was by the Panis benedictus or the Corſnede, as the Engliſh Saxons called it. Which comes from Corſ, a Curſe or Execration, and Sned or Snid, a Piece or Morſel: They called this alſo Ned-bread, becauſe you muſt needs, or be forced to eat it, whether you would or not.

You will find below that the Saxons did not confine this to Bread, though when it was ſo, it was to be of Barley; for they alſo made the Corſnede of Cheeſe. Perhaps the Danes might encourage the Uſe of this Bread Ordeal; for I find it mentioned in the Laws of King Cnute thus:

Si Advena aut peregrinus Ordinatus calumniatur de jam nominatis criminibus, quia aliud Auxillum non habet, eat ad Panem Benedictum quem Angli Corſnade vocant: Et ibi inveniet quod Deo placuerit.

The Trial by Camp-Fight Duel, or ſingle Combat, which was a long while in Uſe in this Kingdom, and I believe is not yet aboliſhed in all Inſtances, was not of Saxon Original, but brought in by the Normans. And therefore Verſtegan and Sir William Temple are both miſtaken: The former in making the Duellum a Saxon Ordeal; and the latter in ſaying it was aboliſhed, with the other Kinds of Purgation, by the Conqueror. And as in the Norman Camp-fight Trials, the accuſed might get a Tenant, Servant, or any Friend to fight for him: So in all the Saxon Ordeals, Servants or hired Deputies might undergo thoſe Kinds of Trial for their Maſters; and eſpecially if their Lords were Biſhops or Eccleſiaſtical Men (a).

Thus in the Time of William Rufus, Remigius Epiſcopus Lincoln. de Regia Proditione aliquando accuſatus; ſed famulus ſuus Igniti judicio ferri Dominum purgans Regio amori reſtituit (b). And when Brion Fitz-Count challenged Henry Biſhop of Winchester, A. D. 1144, he ſaith, Contra Henricum præſto ſum probare vel Duello, vel Judicio, per unum Laicum, vel per unum Clericum, &c.

(b) Matt. Paris, An. 1085.

No wonder then that the Clergy intereſted themſelves in theſe Kind of Ordeals, ſo far as to make ſolemn Forms of Prayer for them, to get the Trials to be made in their Churches, where Offerings, &c. were to be made, ſince, in their own Caſes they were allowed to undergo them by Proxy; and in thoſe of others, there muſt be room for Favour, where-ever they could find their Advantage in ſhewing it. And if that Story be true of Queen Emma's lucky tripping blindfold over the red-hot Plow-Shares; 'tis not uneaſy to account for her Eſcape, without a Miracle, when you read that ſhe was led by Two Biſhops; and that her ſuppoſed Crime was having been the Miſtreſs of another; for as the Honour of the Church was concerned, they may well be ſuppoſed to have given her a private Signal how to ſtep when ſhe came near Danger; without letting the admiring Vulgar into the Secret of the Impoſture.

But let me now come to the Form and Manner of theſe Solemn Ordeal Trials.

From Textus Roffenſis, Fol. 49.

INCIPIT exorciſmus aquæ ad Judicium Dei demonſtrandum.

Peractis coram Sacerdote trium dierum jejunis cum homines vis mittere ad judicium aquæ frigidæ ob comprobationem ita facere debes.

Accipe illos homines quos vis mittere in aquam & duc eos in Eccleſiam, & coram omnibus illis cantet Presbyter Missam, & faciet eos ad ipsam missam offerre. Cum autem ad communionem venerint antequam communicent interroget Sacerdos eos cum adjuratione, & dicat.

Adjuro vos per Patrem, & Filium, & Spiritum sanctum, & per vestram Christianitatem quam suscepistis, & per Unigenitum Dei Filium, & per sanctam Trinitatem, & per sanctum Evangelium, & per istas sanctas Reliquias quæ in ista Ecclesia sunt,& per illud Baptismum quo vos Sacerdos regeneravit; ut non presumatis ullo modo communicare, neque ad Altare accedere, si hoc feciſtis, aut concensistis, aut scitis, quis hoc egerit. Si autem tacuerint & nulli hoc dixerint accedat Sacerdos ad Altare & communicat postea vero communicet illos quos vult in Aquam mittere.

Incipit missa Judicij.

Justus es, Domine, & rectum judicium tuum: fac cum servo tuo secundum miserecordiam tuam.

Beati immaculati in via.

Oratio.

Absolve quæso Domine tuorum delicta famulorum ut à peccatorum suorum nexibus, quæ pro sua fragilitate contraxerunt tua benignitate liberentur, & in hoc judicio prout meruerentur, tua justitia præveniente, ad veritatis censuram pervenire mereantur, per Dominum, &c.

Lectio Libri Levitici.

In diebus illis locutus est Dominus ad Moysen dicens; Ego sum Dominus Deus vester; non facietis Furtum; non Mentiemini; nec decipiat unus quisque proximum suum; non perjures in nomine meo nec polluas nomen Dei tui: Ego Dominus: non facias calumniam proximo tuo nec vi oprimas eum; non moretur opus mercennarij tui apud te usque mane; non maledices surdo; nec coram cœco ponas offendiculum; sed timebis Dominum Deum tuum, quia Ego sum Dominus.

Alia ad Ephesios.

Fratres, renovamini spiritu mentis vestræ, & induite novum hominem qui secundum Dominum creatus est in justitia & sanctitate veritatis; propter quod, deponentes Mandacium, loquimini veritatem unusquisque eum proximo suo; quoniam sumus invicem membra. Irascemini & nolite peccare; Sol non occidat super Iracundiam vestram; nolite locundare Diabolo: Qui furabatur, jam non furetur magis, autem laboret operando manibus suis quod bonum est, ut habeat unde tribuat necessitatem patienti.

R.

Propitius esto Domine peccatis nostris, nequando dicant Gentes, Ubi est Deus eorum.

V.

Adjuva nos Deus salutaris noster, & propter honorem nominis tui, Domine libera nos: Alleluiah.

Dominus judex, justus, fortis, & patiens, numquid irascetur per singulos dies.

Secundum Marcum.

Cum egressus esset Jesus in via, procurrens quidam genuflexo ante eum rogabat eum, dicens, Magister bone! quid faciam ut vitam eternam percipiam? Jesus autem dixit illi, quid me dicis bonum? nemo bonus nisi solus Deus. Præcepta nosti; ille dixit, quæ? ait, non occidas, non adultereris, non falsum Testimonium dicas, non fraudem feceris; honora Patrem tuum & Matrem tuam: At ille respondens, ait, Magister, hæc omnia custodivi a juventute mea: Jesus autem intuitus eum, dilexit eum, & dixit ei, unum tibi deest; vade, quæcunque habes, vende, & da pauperibus, & habebis thesaurum in Cœlo, & veni sequere me.

Immittet Angelum Dominus in Circuitu timentium eum; & eripiet eos: Gustate & videte quam suavis est Dominus.

Hic offerant. ScR'

Interceſſio Sanctorum tuorum Misericordiæ tuæ Domine munera nostra conciliet; & quia merita nostra non valent, eorum deprecatio indulgentiam valeat obtinere, per Dominum, &c.

Prefatio.

O eterne Deus qui non solum peccata dimittis sed ipsos etiam justificas peccatores: & reis non tantum pœnas relaxas, sed dona largiris & premia; cujus nos pietatem supplices exoramus ut famulos tuos non de præteritis judices reatibus, sed hujus culpæ veritatem spectantibus insinuas; quatenus & in hoc populus tuus preconia Nominis tui efferat; & Te vitæ presentis & perpetuæ auctorem adnoscat; per Christum, &c.

Benedictiones ad Judicium.

O Deus!. de quo scriptum est, quia justus es & rectum Judicium tuum, fac cum his servis tuis secundum Miserecordiam tuam; ut non de pristinis judicentur reatibus, sed in hoc prout meruerunt tua benedictione præveniente, veritatis subsequantur Judicium. Amen.

Et qui justus es & amator justitiæ, & a cujus vultu videtur equitas; fac, in conspectu populi tui, ut nullis malorum prestigiis, veritatis luce fuscentur examina. Amen.

Petitiones nostras placatus intende, & culparum omnium preteritarum eis veniam clementer attribue: Et si culpabiles sint, tua larga Benedictio non eis ad Suffragium, sed hujus Culpæ ad insinuandam veritatem proficiat. Amen.

Quod ipse. Hic communicent, post Sacerdotem: Et dicat Sacerdos, Corpus hoc & Sanguis Domini nostri Jesu Christi sit vobis ad Probationem hodie.

Justus Dominus & Justitiam dilexit, Equitatem videt Vultus ejus.

Post Communionem.

Perceptis, Domine Deus noster! sacris Muneribus, suppliciter deprecamur, ut hujus participatio Sacramenti, & a propriis nos reatibus indesinenter expediat, & in famulis tuis Veritatis sententiam declaret; per Dominum, &c.

Expleta missa, faciat ipse Sacerdos aquam benedictam: Et pergat ad locum ubi homines probentur: Cum autem venerit ad ipsum locum, det illis omnibus bibere de aqua: Post ea vero conjuret aquam ubi Culpabiles mittat.

Incipit Adjuratio Aquæ.

Deus! qui per Aquaram substantiam judicia tua excercens Diluvij inundatione millia populorum interemisti: Et Noe justum cum suis salvandum censuisti: Deus qui in Mari rubro Cuneos Egyptiorum involvisti & agmina Ishraelitica imperterrita abire jussisti: Virtutem Tuæ ✝ benedictionis his Aquis infundere, & novum & mirabile Signum in eis ostendere digneris; ut Innocentes a Crimine cujus examinationem agimus,more Aquæ,in se recipiant & in profundum pertrahant, Conscios autem hujus Criminis a se repellant atque rejiciant; nec patiantur recipere Corpus quod ab onere bonitatis evacuatum ventus iniquitatis allevavit & in hanc constituit: sed ſed quod caret pondere virtutis, careat pondere propriæ ſubſtantiæ in Aquis; per Dominum, &c.

Item Alia.

Adjuro te creaturam Aquæ in nomine Dei Patris omnipotentis + qui te in principio creavit, & juſſit miniſtrare humanis neceſſitatibus, quinetiam juſſit te ſeperari ab Aquis ſuperioribus: Adjuro te etiam per ineffabile Nomen Jeſu Chriſti + filii Dei vivi ſub cujus pedibus mare & elementum diviſum ſe calcabilem prebuit: Qui etiam baptizari ſe in Aquaram elemento voluit: Adjuro te etiam per Spiritum ſanctum + qui ſuper Dominum baptizatum deſcendit: Adjuro te per Nomen + ſanctæ & individuæ Divinitatis; cujus voluntate Aquaram elementum diviſum eſt, & populus Iſraheliticus ſiccis pedibus ſtatim tranſivit. Ad cujus etiam Invocationem Helyſeus ferrum quod de manubrio exierat ſuper Aquam natare fecerat; ut nullo modo ſuſcipias hos Homines, ſi in aliquo ſint culpabiles de hoc quod illis objicitur; ſcilicet aut per Opera, aut per Conſenſum, vel per Conſcientiam ſeu per ullum ingenium: Sed fac eos ſuper te natare; & nulla poſſit eſſe contra te cauſa facta aut ullum præſtigium inimici quod illud poſſit occultare. Adjurata autem per nomen Chriſti precipimus tibi ut nobis per nomen ejus obedias, cui omnes creatura ſervit: quem Cherubin & Seraphin collaudant, dicentes, Sanctus, ſanctus, ſanctus, Dominus Deus excercituum, qui etiam regnat & dominatur per infinita ſæcula ſæculorum. Amen.

Alia.

Adjuro te creaturam Aquæ per Dominum + Patrem, & + Filium, & + Spiritum Sanctum, & per tremendum diem judicij, & per duodecim Apoſtolos, & per lxxii. Diſcipulos, & per duodecim Prophetas, & per xxiv. Seniores, qui aſſidue Dominum laudant, & per cxliv Millia qui ſequuntur Agnum, & per omnia Agmina Sanctorum Angelorum, Archangelorum, Thronorum, Dominationum; Principatum, Poteſtatum, Virtutum, Cherubin atque Seraphin, & per omnia Millia Sanctorum Martyrum, Virginum & Confeſſorum: Adjuro te per Sanguinem Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, & per iv. Evangelia, & per iv. Evangeliſtas, & per lxxij. libros Veteris ac Novi Teſtamenti, & per omnes Scriptores Sanctos ac Doctores eorum. Adjuro te per ſanctam Eccleſiam Catholicam, & per Communionem Sanctorum, & per Reſurrectionem eorum, ut fias Aqua exorcitata, adjurata, & obfirmata adverſus inimicum hominis diabolum, & adverſus homines, qui ab eo ſeductos, unde ratio agitur, perpetraverunt, ut nullatenus eos in te ſummerſos, aut in profundum trahi permittas, ſed a te repellas atque rejicias. Nec patiaris recipere corpus quod ab onere bonitatis inane eſt factum; ſed quod caret pondere Virtutis, careat pondere propriæ ſubſtantiæ in te; Innocentes vero a predicto crimine, more Aquæ, in te recipias, & in profundum innocue pertrahas. Per Dominum, &c.

Poſt has autem Conjurationes Aquæ, exuantur homines qui mittendi ſunt in Aquam, propriis veſtimentis; & oſculentur Evangelium & Crucem Chriſti & Aqua benedicta ſuper omnes aſpergatur, & qui affint omnes jejunent, & ſic projiciantur ſinguli in Aquam.

Et ſi ſummerſi fuerint inculpabiles reputentur; ſi ſupernataverint Rei eſſe judicentur.

Incipit Adjuratio Ferri, vel Aquæ ferventis ad Judicium.

In ſimplo unum Pondus, in triplo tria Ferrum equiparet pondera. Et in illa Adjuratione, non affint, ut prediximus niſi jejuni. Et dictis Letaniis, ſic Sacerdos in loco ubi Ferrum accenditur, vel Aqua inferveſcatur Adjurationem initiando inchoet.

Oratio.

Deus! qui per Ignem ſigna magna oſtendens Abraham puerum tuum de incendio Chaldeorum quibuſdam pereuntibus, eruiſti: Deus! qui Rubum ardere ante conſpectum Moyſi & minime comburi permiſiſti; Deus! qui ab Incendio fornacis Chaldaici pleriſque ſuccenſis, tres pueros tuos illeſos eduxiſti; Deus! qui Incendio Ignis populum Sodomæ & Gomorræ involvens, Loth famulum tuum cum ſuis ſaluti donaſti; Deus! qui in adventu Spiritus ſancti tui illuſtratione Ignis fideles tuos ab infidelibus decreviſti; oſtende nobis in hoc parvitatis noſtræ examine Virtutem ejuſdem ſancti Spiritus, & per hujus Ignis fervorem diſcerne fideles & infideles, ut attactum (ad tactum) ejus rei cujus inquiſitio agitur, conſcij exhorreſcant & manus eorum, vel pedes comburantur aliquatenus: immunes vero ab ejuſmodi Crimine liberenter penitus & illeſi permaneant. Per Dominum, &c.

Alia.

O Deus! judex juſtus fortis & amator pacis, & multum miſericors, qui judicas quod juſtum eſt & rectum Judicium tuum, qui reſpicis ſuper terram & facis eam tremere: Tu Deus omnipotens, qui per Adventum filii tui Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti mundum ſalvaſti, & per ejus paſſionem genus humanum redemiſti, hanc Aquam ferventem vel hoc Ferrum fervens + ſanctifica. Qui tres pueros Sidrach, Miſac, & Abednego, juſſu Regis Babyloniæ in Camino Ignis accenſa fornace ſalvaſti illeſos per angelum ſanctum tuum eduxiſti: Tu, clementiſſime Pater! Dominator omnipotens propterea ut ſiqui innocentes de hoc cujus inquiſitio agitur, in hoc ferrum fervens, vel in hanc Aquam ferventem miſerint manus ſuas, ſalvi, te præſtante Domino noſtro permaneant, & ſicut tres pueros ſupradictos de Camino ignis ardentis liberaſti, ſic manus innocentium omnipotens Deus ab omni læſionis inſaniæ ſalvare, dignare. Et ſiquis culpabilis vel noxius & tumido corde induratoque pectore vel ſuperbiente reus de hoc cujus inquiſitio agitur, manum miſerit in hoc Ferrum vel Aquam ferventem, Tu Dominus omnipotens juſtiſſima pietate & rectiſſimo judicio illud declarare & manifeſtare digneris ut animæ eorum per pœnitentiam ſalventur. Et ſi illi nocentes vel culpabiles ſint, & per aliquod maleficium, vel per herbas, aut per cauſas diabolicas induraverint & peccatum quod fecerunt confiteri noluerint, tua dextra, quæſo Domine, declarare dignetur.

Item Tertia.

O Deus! innocentiæ reſtitutor & amator qui auctor pacis es, & judicas equitatem, te ſubnixis rogamus precibus, & hoc Ferrum ignitum ordinatum ad juſtitiam & examinationem cujuſlibet dubietatis + benedicere & + ſanctificare digneris, ita ut ſi innocentes de hoc cujus inquiſitio agitur, & unde Purgatio quærenda eſt in hoc ignitum & tua benedictone ſanctificatum ferrum manus vel pedes immiſerint, tua benigniſſima miſeratione illeſi appareant. Si autem culpabiles atque rei contempſerint & quaſi temptatores judicium tuum adierint; aut per herbas vel quæcunque temperamenta ſive molimina maleficioſa peccata ſua contueri & defendere inflati per afflatorem malitiæ contra veritatis tuæ examen voluerint; juſtiſſime & miſericordiſſime Domine Deus! ad hoc virtus tua, quæ omnia ſuperat in eis cum veritate quæ permanet in ſecula ſeculorum declaratur, quatenus juſticiæ tuæ non dominetur iniquitas, ſed veritati ſubdatur falſitas: Ut & cæteri hoc videntes ab incredulitate ſua te miſerante, liberentur. Qui vivis & regnas, &c.

His peractis Aqua benedicta cunctis adſtantibus detur ad deguſtandum, & aſpergatur per totam domum: Et Ferrum proferatur, quod a culpato coram omnibus accipiatur & per menſuram IX. pedum portetur: Manus ſigilletur, ſub ſigillo ſervetur & poſt tres noctes aperiatur: Et ſi mundus eſt Deo gratuletur; ſi autem inſanies crudeſcens in veſtigio Ferri inveniatur, culpabilis & immundus reputetur.

In Aqua fervente accipiet homo lapidem, qui per funem ſuſpendatur in ſimpla probatione per menſuram Palmæ, & in Tripla autem, unius Ulnæ: Manus vero ſigilletur & aperiatur, ut ſupra diximus in conſecratione Ferri.

Incipit Exorciſmus Panis ordacei & Caſei, quorum appenſio unius Unciæ.

Primitus faciat Sacerdos Letanias, & omnes qui interſint, cum eo jejuni ſint; & ſic incipiat.

Conſervator & Creator humani generis, dator gratiæ ſpiritualis largitor eternæ ſalutis, Tu emitte ſpiritum tuum ſuper hanc creaturam Panis vel Caſei, cum timore & tremore magnitudinis Brachij tui adverſus eos quicum ſuperbia & contumacia, ac zelo iniquo veniunt, & volunt ſubvertere juſtitiam, & conculcare judicium. Fac eos, Domine miſericors! in viſceribus anguſtari, eorumque guttur conclude, ut Panem vel Caſeum iſtum, in tuo nomine ſanctificatum devorare non poſſint: Hi qui injuſte juraverunt & negaverunt hoc quod quærebatur & jusjurandum pro nihilo habuerint, & nomen tuum nominaverunt ubi rectum non erat.

Te quæſo ut non eis permittas illud abſcondere, quia juſtus es Domine, & rectum judicium tuum, qui cuſtodis veritatem in ſeculum faciens judicium injuriam patientibus, & cuſtodis pupillum, ac viduam ſuſcipis & viam malignorum exterminabis. Ideo oſtende nobis miſerecordiam tuam, ut humiles ac manſueti, ac recti propter Veritatem gaudeant; ſuperbi autem & iniqui ac cupidi contriſtentur ac humilientur uſque dum confiteantur magno & ſancto nomini tuo, & cognoſcant cæteri quia nomen tui Dominus: & tu ſolus ſuper omnem terram altiſſimus. Et ſervi tui in te glorientur, & laudent nomen tuum in ſæcula ſæculorum. Amen.

Item Alia.

Domine Jeſu Chriſte qui regnas in Cœlis & in Terris, & mirabilis es in omnibus operibus tuis, Dominator dominantium, Deus angelorum, Deus Patriarcharum, Prophetarum, Apoſtolorum, Martyrum, Confeſſorum, Virginum & omnium Electorum, propterea quæſo per ſanctum & admirabile nomen tuum, ut qui rei ſint de hoc cujus inquiſitio agitur, vel in facto, vel in conſcientia, ad appoſitam eis pro oſtenſione veritatis creaturam Panis vel Caſei ſanctificati, fauces eorum claudantur, guttures eorum ſtrangulentur, & in nomine tuo ante illud rejiciantur, quam devorentur. Sed & ſpiritus diabolicus cui nulla eſt communio cum tua ſuperna veritate, in hoc negotio ad ſubvertendum judicium pravis præſtigiorum ſuorum molitionibus nihil prevaleat; ſed qui rei & conſcij ſunt rei præfatæ, ad hoc pabulum ſanctificati Panis vel Caſei, & preſertim per dominici Coporis & Sanguinis Communionem quam acceperunt, Tremant, & tremendo palleant, & nutabundi in omnibus membris appareant: Innoxij vero & inſcij ſobrie ad ſalubritatem cum omni facilitate hanc partem Panis vel Caſei in nomine tuo ſignatam, manducando deglutiant, cognoſcant omnes quia tu es judex juſtus qui ſalvos facis ſperantes in te. Qui vivis & regnas, &c.

Tertia Oratio.

Deus! cujus ſcientia ſenariam circumſcriptionem angelicis & humanis elongatam ſenſibus ſola interius penetrat & exterius concludit: Quem nulla cæleſtium, vel terreſtrium, aut infernorum, vota fallere poſſunt; quanto magis cor hominis unius capabile. Reſpice ad preces noſtræ humilitatis, quibus famulatum ſacri indidiſti ordinis; & propterea non noſtris exigentibus meritis ſed tuorum omnium ſuffragantibus ſanctorum precibus; ſed quod in hac culpa humanos latet oculos & ſermonum humanæ procacitatis obtegitur defenſionibus, vero tua cæleſti & ſuperna moderatione ſine ullo revelerer obtricamine: Et ſicut ſolus verus es, veritatis in hoc ſententiam elucidare digneris: Quatinus innocentes ſine ulla difficultate hoc pabulum Probationis deglutiant: Obnoxij autem obtrepidante mentis ſtatu, & totius compagine corporis vacillante quod in tuo ſancto nomine + conſecratur & + benedicitur nullatenus devorandi valetudinem percipiat; ſed coram omnibus invaletudine confuſi, quod preſumptione inmerita ſuſciperint cum irriſione projiciant. Per Dominum noſtrum Jeſu Chriſtum. Amen.

Thus end theſe ſolemn Forms of Purgation, or Ordeal Trials; on which I leave every one to make his own Remarks: And I doubt not but he will conclude as I do, That as all this Matter was in the Power of the Prieſt, ſo there was Room ſufficient for Impoſture in the Management of it; and Advantages enough to be made, by acquitting ſuch as knew how to purchaſe their Innocence by valuable Conſiderations.

SPELDHERST, lies at the South Eaſt Side of Kent, adjoining to Suſſex, about Three Miles South Weſtward from Tunbridge, in the Weſt Diviſion of the County, and lower one of Juſtices, in the Lath of Sutton-at-Hone.

Part of it is in the Bailiwick of the Lowy of Tunbridge, Hundred of Wachelingſtone, and Lath of Aylesford; and the reſt is in the Bailiwick of Sutton Bromley, in the Hundreds of Codſheath and Somerden, and Lath of Sutton-at-Hone.

The Liberty of Stevenoke claims here. 'Tis in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter: The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Somerden, and is called St. Mary's. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 15 l. 5 s. 0 d. per Ann.

This Pariſh is in a manner all Hills and Dales; with deep Valleys, and craggy bare Rocks here and there. The Famous Tunbridge-Wells, ſo juſtly celebrated for their Medicinal Qualities, are in this Pariſh: Of which you will find a full Account in the Natural Hiſtory, or laſt Part of this Book.

Over the Porch Door of this Church are ſtill in Stone the Arms of the Duke of Orleance, who, in the famous Battel of Agin-Court, A. D. 1415, in King Henry the Vth's Time, was taken Priſoner in the Field by Richard Waller, Eſq; of Grome-

Gromebridge in this Pariſh; who was afterwards Sheriff of Kent, in the 16th Year of King Henry the VIth, as he had been both of Suſſex and Surrey before: The Duke was kept here at Mr. Waller's Houſe at Gromebridge near 25 Years. Philpot ſaith this Duke new built the Houſe at Gromebridge, upon the old Foundation; and was a good Benefactor to the Repair of Speldherſt Church, whence his Arms came to be placed there: He tells us alſo, that this gallant Soldier, as the Reward of his Bravery, had an additional Creſt given him, to his Coat of Arms; viz. The Arms of France hanging by a Label on an Oak, with this Motto, Hæ Fructus Virtutis. In the Chancel of the Church here is a fair Monument of Sir Walter Waller, and Elizabeth his Wife; he was Son of Sir William Waller of Gromebridge, who was Sheriff of Kent in the 22d Year of King Henry the VIIIth, and lies alſo buried in the Body of this Church, in the Year 1555. He was great Grandſon to the famous Sir Richard Waller abovementioned. In the Church is alſo a Memorial of the Interment of John Waller, Eſq; in 1517.

There is a Fair in this Pariſh on May the 6th at Gromebridge; and a Market alſo was granted on Thurſdays to Henry de Cobham, by King Edward the Iſt. The Market and Fair were kept at the Place where the new Chapel ſtands, which was built by John Packer, Eſq; one of the Clerks of the Privy-Seal: And Philpot ſaith that at Gromebridge was anciently a Chapel of Eaſe to Speldherſt, and dedicated to St. John.

Places of Note here:

1. Gromebridge Manor, in old Writings written Gromenbridge and Gormanbridge, was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Family of Cobham; but after they left it, it came into that of Clinton; and John de Clinton, who was often ſummoned to Parliament as a Baron in King Richard the IId's Reign, died poſſeſs'd of it in his 22d Year: But about the End of King Henry the IVth's Reign it was alienated to Waller of Lamberhurſt: And Richard Waller above-mentioned, who reſided here, was great Grandfather to William Waller, Eſq; who was Sheriff of Kent in the 22d Year of King Henry the VIIIth; his Deſcendant Sir Thomas Waller, ſold it to Thomas Sackville Earl of Dorſet; and his Grandſon Richard Earl of Dorſet, conveyed it to John Packer, Eſq; and his Son was the Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time.

There was a Chantry founded here in the 38th Year of King Henry the IIId, by William Ruſſell and Hawis his Wife; as appears, ſaith Philpot, by the firſt Book of Compoſitions in Regiſtro Roffenſi.

2. Hollands. This was very early the Inheritance of a Family of this Name, who were great Benefactors to the Church of Speldherſt, and were allied to Thomas Holland Earl of Kent, who married Joan Daughter of Edmund Earl of Woodſtock: About the Beginning of King Henry the VIth, Hollands was ſold to the Wallers, and continued in that Name till it went with Gromebridge to Thomas Earl of Dorſet; one of whoſe Deſcendants ſold it to Lindſey; from whence it went the ſame Way to Caldecott.

3. Ferbies. This Place alſo had once Poſſeſſors of its own Name, in the Time of King Edward the IId, and IIId; but about the Beginning of King Henry the VIth, they ſold it to Waller of Gromebridge, where it continued till Philpot's Time and then was ſold to Alderman Chiverton of London.

4. Ruſthall. This Place had once Proprietors of the Name of Ruſt; one of which was Mayor of Feverſham, in King Henry the VIth's Reign, and is buried in Feverſham Church; but about that Time this Eſtate was ſold to Waller of Gromebridge; where it ſtaid till the 42d Year of Queen Elizabeth, and then Richard Waller, Eſq; ſold it to Mr. George Stacy; who ſent it the ſame Way to Bing; in which Name the Poſſeſſion continued in Philpot's Time.

At Ruſt-Hall about 20 Years ago was a good Bowling-Green, and many Perſons lodged there who came to drink the Tunbridge Waters: But ſince the Buildings have ſo much increaſed round about, and near to the Wells, This Place, as well as Southborough, is now become almoſt deſolate.

5. Ewherſt. This Place, together with Read in Marden Pariſh, were once Part of the Eſtate of the ancient Family of Read: Sir Robert Read Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, tho' on his marrying the Co-heir of Alphew, he removed to Chidingſtone, yet kept Poſſeſſion of this Place: And by Katherine, one of his Four Daughters, it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Willoughby; and after having ſtaid for ſome Deſcents in this Name, it went by Sale into that of Knight, where, I ſuppoſe, the Propriety continued in Philpot's Time.

STALESFIELD, Stalesford, lies towards the Middle of Kent, about Four Miles North Eaſtward from Lenham, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Oſpringe, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: And the Church is called St. Mary's; in which I found nothing remarkable.

'Tis within the Liberty of St. Auſtin, becauſe in the Hundred of Feverſham which belonged to that Abbey. 'Tis a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 5 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann.

Places of Note here:

1. Stalesfield Manor. This Place was once Part of the Revenue of the Knights Templers; and after the Deſtruction of that Order in the 2d Year of King Edward the IId, it was united to the Demeſnes of the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem; and here it ſtaid till the general Suppreſſion of all the Religious Houſes in King Henry the VIIIth's Time; and then coming to the Crown, it was in the 4th Year of King Edward the VIth, granted to Sir Anthony St. Leger, who ſoon after ſold it to Sir Anthony Aucher, who was killed at Calais, fighting againſt the French. One of his Deſcendants in King James the Iſt's Reign ſold it to Salter; from whom Sir Nicholas Salter was deſcended, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

2. Darbies-Court, is a Place here which was of old the Seat of a Family of this Name of Derbey, and whoſe Arms are Party per Chevron embattelled Or and Az. 3 Eagles Counterchanged. But this Family was gone here before the Beginning of King Henry the IVth's Reign, and this Place ſold to the St. Legers; where it made but a ſhort Stay. The Male Line ending in Thomas St. Leger, Eſq; the Purchaſer; by Joan his Daughter it went to Henry Aucher, Eſq; and in this Family continued till King James the Iſt's Time, and then was ſold to Sir Michael Sonds of Eaſtry; and from him it went to Sir Richard Sonds of Throuley; whoſe Son Sir George Sonds of Leeze-Court in Shelvich, leaving only Two Daughters, by the youngeſt it went with Lee-Court into the Rockingham Family. See that Place.

Mr. Glover takes notice of the Figure of a Cavalier in Armour, with only his Face bare, lying in the Church, and with a long Beard; which he judges to have been in Memory of one of the Knights Templers: For that they uſed to wear long Beards, appears from Peter Auger, who was Valet to King Edward the IId, and was accuſed of being of that Order, on the Account of his Beard; and he was forced to prove that he was not ſo, or elſe he had been quite deſerted by his Maſter.

This Place of Stalesfield, or at leaſt a good deal of Land here, did in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, belong to Peter de Huntingfield, in Right of his Wife Juliana, who was the Relict of John de Cornhill.

STANFORD, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Two Miles and an half North Weſtward from Hithe, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Stowting, Lath of Shipway, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Eleham, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to All-Saints; which is very ſmall, and without any Monuments or Remains of Antiquity. 'Tis accounted as a Chapel, and ſo not valued in the King's Books.

In the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt, the Bridge between Standford and Hithe being broken down, it was given by the Jury, that it ought to be repaired by Nicholas de Criol, and not by the adjacent Hundreds.

Places of Note here.

1. Oſtenhanger, now generally called Weſtenhanger: as Philpot ſaith, it is written in the Pipe Roll of that Year, in the 27th Year of King Henry the IIId. And much after the ſame Manner I find it written in the next Reign. This hath been anciently a very eminent Seat, and as ſome think, was once a Pariſh by it ſelf: And indeed it is not unlikely that the Chapel of St. John here was once Parochial. The Ruins of the Foundation of which I ſaw plainly remaining, between the Moat and the great Barn; and ſeveral Tombſtones with Croſſes on them, were dug up here. The worthy Juſtinian Champneys, Eſq; the preſent Owner of this Manor, tells me, that by his Writings he judges this Chapel to have been formerly a Pariſh: And there is now a Place called the Parſonage Field. None alſo of the eminent Owners of this great Houſe have been buried in Stamford Church; and ſeveral of them having been buried here, is alſo another Argument for the ſame Opinion. John, Son of Nicholas de Criol, in the 19th Year of King Edward the IIId, obtained a Licenſe to found a Chantry here, which he endowed with one Meſſuage, 45 Acres of Arable, and Six Acres of Paſture Land lying in Limpne.

This famous Seat, Philpot ſaith, did anciently belong to the Family of Auberville: Sir William de Auberville lived here in King Richard the Iſt's Reign; at the Time when he founded the Abbey of Weſt Langdon: His Son Hugh de Auberville was alſo a good Benefactor to that Convent: and his Son was Sir William de Auberville, whoſe only Daughter carried it in Marriage to Nicholas de Crioll, probably a great Grandſon of Bertran de Crioll, who was Sheriff of Kent, in the 27th Year of King Henry the IIId. There was alſo another Bertram de Crioll, who died poſſeſs'd of a good Part of this Eſtate in the 23d Year of King Edward the Iſt, and left it to Joan his Daughter, who carried it to her Huſband Sir Richard de Rokeſley: And who, on her Brother John de Crioll's Deceaſe, became his ſole Heir. This Sir Richard de Rokeſley, who was Knighted by King Edward the Iſt, at the famous Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, left only Two Daughters: Joan, who was the Wife of Walter de Pateſhall; and Agnes, who carried this Eſtate in Marriage to Thomas de Poynings: He had Iſſue Nicholas de Poynings, who was ſummoned to ſit in Parliament as a Baron, in the 23d Year of King Edward the IIId: Michael Poynings, had the ſame Honour, in the 42d Year of that King; and one Lucas de Poynings, ſate the ſame Year, in the ſame Rank. On the Diviſion of the Eſtate, Weſtenhanger fell to Michael's Share; whoſe Son Thomas ſate alſo in Parliament as a Baron, in the 6th Year of King Henry the IVth; as alſo did his Grandſon Robert de Poynings; who died in the 8th Year of King Edward the IVth, and left Sir Edward Poynings his Son and Heir: This Gentleman lived here, was Privy-Counſellor to King Henry the VIIth, Knight of the Garter, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland: And it was by his Influence on that Nation, that the famous Statute paſſed, which was called Poynings Law; he was likewiſe at the Siege of Terwin, with King Henry the VIIIth, and was made Knight Banneret for his good Services there. But he dying in the 12th Year of that King's Reign, without any lawful Iſſue, his Eſtate eſcheated to the Crown; however, King Henry the VIIIth gave this, and ſome other Parts of it, to his natural Son Thomas Poynings, afterwards made Knight of the Bath, at Queen Anne of Bolen's Coronation; and in the 36th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, he ſate in Parliament as Baron Poynings of Weſtenhanger. About a Year after this he died without Iſſue; and then this Manor returned to the Crown again, where it lay till King Edward the VIth granted it to John Dudley Earl of Warwick, and afterwards Duke of Northumberland. But on his Attainder in the 1ſt Year of Queen Mary, it came again to the Crown, and was by Queen Elizabeth granted to her Kinſman Sir Thomas Sackville; who not long after ſold it to Thomas Smith, Eſq; uſually called Cuſtomer Smith, who very much improved and augmented the Buildings of this Houſe, which had been greatly damaged by Fire: From him it deſcended to his great Grandſon Philip Smith, Viſcount Strangford, who reſided here in Philpot's Time: But at length he ſold it to Finch, from whence it went the ſame Way into the Poſſeſſion of Juſtinian Champneys, Eſq;, who hath built here a neat ſmall Houſe out of the Remains of the old one. And very Auguſt and Noble thoſe Ruins are, and ſhew this Seat to have been once a very large and magnificent Pile of Building; and which ſome fancy to have been alſo of very great Antiquity; for they will have it to have been erected by Oeſce, Son and Succeſſor to Hengiſt King of Kent; and from him to have had the Name of Oeſcinhanger. But though this be not very improbable, for I know not where elſe to fix the Place of Hengiſt's Reſidence in this County; yet we have nothing in Hiſtory to confirm it. And the Buildings here had by no means a Face of ſo great Antiquity; and I believe did not precede the Time of the Criols or Aubervilles.

Unleſs you will think, that by the Tower here called Roſamonds, and where the Tradition is, That fair Miſtreſs was kept for ſome Time, it did belong once to King Henry the IId; and perhaps might from him be given to the Aubervilles: Which Conjecture will receive ſome Confirmation, from what I obſerved here, as I was looking carefully over the venerable Ruins of this Place, where I met with ſeveral Pieces of excellent carved Work in Stone; for I found the Left Hand of a Statue well carved in Stone, with the End of a Scepter graſped in it: This I fancied then to have been Part of the Figure of King Henry the IId; becauſe I remembred that in Sandford's Genealogical Hiſtory of our Kings, there was a Seal of that Prince, with his Scepter in his Left Hand, and the Ball or Mound in his Right; a Poſition ſo unuſual, that one would would almoſt conclude from it, that King Henry the IId was Left-Handed. This Houſe was once moated all round, and had a Draw-bridge, a Gate-houſe, and Portall, whoſe Arch was large and ſtrong, with a Portcluſe or Portcullis; and the Walls all embattelled and fortified with Nine Towers: One of which, with a Gallery or Garret adjoining to it, was called, as is above-mentioned, Fair Roſamond's Tower; and 'tis thought ſhe was kept here for ſome Time, before ſhe was removed to Woodſtock. The Room they call her Priſon, was the long Garret, of 160 Feet in length, which they called her Gallery. Within the great Gate was a Court of 130 Foot Square, in the middle of which was once a Fountain. Over the Door by which you entred theHouſe, was a Stone Figure of St. George on Horſe-back, and under that were four Coats of Arms; the Royal one, another a Key and Crown held by Two Angels, and the other two defaced. On the Right Hand was a Pair of Free-Stone Stairs 8 Foot wide, and of 20 Steps, which led into a Chapel of 33 Foot long, and 17 Foot wide: This was not the Church or Chapel of St. John, but one of a much later Date, being erected there by Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the Garter, and Comptroller of the King's Houſhold, in the 12th Year of King Henry the VIIIth. This appears by a French Inſcription on Two Stones, which now lye in Mr. Smith's Parlour, in this Pariſh; and which among other Things were brought out of the Ruins of Weſtenhanger. At each Corner of the Window of this Chapel, was carved curiouſly well in Stone, a Canopy. There were alſo Pedeſtals for Statues; and over the Window ſtood a Stone Statue of St. Anthony, with his Pig at his Feet, which had a Bell hung in one of its Ears: At the Weſt End of the Chapel were Statues of Sir Chriſtopher, and King Herod. The Hall was 50 Foot long, and 32 Foot wide, and had a Muſick Gallery in it at one End, and Cloyſters which led from the other End to the Chapel, Parlour, &c. There were then in the Houſe 126 Rooms; and the Report was, that there were 365 Windows.

In the Year 1701, for the Lucre of 1000 l. which was given for the Materials then ſtanding in this Houſe, three Quarters of it were pulled down: And the Account above is the Condition it was in, when that was begun.

Philpot mentions another Part of this Eſtate of Weſtenhanger, which coming to Nicholas de Criol by the Heir of Auberville, afterwards went thus: John, Son of this Gentleman, (who by the bye, in the 19th Year of King Edward the IIId, had a Licenſe to build and embattle at Weſtenhanger, and to found the Chantry above-mentioned in St. John's Chapel) left it to his Son Sir Nicholas de Criol, who died ſeized of it in the 3d Year of King Richard the IId; from him it deſcended to Sir Thomas Criol or Keriell, as they began now to be called: And he was killed in the 2d Battel of St. Albans, in the 38th Year of King Henry the VIth. He left no Son, but by one of his Daughters and Coheirs, it went in Marriage to Thomas Fogg, Eſq; who about the End of King Edward the IVth, ſold it to his Elder Brother Sir John Fogg of Repton: And he about the Beginning of King Henry the VIIIth, parted with it the ſame Way to Sir Edward Poynings above-mentioned.

2. Heyton is another Manor in Stanford, which anciently had Proprietors of its own Name; and whoſe Arms were Gules 3 Piles Argent. Alanus de Heyton, is called in ſome old Records Alanus Vice-comes; becauſe he was joined as Aſſiſtant to Ralph de Picot, in the Execution of his Office of Sheriff in the 3, 4, and 5 Years of King Henry the IId. He died poſſeſſed of his Eſtate, but left no Children; and therefore it went by his Siſter Elveva in Marriage to Deringus de Morinis, Son of Norman de Morinis: His Son Deringus de Morinis and his Grandſon Richard Fitz-Dering, who died poſſeſs'd of this Manor in the 42d Year of King Henry the IIId, uſually wrote themſelves Domini de Heyton: and in this Name it deſcended to Sir Richard Dering, (whoſe Brother Robert was one of the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem); and he, in the 8th Year of King Edward the IId ſold it to William Scott of Smeth; and in this Family it continued till Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and then was ſold to Smith, whoſe Deſcendants were in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

3. Hartſhorne: This Manor in ſome old Deeds is written Hartſhall and Harchull, and once had Owners of that Name; but by Degrees they came to be called Hartſhorne: Which Family continued here till King Henry the VIIIth's Time, and then ſold it to Young: And William Young paſſed it the ſame Way to Thomas March of Liminge, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

STANSTEDE, lies towards the Middle of Kent, about Two Miles North Weſtward from Wrotham, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Wrotham, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis alſo in the Deanery of Shoreham, and therefore a Peculiar to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

The Liberty of Wrotham claims over it, as having been formerly a Part of it. And about 1646, was taken out of it by Act of Parliament, and made a diſtinct Pariſh by it ſelf, but 'tis not valued in the King's Books apart from Wrotham.

Places of Note here:

1. Stanſtede Manor. This did once belong to an ancient Family of the Name of Grapinell, who were Owners of it in King Henry the IIId, and King Edward the Iſt's Reigns. But by Margery a Daughter of this Family, it went in Marriage to William de Inge, one of the Judges, and who died poſſeſs'd of it in the 15th Year of King Edward the IId. He obtained the Grant of a Fair to be held at Stanſtede, in the 9th Year of King Edward the IId, on the Day of the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin, and Two Days after; as appears by the Tower Records. By his only Daughter Joan, (or, as ſhe is called in ſome Pedigrees, Iſolda) this Eſtate paſſed again by Marriage to Eudo de la Zouch, whoſe Deſcendant Thomas la Zouch, Baron of Haringworth, died poſſeſs'd of Stanſtede, in the 6th Year of King Henry the IVth; as alſo did his Son Henry Lord Zouch in the 26th Year of King Henry the VIth. But ſoon after it went by Sale into the Family of Colepeper; and from thence in the Beginning of King Henry the VIIth, it went the ſame Way to Thomas Leigh, whoſe Son John Leigh gave it to his natural Son Richard, An. 1575. He not long after alienated it to Bing of Wrotham; from which Family it went to William James of Ightham, Eſq; from whom it deſcended to Sir Demetrius James; and from him to the preſent Poſſeſſor, the Worthy William James of Ightham, Eſq;.

2. Soranks is a Place in this Pariſh, which formerly was the Seat and Manor of a Family of this Name. Roger de Soranks was poſſeſs'd of it in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId, as appears by the Book of Aid; and he held it in Knights Service of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But in the next Reign it was got ſomehow into the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Mortimer, Eſq; Lord of the Manor of Mortimers in Cowling. And

And he, in the 20th Year of King Edward the IId, ſold it to William Screne; in which Name it ſtaid a while, and then went into that of Wood, and from thence to Barefoot; and one of that Name in the 3d Year of Queen Mary, alienated it to Henry Fanſhaw; from whom it paſſed the ſame Way to Launce, and from thence it was ſold to Mr. John Cox, the preſent Poſſeſſor.

STAPLE, lies towards the Eaſt End of Kent, about Three Miles South Weſtward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin's, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath: The Liberties of both the Archbiſhop and of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury claim here: As alſo doth that of St. Auſtin, becauſe it is in the Hundred of Downhamford, which belonged to that Abbey. 'Tis in the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. James: On which Saints Day, viz. July 25. there is a Fair kept here. 'Tis a Chapel annexed to Addiſham, and ſo not valued apart in the King's Books. In the Church which hath a Tower Steeple, are Memorials of the Families of Linch, and of Clark; an ancient Stone Font, with Gothick Images upon it; and in the Chancel old low Rails all round the Sides, and ſuch as I dont remember to have ſeen any where elſe.

Places of Note here:

1. Crixall, anciently Crickleadhall; this had once (viz. in King Edward the Iſt's Reign) the Brockhulls for its Owners.

But in King Edward the IIId's Time, it was come ſome-how into the Name of Wadham, and continued here till King Henry the VIIth's Reign, when by a Daughter of Sir William Wadham it went in Marriage to Sir William Fogg. But in the firſt Year of the next Reign, Sir John Fogg ſold it to Ralph Baniſter: In the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth it was in the Name of Tucker, who about the End of that Princeſs's Reign ſold it to Smith; and he in King James the Iſt's Time, ſent it the ſame Way to Dr. Fotherby Dean of Canterbury, and his Son Charles Fotherby was the Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time.

2. Grove-Place. This had once Owners of the Name of Grove, ſeveral of which were Knights, and formerly wrote themſelves At-Grove (Arms 3 Eſcallops on a Chevron.) In King Henry the VIth's Reign it was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir John Grove, who was a great Benefactor to the Church of St. Peter's in Sandwich; not long after by a Daughter it went by Marriage into the Name of St. Nicholas: And hence about the End of King Edward the IVth it was ſold to Quilter, where it ſtaid till the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was ſold to Linch; and in this Family it was in Philpot's Time, and I ſuppoſe is ſtill.

Philpot mentions a Family here of the Name of Omer, which in his Time (1656) had been conſtantly Reſident here almoſt 400 Years.

STAPLEHURST, lies towards the South Side of Kent, about Four Miles Northward from Cranebroke, in the Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Lower Diviſion of Juſtices, in the Lath of Scray: So much of it as is in the North Burgh, Burghs of King's Franchiſe, Fair Crouch, or Love-Herſt, is in the Bailiwick of the Seven Hundreds, Hundred of Cranbrook, and Lath of Scray; another Part is in the Bailiwick of Twiford, Hundred of Marden, and in the Lath of Scray alſo; the reſt is in the Bailiwick of Eyborne, and Lath of Aylesford (viz. Part of it in the Hundred of Eyborne, and the other Part called Detling Burgh) and in the Hundred of Maidſtone. 'Tis all in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Sutton; and the Church is called All-Saints.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 25 l. 5 s. 10 d. as in the printed Valor Beneficiorum: But Biſhop Williams makes it 26 l. 5 s. 10 d.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims in this Pariſh.

The Burgh of Loveherſt above-mentioned hath a Court-Leet of its own, holden at the Manor of Loveherſt: And the Inhabitants thereof owe no Service to the Court-Leet, holden for the Hundred of Cranbrooke: But at that Court a Conſtable is or may be choſen out of that Burgh for that Hundred.

Places of Note here:

1. Stapleherſt Manor. This Place, or a good Part of it at leaſt, was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Family of Fremingham or Farningham, under which Place more hath been ſaid of them: But when the Male-Iſſue of this Name determined in John de Fremingham, Joan his only Siſter was married to John Iſley, Eſq; in the 2d Year of King Henry the IVth, from whom it deſcended to Sir Henry Iſley: But another Part of this Manor belonged to Pimp of Nettleſtede; William Pimp dying poſſeſs'd of it A. D. 1375. and here it continued till about the 12th Year of King Henry the VIIth, and then Reginald Pimp, Eſq; ſold it to the Iſleys. And by that means it became forfeited to the Crown, with the other Part, by Sir Henry Iſley's being engaged in the unhappy Affair of Sir Thomas Wyat, and was in the 2d Year of Queen Mary, granted to Sir John Baker her Attorney-General; in whoſe Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

There was alſo ſome more Land in this Pariſh, which in King Edward the IIId's Reign, belonged to Boxley Abbey; and on the Suppreſſion being granted to Sir Thomas Wyat; and by him, in the 2d Year of Queen Mary, forfeited to the Crown, was granted alſo to Sir John Baker above-mentioned, and continued in the Bakers of Sittingburſt.

2. Newſtede, is a Manor here which was once annexed to a Free Chapel, which was here erected by Haman de Crevequer; (Vid. the firſt Book of Compoſitions, kept in the Regiſters Office in Rocheſter.) After the Diſſolution, King Edward the VIth granted it to Sir Edward Wotton, Anceſtor to Thomas Lord Wotton of Boughton Malherbe, who ſettled it in Marriage on Katherine, his Eldeſt Daughter, Wife to Henry Lord Stanhope: But it was by her afterwards ſold to Mr. Robert Oliver of Leybourn.

3. Loveherſt, is a Manor in this Pariſh, which once belonged to the Priory of Leeds: And on the Suppreſſion was granted to Sir John Gage, who in the 36th Year of King Henry the VIIIth ſold it to Thomas Colepeper, Eſq;, and he to Thomas Wilford, Eſq;, who about the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth, parted with it the ſame way to Mr. John Baker; in whoſe Family it was in Philpot's Time.

4. Engeherſt, now commonly called Henhurſt, is a Place here which anciently belonged to a Family of the Name of Engeherſt or Hengeherſt, (Arms, Barry of 6 Pieces) and continued in the Family a great while; till Henry Hengeherſt, in the 23d Year of King Henry the VIth, ſettled it on his Kinſman John Naſh: In which Name it ſtaid a good while; but about the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth it came to Roberts, and thence went to Moody, who ſold it to Samuel Ovenden; by a Daughter of which Name it went in Marriage to Mr. Patrick Tindall; in whoſe Heir the Poſſeſſion was in Philpot's Time.

5. Spil-

5. Spillſil-Court was very anciently the Reſidence of a Family of that Name; but before the End of King Edward the IId it was extinct here, and gave way to the Poſſeſſion of the Stangraves; and towards the End of the next long Reign, it went from this Name into that of Mainey; a Family deſcended from Walter de Meduana, a Man of that Subſtance in this County, that (as appears by the Red Book in the Exchequer) he held 20 Knights Fees in Kent. Their Ancient Seat was at Bredgar. But after many Deſcents in that Name here, in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, this Place was ſold to Sharpeigh; and by his Daughter it went in Marriage to Mr. George Thompſon of London.

STELLING, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Two Miles and an half North Weſt from Eleham, in the Bailiwick of Stowting, Lath of Shipway, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. Part of it is in the Hundred of Loningborough; and the reſt in that of Stowting.

The Liberty of Eleham claims over that Part of it which is in the upper half Hundred of Loningborough: And the Liberty of St. Auſtin claims alſo in this Pariſh. 'Tis all in the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is called St. Mary's; which is pretty large, with Three Iſles, the Chancel but of one. It hath a flat low Tower. There are Remains of good painted Glaſs in the Windows, which ſeem to have been the Gift of ſome of the Hardreſs's Family, their Arms being ſtill there in ſeveral Places. 'Tis a Chapel of Eaſe to Great Hardreſs.

There are Two Annual Fairs kept here; on Aſcenſion, and on Allhallows-Day.

Places of Note here:

1. Stelling (and Wadenhall) which lies Part in this, and Part in Petham Pariſh, were once Part of the Inheritance of the famous Family of the Hauts; for William de Haut held them both in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt; and he founded a Chapel at Wadenhall, which was dedicated to St. Edmund the King: Though Wadenhall appears now as an old decayed Seat; and I could not ſee any Remains of the Chapel. And in this Family theſe Manors continued till about the End of King Henry the VIth; and then William Haut ſold Stelling to Humphrey Stafford Duke of Buckingham: But it was forfeited to the Crown on the Attainder of his Grandſon, Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham, in the 13th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, where it continued till the 1ſt Year of Queen Mary, and then was granted to Edward Lord Clinton; who about the End of that Reign ſold it to Mr. Henry Herdſon: From which Name it went by Will (for want of Iſſue) to Sir Baſil Dixwell of Terlingham in Folkſtone: And in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Baſil Dixwell of Brome in Barham.

2. Wadenhall remained longer in the Family of Haut; till by Elizabeth, one of the Daughters of Sir William Haut, it went to Sir Thomas Colepeper of Bedgbury; who exchanged it with King Edward the VIth: But it ſtaid not long in the Crown; for Queen Elizabeth in her 42d Year, granted it to Sir John Sotherton, Baron of the Exchequer; whoſe Heir ſold it to Mr. Benjamin Pere of Canterbury. It now belongs to one Mr. Rich of London.

The Advowſon of the Two Parſonages of Stelling and Upper Hardreſs were granted to the Priory of Tunbridge, in the 26th Year of King Edward the IIId. Pat. 3. Part. 2. Memb. 3.

In the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt, Gilbert Earl of Clare claimed under the Archbiſhop of Canterbury all the uſual Privileges of a Manor for Stelling; and was allowed them by the Juſtices Itinerant.

In Mr. Symondſon's Map of Kent, Stelling is placed wrong on the Eaſt, inſtead of the Weſt Side of the Stone-Street Way.

St. STEPHENS. See before in Hackington.

STOCKBURY, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about Four Miles South Weſtward from Milton, in the Eaſt Diviſion of Juſtices, of the Lath of Aylesford. Part of it is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Milton, Lath of Scray, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County: And the reſt is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyborn, Lath of Aylesford, and Weſt Diviſion of the County. In the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Sittingbourn: And the Church ſtands in the Hundred of Eyeborn, and is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen.

In the Church are Memorials of Petite, in the Year 1489; of Hooper, in 1548; and of Osborn and Lorkin.

A Fair is kept here on St. Mary Magdalen's Day, being July the 22d.

Places of Note here.

1. Stockbury Manor. The Eminent Family of Criol had here a Manſion Houſe, which in ſeveral old Deeds is called the Caſtle of Stockbury. Sir Nicholas de Criol accompanied King Edward the Iſt, in his famous Expedition into Scotland, and was made Knight Banneret by him, for his good Services at the Siege of Carlaverock; and died poſſeſs'd of this Place in the 31ſt Year of that King: And in this Family this Eſtate continued till it came down to Sir Thomas Criol Knight of the Garter, who was beheaded after the ſecond Battel of St. Albans, for eſpouſing the Cauſe of the Houſe of York, in the 38th Year of King Henry the VIth; and then by one of his Daughters and Coheirs, it went by Marriage to Edward Bourchier; who in the next Reign ſold it to Robert Tate, in which Name it continued till about the End of King James the Iſt, and then was ſold to Sir Edward Duke of Coſington in Aylesford; whoſe Lady Dowager had it in Dower in Philpot's Time.

N. B. In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, Nicholas de Criol was allowed by the Juſtices Itinerants to have Freewarren for all this Eſtate except one Plow-land, which was called Stannerland.

2. Gilleſted now Yelſted, is a Manor here which formerly belonged to the Family of Savage; John de Savage Grandſon to Ralph de Savage, who was with King Richard the Iſt at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine, obtained a Charter of Freewarren for it, in the 23d Year of King Edward the Iſt; and it continued in this Name, till Elizabeth Daughter and Heir to Sir Arnold de Savage, carried it firſt to Reginald Cobham, and having no Iſſue by him, afterwards to William Clifford, Eſq; in which Family it ſtaid till about the End of King Henry the VIIIth, and then was alienated to Knight, Anceſtor to Mr. William Knight, whoſe only Daughter married Mr. Peter Buck of Rocheſter, and ſurviving him, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Cowſted, anciently written Godſted, is another Place of Note in Stockbury, which anciently belonged to a Family of that Name. William de Codeſted, alias Godſted died poſſeſs'd of it in the 27th Year of King Edward the Iſt; and in this Name it continued till John de Codeſted, vulgarly called John de Cowſted, about the Beginning of King Richard the IId, leaving an only Daughter and Heir, ſhe was married to Higham; who having the Manor, assumed the Arms of the Family too, being Gules, 3 Leopards Heads Argent: And in this Name it staid till King Henry the VIth's Reign, and then it went partly by Marriage of a Daughter, and partly by Sale to Petit: And here it abode till about the End of Queen Elizabeth; and then was sold to Osborn; and by an only Daughter of that Name it passed in Marriage to William Fogge: in whose Possession it remained in Philpot's Time.

STODMARSH, lies towards the North East Side of Kent by the River Stoure, about Four Miles North Eastward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Austin, East Division of the County, and Division of Justices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Bridge, and Diocese of Canterbury; and being esteemed only as a Chapel, it is not valued in the King's Books. The Church is called St. Mary's. Soon after the Foundation of the Hospital of poor Priests in Canterbury, the Advowson of this Church was given to it, by the Abbot and Convent of St. Austin's, to whom it belonged before; and being in the Hundred of Downhamford, which anciently belonged to that Abbey, the Liberty of St. Austin's doth still claim over it.

Places of Note here:

1. Stodmarsh Manor. This did once belong to the Revenue of the Saxon Kings of Kent; and staid there till King Lothair settled it on the Abbey of St. Austin's: And to this Convent it belonged till the general Suppression of the Monasteries, and then was by King Henry the VIIIth in his 37th Year granted to John Masters; and by his Grand-Daughter Elizabeth Masters it went in Marriage to William Courthop, whose Son Mr. Thomas Courthop was the Possessor in Philpot's Time.

The People now call this Place Studmarsh; which perhaps is the right Pronunciation: For 'tis not unlikely, that in the Saxon Times here might be the Studd, or Place where the Horses of the Kings of Kent might be bred and kept; it having been once a Part of their Revenue, as is above shewn.

The English Saxons called a Mare that had a Colt, Stodmere.

STOKE, Stokes, Stoches, anciently called Andschoheſham, Textus Roffensis, p. 119. lies at the North Side of Kent, near the Isle of Grean, about Five Miles and an half North Eastward from Rochester, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Lath of Aylesford, West Division of the County, and North one of Justices in that Lath. Part of it is in the Hundred of Hoo; and the rest in that of Scamell. 'Tis in the Deanery and Diocese of Rochester. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 11 s. 8 d. per Ann. The Church stands in the Hundred of Hoo, and is dedicated to St. Peter; it hath a low Tower: In it are Memorials of the Interment of William Cardyff, in the Year 1415; and of Wilkins and Grimestone. Nothing else remarkable.

A Fair here Annually on March the 25th. This Parish ought anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the first Arch or Pere of Rochester-Bridge.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor of Stoke. This was first given to the Priory of Rochester, by Eadberht King of Kent, and recommended to Ealdulf then Bishop of Rochester, under the Notion of 10 Plow-lands, according to the Kentish Way of Estimating; lying in regione de Hobg, in loco qui dicitur Andschoheſham: As the Words are in the Grant, which is registred in our Textus Roffensis, f. 119. b. And in the Folio following is this Account:

Ego Aldulfus Episcopus imprimis penitus ignoravi quod a Dorovernensis Ecclesiæ Præsuli, & à Rege hac Kartula confirmata esse debuisset: Post agnovi, & tam diligenter postulavi ab Archiepiscopo Nothelmo & Rege Æthelberto, presidente meo largitore Eadberhto, ut ipsi manu sua hanc Donationem Corroborassent, &c. Actum A. D. 738. Text. Roff. f. 119. h.

There were also some Tenths in the Parish of Stoke, given to the Church of Rochester, by one Ralph Malesmænis (Malmains) on his being made a Monk, which after his Death was confirmed by his Son Robert Malesmænis, Text. Roff. f. 186. And in fol. 210. of that Manuscript I find this Note:

Stoches quod Godwinus Comes tenuit contra voluntatem servientium Sancti Andreæ: Et Archiepiscopus Lanfrancus disrationavit eum contra Episcopum Baiocensem juste.

Tempore Regis Edwardi se defendebat pro v. Solinis, & nunc pro iij. & est appretiatum viij. libr. & xx. denarios; hoc Manerium est in Hundredo de Hou.

And in Fol. 216. is this Entry:

Sic etiam Stoches terram Sancti Andreæ eripuit ipse Lanfrancus de invasione Tyrannorum & reddidit Gundulfo Episcopo & Monachis ejusdem.

In the Custumale Roffense, pag. 16. is this Note;

Stokes defendit se pro tribus Sulingis & dimidio cum Terra Hugonis.

And in Page 19. following is an Account of the old Services and Rents due from the Tenants and Vassals of this Manor; which containing nothing extraordinary, I omit.

After Lanfranc's Recovery of this Manor to the Priory of St. Andrew's in Rochester as above, it continued there till the general Dissolution of all the Religious Houses, and then was settled by King Henry the VIIIth, on his newly erected Cathedral Church, the Dean and Prebendaries of Rochester, where it still continues.

In the 21st Year of King Edward the Ist, the Prior of Rochester claimed and had allowed before the Justices Itinerants, the usual Privileges of a Manor here: Which in the first Grant are thus largely expressed; Cum omnibus pertinentibus (i. e.) Campis, Sylvis, Pratis, Piscariis, Salsilagine, atque omnibus utensilibus ejus juxta notos terminos Constitutos.

2. Malmains. This Place which was held of the King in Capite, in King Edward the Ist's Reign, gave Name to a very ancient Family, who resided here, and were Benefactors to Rochester Priory, as hath been above observed. John, Grandson and Son of Henry de Malmains, died possessed of it, in the 10th Year of King Edward the IId; and it was reckoned then as an entire Knights Fee: And this Family continued here till about the End of King Richard the IId's Reign; and then this Estate was alienated to Iden, a Family of Note, about Rolvenden in this County: And in this Name it continued till the latter End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was sold to John Park; and by his only Daughter Elizabeth it went in Marriage to John Roper Esq; and from him it descended to Christopher Roper, Baron of Tenham in Kent, who left it to his second Son William Roper, Esq;: And he, in King Charles the Ist's Reign, sold it to —— Jones of the Inner-Temple, Esq; in whose whoſe Family I am informed it now continues. In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, as I find by the Records, the above-named John Malmains held this Manor of Hugo Bardolf, and Iſabella his Wife.

3. Tuders. This Manor alſo had anciently Poſſeſſors of its own Name, which Philpot fancies to be a Contraction from Theodore: and ſaith he had ſeen an old Roll of Kentiſh Arms, wherein Tuder of Stoke bare the ſame Coat with Owen Theodore, vulgarly called Tuder; viz. Azure a Chevron between 3 Helmets Argent.

How long this Family continued here I don't know, but in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign this Place was got into the Poſſeſſion of Woodward, and ſtaid in that Name no longer than the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth, and then was ſold to Wilkins; and thence paſſed the ſame Way to Bright; in which Name the Poſſeſſion continued in Philpot's Time: But now by Entrance on a Mortgage, 'tis, I am told, in the Poſſeſſion of —— Nortley Bariſter of the Temple.

STONAR, Stonehar, Eſtonore, Eſtanores, Eſtanoran, lies at the Eaſt Side of Kent, in the Iſle of Thanet, near the Sea, at the other Side of the River, accounting from Sandwich; in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of the Juſtices of the Town and Port of Sandwich, whereof it is a Member; and the Liberty of Sandwich and of the Cinque Ports claims over it. It is in the Deanery of Weſtbere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and is not mentioned in the printed Valor Beneficiorum. But it was formerly a Rectory, and rated at 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann. in the King's Books. The Church hath been long ſince demoliſhed: And there is but one or two Houſes ſtanding in the Pariſh; though it was doubtleſs once a Place of Note and a Haven Town. And in King William the IId's Reign, ſaith Lambard, p. 102, the Londoners claimed it as a Sea-Port belonging to their City: But an Inquiſition being taken about it, the King adjudged it to belong to the Abbey of St. Auſtin. But theſe Londoners were only the Men of Sandwich, who did indeed always claim it as a Member of their Port: And the Miſtake which Philpot alſo runs into, came from Sandwich's being anciently called Lundenwic, as I have ſhewn it was, when I ſpoke of that Port: And this will further appear below.

Mr. Camden, Archbiſhop Uſher, and Lambard after him, take this Place to have been the Lapis Tituli of Ninnius; being led there-into by the Name Stonar. Camden's Words are theſe (a): "Here it was that Guortimer the Briton, gave the "Saxons that bloody Defeat, when at the Lapis "Tituli, (for ſo Ninnius calls it, and we almoſt "in the ſame Senſe Stonar, and it appears to have "been a Haven) he obliged them to make a ha"ſty and diſorderly Retreat to their Pinaces or "little Boats. In which Place, as the ſame "Author tells us, he commanded them to bury "him; becauſe he thought that might curb the "Inſolence of the Saxons; like Scipio Africanus, "who ordered his Tomb to be ſo contrived as "to look towards Africa, thinking even the "Sight of it would caſt a Damp upon the Carthaginians.

(a) Laſt Edit. Engl. p. 200.

But as I think we have good Reaſon to place the Lapis Tituli elſewhere, ſee Folkſtone; ſo the Name of Stonar will by no means determine us to fix it here. For though Dr. Plott in a Manuſcript of his which I have by me, thinks that the Name imports the Stoney Haven or Port; and fancies that the great Bank of Beach Stones which ſtill remains here, and ſhews that the Sea once came up to it, helps to confirm it: Yet it is plain, that the old Name of Stonar was Eſtanore, Eſtanores, as Mr. Somner ſhews (R. Ports, p. 98.) from a Charter of King William the Iſt to the Abbey of St. Auſtin's; and from another of William Rufus, as well as in ſeveral others of King Henry the Iſt, King Stephen, King John, &c. as you will ſee by and by. And in a Charter which Major John Caſon, a Gentleman in this Neighbourhood, ſhewed me, and which is but of a late Date, this Place is called Eſtanoran.

The Editor alſo of the Norman Hiſtorians, p. 168. tells us that Turkittle coming with his Fleet to Sandwich, in loco Scoraſtan dicto, contra Anglos aciem inſtruxiſſe.

Now Scoraſtan, i. e. Score-eaſtan, and Eſtanſcore or Eſtanore are plainly one and the ſame Place: So that the Name hath no Relation to Stone, but ſignifies the Eaſtern Ore, Border, Shore, or Coaſt, and probably was ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another Ore, which lies near the Town of Feverſham: And thus you find the Place where Cymene and Cerdic landed in this Kingdom, called Cymenes Oran, and Cerdices Oran.

An Annual Fair for Five Days after May 26. was granted to this Place by King Henry the Iſt, but it hath long ſince been diſus'd.

Kilburn ſaith, that Auſtin the Monk landed here, and continued at this Place till King Ethelbert ſent hither to him, to treat with him about converting his People to the Chriſtian Religion. Here alſo landed King Canutus the Dane, ſaith he, A. D. 1015. though I rather think it was on the other Side of the Portus Rutupenſis, at Sandwich.

And here alſo A. D. 1216. landed Lewis the Dauphin of France, with his Army againſt King John. All theſe Things ſhew this Place to have been anciently very conſiderable; but in Proceſs of Time it met with ſeveral Diſaſters which brought on its Ruin.

In the 39th Year of King Edward the IIId, there happened an extraordinary and terrible Inundation of the Sea hereabouts, for the Space of Two Miles in length, viz. from Clives-end to Stonar: So that the Town of Stonar was almoſt then deſtroyed by it: And it was apprehended, that unleſs ſome ſpeedy Help could be had, all the Low-lands in the Hundreds of Ryveſko, Wyngham, Preſton, and Downhamford would be overflowed: Wherefore the King commiſſioned the Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, Ralph Spigurnel, John Cobham, Robert Belknap, and others, to enquire into the true State of this Matter, and to endeavour to ſecure the Houſes, Lands, &c. Dugdale's Hiſt. of Inbanking, p. 44.

But Philpot ſaith the utter Ruin and Subverſion of this Town happened in the Year 1385. about the 19th Year of King Richard the IId, when the French with 18 Gallies landed here and burnt the Town to Aſhes: and he blames Sir Simon de Burley, then Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, as the great Occaſion of it; for he had demanded that all the Ornaments and Riches of Becket's Shrine in Canterbury Cathedral, and alſo all the Jewels of St. Auſtin's Abbey, ſhould be removed for their better Security againſt the Attempts of the French, to Dover Caſtle. But when the cautious Prieſts would not thus venture all their Riches in one Place, and in one Lay-hand, he grew angry at the Refuſal, and ſlack and remiſs in ſecuring the Sea Coaſts about the Iſle of Thanet, where a good Part of the Eſtates of theſe Convents lay. And when the Abbot of St. Auſtin's had raiſed a conſiderable Strength out of his Tenants about Norbourn, &c. with a Deſign to march and ſecure the Iſle of Thanet; Sir Simon would not let him paſs over at Sandwich, but made him go round about with his Troops by Fordwich and Sturrey: However, the brave Abbot got into the Iſland, and made ſuch a vigorous Reſiſtance, that the Enemy was beaten back to their Ships. After this Sir John got the King's Mandate to enforce the Abbot to leave Thanet, and come to the Defence of Sandwich; but the Abbot would not ſtir, but abode there to defend his Tenants and Lands againſt the Inſults of the Invaders.

There was anciently a Guard kept at the Paſſage between Sandwich and Stonar, for the ſecuring of Paſſengers to and fro; the Profits of which Paſſage, in the 7th Year of King Edward the IId, were granted to William Turke for Life: And Eleven Years after, another Grant was made of them to Ralph Lawrence of Thanet. In the 13th Year of King Edward the IIId, a Third Grant was made to John Gibboun, who is ſaid to be Marmarius to that King; perhaps his Statuary.

Dr. Platt in the Manuſcript above-mentioned, which was written about the Year 1693, ſaith, that the Ruins of the Town of Stonar did remain, till within the Memory of Man, and took up many Acres of Ground; but were lately removed to render the Ground fit for Tillage; and ſo much of them as could not be put to any Uſe, compoſed that Bank which remains between the Two Houſes: Whereof that Houſe next the preſent Creek, borders upon the old Town; the other, which is more remote, being of a latter Erection; but both are called Stonar.

The Manor of Stonar, which was given to St. Auſtin's Abbey by King Cnute, with the reſt of the Revenues, belonged to the Nunnery of Minſter, when he removed St. Mildred's Body thither; of which more in another Place. And this Manor continued there till the general Diſſolution of the Abbeys, and then came to the Crown; and in the 5th Year of Philip and Mary, was granted to Nicholas Criſpe, Eſq; and in his Deſcendant Nicholas Criſpe, Eſq;'s Poſſeſſion it continued in Philpot's Time. But that Family here ended in Daughters and Coheirs, one of which married Richard Breton, Eſq; who bought the Intereſt of the other Siſters, and then ſold the whole to Sir George Rooke; and it will deſcend to his only Son and Heir George Rooke, Eſq; now a Minor, and under the Guardianſhip of William Bradnox, and Samuel Mills, Eſqs;.

From a Record of 8. Edw. I. exemplify'd under the Seal of the Exchequer 15. Car. I. at the Inſtance and Requeſt of Henry Criſpe, Knight, who was then poſſeſs'd of Stonore, and teſted by the Lord High Treaſurer Biſhop Juxon: It appears,

THAT upon Complaint of the Abbot of St. Auguſtin's, ſetting forth that the Men of Stonore, having Time out of Mind, held their Lands and Tenements in Stonore, of the Barony of the ſaid Abbot, had withdrawn themſelves, and united to the Port of Sandwich: And that whereas they us'd to have their own Sheep fed in the Abbot's Marſh, in Conſideration of one Penny for 5 Sheep per Ann. they had taken in Sheep belonging to Strangers; and had beaten and abus'd his Servants, who attempted to impound 'em. King Edw. on 13. May, A. R. 8. directs his Writ to Stephen de Penceſtre, and John de Lovetot, to enquire into the Premiſes by a Jury of Knights, &c. to be impannel'd by the Sheriff. At which Inquiſition, on the Part of the Abbot, was produced the Charter of William the Conqueror. — "Will. D. G. R. Ang. Archiepiſ. Ep. Abbat' Comit' Vice-Com' & omnibus Fidelibus totius Angliæ Salutem. Sciatis, quia volo, præcipio ſuper amicitiam meam, ut nullus a modo aliquid reclamet in Eſt-Stonores, ſet Wido Abbas de Sanct. Aug. & Fratres ejuſdem loci libere & quiete terram illam & totum littus uſque in medietatem Aquæ habeant ſine Calumpnia aliqua: quoniam ita diſrationnatum eſt inter Homines meos de Londonia, & Homines Abbatis in tempore meo coram Juſticiariis meis apud Eſt-Stonore. T. W. Dunelm. Ep. & R. apud Wind.". The Abbot likewiſe produced a Charter of Henry the IIId, confirming one of King John's, in the ſame Words with that of William the Conqueror, (but therein written Eſt-Stonoures.) And the Abbot prov'd, that the Ville of Stanore, (as it is written in the Remainder of the Record) was fined at Canterbury before Nicholas de Turri, and other Juſtices Itinerant, a Hundred Shillings, for the Eſcape of a Felon; who, for Murder, had taken Sanctuary in their Church: from which it was manifeſt, the Town was of the Foreign, and no Member of the Cinque Ports. Four of the Inhabitants fall in with the Abbot's Claim, and ſubmit; acknowledging that all the Marſh from Stanore to Hepplefleet was the Soil of the Abbot: But the reſt, who were very numerous, (for there are near 50 mentioned by Name in the Record, who with divers others unknown, were concerned in the Riot) diſown it, pleading, that they belong'd to Sandwich; and that they find a Veſſel in the King's Fleet, when the Cinque Ports are ſummoned to fit out their Navy; and that they actually found one Veſſel in the King's late Armament againſt Wales: And in this they are ſupported by the Mayor and Bailiffs of Sandwich.

But the Jurors in the End, gave their Verdict for the Abbot; and ſay, That the Men of Stanore belong to his Barony: and that if Stanore were drown'd, the King would loſe nothing of his Service, that is due to him from the Port of Sandwich: And that the Town of Stanore was gildable to the King. And in the Iſſue, ſet a Fine of 40 Shillings upon the Men, for their Aſſault and Battery upon the Abbot's Servants, and 40 Shillings for default of Suit and Service to him.

Now I judge that the Men of London, in the Charter of William the Conqueror; and the Londoners of Thorn, mentioned by Lambard, p. 102. and Somner, p. 14. and Philpot, p. 290. who contended with the Abbot about Stonare, were no other than the Men of Sandwich. Though I muſt not conceal one Thing which may at firſt Sight paſs for an Objection againſt this Notion.

The Jurors before-mentioned, being ask'd upon what Account, and when the Men of Stanore join'd themſelves to the Men of Sandwich: They anſwer'd; That the Men of Stanore thinking to be defended againſt Wido the Abbot, if they were united with ſome City or Port, they in the Time of William the Conqueror, adhæſerunt ſe Civibus London. & de ipſorum Libertate eſſe clamabant; but that the Cauſe being given againſt them by the Conqueror, the Jury ſay, from that Time they were intendentes Abbati, to the Reign of Edward the Iſt, who having granted a new Charter to Sandwich, Stanore claimed to be a Member of that Port; and offer'd to maintain one Veſſel at their own proper Charge, whenever Sandwich ſhould be ſummoned to man out their Ships. So conſiderable was the Place then, for it was furniſh'd with a Church, a Wind-Mill, and Water-Mill, and a great Number of Houſes, and Inhabitants proportionable to ſuch a Charge; which they would willingly have taken upon them, rather ther than be ſubject to the Abbot. But to this it may be anſwer'd, That in all Probability the Name of Lundenwick for Sandwich was quite worn out and forgotten in that Age: This Jury being impannel'd above 180 Years after the Charter of William the Conqueror, they might poſſibly take the Homines London' in it for Citizens of that great Metropolis, and from thence make uſe of the Word City and Citizens in their Verdict; when nothing elſe at firſt was meant, but the Port and Men of Sandwich, to which Stonore was ſo near a Neighbour, and with whom it ſeems to me much more probable they ſhould at firſt unite, than with a City at ſo great a Diſtance as London, into the Liberties of which, had they at firſt been taken, in the Conqueror's Time, Why ſhould they not have had recourſe to them again, in Edward the Iſt's Time?

By a Record of 8. Ed. 2. It appears that the Records of Edw. 1. had been inſpected, and that therein it was found, that a Steward had been made by the Mediation of Stephen de Penceſtre, and Roger Northwood, that all Differences betwixt Nicholas, Abbot of St. Auſtin, and the Men of Stonore and Sandwich, ſhould be ended by Conſent of Parties: That the Men of Stonore acknowledge, that they hold all their Tenements in Stonore of the Abbot; and that they ſhall do Suit and Service at his Court, &c.

It is alſo agreed, That no Perſon of the Commonalty of Stonore or Sandwich ſhall dig in the Abbot's Marſh, or carry away Earth: And that no one of the Commonalty, within the Wall againſt the Sea, between Stonore and Cliveſend, gather Stone or take Ballaſt, but under High Sea, betwixt High and Low Water. If either offer any Thing contrary to the Award, the other ſhall have the King's Writ to recover by Judgment upon the Accord. The Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle is commanded to ſummon the Men of Stonore and Sandwich, to be before the King at a certain Day to anſwer, if they have any Thing to ſay againſt performing the Accord. But they not appearing, the Conſtable is commanded to compel 'em to keep and obſerve the Accord as often as Occaſion ſhall require. —— However, the Struggle ſtill went on. ——— For by the Record of 43. Hen. 3. the King commands the Tenor of the Proceedings betwixt Nicholas, Abbot of St. Auſtin's, and the Men of Stonore and Sandwich, under Edw. 1. to be produced; whereupon it is return'd, That among the Pleas before the King, Solomon Leverske, John le Parker, Henry Waynays, and John Dennis Mayor of Sandwich, &c. were attached to anſwer to a Plea of Treſpaſs by Robert de Stoko, Sheriff of Kent, (de Scotton in Philpot's Liſt) who proſecutes for the King. In Eaſter Term William Shoper appears, and defends againſt all the Matter charg'd, &c. Solomon alſo pleads, That he will not anſwer but in the Court of Shipway; and ſays, that Stonore is a Member of the Ports, belonging to the Port of Sandwich; and that they are not to anſwer, &c. The Sheriff replies, That the Town of Stonore is of the Barony of the King, belonging to the Barony of St. Auſtin's; and demands Judgment. Solomon, and the others, not having made a ſufficient Defence, are committed to Gaol; and the Mayor, as repreſenting the Commonalty, being found guilty, the Commonalty loſe their Privileges. Afterwards an Accord is made, that the Men of Stonore hold all their Tenements of the Abbot, &c. as before. And the Men are condemn'd to pay the Abbot a Hundred Marks for Damages. And the Abbot, at the Requeſt of the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, releaſes the Hundred Marks for Ten Hogſheads of Wine, to be paid, &c.

I

STONE near Dartford, Stanes, lies at the North Side of Kent, adjoining to the Thames, about Two Miles and an half North Eaſtward from Dartford, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Dartford, Hundred of Axtone, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath.

The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims over it. 'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church is dedicated to St. Mary. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 26 l. 10 s. 0 d. per Ann. The Church is large and lofty, with Pillars of the Gothick Order; the Chancel finely adorned with Pilaſters of the ſame: A very good Roof. In this Church are or were Memorials of the Interment of Richard Bomfant Owner of Stone Caſtle, in the Year 1459: Of John Sorewell, in 1429; Of John Lumbard, in 1408; Of Maud, Wife of William Leken, Serjeant at Law, in 1408; Of ſeveral of the Chapmans, who were Owners of Stone Caſtle. Of William Banknot, in 1400; Of Sir John Wilſhyre, in 1526: This Gentleman, Wever ſaith, was Comptroller of the Town and Marches of Calais; and his only Daughter was married to Sir Richard Wingfield, who was Owner of Stone Caſtle. Sir John Wilſhyre lies here in a Chancel of his own Foundation.

The Manor of Stone was given to the Priory of Rocheſter, by King Ethelred, in the Year 900. And in the Cuſtumale Roffenſe, 'tis ſaid to contain Four Plow-lands, and was valued at xvj. l. And the Textus Roffenſis ſaith, Et tamen Epiſcopus habet inde in Firmâ ſua xx. l. & j. unciam auri, & j. Marſum; which I take to be a Miſtake for Manſum, a Capital Manſion or Houſe.

Places of Note here:

1. Stonehouſe or Stone-Caſtle, as Philpot calls it; ſeems to have been no deſigned Place of Strength, but only a Caſtellated Manſion; tho' there is a Kind of a Square Tower ſtill ſtanding; He ſaith it was built by the Northwoods, as appeared by the Arms of that Family in ſome of the old Stone-work. In the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId, John de Northwood paid Aid for his Manor and Caſtle here, at making the Black Prince Knight: But he ſaith Sir Richard Wilſhyre laid the Foundation of that Fabrick, which was ſtanding in his Time. From the Northwood Family it was ſold into that of Bulivant, corruptly called Bonnivant: And from hence the ſame Way to Cholmley; and thence again to Chapman; and by a Widow of that Name, it went in Marriage to John Preſton, but for his Life only: For Anne, her Son Thomas Chapman's only Daughter, carried it in Marriage to Mr. William Carew; and in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of his Deſcendant Mr. Henry Carew: From the Name of Carew, as I'm inform'd, it went into that of Atkins; thence to Plume; and is now given to charitable Uſes.

2. Stone Place, is a Houſe here which anciently belonged to the Wingfields, whence it went to the Tanifords; thence to How; and thence again to one Malines, in whoſe Widow's Poſſeſſion it now continues. By the Gate-Houſe, which is ſtill ſtanding, it appears to have been a large Houſe: The Ceilings of ſeveral Rooms are of Oak. Over the Gate-Houſe, and on a Stone Chimney in the Parlour, I obſerved theſe Arms, A Chevron, in Chief, 3 Croſſes.

3. Littlebrook. This Place had once Poſſeſſors of the Name of Brook; but they were extinct here before King Edward the IIId's Death, and then it came to the Northwoods: About the End of King Richard the IId, John de Northwood ſold it to Roger Apylton, who lies buried in Crayford Church,

Church, in the Year 1400; and from him it descended to Sir Henry Apylton Baroner, the Possessor in Philpot's Time.

4. Cotton, was once in the Possession of a Family of this Name; for John de Cotton paid Aid for it in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId, but in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, it was become the Estate of the Killingworths of Sutton-at-Hone; from which Name it was sold to Sir Richard Wilshyre, and by his Daughter passed to Sir Richard Wingfield; from which Family it was sold to Evans; and by a Daughter went thence to Massingbeard: This is Philpot's Account; and yet in the Margin he saith, That in the 5th Year of Queen Elizabeth this Manor was granted to the Lord Burleigh, and Sir Francis Walsingham for 1000 Years: That after this, Harrington and Manning enjoyed it on the same Terms successively; and that it was in his Time in the Heirs of Manning.

STONE, near Feversham, lies at the North Side of Kent, about Two Miles South Westward from Feversham, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, East Division of the County, and upper Division of Justices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Hundred of Feversham, Diocese of Canterbury, and Deanery of Ospringe.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims over the Manors of Copton, Selgrave, or Homme Marsh; because they were given to that Church in the 33d Year of King Henry the VIIIth.

But the Liberty of St. Austin claims over Stone also, because 'tis in the Hundred of Feversham, which belonged to that Abbey.

A. D. 1227. Simon de Langton, Brother to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Archdeacon of Canterbury, gave to Christ-Church Priory omnes Decimas majores & minores de Copton, & Eylwarton, infra Limites Capellæ de Stone; for Stone was but a Chapel of Ease to Tenham. And those Two Manors themselves Copton and Eylwarton were given to the Monks of Canterbury, by Edmund Son of Queen Edgiva, ad Victum eorum, A. D. 980. Being only a Chapel, 'tis not valued in the King's Books.

Places of Note here:

Wilde-Mersh, is a Place here, which once was Part of the Inheritance of the Ancient Family of Donet: John Donet died seized of it in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId; his Descendant James Donet left only a Daughter Margery, who carried it to her Husband John St. Leger. But from this Family it was sold to Richard Dryland; and thence it passed the same Way to Sir Anthony Aucher; in whose Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

STONE, in the Isle of Oxney, lies at the South Side of Kent, adjoining to Sussex, by the River Rother, about Four Miles South Eastward from Tenterden, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Shipway, Hundred of Oxney, East Division of the County, and Division of Justices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Diocese of Canterbury, and Deanery of Limpne: The Church is called St. Mary's; and belonged to the Abbey of St. Austin's in Canterbury. The Vicarage was endowed A. D. 1360. in the Time of Simon Islip, Archbishop of Canterbury.

Valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 12 s. 8 d.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims here; and That of St. Austin over the Rectory and Vicarage of Stone.

Places of Note here:

1. Abdale: Near the Marsh here, at a Place called Abdale or Apdale, are the Ruins of a great Building of Stone; by some thought to have been formerly a Castle; by others a great Storehouse for Merchants Goods, when the Sea came near it, as no doubt it did formerly.

A Fair is kept here on Holy Thursday.

A. D. 990. This Place was terribly spoiled, and burnt by the Danes.

STOWTING, lies towards the South East Part of Kent, about Three Miles and an half, South Westward from Elham, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Stowting, Lath of Shipway, East Division of the County, and Division of the Justices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Elham, and Diocese of Canterbury. The Church is called St. Mary's. A Rectory, valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 17 s. 10 d.

A. D. 1044. Egelricus Bigg gave Stowting to Christ-Church in Canterbury.

The Liberty of the Archbishop of Canterbury claims here.

Places of Note here:

1. Stowting; in King John's Reign this Manor belonged to Stephen de Heringod, who had the Grant of a Tuesday's Market, and a Two-days Fair at the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin; and he died possess'd of it in the 41st Year of King Henry the IIId. Next it came into the Possession of William de Kirkby, who farmed the whole Hundred of the King: And in the 21st Year of King Edward the Ist, the King claimed the Advowson of the Church here, but the Jury gave it against him, for Kirby; who married Christina, a Daughter of one of the Heringods. After this it became the Inheritance of the great Family of Burgherst or Burwash: Bartholomew de Burwash was Knighted by King Edward the Ist, at the Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland: Whose Son Stephen de Burwash had a Charter of Freewarren for his Manor of Stowting, in the 1st Year of King Edward the IIId. But his Grandson Bartholomew Lord Burwash conveyed it to Walter de Paveley, Knight of the Garter; and in this Name it staid till King Richard the IId's Reign, but in his 15th Year was sold to Trivet; who sold it again to Sir Lewis Clifford; whose Successor Lewis Clifford, in the 12th Year of King Henry the VIth, sent it the same Way to William Wenlock; and he not long after alienated it to Beauchamp Baron of Bergavenny; by whose Grand-Daughter Elizabeth, it went, with the Barony, in Marriage to Richard Nevill: And in this Family it continued till Henry Nevill Lord Bergavenny, about the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, sold it to Sir Thomas Moile; and by his Daughter (Amy) it went to Sir Thomas Kempe; whose Son Sir Thomas Kempe, together with his Sisters Amy and Dorothy, and their Trustees, in the 19th Year of King James the Ist, sold it to Josiah Clark of Westerfield in Essex, Gent. who married the said Amy, but he had no Issue by her; and therefore he sold it in King Charles the Ist's Reign, to Mr. Jenkins of Eythorn, Gent. whose Great Grandson Thomas Jenkins, Esq; now enjoys it.

Dr. Gale in his Anton. Itin. p. 86. saith, Roman Coins have been found here.

And the Dering Manuscripts also inform me, That in the Old Park here, long before it was laid open or disparked, several Urns were found lying in a Trough of Stone, perhaps such an one as that found at Wingham; see that Place.

STROUD, Strodes, Eſtrodes. Mr. Lambard thinks it took this Name from being Strowed, (Strewed) or Scattered; becauſe at firſt he ſaith it conſiſted of only a few Houſes ſcattered without the City.

It lies towards the Middle of the North Side of Kent, adjoining to that moſt noble Edifice the Bridge of Rocheſter, over the famous River Medway: In the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Shamell, Lath of Aylesford, and Weſt Diviſion of the County.

Part of it is in the Diviſion of Juſtices of the City of Rocheſter, and the Liberty of that City claims over it; viz. Over the Bridge to Stroud Mill, and ſo including the Mill, it takes in all the Right-Hand Side of the Way, till you come to the Angel Inn; and all Littleburgh, and ſo up beyond the Church, to the High-Way between Frinsbury and Cookſtone; and up the Way leading to Frinsbury, to the Houſe called the Ship, taking in the Church of Stroud.

The reſt of the Pariſh is in the North Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Aylesford.

The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter alſo claims here, as doth That of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, over the Manor of Goddington in this Pariſh.

A Fair is kept here on Aug. 15.

'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Rocheſter. But the Church, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas, being anciently only a Chapel of Eaſe to Frinsbury, is not valued in the King's Books. Biſhop Gilbert, for the Recovery of the Holy Land, and for the Redemption of King Richard the Iſt, then a Priſoner, gave it to the Hoſpital of St. Mary's, which he had newly founded in Stroud. And this he did with the Conſent of William then Rector of Frinsbury, and Archdeacon of Rocheſter, on Condition that the Hoſpital ſhall find a ſufficient Chaplain to officiate there, and who is to be approved of by the Biſhop. And there it continued till the general Suppreſſion, and then was ſettled by King Henry the VIIIth, on the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Rocheſter, who now provide a Chaplain, as the Hoſpital did; who hath only the ſmall Tithes, the Surplice Fees, and the Church-Yard.

The Church of Stroud is a very handſome large Building, and in very good Repair; the Nave conſiſts of Three Iſles, the Chancel railed off, with a Veſtry Room. And there are Remains of a Charnel-Houſe under the Chancel. There are no Ancient or eminent Monuments or Inſcriptions here; except a Stone in the South Iſle, which hath graved on it the Figure of ſome Religious Perſon, and ſome old Letters round the Edges not now legible; I gueſs it to have been over one of the Chaplains, who officiated here formerly about Four or Five Hundred Years ago.

In the South Iſle is a ſmall Chapel, belonging to the Family of Morland, who had an Eſtate in the Town.

The Church of Frinsbury, with the Chapel of Stroud, was granted to the Priory of St. Andrews by John Biſhop of Rocheſter, and the Tenths of Stroud by King Henry the Iſt.

Places of Note here:

1. Stroud Manor. This, in the 11th Year of King Henry the IIId, was granted to the Maſter and Brethren of the Order of Knights Templers, who had here an eminent Manſion, which is to this Day called the Temple: And when in the 2d Year of King Edward the IId, this rich Order became ſuppreſſed, it became united to the Crown again: As before this; viz. in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, the Crown had brought a Claim to it before the Juſtices Itinerant for this County; but the Jury gave it againſt the King. And being thus got among the Royal Revenue, it continued there till the 12th Year of the next Reign, and then was granted, by King Edward the IIId, to Mary Counteſs of Pembroke: This Lady, about Six Years after, gave it to the Nuns of the Order of St. Clare, in the Abbey of Denny in Cambridgeſhire; where it ſtaid till the 32d Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and then on the general Diſſolution returning to the Crown once more, it was by that Prince granted to Edward Elrington, Eſq; who ſold it to George Lord Cobham, in the ſame Year. And this new Purchaſer's Grandſon, Henry Lord Cobham, forfeited it again to the Crown in the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, by being concerned in that unintelligible Plot of Sir Walter Rawleigh; on which that King gave it to Robert Cecil Earl of Salisbury, Principal Secretary of State, and who had married the Lady Elizabeth Brook, this unfortunate Gentleman's Siſter. His Son William Cecil Earl of Salisbury, ſold it to Mr. Bernard Hide, one of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtom-Houſe; who not many Years after parted with it the ſame Way to James Duke of Lenox: And thence it was alienated to Mr. Blague; in whoſe Son Mr. Iſaac Blague's Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time, and in whoſe Family it ſtill continues.

2. Godington. This Place Kilburn mentions as a Manor here, but Philpot ſaith nothing of it.

3. Hawkins, 4. Boncakes, and, 5. Caſtlefield: Theſe, with ſeveral other Parcels of Lands here, were Part of the old Revenue of the Priory of Rocheſter; and were ſettled by King Henry the VIIIth on his new-founded Cathedral there; in whoſe Poſſeſſion they now are.

6. Newark Hoſpital. Of this I ſhall ſpeak fully in its proper Place.

I find by the Pleas of the Crown held by the Juſtices Itinerants, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, a Complaint was made againſt the Wharf at Stroud, for getting Veſſels away from Rocheſter Wharf, and defrauding the King of his Cuſtoms. But on Examination, it appeared that the latter Part was falſe: And that the Reaſon of Men's coming with their Veſſels to this Wharf at Stroud, was, becauſe that at Rocheſter was broken down and unfit for Uſe.

Lambard in his Peramb. p. 431. cites Polydore Virgil for ſaying, That in the Time of the Quarrel between King Henry the IId, and Becket; the latter began at length to be reputed the King's Enemy, and to be ſo commonly contemned, neglected, and hated; that once as he rode thro' Stroud, ſome of the naughty Inhabitants cut off his Horſe's Tail: But they were ſufficiently puniſhed for it; for every one which came of the Kindred of thoſe prophane Men, were afterwards born with ſuch Tails as Brute Beaſts are.

Juſt ſuch another Story doth Alexander Eſſleby tell of Auſtin the Monk, who once when Fiſh-Tails were deſpitefully thrown at him, by ſome Men of Dorſetſhire, was ſo furiouſly vexed therewith, that he called upon God for Revenge; who forthwith heard him, and gave them alſo Tails for their Puniſhment. Now, as if we had not Kentiſh long-Tails enough upon Becket's Account, Lambard ſaith, John Major the Scot will needs bring this Latter Story alſo into Kent, and change the Scene of it from Dorſetſhire to Rocheſter: Though 'tis one great Comfort that Hector Boetius, he ſaith, looking better upon the Matter, remits it home to Dorſetſhire again, and ſaith it happened at Miglington there.

However, poor Mr. Lambard is ſo concerned about theſe Tail Stories, that he ſpends 7 or 8 Pages to refute them ſeriouſly; and ſaith, that the whole Engliſh Nation have been flouted Abroad about their Tails: I don't know how the

Kentiſh

Kentiſh Men will like that, but I dare ſay none of them will be angry at the Reproach of either of the former Stories: Any more than they believe that God is always ready to comply with the Malice and Curſes of a peeviſh and petulant Biſhop.

As to the Noble Charity of Mr. Watts of Boly-Hill in Rocheſter, in Part given to this Town, it will be mentioned at large, in its proper Place.

STURMOUTH, Sturemouth, i. e. the Mouth of the Stoure: Lies towards the North Eaſt Part of Kent, by the Stoure, about Four Miles North Weſtward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here, but that of St. Auſtin claimeth alſo over the ſame; (becauſe 'tis in the Hundred of Blengate, which belonged to the Abbey of that Name.)

'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is called All-Saints. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 18 l. 19 s. 10 d. per Annum.

The Church is ſmall, but neat; and there are Remains of ſome good painted Glaſs in the Windows.

On an Agreement between Biſhop Gundulf and one Haimo, to make his Brother a Monk in Rocheſter Priory, Haimo gave to that Houſe this Church of Sturmouth, Four Acres of Land here, and Paſture for 100 Sheep, in the Manor of Sturmouth.

This was done in the Preſence of Archbiſhop Anſelm. Text. Roff. f. 280.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor of Sturmouth once was Part of the large Eſtate of the Huſſeys: For Henry le Huſſey had a Charter of Freewarren for it in the 5th Year of Henry the IIId, and his Grandſon Henry le Huſſey died poſſeſs'd of it in the 6th Year of Edward the IIId. But about the End of King Henry the IVth's Reign, it became Part of the Poſſeſſion of the Eminent Family of the Apulderfield's; and Sir William Apulderfield, about the Middle of King Edward the IVth's Reign, gave it in Marriage with his Daughter Elizabeth to Sir John Fineux, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, in the Reign of King Henry the VIIth. But he died without Iſſue-Male, and Jane his only Daughter carried it to her Husband John Roper, Eſq; of St. Dunſtan's in Canterbury; and in Philpot's Time it continued in the Poſſeſſion of Mr. William Roper, a Deſcendant of the ſame Family.

(a) Peramb. p. 280. I think Lambard judges right (a), that this Sturmouth was not the Place where the Danes loſt 16 Ships againſt King Ælfred's Navy, as ſome have imagined: For the Saxon Chronicle ſaith plainly, that the King ſent his Forces out of Kent thither. And indeed the Place of that Action ſeems plainly to have been off of Harwich Haven in Eſſex; not far from which is a Place called Starmære.

But 'tis not improbable (by the Name of this Place) that the Kentiſh River Stoure did here once diſcharge it ſelf into the Sea; and as there ſeems to have been anciently a large Æſtuary hereabouts, as I have before hinted, this Place may have formerly been both of great Note and Antiquity.

STURREY, lies towards the North Side of Kent, by the River Stoure, about Two Miles North Eaſtward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

The Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over it, becauſe it is in the Hundred of Blengate, which belonged to that Abbey.

'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to the uſual Sea or Fiſhing Saint, St. Nicholas. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 13 l. 1 s. 8 d. per Annum.

The Church is neat, but hath nothing elſe remarkable in it.

Places of Note here:

1. Sturrey Manor, properly ſo called. I find the Abbot of St. Auſtin's claiming and being allowed the uſual Privileges for his Manor of Sturrey, before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt; but what came of it afterwards, or whether it be the ſame with what next follows, I can't tell. But Philpot ſaith,

2. That the Manor of Sturrey was anciently the Inheritance of the Apulderfields; and by Elizabeth, a Daughter of that Name, went in Marriage to Sir John Phineux; and by Elizabeth, another Daughter of his Son's, to Sir John Smith, Eldeſt Son of Sir Thomas Smith, and Grandfather to Philip Smith, Viſcount Strangford, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Mayton. This Place was formerly the Eſtate of a Family of this Name; but it went thence by Sale to Diggs; and by Leonard Diggs, Grandfather to Sir Dudley Diggs, it was alienated to Goodhugh, and by a Daughter of that Name it went to Baggs, and thence by another Daughter to Farmer, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

SUNDRISH, Sundrige, Sundriche; Sundererſcæ, in the Textus Roffenſis: Lies towards the Weſt End of Kent, about Two Miles and a half North Eaſtward from Weſtram, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Bromley, Hundred of Codſheath, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Lower one of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery of Shoreham, and ſo a Peculiar of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 22 l. 13 s. 4 d. per Annum.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims over the Manor of Sundriſh.

Places of Note here:

1. Sundriſh Manor, thus ſtands regiſter'd in Domeſday Book.

Sunderherſce eſt Manerium Archiepiſcopi quod Godwinus tenuit T. E. R. injuſte & Archiepiſcopus iſte Lanfrancus explacitavit illud contra Epiſcopum Bajocenſem juſte per conceſſum Regis: & in T. E. Hoc Manerium eſt in Hundredo de Codeſede.

Under Boxley I have given you at large this Pleading of Lanfranc; 'tis called Placitum ad Peneuden.

2. Sundrich: This perhaps under the Title of a Manor in Sundriſh of ſome peculiar Name, was, as high as any Diſcovery can ſhew us, the Inheritance of a Family of the Name of Iſley or de Inſula: John de Inſula had a Charter of Freewarren for his Lands here, in the 11th Year of King Edward the IId; and had Iſſue a Son of his own Name, who married Joan Daughter of Sir Ralph de Fremingham; by whom he had Roger Iſley, Iſley, Eſq; who in Right of his Mother was Heir to his Uncle John Fremingham, Eſq;, who died without Iſſue, in the 12th Year of King Henry the IVth. This Roger Iſley's Son William Iſley, Eſq; was Sheriff of Kent, in the 25th Year of K. Henry VI. as his Son John Iſley was in the 14th Year of K. Edward IV. and was buried in Sandwich Church, in the Year 1484. His Son Thomas Iſley, Eſq; was the Father of that unfortunate Sir Henry Iſley, Sheriff of Kent in the 34th Year of King Henry the VIIIth; and again, in the 5th Year of Edward the VIth, who was executed at Sevenoak, in the 2d Year of Queen Mary, for being engaged in Sir Thomas Wyat's Rebellion; on which this Eſtate was forfeited to the Crown; but was reſtored again the ſame Year to his Son William Iſley, Eſq; who was afterwards Sheriff of Kent, in the 7th Year of Queen Elizabeth: After his Deceaſe, this Eſtate was ſold to Brooker; and thence not many Years after to Mr. John Hyde, ſecond Son of Mr. Barnham Hyde, one of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms in King Charles the Iſt's Reign: And he was the Proprietor in Philpot's Time.

2. Brook's-Place. This, ſaith Philpot, was ſo called, from its Situation near a Brook of Water; it was Part of the Eſtate of the Iſleys abovementioned, till one John Iſley ſold it to John Alphew; by one of whoſe Two Daughters and Coheirs it went in Marriage to Sir Robert Read, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, in King Henry the VIIth's Reign. He left Four Daughters and Coheirs; by one of which, Katherine, this Place went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Willoughby, Lord Chief Juſtice alſo of the Common Pleas; but his Deſcendant Thomas Willoughby, Eſq; about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſold it to Mr. Hoskins of Oxted in Surrey, whoſe Grandſon was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

4. Hethenden, or Henden: This is another Manor in Sundriſh, which formerly was Part of the Eſtate of the great Family of Clare; who were Earls of Glouceſter, and Lords of Tunbridge: And by an Heir-General of that Name it went by Marriage to Audley; and by another of that Name, paſſed the ſame way into that of Stafford; where it continued till it was forfeited to the Crown, by the Attainder of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham, in the 13th Year of King Henry the VIIIth; and then that Prince in his 35th Year, granted it to Sir John Greſham, who died ſeized of it in the 1ſt Year of Queen Elizabeth; but about the latter End of that Reign, it went by Sale from the Greſhams to Sir Thomas Hoskins above-mentioned; and in one of his Deſcendants the Poſſeſſion was in Philpot's Time.

5. Comb Bank. This was a Seat in Sundriſh that formerly belonged to the Iſleys: And near it, ſaith Philpot, was found, by digging, many Roman Urns of Antique Figure: And from hence he concludes, that the Roman Foſſe, as he calls it, or publick Highway, came from Oldborough, by this Place in its Courſe to Baſton in Heys, and ſo to Woodcott in Surrey. And tho' I ſhew in ſeveral Places of this Book, that this could not be the Common Watling-ſtreet, which runs directly to Rocheſter, and thence to Canterbury, and ſo to Dover; yet I can't be ſure, that this was not Part of ſome latter Way, which they made from the latter Portus Lemanis to London: And if ſuch a latter Way was formed, as there is great Reaſon to conclude; as it could not paſs far from hence, ſo 'tis very probable that here might be a Roman Burying-Place for ſome of their Soldiers, which marched to and from Romney Marſh towards London, ſome time before they left Britain.

SUTTON by Dover, lies at the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Five Miles North Eaſt from Dover, in the Bailiwick of Eaſtry, Hundred of Cornilo, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

Part of the Pariſh Church was thrown down by an Earthquake, which happened April the 6th, 1580. 'Tis only a Curacy, and therefore not valued in the King's Books.

The Liberties of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and of St. Auſtin claims here.

Places of Note here:

1. Sutton was once the Inheritance of a Family called Stroude: John de Stroude held it in the 20th Year of King Edward the Iſt; next it went into the Poſſeſſion of the Criols; and by a Daughter of Sir Thomas Criol, who was killed in the ſecond Battel of St. Albans, it went to John Fogg, Eſq; and from that Family was ſold to Whitlock, and thence to Maycott, thence to Stokes, and thence, in King Charles the Iſt's Time, to Merryweather; and there the Poſſeſſion abode in Philpot's Time.

2. Beſides this Eſtate of the Stroudes, there was in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, a very conſiderable one here, which was claimed by the Heirs of Waretius de Valoignes before the Juſtices Itinerant, againſt one Robert Haybebrand, and they agreed the Matter amongſt themſelves.

SUTTON-AT-HONE; i. e. in or by the Valley: Suthtuna; lies towards the North Side of Kent, by the River Darent, about Two Miles South Eaſtward from Dartford, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Dartford, Hundred of Axtane, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims here; and That of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury over thoſe Lands, which were Mr. Roper's in this Pariſh, about 70 Years ago.

'Tis in the Deanery of Dartford, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter: And the Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 10 l. per Annum.

There is a Charter regiſtred in the Textus Roffenſis, f. 186. b. wherein King Henry the Iſt, gives to the Priory of St. Andrew's in Rocheſter, "Eccleſiam de Suthtuna cum tota Decima in Annona, & Beſtiis, & Paſnagio, & in Molendinis, & in omnibus aliis rebus.

Note, This Place was formerly ſo eminent, as to give Denomination to the whole Lath of Sutton-at-Hone.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor and Parſonage of Sutton belongs to the preſent Church of Rocheſter, being ſettled upon it at its new Foundation, by King Henry the VIIIth.

2. St. John's. This was in ancient Times a Manor belonging to the Knights Hoſpitallers, who had a Manſion-Houſe here, called by this Name of St. John's, where they uſually reſided, when they came to viſit their Lands hereabouts; which were much increaſed by the Manor of Grandiſons, in the adjoining Pariſh of Wilmington; which ſee there.

On the general Suppreſſion of the Alberge of theſe doughty Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, their Revenues came to the Crown: And this Manor was by King Henry the VIIIth granted to Sir Maurice Dennis; and by his Coheir it went to Thomas Cranfield, whoſe great Grandſon Vincent Cranfield ſold it to Mr. Hollis, Merchant in London; who appears to have the Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time; but at preſent 'tis the Eſtate of Abraham Hill, Eſq; an ancient and worthy Fellow of the Royal Society.

3. There is alſo, as I'm inform'd, another Manor here, which was formerly accounted as a Part or an Appendage of that of St. John's; which is now the Eſtate of Sir John Letbalier.

4. Haly Sawters, is another Manor here, which though now grown obſcure, had once for its Proprietors, Men of great Birth and Fortune: Lawrence de Haſtings, Earl of Pembroke, died ſeized of it in the 22d Year of King Edward the IIId, as appears by Rot. Eſch. N. 47. And his Son alſo John de Haſtings, died in Poſſeſſion of it, in the 49th Year of that Prince. After this great Family, it went into that of Arundel; and Richard Fitz-Allen Earl of Arundel, who died ſeized of it in the 21ſt Year of King Richard the IId, left a Daughter and Coheir Joan, who carried it in Marriage to William Beauchamp, Baron of Bergavenny: His Son Richard left alſo an only Daughter Elizabeth, who carried it to her Husband Edward Nevil, who, in her Right, was Baron of Bergavenny. In the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, it was got ſome-how into the Poſſeſſion of Maio; and Thomas Maio in the 28th Year of that Prince, ſold it to Richard Paramour, and he to Sir Henry Brook; and he to Robert Wroth, Eſq;; and he to Edmund Hunt, Eſq;; and this Gentleman parted with it to Mr. William Hewſon, whoſe Son ſold it to Mr. Edward Badbie.

5. Hackſtaple, is a Place here which was once the Eſtate of the Killingworths, and ſtaid there a good while; but by Elizabeth, Daughter of George Killingworth, it went in Marriage to Mr. Chriſtopher Eglesfield; but his Deſcendant Francis Eglesfield ſold it to Mr. Chriſtopher Searle, who appears to have been the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

6. I find by an old dateleſs Deed, among the many ſuch in the Archives of Rocheſter Church, that one Simon de Wabulle gave 9 Acres of Land to John Prior of, and to the Convent of Rocheſter: Which Land lay in a Place called Scotteſworthfield in this Pariſh. I gueſs by the Hand, that the Deed is about the Age of King Edward the Iſt, or IId.

7. I have ſeen alſo there a Deed of Exchange between Thomas Prior of Rocheſter, and William Tottehalle, Prior of St. John's of Jeruſalem; whereby the former gives the latter Seven Acres and an half and one Rod of Land; in the Field called the Wyneard; and one Acre and one Rod in another Field, called the Garden, lying near the Gate of the Hoſpital of Sutton; in Exchange for Seven Acres and an half and one Rod, &c. of other Lands, Part of which lay in a Field called Habrekommes Croft, and Part in the Paſture called the Leſe: But this Inſtrument alſo is without Date, and not much later than the other.

This Pariſh became Impropriate, as I am informed, about the Year 1317, when Kingſdown and Wilmington were reckoned but as Chapels to it.

Sutton and Wilmington are ſtill, as it were, one Parſonage, though Two diſtinct Vicarages. The Vicarage of Sutton is endowed with Hay, Wood, and other ſmall Tithes, and with about 24 Acres of Glebe: It hath alſo an old Penſion of Four Nobles per Annum; and of Wheat, Rye, Barley, and Peaſe, of each one Seam or Eight Buſhels, out of the Parſonage: And ſince the Reformation there is an Augmentation to it of 10 l. per Ann.

In Sutton Church I took notice of a Fair Monument of Sir Thomas Smith, who was Governor of the Trade between England and Muſcovy, in the Year 1625. Memorials alſo of Thomas Gifford, M. D. and of Prat. A. D. 1615. this Church was burnt down.

On a Pair of old Doors leading into the Burying-Place of the Hills, is a Legend, and a Rebus of a Tongue lolling out within a Buckle; which I fancied alluded to the Name of Buckletongue: And on Enquiry, I found there have been ſome of the Name of Puckleſtone hereabouts; which perhaps is a Corruption from Buckleſtongue. Such like punning Rebus's I have met with in ſeveral Places of this County.

Benefactions to the Poor of this Pariſh.

1. From the Parſonage Annually 20 Buſhels of Barley, and 2 of Wheat.

2. Mrs. Katherine Bamme gave 20 Shillings per Annum, paid out of a Farm in Gillingham.

3. Sir Thomas Smith gave 5 l. 10 s. per Annum, for Bread, paid out of Houſes in Diſtaff-Lane, London.

4. Thomas Terry of Shoreham Yeoman, gave a Houſe and Land in this Pariſh.

5. Here is an Alms-Houſe of Four Ground Rooms, Four Chambers, and as many Garrets, for Four Perſons, and their Families: Which was the Gift of Mrs. Katherine Wrote: To which her Daughter added a Houſe and a Garden of 1 l. 15 s. per Annum; for the Repairs of the Almſ-Houſe.

SUTTON, Eaſt, lies about the Middle of Kent, about Four Miles South Weſtward from Leneham, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyeborne, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Eaſt one of Juſtices in that Lath: It is in the Deanery of Sutton, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church which is fair and neat, is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul; which being accounted as a Chapel, and not valued in the King's Books, is now annexed to Sutton Valence.

In the Church I ſaw ſeveral Memorials of the Eminent Family of Filmer; as of Robert Filmer, Eſq; who was for Twenty Years Prothonotary of the Common Pleas in Queen Elizabeth's Reign; he died in the Year 1585: Of Sir Edward Filmer his Son, who married an Argoll; and who was Sheriff of Kent, in the 13th Year of King James the Iſt. He and his Lady lived together 44 Years, and had Nine Sons and as many Daughters: Of Sir Robert Filmer, in 1653. Author of the Book about the Patriarchal Scheme of Monarchy: His Lady a Hatton: Of Sir Edward Filmer his Son, in 1668: Of Sir Robert Filmer, Baronet, married Tuke, who by the Mother was deſcended from the Kemps of Ollantigh in Wye; he died in 1678, and was Father to the Preſent Sir Robert Filmer. Memorials alſo of Sir William Bevorſham, Knight, Maſter in Chancery, in 1689; whoſe Eldeſt Daughter the Preſent Sir Robert Filmer married.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor of Eaſt Sutton; this hath had a great many Proprietors, before it came where it now continues, as my Worthy Friend Mr. Forſter, from the Evidences of the preſent Poſſeſſor aſſures me: As,

1. Johannes de Salario. 2. Galfridus Martell, in the 34th Year of King Henry the IVth. 3. Adam de Martell, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, againſt whom the King brought a Claim; but the Jury gave it for Martell. 4. Adomarus de Valentia, in the 6th Year of Edward the IId. 5. Thomas Weſt delare de Haſting, in the 14th Year of King Edward the IIId. 6. Reginaldus Grey de Ruthen, in the 4th Year of King Henry the IVth. 7. Robertus Epiſcopus Lond. & Gerard de Braybrook, Chevalier, in the 4th Year of King Henry the IVth. 8. Richard Brigge alias Lancaſter Rex Armorum, in the 1ſt Year of King Henry

Henry the Vth. 9. Thomas Buttiler, and Thomas Bank, in the 3d Year of King Henry the Vth. 10. Richard de Darrell, Miles, in the 19th Year of King Edward the IVth. 11. Johannes Tork de Ramsbury in Comitatu Wilt. in the 1st Year of King Henry the VIIIth. 12. Richard Chetham Prior of Ledes, in the 6th Year of King Henry the VIIIth. 13. Henry Guldeford Miles contra Rotulator, in the 20th Year of King Henry the VIIIth. 14. Richard Hill, Esq;, in the 24th Year of King Henry the VIIIth. 15. Thomas Lord Cromwell, in the 29th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, on whose Attainder it came to the Crown; and in the 37th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, was granted to John Tufton and Stephen Remys, Gent. who in less than a Year joined in a Sale of it to Thomas Argoll, Esq;; and his Grandson, in the 8th Year of King James the Ist, sold it to Sir Edward Filmer, of Little Charleton in this Parish; descended from an ancient Family, seated at Ottringden in Kent; and as Mr. Philpot observes there, from an ancient Court Roll, were written Filmour and Filmor, in the Reign of Edward the IId, as I took Notice there. Robert Filmer, Esq; the Prothonotary in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, purchased a good Estate in this Parish, and built that fair Seat, called,

2. Little Charleton, leaving it to his Son Sir Edward, who was Sheriff of Kent in the 13th Year of King James the Ist; and he purchased the Manor and House of East Sutton, of John Argoll, Esq; of Colchester, his Lady's Brother; and left it to his Eldest Son Sir Robert Filmer, Knight, who improved it with many Additional Buildings, and leaving Little Charleton seated himself here: The former Place after that, becoming only a Farm-House. This Gentleman was a great Sufferer for his Loyalty to King Charles the Ist; being often plunder'd by the Rebels, and at last imprisoned, and detained a long while in Leeds Castle. His Eldest Son Sir Edward Filmer, Knight, was one of the Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber to King Charles the Ist, and IId; but died unmarried at Paris. So that the Estate fell to his Brother Robert Filmer, Esq; who was created a Baronet, Dec. 24. 1674, who began to enclose the Site of the Manor House, and the Park here, with a Stone Wall; which was afterwards finished by his Son the Present Sir Robert Filmer, Baronet; who was Sheriff of Kent in the 1st Year of King William and Queen Mary: And on the Marriage of his Heir Apparent Edward Filmer, Esq; he hath settled the Reversion of the Premises, on him and his Issue-Male.

In the 6th Year of King Henry the VIth, here were two Pieces of Land in this Parish, belonging to the Priory of Leeds; one called Northbemesfield, the other Sharp Land.

SUTTON Valence, lies about the Middle of Kent, about Four Miles and an half South Eastward from Maidstone, and in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyehorne, Lath of Aylesford, West Division of the County, and East one of Justices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Sutton, and Diocese of Canterbury; and the Church, which is large, but with a low flat Tower, and no Spire, is dedicated to St. Mary. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 9 s. 6 d. per Ann.

A Fair is kept here November 20.

William Lamb Clothworker of London, and Gentleman of the Chapel to King Henry the VIIIth, and his great Favourite, erected here a Free Grammar-School, and endowed it with 20 l. per Annum to the Master, and 8 l. per Annum to the Usher, and built a good House for it.

He built also 6 Alms-Houses, with an Allowance of 10 l. per Annum; and with an Orchard and Gardens to them.

Places of Note here:

1. Sutton-Castle. The Ruins of this Place appeared in Philpot's Time very magnificent: And Kilburn thinks it was built when the Sea flowed into the Valley below: As he concludes, it certainly did once, by an Anchor which was found not far from this Castle, within the Memory of Men lately living in his Time: But by whom, or the Time exactly where it was built, doth not appear. But Philpot supposes it to have been early enough in the Family of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, so as to denominate this Place Sutton Valence: By Isabella, Daughter to his Son Aymer de Valence, it went in Marriage to Lawrence Lord Hastings, who in her Right had the Earldom of Pembroke, as well as this Estate. His Grandson John Hastings, Earl of Pembroke, sold it to Reginald Grey, and Richard Talbot: After these it came into the Possession of the Cliffords of Bobbing-Court; and staid among them, till by Mildred, only Daughter of Nicholas Clifford, Esq; it went in Marriage first to Harper, next to More, Thirdly to Warren, and lastly to Blount. She had Issue only by Harper and More: And in her Right Edward Lord More of Mellifont in Ireland, and Sir Edward Harper divided the Possession. Sir Edward Harper sold this Place to Sir Edward Hales, Knight and Baronet; whose Grandson of the same Name was in Possession in Philpot's Time: He sold it to Sir William Drake, in the Year 1670: And in 1708, by Trustees, Montague Drake, an Infant, sold it by Act of Parliament to Christopher, now Sir Christopher Desbouvery; with all his other Lands in this Parish, at Chart Sutton, Otham, Langley, Stapleherst, Bocton, Monchensie, Bromfield, and Marden; except what was settled in Jointure on Dame Elizabeth Drake, the Wife of Samuel Trotman, Esq;.

2. Cheyneys-Court: This was so called from its having been long in the Name of Cheyney: But at last Sir Thomas Cheyney sold it to Iden; by a Daughter of whom it went to Barton; and thence by Sale to Wollet; and thence it went the same way to Jordan; who was the Possessor in Philpot's Time.

SWANSCOMBE, Swegenscomb, the Camp of Swain the Dane; lies at the North Side of Kent, near the River Thames, about Two Miles Westward from Gravesend, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Dartford, Hundred of Axtone, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, West Division of the County, and upper one of Justices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery and Diocese of Rochester; and the Church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

There were Two ancient Monuments in this Church mentioned by Wever, but they are now gone: Of Reginald Thomas, here A. D. 1494; and of Nicholas Bonevant and Agnes his Wife, in 1516. Wever saith also, that this Church (a) in Times past was much haunted by a mad Company of Pilgrims, who came hither for St. Hidesferth's Help; a Bishop, by Conjecture of his Picture, which in his Time was standing in the upper Window of the South Isle: To this Saint such as were distracted, ran for the Recovery of their Wits: Which Cure was performed by Warmth, Close-keeping, and strict Diet: A Cure no more miraculous, saith Lambard, than is at this Day made by the Keepers of Bedlam. But how they came by this Episcopal Saint I don't know. I never saw his Name in any Catalogue of Saints among the Saxons, or any where elſe.

The late Editor of Camden thinks that the Camp of King Swain was here, which others ſeem to place with more Probability at Greenhithe in this Pariſh. The People are poſſeſſed with an Opinion, which I can't think improbable, That the Vale between Northfleet and Swanſcombe was once all over-flowed with Water; and a ſecure Road for Ships to lye at Anchor in: And they confirm this Conjecture by the Relations of Anchors being dug up here. But whether Swain came hither with his Ships or not, 'tis probable that he built a Caſtle here, the Ruins of which do yet remain to this Day, as I am informed. And here are ſeveral of the Daniſh Camps and Sconces, as they are judged to be, and I believe very rightly, ſcattered about in this Pariſh; as on high Reads Hill, on the Mounts, and in Swanſcomb Park, I ſaw ſeveral of them, but none above 30 or 40 Yards over. They all lie very high; and ſeem to have been Places where a ſmall Number of Men were ordered to lie and eſpy out the Countrey, and to give Warning of the Approach of an Enemy: Some of them have an hollow Place on the Top.

But that which hath rendred Swanſcombe more famous than all theſe Things, is the famous Legend of Thomas Spot, a Monk of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury; which in Selden's Tranſlation (a) from the Latin of Lambard in Explication: Verborum ſtands thus:

"When the Norman Conqueror had the Day, "he came to Dover-Caſtle, that he might, with "the ſame Eaſe, ſubdue Kent alſo: Wherefore "Stigand Archbiſhop, and Egelſine Abbot, as the "Chief of that Shire, obſerving, that now "whereas heretofore no Villains had been in "England, they ſhould be now all in Bondage "to the Normans; they aſſembled all the County, and ſhewed the imminent Danger, the Inſolence of the Normans, and the hard Condition of Villainage: They, reſolving all rather to die than loſe their Freedom, purpoſe "to encounter with the Duke for their Countrey's Liberties. Their Captains are the Archbiſhop and the Abbot.

"Upon a Day appointed they met all here "at Swanſcombe, and harbouring themſelves in "the Woods, with Boughs in every Man's Hand, "they encompaſs his Way. The next Day the "Duke coming by Swanſcombe, ſeemed to ſee "with Amazement, a Wood approaching towards him: The Kentiſh Men at the Sound of "the Trumpet, take themſelves to Arms; when "preſently the Archbiſhop and Abbot were "ſent to the Duke, and ſaluted him with theſe "Words:

"Behold, Sir Duke, the Kentiſh Men come to "meet you, willing to receive you as their Liege "Lord, upon that Condition, that they may for ever "enjoy their ancient Liberties and Laws uſed among "their Anceſtors: Otherwiſe, preſently offering War; "being ready rather to dye than undergo a Yoke of "Bondage, and loſe their ancient Laws.

"The Norman in this narrow Pinch, "not ſo willingly as wiſely, granted their "Deſire; and Hoſtages being given on both "Sides, the Kentiſh Men direct the Normans to "Rochiſter, and deliver them the County and "the Caſtle of Dover.

This is the round famous Story of the Valiant and Brave Kentiſh, which hath been told ſo often, and our County ſo often celebrated thereupon that 'tis really a Thouſand Pities 'tis not true. How handſomely doth Drayton in his Poly-Albion compliment us on this Occaſion, p. 299.

O Noble Kent! quoth he, this Praiſe doth thee belong,
The hard'ſt to be controll'd, impatienteſt of Wrong.
Who, when the Norman firſt with Pride and Horror
[ſway'd,
Threw'ſt off the Servile Yoke upon the Engliſh laid:
And with a high Reſolve moſt bravely did'ſt reſtore
That Liberty ſo long enjoy'd by thee before.
Not ſuff'ring foreign Laws ſhould thy free Cuſtoms bind,
Then only ſhowdſt thy ſelf of all the Saxon Kind,
Of all the Engliſh Shires be thou Sirnam'd the Free;
And foremoſt ever plac'd when they ſhall reckon'd be.

But the judicious Selden, who hath written Notes on this Learned Poem, ſaith, 'This Report 'of Thomas Spot is not, methinks, of clear Credit, 'as well by Reaſon that no Warrant of the Hiſtorians about the Conqueſt affirm it (and this Monk 'lived under King Edward the Iſt,) as alſo 'for his Commixture of a Fauxette about Villainage; ſaying, it was not in England before 'that Time, which is apparently falſe by divers 'Teſtimonies'. And tho' that Learned Commentator made a Doubt, Whether before the Conqueſt there were any Villains in Kent; yet Mr. Somner, a very skilful Antiquary of our own County, doth fully ſhew (b), that Villainage prevailed here, as well as in other Counties of England, before the Norman Conqueſt: As I can abundantly ſhew, were it neceſſary here, from the Textus Roffenſis, and other ancient Manuſcripts, both before and after that Time: But I leave this to my Diſcourſe about Gavelkind, in its proper Place.

As to this particular Fact, the Learned and Judicious Camden leaves this Story to the Credit of the firſt Relator only; 'If, ſaith he, we may 'believe Thomas Spott, for no ancient Hiſtorian 'ſaith any Thing of it: Which as Mr. Somner obſerves very juſtly, pag. 64, is very ſtrange. Ingulfus is very particular about the Affairs of Kent, and yet hath not a Word of this Story. Beſides this, Gulielmus Pictavenſis, the Conqueror's own Chaplain, tho' he hath written a particular Account of his Maſter's Expedition hither: And alſo Ordericus Vitalis; do not only make no mention of this Paſſage, but do both agree in a contradictory Account: For they ſay that Duke William immediately after the Battel of Haſtings, marched not to London, as this Story ſuppoſes, but directly for Dover-Caſtle; in his Way to which, he ſtopped at Romney, and revenged upon that Town, the Death of ſome of his Men, who by Miſtake landing there, had been ſlain by the Inhabitants: When he came to Dover, though great Numbers had got together there, yet they readily ſubmitted to him; and he ſpent Eight Days in fortifying the Caſtle: Marching thence towards London, the Kentiſh Men met him not far from Dover, I ſuppoſe on Barham Down, ſwore Fealty to him, and delivered him Hoſtages. Thence he haſtened towards London, becauſe he knew that Stigand the Archbiſhop had conſpired with the Earls Edwin and Merchar to ſet up Edgar Atheling againſt him. So that General Stigand was not at Canterbury to aſſiſt Collonel Egelſine, the Monk of St. Auſtin's, as this Story ſuppoſes, nor even in the County at that Time. Malmsbury agrees in this Account about the Conqueror's firſt marching to Dover. And indeed Florentius Wigorn, Hovenden, and others, tell us, That notwithſtanding the pretended Privileges obtained to Kent, by this their meeting of King William the Iſt, with their Boughs, yet that this County ſuffer'd as much as any others in this Part of England, by the Deva[illegible]tations and Depredations of the Normans, immediately after the Battel of Haſtings: Nay, this Monk himſelf ſaith, Quod Willielmus Baſtardus, omnes ferè

Terras contulit, &c. That King William the Baſtard ſeized on almoſt all the Lands in Kent, and gave them to his Brother Odo: And how freely that Biſhop made uſe of them, appears by the Complaint that the Churches of Canterbury and Rocheſter made to the King againſt him; as you may obſerve before, from the Account I have given you under Boxley; about Archbiſhop Lanfranc's Placitum apud Pinendene: It ſeems then that our Kentiſh Bough Men, made but an indifferent Bargain with the Conqueror, though they frighted him into their own Terms. But indeed the whole Relation is ridiculous and contradictory, and taſtes only of the Fiction of a ſilly Monk, who had a mind to get Credit and Glory to his Convent; by repreſenting that Place as chiefly inſtrumental in gaining their Laws and Liberties to the People of Kent.

Places of Note in Swanſcombe.

1. Swanſcombe Manor. This was anciently Part of the Inheritance of the Montchenſies, called in Latin de Monte Caniſio. By Domeſday Book it appears, That Hubert de Monchenſie was the firſt of this Family here: His Son William de Monchenſie, as Philpot calls him (though it is more likely to be his Great Grandſon, if the Date be right) died poſſeſs'd of it A. D. 1287. his Daughter and Heir Dionis, in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, held it of the King in Capite, valued then at 6 l. per Ann. and carried it in Marriage to Hugh de Ver, who hereby became Baron Swanſcombe, and ſat as ſuch in Parliament in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the IId: But he dying without Iſſue, William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, claimed it in Right of his Wife, who was Daughter and Heir to John de Monchenſie, ſecond Brother to William de Monchenſie above-mentioned. And from him it deſcended to Aymer de Valence his Son; but he dying Childleſs, in the 17th Year of King Edward the IId, by his Siſter Iſabella it went in Marriage to Lawrence de Haſtings; who in her Right was Earl of Pembroke and Baron of Swanſcombe. His Grandſon, John de Haſtings died without Iſſue in the 13th Year of King Richard the IId; and the Year ſave one following, Reginald Grey and Richard Talbot were by Marriage found to be his Heirs, who divided his Eſtate between them. This fell to Talbot's Share, who had before a conſiderable Eſtate in Swanſcombe, by Deſcent from his Anceſtors Richard Talbot, who had married Elizabeth, one of the Coheirs of John Comin, Earl of Badznoth, whoſe Lady was Siſter and Coheir to Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, and Baron of Swanſcombe. And in this Family of Talbot did this Manor continue till about the End of King Henry the VIth; and then it was ſold to Sir Thomas Brown of Beckworth-Caſtle in Surrey; who had a Grant for a Fair here on Whitſun-Tueſday; and whoſe Son Sir William Brown, in the 12th Year of King Edward the IVth, ſurrendred it into the King's Hands for the Uſe of his Mother Ciceley Dutcheſs of York: On whoſe Deceaſe it returned to the Crown, and continued there till Queen Elizabeth in her firſt Year granted it to Ralph Weldon, Eſq; whoſe Great Grandſon of the ſame Name was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time; and I believe it is ſtill in the Deſcendants of this Family.

2. Alchardon alias Combes, is another Place in Swanſcombe, which for many Hundreds of Years was the Inheritance of a Family of the Name of Cumbe or Combe; and it ſtaid in this Name till King Edward the IVth's Time, and then was ſold to Swan of Hookhouſe in Southfleet: In which Family it continued till the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth, and then was again ſold to Lovelace; who parted with it the ſame way to Carter; and he to Hardreſs; and thence it went again by Sale to Fagge; who in the 10th Year of King James the Iſt, ſold it to Hudſon; and his Deſcendant, not long after alienated it to Mr. Richard Head of Rocheſter; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Ince Grice in Green Hythe, is a Place here which once belonged to the Priory of Dartford, and at the general Suppreſſion came to the Crown; and ſtaid there till King Edward the VIth, in his 5th Year granted it in Fee-farm to Martin Muriel; the Fee-ſimple remaining ſtill in the Crown, till Queen Elizabeth, in her 5th Year, granted it to Edward Derbyſhire and John Bere; who not long after joined in a Sale of it to Jones: And he in King James the Iſt's Reign ſold it to Holloway; whoſe Son and Heir, Mr. Thomas Holloway, in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, alienated it to Captain Edward Brent, of Southwark by London; whoſe Deſcendant, Edward Brent, ſold it to Mr. John Smith, the Father of the preſent Poſſeſſor, Jonathan Smith, Eſq; who with his Brother Captain Nathaniel Smith, reſides here, and hath made it a fine Seat. The Houſe is very agreeably ſituated near the Thames, with a fine Proſpect, and very pleaſant Gardens, both downwards towards the River, and above the Houſe towards the Road; and by building a new Front lately, and other Improvements and Additions, Mr. Smith hath made it very beautiful and pleaſant.

I think Mr. Lambard judges right, that Green Hythe, which is in the Pariſh of Swanſcombe, is the Place where Swain the Daniſh Prince landed, and 'tis probable, encamped; or at leaſt where he himſelf lay; becauſe the Situation of it is ſuch, as commands a full View of the River both Ways.

Green Hythe is very famous for Shipping of Chalk, Gravel, Bricks and Flint-ſtones for London.

SWAYCLIFF, Swallcliff, Swallowclive, lies at the North Side of Kent, near the Sea, about Five Miles Northward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Hundred of Whitſtaple, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath: 'Tis in the Deanery of Weſtbere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is ſmall, and dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt.

The Liberty of St. Auſtin's claims over the Manor of Swaycliff; and That of the Dean of Canterbury over the Manor of Shourt.

Places of Note here:

1. Swaycliff Manor. This Place was given by Eadbald King of Kent, to the Nunnery of St. Mildred at Minſter in Thanet: But when King Canutus tranſlated her Body to St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, this Manor was made Part of the Demeſnes of that Abbey. The Prior and Monks of that Monaſtery granted it to be held in Fee, by a Family of the Name of Swaycliff or Swalclive; and they were in Poſſeſſion of it in the 20th Year of King Henry the IIId; but before the End of King Edward the Iſt, this Family gave Place to that of St. Lawrence; and Thomas de St. Lawrence paid Aid for it at making the Black Prince Knight: But his Grandſon Thomas de St. Lawrence, leaving only one Daughter, by her it went in Marriage to Sir William Apulderfield: And Elizabeth, one of his Daughters and Coheirs, carried it to her Husband Sir John Phineux, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench: And by his only Daughter Jane, it went again in Marriage to John Roper, Eſq; and in this Fami-

Family it ſtaid till the Beginning of King James the Iſt, and then was ſold to Mr. Benedict Barnham; and by one of his Four Daughters it went to Soam of Suffolk; he ſold it to Perry, and he conveyed it the ſame Way to Gould; who was, I ſuppoſe, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

In An. 946. King Eadred gave Lands at Swalclive to one Hereſigus, a Servant of his; and he ſettled it on the Abbey of St. Auſtin's, on Condition that he might be buried within that Place.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward Iſt the Abbot of St. Auſtin claimed to have the uſual Privileges of a Manor for the Lands of his Convent here; and it was allowed of by the Judges Itinerant, upon the Verdict of a Jury.

SWINGFIED, Swynfield, or Swinkfield, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles South Eaſtward from Elebam, in the Bailiwick of Stowting, Hundred of Folkſtone, Lath of Shipway, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

It is in the Deanery of Dover, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church which is but a ſmall Building is dedicated to St. Peter. Wever ſaith here was a fair Monument, whereon lay the Image of a Man in Armour, and with his Legs croſſed, expreſſing his having taken upon him the Cruſade: But the Inſcription was gone.

Here was alſo a Memorial of William Tong, and his Son; who gave one of the Windows in the Church, under which he was buried.

Places of Note here:

1. The Preceptory here you will find an Account of among the Religious Houſes: After the Suppreſſion it was granted by King Henry the VIIIth, in his 33d Year, to Sir Anthony Aucher, who not long after ſold it to Palmer; and in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Henry Palmer of Wingham.

2. At the Time of Domeſday Survey, Robert Phineux or Fineux, was Lord of this Place: And Darell ſaith that the Inhabitants of this Pariſh were obliged to maintain the Watch-Tower in Dover-Caſtle.

3. Bonington, or Bointon, and 4. Northcourt, are two little Manors in Swingfield, which as high as any Evidence which Philpot could get a Sight of, did belong to the ancient and eminent Family of the Criols. And they were both given by Nicholas Criol, or as he began now to be called Keriel, in the 3d Year of King Richard the IId, to John Phineux, Eſq; out of Gratitude to him, for ſaving his Life at the Battel of Poictiers: And his Deſcendant of the ſame Name, and Son by a Second Wife to Sir John Phineux the Judge, who was born here, leaving only One Daughter, ſhe carried this Eſtate to her Husband, Sir John Smith: And in Philpot's Time both theſe Manors were in the Poſſeſſion of his Grandſon, Philip Smith Viſcount Strangford.

4. In the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId, John Monins, Eſq; held Land here, and paid Aid for it at making the Black Prince Knight.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, Nicholas de Criol claimed Freewarren for his Lands in this Pariſh; and it was allowed him by the Jury and Juſtices Itinerant.

TENHAM, Teneham, Lambard ſaith, Tynham, the Town of Ten Houſes; lies towards the North Side of Kent, near the Iſle of Shepey, about Two Miles and an half Eaſtward from Milton, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, Hundred of Tenham, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims over the Manor of Tenham. 'Tis in the Deanery of Oſpringe, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. Mary; which, ſaith Somner, A. D. 1227, was annexed to the Archdeaconry of Canterbury, by Stephen Langton, Archbiſhop of Canterbury: And in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId, the Lord Andomer de Rupy, an Alien, held this with the Archdeaconry: And this Church was then valued at 130 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann. and the Tenths deducted. 'Tis now a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 10 l. per Ann. The Church is large, with only a Tower, and no Steeple: There are Remains of good painted Glaſs in the Windows. And Memorials of the Interment of John Froggenhall, Eſq; in the Year 1444: Of John Sutton Vicar here, in 1468; of Robert Heyward, in 1509; of William Weeks, in 1533; and of Mary's, pretty ancient.

Tenham had the Grant of the Tueſday's Market; and a Fair for Three Days, at the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin; obtained by Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in King Henry the IIId's Reign. And it was once ſo conſiderable, as to give Name to the whole Hundred in which it ſtands.

Mr. Lambard, p. 263, ſaith, Tenham is the moſt dainty Piece of all Kent; and ſuch a Singularity, as the whole Britiſh Iſland is not able to pattern. The Iſland of Thanet, ſaith he, and thoſe Eaſtern Parts, are the Granary; the Weald is the Wood; Romney Marſh the Meadow Plot; the North Downs, towards the Thames, are the Cony Garth, or Warren of this County; and Tenham, with Thirty other Pariſhes lying on each Side the Dover Road, and extending from Rainham to Bleanwood, are the Cherry-Garden and Apple-Orchard: But as Tenham is the Parent of all the reſt; for here it was that Richard Harris Fruiterer to King Henry the VIIIth, firſt planted Cherries, Pepins, and golden Renates: This he did A. D. 1533. in a Piece of Ground here, called the Brennet, of 105 Acres, which he divided into Ten Parcels, and planted his Trees in the Quincunx Order: So is it alſo the moſt large and beautiful of all of them.

The Archbiſhops of Canterbury had once ſome Seat or Houſe in this Pariſh: For in King Henry the IId's Reign, there was a Diſpute before the Archbiſhop, who then reſided here, between the Priors of Canterbury and Rocheſter, about placing the Croſier of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, after he was dead; the Priory of Canterbury claiming that it ought to be ſent to them, and laid on their high Altar: Of which more elſewhere.

Here alſo the great Archbiſhop Hubert departed this Life, as Matthew Paris tells us.

The Situation of Tenham can't be much commended, with Regard to Health: And Lambard ſaith the following old Rhime was common in the Countrey hereabouts;

He that will not Live long,
Let him dwell at Muſton, Tenham, or Tong.

Places of Note here:

1. Tenham Manor. This, ſaith Philpot, was given to (or rather exchanged with) Chriſt-Church Priory in Canterbury, by Kenulf King of Mercia at the Entreaty of Athelard; it was then accounted 12 Plow-lands: And the Land given in Exchange, was in Creges Emeline; i. e. the Iſle of Elmley by Crogdepe, or the Water which parts the Royalty of Swale, between Tenham and Feverſham. In Domeſday Book this Place ſtands thus: Tæneham eſt Manerium Archiepiſcopi, & in T. E. R. ſe defendebat pro v. Sul. & dimid. & nunc ſimiliter, &

& est appretiatum L. lib. On, or rather before, the general Suppreſſion of all the Religious Houſes, Archbiſhop Cranmer exchanged this with the Crown: And there it continued till King James the Iſt granted it to Sir John Roper, whom he ſoon after created Baron of Tenham; becauſe he was the firſt who openly proclaimed him in this County; and in his Deſcendant, the preſent Lord Roper, Baron of Tenham, doth this Manor continue.

2. Frogenhall is a Place here, which anciently was a Manor, and the Seat of a Family of that Name: Richard de Frogenhall died ſeized of it in the 33d Year of King Edward the IIId. By his Grand-Daughter Anne, it went in Marriage to Thomas Quadring; and by Joan his Daughter, to Richard Drylond, Eſq;; and again by Katherine, another Daughter of his, it paſſed the ſame way to Reginald Norton, Eſq;: Here it ſtaid ſeveral Ages, but at length was ſold to Green, and from thence was alienated to Clark, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Telverton is a Manor here which formerly was called Elverton, and lay within the Precincts of a Chapelry here, called Stone, below the Church: The Ruins of which are ſtill to be ſeen, in the Lane or Street below the Church. And the Tithe of this Manor, Langton, Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Brother to the Archbiſhop, did, with his Conſent, make a Grant of to the Priory of Chriſt-Church. Somn. Cant. p. 156.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, John de Orlanſtone, and others, unjuſtly ſeized upon the Eſtate of Richard Peyforer in this Pariſh, who lived then at Lyndeſtede: But a Judgment was given for him by the Juſtices Itinerant; and Orlanſtone ordered to Gaol, till he made Satisfaction, and paid the Coſts, &c.

4. Sandown is a Field, on the left Hand of the Road to Canterbury, about a Mile South South-Weſt from Tenham Church; which is compaſſed all around with a Bank; in a Wood on the Top there is a Tumulus or Barrow, hollow on the Top; and Dr. Plot judged it to be a Roman Work, which is not improbable.

TENTERDEN, anciently, ſaith Philpot, written Thein Warden, as being the Ward or Guard of the Thane in this Valley: And he thinks it was a Branch of the Government of the old Anderida; which he thinks ſtood at Redinghill, not far from hence: See Newenden.

It lies towards the South Side of Kent, by the River Rother, about Six Miles Eaſtward from Cranebrook, in the Bailiwick of the Seven Hundreds, Hundred of Tenterden, Lath of Scray, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of the Juſtices of the Corporation of Tenterden: The Liberties whereof, and of the Cinque Ports, claim over it. But the Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over the Manor of Tenterden; and that of Wye claims over the Den of Chepebridge. This Pariſh and the aforeſaid Hundred are incorporated by the Name of Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Hundred of Tenterden; as they were before that, by the Name of Bailiff and Commonalty of the Town and Hundred of Tenterden; and even before that, by the Name of Barons of the Town and Hundred of Tenterden.

'Tis a Member of the ancient Town of Rye, being annexed to it in King Henry the VIth's Reign, when alſo this Town and Hundred were firſt incorporated. As Kilburn ſaith, it was governed by a Port-Reeve or Bailiff, till the 43d Year of Queen Elizabeth, and then made a Mayor-Town.

The Election for the Bailiff formerly, and now for the Mayor, is Auguſt 29. in the Town-hall.

The Pariſh is in the Deanery of Charing, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: And the Church is dedicated to St. Mildred: A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 33 l. 12 s. 10 d. per Ann.

In this Church was anciently a famous Altar, dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. The preſent Church is a large handſome Building, with a good tall Tower. Here is a fair Monument of the Whitfields, an ancient Family in this Pariſh; and Memorials of Auſtin and Short, and of Philips and Curtis. There uſed formerly to be a Beacon hung from the Top of Tenterden Steeple; whoſe Erection hath been commonly ſaid, to be the Cauſe of Godwin's Sands. The Reaſon of which ſeemingly extravagant Saying, Kilburn ſaith, was this: In the Time of King Edward the Confeſſor, Earl Godwine had a great deal of Land in Eaſt Kent, near the Iſle of Thanet; and this was defended from the Sea by a great Wall, and became A. D. 1099. the Poſſeſſion of the Abbot of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, ſtill retaining the Name of Godwine's Lands. Now the Abbot being alſo Owner of the Parſonage of Tenterden, and having begun to build the fine Tower, it took up ſo much of his Thoughts, Time, and Money, that he neglected the Care of Walling and Fencing againſt the Sea, near the Iſle of Thanet; and conſequently on November the IIId of that Year, viz. 1099, the Sea broke in, overflowed all the Lands; and the Place hath ever ſince been known by the Name of Godwine's Sands.

Fuller in his Worthies, p. 65, ſaith, That a Collection of Money to fence againſt the Sea in Eaſt Kent, was placed in the Hands of the Biſhop of Rocheſter; who very fairly appropriated it to the Building of this Steeple; which it ſeems many People had much ſet their Hearts upon.

G. Sandys, alſo a Kentiſh Gentleman, in his Notes on Ovid Metamorphoſis, p. 281. tells the Story much to the ſame Senſe.

Twine tells us, that the ancient Name of the Place now called Godwine's Sands was Lomea; and that it was once an Iſland: But there is no ſuch Iſland mentioned in that accurate Survey contained in Domeſday Book, nor any Account there or elſewhere of any Authority, of Earl Godwine's having had any ſuch Lands in Eaſt Kent; which could not well have been omitted in our ancient Writings, if it had been certainly ſo: And as to the Name of Godwine's Sands our Learned and Judicious Mr. Somner, in his Rom. Forts & Ports, p. 24. takes it to have been a Corruption from the Britiſh Gwydn, which ſignifies a ſoft but yet a tenacious Soil: And if it ever was called Lomea, as Twine in his Book de Rebus Albionicis ſaith it was, he thinks that Name might come from the Saxon Lam, (whence our Engliſh Lome) of the ſame Signification with the Britiſh Gwydn. And inſtead of the Sea's overflowing it, as is ſuppoſed in the latter End of King William the IId's, or the Beginning of King Henry the Iſt's Reigns, Mr. Somner judges, that it rather was left bare and deſerted by the Sea, in that great Inundation, which drowned a great Part of Flanders, and the Low Countries about that Time (a): And though at firſt, or all at once, it might not become a very dangerous Shoal, yet it might eaſily grow to be ſo by Degrees, and become worſe and worſe, by thoſe Inundations being continued in the Low Countries. I can't therefore, you ſee, agree, that the Reaſons given by Kilburn, Fuller, &c. for the Riſe of that Proverb, That Tenterden Steeple was the Cauſe of the Riſe of Godwine's Sands; and I think no one that ſees it, will conclude that the Tower it ſelf is of ſo ancient a Date; it muſt therefore paſs as it hath done for an extravagant Saying; which perhaps haps was only brought in, to expoſe ſome forced Conſequence in Reaſoning: By which a Man might ſay, You may as well tell me, that the Building of Tenterden Steeple was the Cauſe of Godwine's Sands, as that your Concluſion can be inferred from thoſe Premiſes.

Here is an ancient Free-ſchool, which was founded by one Heyman, Anceſtor of Sir Peter Heyman.

And one Mr. William Marſhall, about A. D. 1521, gave 10 l. per Ann. towards the Payment of a School-Maſter; which is now paid by Sir John Hales, who hath the Lands called Marſhalls. And Mr. Mantle of this Place gave, as I am informed, 200 l. which is laid out in Land in New Romney, for the Benefit of this School.

A Market is kept in this Town on Fridays, and an Annual Fair on Apr. 25.

Places of Note here:

1. Heronden. This is a Place here, which once had Proprietors of its own Name; and their Arms were a Heron riſing upon Wing: But at laſt, Part of this Eſtate was ſold to Sir John Baker, Anceſtor to Sir John Baker of Siſinghurſt, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time: And ſome other Parcels of it were ſold to Auſtin and Short.

2. Pitleſden. This Place alſo was once the Seat of a Family of the Name of Pitleſden: But by Juliana, Daughter of Stephen Pitleſden, it went by Marriage to Sir Edward Guldeford; one of whoſe Deſcendants, John Guldeford, ſold it to Sir John Baker above-mentioned; whoſe Grandſon Sir John Baker, Knight and Baronet, ſold it to Mr. Jaſper Clayton a Mercer of London.

3. Lights Notinden, and 4. Eaſt Aſheringden, are Two Manors here which once belonged in Part to a Chantry or Chapel, here founded by John Light; and in Part to Brook near Wye: And they were upon the Suppreſſionof one, and the Diſſolution of the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, to which Brook belonged, granted by King Henry the VIIIth to Sir John Baker, his Attorney General, as he was alſo to King Edward the VIth, and to Queen Mary; and in his Grandſon's Poſſeſſion, Sir John Baker of Siſinghurſt, Knight and Baronet, they continued in Philpot's Time.

This Chapel or Chantry of Lights I believe was formerly a little Church, and is ſo deſcribed in the old Maps; and in Dugdale's Map of Romney Marſh is called Small Light; and now Small Hithe in Symondſon's Map.

5. Finchden, is a Place here which of old gave Name to a Family called Finchden; one of which, William de Finchden, was Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, in King Edward the IIId's Reign; ſometimes it was by Contraction written Finch, which Philpot thinks was the original Name; Den being only added to expreſs the Situation of their Place of Abode. The preſent Finches of Tenterden are derived from this Family. In Queen Elizabeth's Time, this was purchaſed by Sir Edward Hales; and as I hear went after that into the Name of Whetenhall, and then into that of Collington.

6. Elarinden. This Place is Parcel of the Manor of Frid or Frith in Betherſden; and was once Part of the Eſtate of the Mayneys; and John de Mayneys died poſſeſs'd of it in the 50th Year of King Edward the IIId. But about King Henry the VIth's Time, it was ſold to Darell; and in the 17th Year of King Henry the VIIIth was by John Darell, Eſq; ſold to Sir John Hales, one of the Barons of the Exchequer; and in Philpot's Time, was in the Poſſeſſion of his Deſcendant Sir Edward Hales of Tunſtall, Baronet.

7. Morgieu, and 8. Godden, are Two Places here, not mentioned by Philpot, which I am told are Part of the Eſtate of John Lord Colepeper.

It ought to be remembred to the Honour of Tenterden, that many Perſons of both Sexes here began to oppoſe the Corruptions and Idolatries of the Church of Rome, before ever Luther began to declare againſt Indulgencies: And 48 Perſons in and about this Time were accuſed in Archbiſhop Warham's Court on that Account; Five of whom; viz. Four Men and One Woman, were condemned to the Flames, and no doubt executed; for no Pardon appears upon Record. Biſh. Burnet's Hiſt. of Reform.

TESTON, vulgo Teeſon, anciently Terſtane, and Therſtone, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt; lies towards the Middle of Kent, by the River Medway, about Two Miles and an half South Eaſtward from Weſt Malling, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Twyford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: It is a very ſmall Building, without either Tower or Steeple: A Pair of Stone Stairs up to the Pulpit, through the Wall of the Church. 'Tis a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 6 l. 10 s. per Ann. The Pariſh is a Burgh, and hath a Court-Leet of its own, where the Borſholder is choſen: And the Inhabitants of it owe no Service to the Court-Leet held for the Hundred of Twyford: But at that Court may be choſen a Conſtable out of this Burgh for that Hundred. At this Village is a fair large Stone-Bridge over the River Medway.

Places of Note here:

1. Terſtane Manor. This did once belong to the Crown; but Queen Eleanor Wife of King Edward the Iſt, made this Part of the Exchange, which the Priory of Chriſt-Church had for the Town and Port of Sandwich; and this Exchange was confirmed by the Charter of King Edward the Iſt. This the Prior of Chriſt-Church proved before the Juſtices Itinerant for Kent, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, and the Title was allowed.

After the general Suppreſſion of the Monaſtries King Henry the VIIIth, in his 35th Year granted it to Sir John Baker; whoſe Deſcendant Sir John Baker of Siſinghurſt, Baronet, in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, ſold it to Mr. Jaſper Clayton of London, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

2. Barham Court, is a Place in this Pariſh which once was the Seat of an eminent Family of the Name of Barham; and who anciently were written Fitz Urſe. And Randolph Fitz Urſe was one of thoſe Four Gentlemen, who aſſaſſinated Thomas Becket, Archbiſhop of Canterbury: After this Fact he fled into Ireland, and there changed his Name to Mac Mahon, of the ſame Signification as his former one Fitz Urſe; that is, the Son of a Bear. On his Flight, Robert de Berham his Kinſman entred on this Eſtate; and from him it went down to his great Grandſon John de Barham, who was made Publick Notary of the Dioceſe of Canterbury, A. D. 1209. by Henry Prior of Chriſt-Church: Which Power of Conſtituting a Publick Notary, in thoſe Days an Office of great Eminence and Truſt, the Prior had from Baſſianus de Alliate, Count Palatine of Millan; as he had received his Authority originally from the Emperor. The Learned Mr. Selden, in his Titles of Honours (a) ſhews you, That ſoon after this Conſtitution, by the Prior of Chriſt-Church; viz. about the Middle of King Edward the IId's Reign, a Command was iſſued out out againſt this Power of making Publick Notaries by Imperial Authority; as being againſt the Dignity of the Sovereign Princes of England: And this was done by a Writ iſſued out to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to the Mayor of London. But before this, from about the End of King Henry the IIId's Reign, when the Uſe of Notaries became common here, till now, it was uſual not only for Imperial Counts Palatine to make Publick Notaries themſelves, and ſend them hither, or to Conſtitute ſuch here, but they did alſo delegate the Power to others: An Example of which, Mr. Selden there gives, together with the Inſtrument of his Conſtitution, and the Oath he was to take; which was granted to the Prior of Wincheſter, in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, by Roger de Monteflorum, one of theſe Imperial Counts Palatine.

This Manor of Barham continued in this Family, till by Anne, Daughter of Thomas Berham, Eſq; it went in Marriage to Sir Oliver Boteler of Bedfordſhire; deſcended, ſaith Philpot, from Johannes Pincerna, who lived in King John's Reign, and ſealed with a cover'd Cup; and probably was Butler to King John. And in this Family doth this Eſtate ſtill continue, being now in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Philip Boteler, Baronet, who reſides here, as the Family have a good while done, in a good Seat finely ſituated.

THANET Iſland. This Iſle is called, ſaith Lambard, p. 95. in the Britiſh, Inis Rhovochym, and takes its Denomination from the adjacent Shore Rutupi: Camden ſaith, they called it Inis Rupin, which he takes alſo to come from Rutupin. Julius Solinus calls it Athanaton and Thanaton; becauſe, as he ſaith, no Snakes are found here, neither will they live if brought hither; but on Enquiry in the Place, I found both thoſe to be Miſtakes.

Dr. Battely in his Antiq. Rutupin. thinks the Name of Tanet, for ſo 'tis ſounded, came from the Britiſh Tan, a Fire; becauſe of the Fires or Lights which have been always kept on this Iſland to direct Ships in dark Weather. 'Tis certain, this was not the Toliapis of Ptolomy, which as I have ſhewed, much better agrees to the Iſle of Shepey. The Saxons called it Tenet Lond and Tenet; which Lambard ſaith, ſignifies moiſt or watered: By the Latin Writers 'tis uſually written Tanatis.

In what follows about this famous Iſle, I have been very kindly and largely aſſiſted, by the Reverend Mr. John Lewis, Miniſter of the Church of Minſter in Thanet, which I hereby acknowledge, and return my Thanks for.

The Iſland is thus exactly deſcribed by Bede.

"In the Eaſtern Part of Kent lies a pretty "large Iſland, called Tanetos, containing about "600 Families: It is ſeparated from the main "Land of Kent by the River Wantſuma, which "is in Breadth about Three Furlongs; and paſ-"ſable only in Two Places; but both its Ends "go out into the Sea". Hiſtor. Eccleſ. Lib. 1. C. 25.

Which Deſcription will receive a very good Explication from this Clauſe, in a Charter of King Eadbert.

(a) Annales Monaſterij St. Auſtini.

Do (a) duarum Navium tranſvectionis Cenſum in loco cujus vocabulum eſt ad Serræ (now Sarre) ſicut à Regibus Merciorum Ethelbaldo & Offa longe ante Conceſſum eſt tributum in loco cujus vocabulum eſt Lundenwic (i. e. Sandwich.)

By which it appears, that the Two Places of coming into and going out of this Iſland, were anciently the ſame as now; viz. Sarre and Sandwich; only that the former being a broader Paſſage, near Three Furlongs over, there were two Ferry-Boats appointed there, for the better Accommodation of Paſſengers. But ſince the Sea has left this Place, here is now at Sarre only a ſmall wooden Bridge: But the River Wantſume running into the Sea at Sandwich, there remains ſtill a Ferry; though it is ſo narrow and ſhallow at low Water, as to be forded over.

Solinus, who is the firſt of the Roman Writers, that mentions this Iſland, ſaith, Eam alluâ freto Gallicano, a Britanniæ Continente Æſtuario tenui ſeperatam. This Æſtuarium tenue is the Wantſuma of Bede above-mentioned: And no doubt it was called Wantſumu in the Saxon Language (the old Roman Name I believe being Serra) from its Deficiency of Water at that Time; and from the Portus Rutupenſis beginning then to Want ſome of thoſe Requiſites, which made it once ſo famous a Harbour, or rather a Road for Ships; of which the Defect of Water muſt needs be one of the moſt eminent. But though it might not be then near ſo good a Port as it was anciently in the Time of the Britains and Romans; yet it was capable of receiving a numerous Fleet in the Saxons Time, as is plain from this Paſſage out of the Saxon Chronicle, A. D. 1009.

Her gewurdon tha Scipu gearwe, & theora wæs ſwa feala ſwa nefer ær.

And Turkill the Dane came hither alſo with a very great Fleet the ſame Year. And 'tis ſaid of Harold's Fleet, in the Year 1051, that having ravaged and ſpoiled the Coaſt, they came into Sandwich Harbour, and went by Northmuth to London. Chron. Saxon. Which Place of Northmuth, to obſerve by the bye, with Dr. Battely in his Antiq. Rutup. Somner and Gibſon have ſo miſtaken, as to place it in the Mouth of the Medway; whereas it was certainly near Reculver, and was the North Mouth of the Ancient Harbour of the Wantſume, now called New Haven; as the other went out into the Sea Eaſterly by Sandwich at Peperneſs.

The River Stoure coming from beyond Canterbury runs into the Wantſume at Stourmouth.

The Inning of the Land on each Side of the River Wantſume, ſeems at firſt to have been not ſo wide as now; ſince there is a Wall on each Side of it, call'd to this Day the Abbot's Wall, at a conſiderable Diſtance from the River, and the Land betwixt the Wall and the River, being ſtill called the Salts: The Water, when the Sea overflowed the Marſhes below Sarre, being no doubt brackiſh. This Wall was built by the Abbots of St. Auſtin's at Canterbury, to which Abbey theſe Lands were given, Anno 1039. Mr. Somner has printed a Compoſition made Anno 1242. between the Abbey of St. Auſtin's and the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury; in which are the following Words.

"Item pro bono pacis conceſſum eſt a Priore, "& Capitulo antedictis quod de cætero ad fletum "de Menſter, per flumen de Sandwico fit acceſſus "per navigium & receſſus, hoc adjecto quod ſi "in ipſo flumine, ante dictum fletum aliqua na-"vis anchoram fixerit, vel levandæ navis, vel "negotiandi, ſeu merces alias transferendi cau-"ſa ſe ibidem exoneravit; dicti Prior & Capitu-"lum conſuetudines maritimas habeant. King Edward the Iſt, in his 16th Year, directed a Precept to Edmund de Paſſele, John de Iſfeld, and Stephen de la Dane, whom he conſtituted Juſtices, to enquire into the Damages done by the overflowing of the Sea, and freſh Waters in the Merſhes of Monkton and Menſtre in this Iſland: And by Virtue of this Precept the Sheriff of Kent was commanded to ſummon in 24 honeſt and lawful Men (as well Knights as others) to enquire into the Premiſes: And they having alſo peruſed the Ordinances of Romney Marſh, (of which I give you a large Account there) they agreed and ordained a Bailiff to be elected by the Lords of the Fees, and the Commonalty of the Marſh in each Pariſh, to ſupervise the State of the Banks, Sewers, Gutters, &c. And they appointed alſo that 12 honeſt Men ſhould be choſen by the Lords of the Fees, or their Attornies, and by the Commonalty of the Marſhes, Six in each Marſh; who ſhould give in an Account upon their Oaths, of the State and Condition of the Walls, Ditches, &c. and to hold a Laſt or Meeting for that Purpoſe, whenever they judged any Repairs to be wanting: And out of theſe 12 Jurats, Two were to be Collectors in each Marſh, of all Moneys which ſhould be aſſeſſed for the Repair of the Sewers, Gutters, Water-gangs, &c. See Dugdale of Imbanking, p. 36.

The greateſt Length of this Iſland is from the North-foreland to Sarre-Bridge, which is computed to be about Ten Miles. The greateſt Breadth is from Weſtgate to Sandwich-Ferry, and is reckoned to be about Eight Miles. In the general, it is a plain open Countrey, and conſiſts of almoſt all Sorts of Land.

There is a little Wood-Land in it, which is a great Rarity; and I think I was told, there was but one Oak in the Iſland: The upper or North Part of the Iſland is all Arable, excepting ſome barren Parts of it, which are ſown with a Graſs now common in Kent, and other Counties, called Sanctæ-Foign; by which a great Improvement is made of poor Land; it producing there a Load, and ſometimes Two Loads upon an Acre; by which means Land not worth half a Crown an Acre, yields 30 or 40 s.

The South and Weſt Parts of the Iſland, are a great Part of them Marſh or Paſture Land; which is of great Uſe to the Inhabitants in Fatting of their Cattel, and providing them with Butter, which otherwiſe they muſt go a great Way for.

The Soil is generally very fertile: That of the upper Part of the Iſland is a light chalky Land, but yet produces very great Crops of all Sorts of Grain, except Peaſe; which of late Years han't thriven here, and are therefore very ſeldom ſown. Barley is produced in very great Quantities; and as it is ſaid, is the beſt of that Grain in England. It has been computed, that above 20,000 Seams or Quarters of all Sorts of Grain are ſent to London, in a Year, from this Iſland, beſides what is ſpent by the Inhabitants, and ſold to other Places.

This natural Fertility of the Soil is very much holpen, by the Induſtry and good Husbandry of the Inhabitants (of which the Men are generally Tall, and the Women well favoured); who ſpare no Charge or Pains in tilling their Land; and a great Help and Advantage they have of the Alga or Sea-Ore, as they call it; which they mix together with their other Dung, and when 'tis rotted, lay it on their Land. This ſeems to have been practis'd but lately in this Place: But Experience has ſhewn the Farmers ſo much of the Advantage and Profit, ariſing to them by the Uſe of this Manure, that they are not likely to be in haſte to change it for any other.

There is likewiſe another Uſe that this Ore is put to, by ſome of the poorer Inhabitants; viz. the gathering it to ſpread and dry on the Shore, and to burn it, in order to make what they call Kelp; which is a Sort of Cynder or Pot-Aſh uſed by the Potters in glazing their Ware. However it muſt be owned, that theſe Uſes of this Weed contribute not a little to make the Iſland in Summer-Time unpleaſant, ſince the Smell of the rotten Ore, and the Smoak that ariſes from the burning of it, is very noiſome and diſagreeable. By a Copy of a Warrant iſſued by Order of Sir William Brooke, Lord Cobham, who was Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, Lord Warden, Chancellor, and Admiral of the Cinque Ports and their Members, in the 35th Year of Queen Elizabeth, and A. D. 1593, it appears, that it was then thought that this burning or taking up of Sea-Ore was annoying to the Health of the Inhabitants, and a great Hindrance to their Fiſhing. And accordingly, the Deputies of the Mayors of Dover and Sandwich are charged and required to forbid and reſtrain the burning or taking up of any Sea-Ore.

How unhealthy the Inhabitants were then, I can't ſay; but I have not obſerved, ſaith Mr. Lewis above-mentioned, in the Nine Years I have lived here, that the burning or rotting the Ore has any way annoyed the Health of the Inhabitants. But there ſeems to be more Reaſon for the other Part of the Suggeſtion; viz. The Hindring of the Fiſhery.

'Tis certain, that heretofore Fiſh were very plenty in this Iſland; whereas now 'tis ſo ſcarce as that we ſeldom have any. And I have been told, that in Cornwall the taking up of the Sea Ore is forbidden very ſtrictly for the ſame Reaſon, that they have by Experience found that the taking it away is a great Hindrance to the Fiſhery there. For which perhaps there may be theſe Reaſons; That the burning the Alga may produce a Salt noxious to the Fiſh: But, as I rather think, chiefly, becauſe the Alga, and other Sea Weeds, afford good Shelter; and even Food and Subſiſtence to many Kinds of Fiſh; the Eels, Crabs, Lobſters, Whilks, Winks, &c. it covers and protects: And no doubt if it ſerve not for actual Food it ſelf, as I believe it doth to many, it harbours abundance of Worms, Snails, and ſuch other Sea Inſects, as are the Principal Food of many Kind of Fiſhes.

There is not one Gentleman that now lives in this Iſland, though formerly it was the Reſidence of ſeveral very ancient and eminent Families; as the Claybrooks, Petits, Criſps, St. Nicholas, Quekes, Paramours, &c. But theſe Families are now gone from hence, the Eſtates ſold off from the Manſion Seats, and the Houſes converted into Farm-Houſes.

But then, on the other Hand, the Yeomen and Farmers are many of them Men of good Eſtates, as well Real as Perſonal; and accordingly live in a very Handſome and Gentleman-like Manner.

By the Account given in to Archbiſhop Parker, of the Number of Houſholds in each Deanery in Kent, there were then but 737 Families numbred in the Deanery of Weſtbere, which contains Seven pretty large Pariſhes, beſides this Iſland. But I verily think, ſaith Mr. Lewis, this muſt be an inaccurate Account, ſince as we've ſeen in Bede's Time there were 600 Families in this Iſland alone; and at this Time there can't be fewer than 15 or 1600, and theſe moſt of them Freeholders.

There are in this Iſland Six Parochial Churches, and one Chapel: The Names of which I ſhall only mention here, having treated of them them ſeverally in their proper Places; viz. Minſter, Monkton, St. Nicholas, St. John the Baptiſt, St. Peter the Apoſtle, and St. Lawrence, and the Chapel of Birchington. This is called All-Saints; and formerly was built above a Mile from the Place where it now ſtands; but being deſtroyed by the Flowing of the Seas, it was rebuilt in the Place where it is now, and called by the Name it went by before. This I take to be the All-Saints mentioned in the old Map. Though Biſhop Williams has placed it as if it ſtood in the Pariſh of St. Nicholas.

Anciently there was alſo a Church or Chapel at Sarre, called St. Giles's. And another Parochial Church at Stonar, which is now nothing but a Heap of Stones; And another Chapel belonging to Monkton, called Capella de Wode, which has been for many Years deſolate. In the Inſtitution of the Vicarage of Monkton, ſaith Mr. Lewis, are theſe Words, relating to thoſe Two Chapels:

"Invenietque dictus Vicarius unum Capellanum in Capella de Birchington ab eadem Eccleſia de Monkton dependente, ſingulis diebus "ſi & quatenus commode potuerit celebraturum. "Inveniet etiam idem Vicarius unum alium Capellanum in Capella de Wode ab eadem & Eccleſia de Monketon dependente, ſingulis diebus Dominicis, ac quartis ac quintis feſtis celebraturum. Inveniet & cereos proceſſionales, "ſuperpellicea ligabit & libros inventionem Rectoris concernentes; libroſque hujuſmodi inventos ſuo periculo cuſtodiet, necnon omnia "alia onera infra dictas Eccleſiam & Capellas "per Rectorem loci conſueta ſuis ſumptibus ſubibit, & expenſis. Hoc excepto quod præfati "Religioſi viri Cancellos dictarum Eccleſiæ & "Capellarum in omnibus ſuis membris & particulis reparabunt, & ſi diruta fuerint reedificabunt ſuis ſumptibus & expenſis".

This Inſtitution was taken out of Archbiſhop Langham's Regiſter, and bears date 1367.

There ſeems alſo to have been a Chapel at Shoare in this Iſle, where Mr. Pamphlete now lives. And Three others I ſaw here, which I think are not taken notice of. One called,

Dane Chapel, about a Mile from Margate, in the way to Sandwich, it ſtands quite alone in the common Field, on the Right Hand of the Road, a ſmall Stone Building. At a Place alſo called, Sampſon Grange, there ſeems to have been another Chapel: 'Tis about half a Mile from Margate, on the Left Hand, in the ſame Road. And about Four Mile further on the Left Hand likewiſe of the Way, there ſeems to have been a Third Chapel, at a Place called Manſons-Court.

This Iſland hath often ſhared the Misfortunes, which Places ſo expoſed to the Invaſions and Inſults of Foreign Enemies are ſubject to: And more eſpecially from the Danes, as well as from the Saxons. When the Saxons firſt came to England, this was the Place which King Vortigern gave them to inhabit in.

A. D. 851. The Danes wintred here.

A. D. 853. In King Ethelwulf's Reign, the Father of Alfred, there was a great Battel fought here, between the Danes and Ealdhere, Duke of Kent, aſſiſted by Huda Duke of Surrey; wherein the Danes got the Victory, killed both the Generals, routed the Army, and got Poſſeſſion of the Iſland.

A. D. 865. The Danes ſtaid with their whole Army all the Winter in this Iſland.

And An. 969. King Edgar ordered all the Land in this Iſle to be ravaged and ſpoiled, becauſe ſome of the Thanet Veſſels had robbed ſome Engliſh Merchants at Sea.

A. D. 980. The Danes haraſſed and ſacked this Place in a moſt miſerable Manner, driving the Religious of Minſter Abbey out of the Iſland: And indeed not long after, King Canutus gave St. Mildred's Body, and all the Land belonging to the Monaſtery of Minſter, to the Monks of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury.

And A. D. 1405. Lothenus and Yrlingus came on the Coaſt with 25 Ships, and made dreadful Havock; and attempted to do ſo on this Iſland; but the People withſtood them bravely, and drove them away from this Place.

Ippedſlete, now called Elbesflete; by ſome Wippeds, Ippines, and Heopinesflete; is a Place in this Iſland, where Hengiſt and Horſa Brethren, and the Two Leaders of the Saxons, firſt Landed, when they came into Britain, to aſſiſt King Vortigern againſt the Inſults of the Picts and Scots.

Dendelyon is a Place on the Right Hand of the Road, as you ride from Margate to Birchington, which ſhews the Ruins of a large Houſe, and ſome eminent Building. There is ſtill ſtanding a large Stone Gatehouſe with Towers and Loopholes to defend it: Of its Proprietors I have ſpoken under St. John's, in which Pariſh it is. On the Front of the Portal are theſe Arms in Stone, on a Feſs indented 3 Lyons Rampant.

There is a Tradition, that Claudius Cæſar landed at Weſtgate in this Iſland; but as 'tis ſupported by no Authority, ſo 'tis much more probable that he landed where Julius did. They will have it alſo, that Ramſgate in St. Lawrence, was originally Romanſgate; and was ſo called from ſome of the Roman Armies landing there; but this is likewiſe a Suggeſtion without any good Support: Tho' that the Romans have been, and very anciently, over all Parts of this Iſland, is plain from their Coins, Veſſels, and other Antiquities, which have been frequently found here.

The North foreland of Thanet was certainly the ἀκρον of Ptolomy; and ſome (as Leland cited by Mr. Lambard, &c.) will have the ancient Rutupiæ to have been in this Iſland: But therein he was certainly miſtaken; As I ſhall more fully ſhew, when I ſpeak about Richborough.

I don't think it to be at all improbable, that the ſmall Iſland mentioned by Strabo in his 4th Book, juſt before he begins to ſpeak of Britain; and which from Artemidorus, the Geographer, he ſaith, lay near to that Place, might be this Iſland of Thanet: For if it were as famous for its Fertility in Corn anciently as it is now; a better Place could ſcarcely be found to ſacrifice to the Deæ Frugiferæ, according to the old Samothracian Rites.

The Inhabitants of this Iſland pretended once to an Exemption from all Suit and Service in the Court of St. Auſtin's, but in a fair Trial they were caſt; and the Original Deed which determined it, is now in the Hands of Peter le Neve, Eſq; Norroy King at Arms; as 'tis printed among the Decem Scriptores from Thorn's Memoirs.

This Iſland gives the Title to the Right Honourable the Earl of Thanet, who reſides at Hothfield in this County.

THANINGTON, lies towards the North Eaſt Side of Kent, by the River Stoure, about a Mile South Weſtward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Hundred of Weſtgate, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims over it. 'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. Nicholas: In which are Memorials of the Interment of Thomas Halle, Eſq; in the Year 1488, with his Effigies on a Braſs Plate: Of Sir Charles Hales, in 1623; and that of the Lady Anne Hales, his Wife, in 1617. The Living is only a Curacy, and ſo not valued in the King's Books.

Places of Note here:

1. Toniford. This Place had once Poſſeſſors of its own Name: And John de Toniford lived here in King Edward the IIId's Time, as appears by the Book of Aid. Next it came into the Poſſeſſion of Sir Thomas Fogge; and in his Family continued for ſeveral Deſcents; but at laſt was ſold to Vane, and thence to Captain Collins of Sittingbourn, who was the Proprietor in Philpot's Time.

2. Thannington Manor. This, Philpot ſaith, did very anciently belong to a Family of the Name of Wallis: Richard de Wallis held it in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, and had a Conteſt with the Priory of St. Gregory in Canterbury, about the Right of Preſentation to the Church; next it came into the Poſſeſſion of the Meſſinghams; and about the Beginning of King Richard the IId, into the Name of Chich; and from hence in King Henry the IVth's Reign it was alienated to George Bullard, who died poſſeſſed of it in the 8th Year of King Henry the VIth: And here it abode till Nicholas Bullard, Eſq; in King Edward the VIth's Reign, ſold it to Sir John Hales of the Dungeon; and in his Deſcendant Thomas Hales, Eſq; did the Property continue in Philpot's Time.

This Sir John Hales, in King Edward the VIth's Reign, was one of the Judges of the Common Pleas, and married the Daughter and Coheir of Thomas Hales of Henley upon Thames, Eſq;. He was a moſt zealous Promoter of the Reformation; however, he alone, of all the Judges, refuſed to ſign King Edward's Will in Favour of the Lady Jane Grey. After Queen Mary's Acceſſion to the Crown he gave a very honeſt Charge on the Bench at Canterbury, to put the Laws in Execution about the Supremacy; which ſo exaſperated that Bigotted Woman, whoſe Honour was a Slave to her Superſtition, that ſhe took away his Commiſſion, and impriſoned him in the Fleet. But after ſome Time he got releaſed, and came and lived here at Thanington. But not long after, he had the Misfortune to be drowned in the River, into which probably he fell, being aged and weak, as he attempted to paſs it over at an adjoining Bridge. He was Grandfather to Sir Charles, and he to Sir Robert Hales; who was the firſt Baronet of this Family, being created in the Year 1661; and his Grandſon, the Worthy Sir Thomas Hales of Howletts, Baronet, now inherits this Manor.

Of this Ancient Family there have been many eminent Perſons: Sir Chriſtopher Hales was Attorney-General to King Henry the VIIIth, and Maſter of the Rolls: He married Elizabeth Daughter of John Caunton, Merchant in London.

John Hales, Eſq; was one of the Barons of the Exchequer in that or the preceeding Reign; and a more ancient Sir John Hales was Lord Prior of St. John's of Jeruſalem, and Lord Treaſurer of England, in the 4th Year of King Richard the IId. The Arms of this Family are Gules 3 Arrows in Pale; and they derive themſelves from Hales-Place in Haleden in this County.

3. Iffins or Ivenswood. This lies partly in this, and partly in Nakington Pariſh, about Three Miles South South-Weſtward from Canterbury. In the Middle of it is a large Camp or Fortification, with a double Vallum and Ditch. The outer Ditch includes near 8 Acres of Ground, and the inner about Two. Dr. Plot thinks this Place bids fair for being that where Julius Cæſar found the Britains ſtrongly intrenched within a Camp of their own, about 12 Miles from the Place of his Landing, which Camp he ſaith was ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature. And indeed the Diſtance will agree very well, and its bearing from Cæſar's Camp (who no doubt made towards London) makes it not improbable: Unleſs you will think that the Place called Beaus Haven be more likely to have been it: This is a Field ſituated on a Hill, above the Broom Down, between Toniford and Harbledown: For this is indeed fortified well by Nature, and ſeems formerly to have had the Help of Art to render it more ſtrong, as appears pretty plainly on the Toniford Side of it. Beaus Haven.

THROWLEY, Throughley, Trewligh, Truglegh; lies towards the North Part of Kent, about Four Miles Southward from Feverſham, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over it, becauſe 'tis in the Hundred of Feverſham, which belonged to that Abbey.

'Tis a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d. per Ann.*

In the Deanery of Oſpringe, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is dedicated to St. Michael. In which are Memorials of the Interment of the Finches of Milton: Of Stephen Bunce, Eſq; in the Year 1634. Two fair Monuments with Figures, of Sir Thomas Sonds of Throwley, in 1592; and of the Lady Mary, Wife of Sir Michael Sondes of Norton, in 1605: Of Chicheley Sondes, Wife of Mr. —— Sondes, in 1580; ſhe was of the Tufton Family: Of Thomas, the third Son of Sir Richard Sondes, 1668. In the Windows of this Church are Remains of good painted Glaſs: And in the Chancel are Stalls, like thoſe in Collegiate Churches; which probably belonged to the Priors Aliens, of which there was a Cell here, a Branch of the Priory of St. Bertin's at St. Omars in Flanders; which was diſſolved with the reſt of thoſe foreign uſeleſs Lubbers, in the IId Year of King Henry the Vth. In the Wall of the North Chancel, I ſaw an ancient Altar-Tomb, but without any Arms or Inſcriptions remaining: probably 'tis of the Founder or ſome good Benefactor to the Church; for the Monuments and Tombs of ſuch uſed to be placed in the Walls.

Places of Note here:

1. Throwley Manor. This at the Time of the Norman Conqueſt, was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir William Dene, ſaith Kilburn: Afterwards Philpot ſaith, it became the Capital Seat of the Gattons. Hamon de Gatton died poſſeſſed of it in the 20th Year of King Edward the Iſt; and leaving but one Daughter, Elizabeth, ſhe carried it to William de Dene, who had a Charter of Freewarren for his Land here, in the 10th Year of King Edward the IId. His Grand-Daughter Benedicta Dene, carried it in Marriage to John Shelving; and after having continued in that Family for ſome Time, it went by a Female-Heir, Joan Shelving, in Marriage to John Brampton, alias Detling of Detling-Court: And again by a Daughter of this Family, Benedicta de Detling, it went in Marriage to Thomas At-Town; who had a good Eſtate in Land about Charing; but on this Occaſion he removed to this Pariſh, and erected a Seat here, which he called,

2. Town-Place. But not long after he died, and he left only Three Daughters; of which, Eleanor married Richard Lewknor, of Bodſhead in Challock; Benedicta, or Benet, married William Watton

Watton of Addington; and Elizabeth was the Wife of William Sondes, of Sondes-Place in Darking in Surrey. On the Diviſion, Throwley with Town-Place went to Lewknor; who ſold them to Edward Evering; and his Daughter and Heir Mary carried them to her Husband John Upton of Feverſham: From Upton they went by Sale to Shilling; and after a few Years, it paſſed the ſame way to Sondes: And Sir George Sondes, Knight of the Bath, leaving only Two Daughters Coheirs, by the Youngeſt the Eſtate went into the Rockingham Family, after the ſame Manor that Lees-Court in Shelving did: Which ſee.

3. Wilderton. This Place was anciently part of the Eſtate of Giles Lord Badeleſmere, Father of Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere; who loſt this Eſtate and his Life by oppoſing King Edward the IId, at Leeds-Caſtle. But however, this, with other of his Lands, was afterwards reſtored to his Sons Bartholomew and Giles, by King Edward the IIId; but they left no Iſſue, and conſequently by their Siſters their Eſtate was parted and divided: One of which, Margery, carried Wilderton to her Husband William Lord Roſs; whence by Sale it went to the Lewknors of Chollock; and thence the ſame way to Evering, who was deſcended from the Everings of Everings-Court in Alcham near Dover: and here it ſtaid ſome Time, till by a Daughter Mary Evering, it went in Marriage to John Upton, Gentleman; from whom in a very few Years part of it went by Sale to Arnold Terrey of Throwley, but the reſt continued in the Poſſeſſion of Mr. Upton of Feverſham in Philpot's Time.

THURNHAM, Thornham, lies towards the Middle of Kent, about Two Miles and an half North Weſtward from Maidſtone, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyehorne, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Eaſt one of Juſtices in that Lath. It is in the Deanery of Sutton, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 0 s. 10 d. per Ann.

The Church is dedicated to St. Mary; in which is a Monument of Sir Henry Cutt of Binbury; and a Stone over Barbara his Lady, Founder of the Chancel where they lie. Memorials alſo of Madox, Buſton, Sheldon, Bradbury, and Covert.

The Church is now endowed with the Chapel of Allington.

Places of Note here:

1. Goddard Caſtle: This, Kilburn ſaith, as alſo doth the Dering Manuſcript, was founded by one Sir Leonard Goddard, in King Stephen's Reign. But Philpot ſeems rather to think it was built by the Romans; at leaſt that it is as old as the Saxons Time; and took its Name, as Darell conjectures, from one Godardus a Saxon. As to his own Opinion, that it was one of the Roman Speculatory or Watch Towers, I think it carries a good Face of Probability: For it ſtands on the Brow of a high Hill, not far from Binbury, and overlooks all the Countrey below it. And I have been informed that Roman Urns, and other Remains, have been found on the Hill on which it ſtands: Which the People call Goddard Hill.

2. Thurnham Manor. This had anciently Proprietors of its own Name: Sir Robert Thurnham was eminent here, in King Richard the Iſt's Reign; he accompanied that Prince into the Holy Land: And before he left England, ſettled his Eſtate here on the College of Lingfield in Surrey: He loſt his Life in the Cruſado; and his Eſtate here ſtaid in the College till the general Suppreſſion of all the Religious Houſes; but then coming to the Crown, it ſtaid there till King Edward the VIth granted it to Sir Edward Wotton; whoſe Anceſtor Sir Nicholas Wotton had a good while before been poſſeſſed of ſome Part of this Manor; which came to him in King Henry the IVth's Reign, by the Marriage of Joan ſole Heir of Robert Corbie: And this Sir Edward left the whole entirely to his great Grandſon Thomas Lord Wotton, who ſettled it on his eldeſt Daughter Katherine, who was married to Henry Lord Stanehope; and being left a Widow by him, ſhe ſold it to Mr. —— Godden of London.

3. Binbury. This is an eminent Manor in this Pariſh, which very anciently was Part of the Eſtate of the Northwoods: John de Northwood claimed the Privileges of a Manor here, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt; and Roger de Northwood died ſeized of it in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId; as did his Deſcendant of that Name in the laſt Year of King Henry the Vth. In the next Reign it was got by Purchaſe into the Poſſeſſion of John Thwaits, who ſold it to William Gaſcoigne; in whoſe Family it continued till about the Beginning of King Edward the IVth's Reign, and then was alienated to Cutt or Cutts: And in this Name it ſtaid till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was ſold to Sir Samuel Lennard of Weſt-Wickham; whoſe Son Sir Stephen Lennard was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

Philpot takes notice of an uncommon Accident, which befel the Lady Northwood here in King Edward the IIId's Reign; who ſtanding on the Brow of a Hill by Binbury, to ſee a Fox dug out, that earthed himſelf there; the Foundation of the Hill ſunk under her, being looſe and ſandy, and ſhot down ſo much Earth upon her, as ſtifled and killed her in its Ruins.

4. Aldington Septvans, is another eminent Place in Thurnham, which anciently was the Property and Reſidence of ſome of the Family of Septvans. Robert de Septvans attended King Richard the Iſt into the Holy War, and was at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine. Another of the ſame Name, accompanied King Henry the IIId in his Expedition againſt the Welch, in the 42d Year of his Reign. His Son Robert de Septvans was Knighted by King Edward the Iſt, at the famous Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland; and his Son William de Septvans died poſſeſs'd of it in the 25th Year of King Edward the IIId. But ſome Time after this it got into the Poſſeſſion of the Gowers; and thence was ſold to John Brockhull, Eſq; in whoſe Family it continued many Years, but at laſt by a Daughter Anne, Heir of Henry Brockhull, it went in Marriage to Sir John Taylor: In whoſe Name it ſtaid ſeveral Ages, and then was ſold to Sir Richard Smith; whoſe Heir alienated it to Freak; and he ſold it to Mr. John Muns of Berſted: And 'tis at preſent become the Eſtate of Richard Shelden, Eſq; High Sheriff of the County of Kent for this Year 1716, who hath much improved it by Buildings and Avenues.

I find by the Tower Records, that the Priory of Combewell claimed a Manor, and its uſual Privileges here, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign; Thomas, Son of Thomas Champneys de la Seke being then Bailiff to the Prior: And the Jury being impannelled, allowed that they did belong to the ſaid Priory.

TILMESTONE, Tilemanneſtune, Tileſmanneſtune, lies towards the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Four Miles Southward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eaſtry, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Liberty of the Dean of of Canterbury claims here; and That of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury over the Manor of Tilmeſtone.

The Pariſh is a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 9 s. 7 d. per Ann.

Places of Note here:

1. Northcourt, and 2. Danecourt: Theſe were once in the Poſſeſſion of John de Sandhurſt; but in the 6th Year of King Edward the Iſt, his Daughter and Heir Chriſtiana, carried them in Marriage to William Langley of Knowlton: From this Family, after many Deſcents, they went by an Heir General to Peyton; and Sir Thomas Peyton was Poſſeſſor of Northcourt in Philpot's Time. But Danecourt was by Langley paſſed away to Fennel; and from him it went by Sale alſo to Thomas Cox, Cuſtomer of Sandwich; who ſent it the ſame way to Mr. Fogge, in whoſe Family it was in Philpot's Time.

3. Southcourt is a Place here, which in the 18th Year of King Edward the IIId was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir John Titteſden: But it ſtaid not long there before it went into the Propriety of the Lord Martin of Devonſhire; who, in King Henry the VIth's Reign, ſold it to Sir John White Merchant of the Staple at Canterbury: From this Family it went to Cox, and then to Fogge, the ſame way; and at length to Peyton; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Thomas Peyton.

4. Tilemeſton Manor. This when Domeſday Survey was made, was the Propriety of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and held of him by William Folet, in King Edward the Confeſſor's Reign, and then it was eſteemed as one Plow-Land, and valued at 30 s. I ſuppoſe it ſtill continues Part of the Revenue of the See of Canterbury; but Philpot ſaith nothing of it.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, one Roger de Tilemanſton claimed, and was allowed to hold the Manor of Tilemanſton, by the Juſtices Itinerant. And this ſeems to have been a Manor diſtinct from that of the Archbiſhop's in this Pariſh.

TONG, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about a Mile and an half from Milton, in that Bailiwick and Hundred, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath: In the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is called St. Giles; and was by King Edward the Iſt appropriated to Weſt Langdon Abbey. Which ſee in the Account of the Religious Houſes.

In the Church is nothing remarkable; except a Tombſtone over —— May. Arms, a Chevron between 3 Talbot-Hounds.

A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 6 s. 8 d.

Places of Note here:

1. Tong Caſtle, (ſee Caſtles in Kent) was ſituate on the Left Hand, on the Mount by the Mill, as you go up to the Church: And was after the Conqueſt, the Seat of the Family of Badeleſmere.

2. Cheekcourt, anciently written Cheek's-Court; and gave both Seat and Sirname to a Family which in very old Deeds is often called At-Cheek; and ſometimes de Checkſell.

In King Edward the IId's Time William de Ore had this Eſtate in Poſſeſſion, but in the 9th Year of that King it went to Peyforer; where it continued probably till near the End of King Richard the IId; and then Julian Peyforer a ſole Female Heir of that Family, carried it in Marriage to Thomas St. Leger of Ottringden, Eſq; whoſe Two Daughters and Coheirs marrying Ewias and Aucher, his Eſtate in the 10th Year of King Edward the IVth, came into thoſe Two Families; who not long after paſſed away their Part here, as well as that at Elmley in Shepey, to Cromer: In which Name this continued till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then Sir James Cromer ſold it to Allen, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

TROTTESCLIFFE, Trottiſclive, Troſcliff, lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Part of Kent, about Two Miles North Eaſtward from Wrotham, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Larkfield, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, which is ſmall, and with only a Tower. In it are Memorials of the Interrment of William Croſton, Gent. and his Wife, in the Year 1480; and of ſome of the Name of Baxſtow.

'Tis a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 10 l. 3 s. 10 d.

In the Church Windows are Remains of good painted Glaſs.

This Pariſh ought anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the Third Arch or Pere of Rocheſter-Bridge.

Places of Note here:

1. Trotteſcliffe Manor. This was given to the Church of Rocheſter, when Waermand was Biſhop of that See, A. D. 788. by Offa King of Mercia: The Grant is regiſtred in our Textus Roffenſis: (a) It was then accounted of the Value of Six Plow-Lands; and is ſaid in the Grant to be given ad Eccleſiam Andreæ Apoſtoli, & ad Epiſcopum Caſtelli quod nominatur Hrofeſceſter, ubi Beatus Paulinus pauſat. The Bounds of this Land are there ſaid to be theſe. (a) Fol. 31. b.

Ab Oriente & a Meridie Beorlingas, ab Occidente Wrotabam, ab Aquilone Meapaham.

And then is added this Clauſe:

Ad hanc quoque Terram pertinent in diverſis locis Porcorum paſtus; i. e. in Wealdbaera, ubi dicitur, Holenſpic, bi Sutban eſſe eppan hrÿcg non longe ab eo loco langam hrÿcg.

But though this Eſtate was thus then eſtimated at Six Plow-Lands, afterwards in the Domeſday Survey it came to be reckoned about one. The Words are theſe: Trotteſcliva ſe defendebat T. E. R. pro uno ſolino, & adhuc facit & eſt appretiatum vij lib.

On this Eſtate was formerly a Houſe for the Reſidence of the Biſhop of Rocheſter. William de Dene, in his Hiſtoria Roffenſis, ſaith, That Hamo de Hetb, A. D. 1082. hyemavit apud Trotteſclivæ. And he did ſo again the Year following. And I take this Manor-Houſe of the Biſhops of Rocheſter to have been the ſame with that which ſtands now near the Church, and where Mr. Whitaker lives. Formerly alſo there was a ſmall Chapel belonging to it, which ſtood between the Houſe and the Pariſh Church; and I believe it is called in the Textus Roffenſis, f. 220. b. Anfridi. There riſes a fine large Spring at Trotteſclive in the Way to Wrotham, which runs by Leybourn, &c. and ſo into one of the Branches of the Medway at Ford. This Rivulet abounds with very good Trouts.

Philpot makes no mention of Trotteſcliffe. But I find by the Records, that in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, William de Leybourn and others, claimed ſeveral Parts of this Manor of of Trotteſclive. But on full Hearing on all Sides the Jury gave it againſt them, and for the Biſhop: And allowed that his Claim of having Freewarren, and other ſuch uſual Privileges of a Manor here, was good.

TUDELEY, Twidley, Theudelei, Teudele, lies towards the South Weſt Part of Kent, about Two Miles South Eaſtward from Tunbridge, in the Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath: In the Dioceſe of Rocheſter, and Deanery of Malling. A Vicarage, and rated in the King's Books at 4 l. 17 s. 8 d.

Part of it is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Twiford, and the reſt in the Bailiwick of the Lowy of Tunbridge, and Hundred of Wachelingſtone; in which latter Hundred the Church ſtands, and is called All-Saints.

Places of Note here:

1. Badſell, which anciently was the Seat of a Family of that Name; but by a Daughter and Coheir it went from thence into the Name of Stidulph: And from theſe, Philpot ſaith, the Stidulphs or Stidolfes of Surrey are derived. By Agnes, another Daughter of this Name of Stidulph, it went by Marriage to Mr. John Vane; and in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of his Deſcendant the Right Honourable Mildmay Fane Earl of Weſtmorland.

2. Kippings-Croſs; this was very anciently and for many 100 Years the Inheritance and Seat of a Family of the Name of Kipping, which were famous at Brenchley, as well as at this Place. But in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, it ended in Two Daughters, both which married into the Family of Darell; Dorothy the Eldeſt, to Edward Darell, Eſq; ſecond Son to Sir Robert Darell of Calehill; and Anne, to Mr. James Darell, fourth Son of Sir Robert Darell above-mentioned: And after his Death ſhe was again married to Thomas Henſhaw of Kenſington, Eſq; deſcended from the Henſhaws of Henſhaw in Cheſhire.

TUNBRIDGE, Tonebrigga, the Town of Bridges, ſo called from the ſeveral Bridges which here lie over the River Medway.

This Town lies towards the South Weſt Part of Kent, about Five Miles South Eaſtward from Sevenoak, in the Bailiwick of the Lowy of Tunbridge, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath.

Part of it is in Southborough, another Part in the Town of Tunbridge, and the reſt is in the Burgh of Helden; and every one of theſe Parts hath a Conſtable of its own. 'Tis in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

A Vicarage, valued in the King's Books at 20 l. 3 s. 4 d. per Ann.

The Church ſtands in Tunbridge Town; and is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul; and was built by Richard de Clare, Earl of Hertford and Glouceſter, and Lord of Tunbridge, in King Henry the IIId's Reign: and was appropriated to the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, ſaith Kilburn; but I think it muſt be the Knights Templars, that Order not coming into play here, till after the Templars were deſtroyed.

In the Church, which is large and handſome, he ſaith, there were Memorials of the Interment of Hugh, ſecond Son of Nicholas Lord Audley, A. D. 1347: He was created Earl of Glouceſter, by King Edward the IIId, on the Account of his marrying Margaret, ſecond Daughter of Gilbert de Clare: His Picture, kneeling in Armour, was in the Window of this Church.

Here alſo was buried his Daughter Margaret, and her Husband Ralph, the firſt Earl of Stafford, Baron of Tunbridge, and Knight of the Garter, in the Year 1372. In this Church alſo was buried the Heart of Richard de Clare, Earl of Glouceſter, the Founder of the Priory, (of which hereafter) who died A. D. 1262, at Emmersfield in Kent, the Manor-Houſe of John Lord Criol; his Bowels were buried at Canterbury, and his Body at Tewxbury in Glocesterſhire. In the Chancel is now a Monument of Sir Anthony Denton and his Lady, one of the Band of Penſioners to King James the Iſt; he died in 1615. Memorials of George Barker, Eſq; in 1643: Of Edward Dixon in 1659; of Philadelpha Littleton of Skeſſington, who gave Twelve Four-penny Loaves per Week to the Poor here for ever: Of Arthur Amhurſt, M. D. and of Elizabeth Weller Virgin, who gave 6 l. per Ann. to the Poor for ever.

A Market is here kept on Fridays; and Three Annual Fairs; viz. on Aſh-Wedneſday, on June 24; and on October 18.

Sir Andrew Judd, Lord Mayor of London, A. D. 1550; and Son of John Judd in this Town, founded here a Free-ſchool in the Year 1551, with a Salary of 30 l. per Ann. to the Maſter, and 8 l. per Ann. to the Uſher; recommending the Care and Inſpection of it to the Company of Skinners in London; of which Company he himſelf was a Freeman: And Kilburn ſaith it was reported in his Time, that That Company laid out 4000 l. in the Defence and Maintenance of this School.

The fair Stone Cauſey here, leading from the London Road into this Town, was the Gift of one John Wilford, Citizen of London, A. D. 1528.

Round about this Town of Tunbridge, for about a League, as ſome ſay, Two Miles, or rather One Mile and an half Diſtance, is a Compaſs of Land, which anciently was called Diſtrictus Leucæ de Tonbridge; now the Lowy of Tunbridge. Leuga, Leuca, and Leucata, was the ancient French League, by which the old Gauls journeyed; as the Romans did by the Mille Paſſus. This League of theirs was MD Paces, or a Mile and an half (a). And Spelman in his Gloſſary, under the word Leuca or Leuga, ſhews, that ſuch a Diſtance as this round any Monaſtery or Religious Houſe, was frequently called by this Name of the Leucate, Leugate, or Lowy.

(a) Ammian. Marcel. Lib. 16. Jornandes de Reb. Goth. c. 16.

The Occaſion and Riſe of this Lowy was thus: In Normandy there was a Town and Lands about it, called Briony, which anciently was under the Sovereignty of the Dukes of Normandy; and it had actually been in their Poſſeſſion till Richard the Second of that Name, Duke of Normandy, gave it to Giſlebert his Son; and who, 'tis very probable was that Gilbert whom Odo Biſhop of Bayeux made Governour of this Caſtle. After Giſlebert's Death, Duke Robert the Conqueror's Eldeſt Son, ſeized it into his Hands, under a Pretence that of Right it belonged to the Dutchy of Normandy: Againſt which, Richard de Clare, Son of Gilbert, puts in his Claim very warmly; and at laſt obtained of King William the IId, to whoſe Intereſt he was a faſt Friend, that he ſhould have for Recompence, the Town of Tunbridge, and as much Land about it, as there was about Briony. And this was actually done by meaſuring the Land about Briony Caſtle, and laying out juſt as much round about Tunbridge: And ſome ſay that he brought over with him from Normandy, the very ſame Rope, with which he meaſured the Land of Briony: And this being what they called the Diſtance of a Leuca every Way; gave this Diſtrict the Name of the Leucata or Lowy of Tunbridge: And this Lowy had very great and peculiar Liberties and Privileges, as you will find below. But in Proceſs of Time, when the Town and Caſtle came came into the Hands of the Earls of Glouceſter, there did frequent Diſputes ariſe between them and the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, about the Extent, Limits, and Privileges of this Lowy; and theſe were ended by actual Surveys and Perambulations. The firſt of which was made in the 43d Year of King Henry the IIId, and by his Command, upon a Contention which aroſe between Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Richard Earl of Glouceſter. This was directed to Roger de Northwood, and William de Caman, who were to view it, and by the Oaths of 24 Men, of which 12 were to be choſen by the Archbiſhop, and 12 by the Earl, to determine the Matter.

Thoſe for the Archbiſhop were theſe: Richard Euſtach, Richard Beneyt, Richard le Meſſenger, William Elie, Walter Filius Henrici, Wulfricus le King, John Wolwurd, Adam Seely, Roger Filius Petri, Petrus de Algareſden, Petrus de Freynden, and Richard de Wolfhaute.

The Perambulation of the Lowy of Tunbridge, made by the Command and Licenſe of King Henry the IIId, in the 43d Year of his Reign, upon a Contention that aroſe between Boniface, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Richard then Earl of Glouceſter and Hereford, for the Bounds thereof. Which Perambulation was taken and made by the View and Oaths of 24 Perſons above-named; whereof the Archbiſhop named 12, and the Earl other 12.

Horſegate in Hadlow.

THE ſaid Jurors do, upon their Oaths, begin the Lowy of Tonbridge at Horſegate, in the Pariſh of Hadlow, which is within the Lowy; thence going up to the Houſe of Thomas Browning, which is without; and ſo ſtrait over the Field to the Houſe of John de la Brook, which is without; and ſo by the King's Highway to the Houſe of James Lomewood, which is without; and by Lomewood (ſo that Lomewood be within) to the Houſe of Benedict of Woodhall, which is without; and ſo to the Houſe of Hugh Perlaben, which is without; and then to the Houſe of Peter Fromund, which is within: So that all the Land which Roger of Permenter holdeth of the Earl be within; and ſo to the Houſe of Gilwyn of Cooper, which is within; and ſo to the Gate of Adam Chekar: So that Goldſland, Sardeland, Cuppeſland, and Durentiſland be without; and ſo that all the Land of Hugh of Weald (as the King's Highway leadeth from the Houſe of Adam Chekar to the Houſe of Pepin) be without; and ſo to the Houſe of Peter de la Mere; ſo that the half thereof be within, and the other half without; ſo that all the Hall thereof be within: And ſo to the Houſe of Robert de Curta, which is without; and ſo to the Meſſuage of John Curton, which is without; and ſo to Knockwevepooles, which is without; and ſo directly up to the Aſh-Tree, which is over-againſt the Houſe of Benedict Darnell; ſo that the Aſh be within, and the Houſe without; and ſo to Wyneleſbrook; ſo that it be altogether within; and ſo by the Midſt of the new Pond of Gilbert of Badeſhell; and ſo to Butsbridge, ſo that it be within; and ſo by the Midſt of Haſtingſland; and ſo by the Marle-Pitt on the Eaſt Side of the Houſe of Walter of Stinpretheld, which is within; and ſo to the Houſe of Elias at Mill, which is within; and ſo by the Midſt of the Meadows of the ſaid Elias of Mill, which is within, unto Stokebridge, which is without; croſs over the King's Highway, that leadeth from Winchelſey to London, to Marbery; ſo that Marbery be without: And ſo by the Midſt of the Meſſuage of William Wrong; ſo that all the Land of Elias Wrong be within; and ſo directly to the Aſh-Tree, which is on the North Part of the Mill of William Breſſing, ſo it be within, to the ſaid Mill; and ſo by the Midſt of the Pond of Sunnyngligh unto Hokingbury, which is within; and unto Wogebogh, which is within; and ſo to the Houſe of Jeffery of Culverden; and ſo to the Houſe of Elias of Holden; ſo that Culverden, by the Midſt of Cheriſland, be within; and ſo directly by the Midſt of Borſhelderſhill; and ſo to the Meſſuage of William Scrufryn, which is without, unto Wolſtane's Land; ſo that two Thirds of Wolſtane's Land be within, and one third Part without; and ſo to Horegate, and Highden within, and then directly by the Midſt of the Field of Dodſhere, unto the Hill called Smithesbourn, Swinſland, and after by the Midſt of Hareſland; and by the Midſt of the Iſland called Peveneſſe, unto the Church of Penſhurſt without, with all the Land of the Church; from thence to a Place called Keyadeleff, directly to the Houſe of Godfrey Welebate, which is within; and ſo to Heringſheath, and to Darkenhole, ſo that the Meſſuage be without; and ſo to the Houſe of Ralph of Madhyrſt; ſo that all the Tenement which he holdeth of the Earl, be within; and ſo to the four Ways of Ritherden, which is without; and to the King's Way called Caſtenene; and ſo to Rymſted; ſo that the Meſſuage of Nicholas Malmaines, and all the Tenement which he holdeth of the Earl, be within: And ſo to the Meſſuage of Peter, which is without; and unto Markſtoke; ſo that all the Land of Richard Vabedons of Shipbourn, be within; and ſo to Copping-Land within; and ſo to Goodmeſheath without, and the Land of Puttenden within; and ſo to the Mill call'd Toyſomede-Mill without; ſo that Sleywrithſmede be within; and ſo to Horſegate, where the Perambulation began.

This Perambulation ended and ſettled the Difference and Determination of the Bounds: But afterwards new Diſputes aroſe alſo about the Juriſdiction; and this new Perambulation was appointed: Viz.

A Perambulation before Stephen of Penchеſter of Cobham, Knight, and Solomon Roſe, Juſtices in Eyre; in the 8th Year of King Edward the Iſt:

WHICH began the Lowy at Somergate in Tunbridge; and ſo along, as the Pales and Hedge include the ſaid Foreſt of Tunbridge on the North unto Stretgate; and from Claygate unto Larkhale, as the Pales and Hedge include the ſaid Foreſt; ſo that the ſaid Foreſt and Larkhale be within; and from Larkhale to the Houſe of Nicholas Newman; ſo that the ſaid Houſe be without: And ſo from the ſame Houſe, by the Midſt of Lomewood, unto the Houſe of Richard Perlaben; ſo that the ſaid Meſſuage, and all the Land of the ſaid Richard be without: And ſo from the ſaid Houſe unto the Houſe of Peter Fromund, which is within; and ſo to the Houſe of Gilbert Cooper, which is within; and ſo croſs over to the Houſe of Adam Stolſtone within; and from thence to the King's Highway, includeth the Land of Nichlas at Weald, and proceeding by the ſame Way, unto the Houſe of Pepin, which is without; and ſo is all his Land: And ſo ſtrait over the Field unto the Hall of Peter de la Mere, and ſo by the Midſt of the Window of the Hall unto the firſt Door of the ſame Hall; ſo that the Eaſt Part of the Hall and one Door be without: And ſo to the Houſe of Thomas de la Heath;

And they ſay that no Man's Tenants (but the Earl's only) be within this Perambulation: And that the Tenants of the Archbiſhop be within the Juriſdiction of his own Bailiff or Miniſters.

In Witneſs whereof, &c.

The Liberties of the Lowy.

The Earl claimeth, within this Lowy, a Coroner out of his own Tenants, or by their Election in the Court of Tunbridge: That his Tenants ſhall not make Preſentments before any Juſtices in Eyre, either of Aſſize, or of Gaol-Delivery, but only when they ſhall come into the Lowy; which they ought to do before their Departure out of Kent; and there to hold their Oyer Aſſizes, or Gaol-Delivery, for the ſaid Lowy: The Chattels of his Tenants there being Felons Fugitives, or condemned; Eſcapes of Felons, Fines, and Amerciaments; and Return of the King's Writs: That the Miniſters of the King or of the Archbiſhop ſhall not bear up their Rods, in the Lowy; nor ſhall make any Summons or Diſtreſſes for any Pleas out of the Lowy: That his Tenants be free of Toll over all England; of Shelvingſtone, Pillory, Infangtheif, Outfangtheif: And that when the Juſtices in Eyre ſhall come to Canterbury, the Earl's Steward ſhall go thither with 12 Men of the Lowy, and in their Hearing demand Allowance of theſe Liberties; and then ſhall theſe ſaid Juſtices aſſign (at their Pleaſure) a Day to go to Tunbridge, before their Departure out of the Shire.

At a Court of Aſſize held at Canterbury in the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt.

The Liberties of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Glouceſter and Hertford.

From a Latin MS. of Mr. Weaver's.

The Earl claims the under-written Liberties, as belonging to the Honour of Tunbridge, with its adjacent Lowy and Appurtenances; which Honour he claims to hold of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: viz.

That the Juſtices in Eyre ſhall come thither to hold all their Pleas, as well of the Crown as common:

And that the Coroners of the ſaid Honour ſhall take Cognizance of, and Anſwer for all Things relating to the Crown: Shall call a Jury of 12 Men, as in other Places, to levy Fines, and make Amerciaments within the ſaid Liberty.

That no Bailiff, or Officer of the King's, ſhall enter the Liberty on any Account whatſoever, without the proper Bailiff of the Lowy with him.

And he claims to have the following Liberties in theſe Places; viz. Eltham, Keſton, Merewortb, Nethelſtede, Chekeſhall, Tremworth, Hardreſs, Stelling, Natyngden, Blean, and Sheldewyke; viz. View of Frank-Pledge, Aſſize of Bread and Beer, and all Things belonging to Viſ. Fran. Pleg. and that the Men living in theſe Places ſhall be free of all Suit and Service in the County Hundreds; and ſhall be ſubject to no Tax nor Tribute (non Geldabiles.) Emendus Panis.

He claims alſo as belonging to the Honour of Clare, the ſame Privileges in the Markets of Alding and Brunkeſley; as Richard de Clare had before him: As alſo at Bradeſted, Meleton, Pettes, Thorſmunden; to hold them as his Anceſtors did of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c.

Ex Bundello Brevium Regis de Anno Regni Regis Edwardi Tertii Septimo.

Hugo de Audeley, and Margaret his Wife, claim in their Manors of Tunbridge, Hadlow, and the Lowy, to have return of all Writs, &c. View of Frank-Pledge, &c. Infangthief, Outfangtheif, and all Things appertaining thereunto: And that the Juſtices in Eyre ſhall come and ſit in the Lowy, to judge all Kinds of Cauſes; and that no Tenants within, ſhall be cited to appear out of the Lowy. They claim alſo all Felons and Fugitives Goods, Waifs and Strays: and Two Fairs in a Year at Tunbridge; viz. Three Days after Trinity-Sunday, and One Day after the Feaſt of St. James: And Three Market-Days on Monday, Wedneſday, and Friday of every Week.

They claim alſo Freewarren and Chaſe, and to hold Plea de Vetito Numio; or of Diſtreſſes and their Redemption, &c. And that the Tenants in the Lowy ſhall be quit of all Toll, Paſſage, Murage, Pontage, and Taxes to the Highways, &c.

All which Privileges were made good againſt a Quo Warranto, brought in the 21ſt and 29th of King Edward the Iſt.

N. B. Moſt of theſe Accounts about the Lowy of Tunbridge, and both the Perambulations were kindly communicated to me, by Mr. George Weller of Tunbridge.

It was agreed alſo, after the Perambulations above-mentioned, That the Earl and his Heirs ſhould hold the Manors of Tunbridge, Vielſtone, Horſemund, Melyton, and Pettys, from the Archbiſhop and his Succeſſors, by the Service of a Knight's Fee. And to be High Stewards and Butlers to the Archbiſhops at the great Feaſt of their Inthronization: And theſe Articles were performed firſt between Gilbert Earl of Glouceſter, and Archbiſhop Winchelſey, and by many other ſucceeding Archbiſhops, and theſe Earls of Glouceſter. In Compenſation for their Service at the Archbiſhop's Inthronization, their Fees were, Seven Robes of Scarlet, Thirty Gallons of Wine, Thirty Pounds of Wax for Lights, Livery for Hay and Oats for Eighty Horſe for Two Nights. The Diſhes and Salts, which ſhould ſtand before the Archbiſhop that Day: And at their Departure their Diet for Three Days, at the Coſts of the Archbiſhop at his Four next Manors. And for the Office of Butler, they had alſo Seven other ſuch Robes of Scarlet, Twenty Gallons of Wine, Fifty Pounds of Wax, Livery for Sixty Horſes Two Nights, the Cup the Archbiſhop drank in, all the empty Cask, &c.

The laſt Time this Pomp was performed, was at the Inthronization, as they will call it, of Archbiſhop Warham; when Edward Duke of Buckingham executed the Stewardſhip in his own Perſon, and the Butlerſhip by Sir Thomas Burgher, Knight.

The Privileges and Exemptions of thoſe that lived within this Lowy, have ſometimes been extended to the Tenants of the Earls of Glouceſter, who dwelt in other Places far without, and there held Land of thoſe Lords: Of this I have met with ſeveral Inſtances; and in our Textus Roffenſis, f. 209. among other Accounts of the Manors then belonging to Rocheſter Priory, there is this entred about Southflete in this County.

——— Eſt appretiatum 21 l. & Richardus (i. e. Richard Earl of Glouceſter) habet inde infra Leugam ſuam valens xx. Solid. & tamen hoc idem Manerium reddit Epiſcopo 24 libr. & unum unciam Auri de firma.

But perhaps theſe Things were provided againſt in the Agreement made upon the ſecond Perambulation in King Edward the Iſt's Reign; as I find was given by the Jury as their Judgment, before the Juſtices Itinerant in ſeveral Inſtances in the 21ſt Year of that King's Reign.

King Henry the IIId granted to Richard de Clare Earl of Glouceſter, his Royal Licenſe to wall and embattle the Town of Tunbridge: But 'tis probable he did not purſue the Power thus given him, there being no Footſteps of any ſuch Walling now in being.

The Manor of Tunbridge was formerly accounted as an Honour; and the Town was once ſo conſiderable, as to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament; but I think it did ſo but once. Notitiæ Parl. Vol. I. in Pref.

Near the Town was anciently a Place called the Foreſt of Tunbridge, belonging alſo to the Earls of Glouceſter: It is now called the South Frith; it ſeems formerly to have been encloſed, and that with Pales; there being mention made in the Perambulations about the Pales of this Foreſt.

Places of Note here:

1. Tunbridge Caſtle. This will be treated fully of in its proper Place, among the Forts and Caſtales of this County. And ſo will alſo,

2. Tunbridge Priory, among the Religious Houſes.

3. Somerhill. This hath been a fine Seat in this Pariſh; and was anciently appointed by the Earls of Glouceſter, as a Lodge for the Bailiff of their great Chaſe here, called Tunbridge Foreſt, and afterwards South Frith: One of theſe Bailiffs was Richard de Philpot of Philpots in Leigh, who lived here in King Henry the IIId's Reign. In King Edward the IId's Time, Nicholas Charles was Bailiff of this Chaſe; and after him ſeveral of the Families of Colepeper and Vane ſucceeded in this Office. But at laſt by the Attainder of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham, in the 13th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, it was forfeited to the Crown, and tarried there till about the Middle of Queen Elizabeth's Time, and then was granted to Sir Francis Walſingham, Principal Secretary of State; and by his Daughter and Heir Frances, it went firſt in Marriage to that every way accompliſhed Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney; and after his Death, to Robert Earl of Eſſex; and then again to Richard Burgh Earl of Clanrickard, who was created Earl of St. Albans, in 1628; and to his Son Ulike Burgh, lately Earl of St. Albans and Clanrickard, ſhe bequeathed this Manor of Somerhill.

4. Hilden. This Manor was very anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Vanes, who in old Deeds are written a-Vane; and this was certainly their ancient Seat, before they became Poſſeſſors of Badſell, by marrying the Heir of Stidolf. Henry A-Vane made his Will here, A. D. 1456; and his Predeceſſors had been here long before his Deſcendant John A-Vane, in the 10th Year of King Henry the VIIth's Reign, ſold it to Dixon; and in that Name it continued in Philpot's Time. One of theſe, Edward, died in the Year 1659, and is buried in the Chancel of Tunbridge Church.

5. Dacburſt, alias Hildenburgh, is a Place which had the ſame Owners as Tunbridge Honour and Caſtle; and being forfeited to the Crown with that, in the 13th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, it was the Year following granted to William Skeffington, Eſq; in whoſe Deſcendants the Property of the Land continued in Philpot's Time. But the Manor continued in the Crown, till in the late Wars it was given to Colonel Robert Gibbons of Hole in Rolvenden.

6. Bar-

6. Bardens, 7. Hadloe, are Two Manors in Tunbridge, which anciently had Proprietors of thoſe Names: John de Barden held the former at making the Black Prince Knight; and it continued in that Name till King Henry IVth's Reign, and then was ſold to the Hadloes, who had been a long while in Poſſeſſion of the latter Manor. But not long after, John Hadloe dying without Iſſue, Alice his Siſter, who was married to John Woodward, became his Heir; and after her Husband's Death, ſhe ſold Bardens to John Hopdey; who in the 38th Year of King Henry the VIth, ſent it the ſame way to William Hextall. But Hadloe went to John Woodward, her Husband's Son; who in the 37th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, parted with all his Right here to William and Henry Hextall; and after that it came to William alone, who dying in a few Years without Male-Iſſue, Margaret his only Daughter carried theſe Manors to her Husband William Whetenhall, Eſq; whoſe Son of the ſame Name, about the Middle of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, ſold Bardens to Andrew Judd, Eſq;, and Hadloe to William Waller, Eſq;: Judd died without Iſſue Male, and leaving his Eſtate to Alice his only Heir, ſhe carried it in Marriage to Thomas Smith, Eſq; uſually called Cuſtomer Smith. And he at his Death gave Bardens to his ſecond Son Sir Thomas Smith of London, whoſe Deſcendant was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time. But Hadloe deſcended to Richard Waller Son of William above-mentioned; and he about the 42d Year of Queen Elizabeth ſold it to George Stacy; who in the Beginning of the next Reign ſent it the ſame way to Bing; and his Deſcendant Mr. John Bing ſold it to David Polhill, Eſq;, whoſe Grandſon of the ſame Name was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

8. Hollenden. This was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Fremingbams; for in the 55th Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign, Ralph de Fremingham obtained a Charter of Freewarren for his Land here, as well as at other Places in this County. In King Henry the IVth's Reign it belonged to the Cheyneys, who have left their Name to ſome Fields of this Manor, which they retain to this Day. About the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, it became by Purchaſe the Eſtate of the Wallers, and abode in that Name till King James the Iſt's Time, and then was ſold to Crittenden, whoſe Deſcendant was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

But there was ſome Part of this Manor lying in Leigh Pariſh, which in the Beginning of King Henry the VIIth's Reign was ſold to Stacy; and his Deſcendant in King James the Iſt's Time, alienated it to Turner; and he parted with it the ſame way to Mr. James Pelſet, who was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

TUNSTALL, Tonſtall, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about Two Miles Southward from Milton, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of that Name, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. A Rectory, valued in the King's Books at 14 l. 8 s. 4 d. And is in the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. 'Tis a fair Building of Three Iſles, but a low Tower. In it was a Memorial of the Interment of Margaret Rycil, Wife of John Rycil, and Daughter of Sir James Crowmer, in 1496. In the Chancel is a Monument with the Effiges of Robert Cheek, D. D. in 1647. An Altar-Tomb of white Alabaſter, without any Inſcription, but doubtleſs belongs to the Hales Family. A Braſs Plate over Henry Son of Sir John Guildford, in 1595. A fair Monument with the Effigies of Sir James Crowmer, in 1613. Another fair Marble Monument with the Figure of Sir Edward Hales, Baronet, in 1654.

The Patronage of this Church was given to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury about 500 Years ago, by Hubert de Burgo Earl of Kent.

1. Tunſtall Manor. This in the 29th Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign was in the Poſſeſſion of Walter de Gray; but in the 44th Year of that King, it was got into the Hands of John de Burgo, who that Year obtained a Charter of Freewarren for it, and for his Manor of Norton; he gave it to Stephen de Penchester; who in the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt, claimed all the uſual Privileges for this Manor; after this it came into the Poſſeſſion of Thomas de Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk; and by Margaret, one of his Daughters and Coheirs went by Marriage firſt to John de Segrave and then to Walter de Mayney; who was deſcended from that Walter de Meduana or Mayney, who in King Henry the IIId's Reign held Twenty Knights Fees in this County: This Gentleman was ſummoned to Parliament as a Baron, in King Edward the IIId's Reign; and that King repoſed ſo great a Truſt in him, that as Daniel tells us in his Chronicle, he and his Son Edward the Black Prince fought under his Colours, in a private Habit, againſt Monſieur de Charmy, near Calais in Picardy, in the 23d Year of his Reign: Walter Maney deceaſed about 23 Years after, and left only a Daughter and Heir, Anne, who carried this Eſtate in Marriage to John Haſtings Earl of Pembroke; who died in the 13th Year of King Richard the IId; Reginald Grey and Richard Talbot were found to be his Heirs; they ſold this Eſtate to Sir Robert Knolles, who in the 7th Year of King Henry the IVth, ſent it the ſame way to Sir William Crowmer, Lord-Mayor of London: And his Son was Sheriff of Kent in the 23d Year of King Henry the VIth, and was beheaded by Jack Cade; he had married Elizabeth, Daughter of James Fiennes, Lord Say and Seale, by whom he had Iſſue Sir James Crowmer; whoſe Son Sir William Crowmer was Sheriff of Kent in the 19th Year of King Henry the VIIth, and in the 1ſt Year of King Henry the VIIIth: And his Son Sir William Crowmer, was Sheriff alſo of this County, in the 9th and in the 27th Years of Queen Elizabeth: His Son Sir James Crowmer of Tunſtall, was Sheriff of Kent in the 2d Year of King James the Iſt; but he left only Three Daughters; of whom Frances was married to Sir Matthew Carew; Elizabeth, to Sir John Steed of Steed-hill; and Chriſtian, to Sir John, Eldeſt Son of Sir Edward Hales of Woodchurch. On the Diviſion this Manor went to Hales; and in Philpot's Time, was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Edward Hales, Baronet, who was then beginning to build a very fine Seat here.

2. Upton, is a Place in this Pariſh, which once was Part of the Eſtate of the Shurlands: By an Heir General of which Name it went to Cheyney; and William de Caſineto or Cheyney died poſſeſs'd of it, in the 8th Year of King Edward the IIId; and in this eminent Family it continued for many Deſcents, but at laſt by a Daughter it went to Aſtley; and thence the ſame way to Harlackenden, in which Family it was in Philpot's Time.

3. Gore-Court. This was anciently the Seat of a Family, whoſe Name was At-Gote, and who ſometimes are written de la Gore: Henry at Gore died poſſeſs'd of this Place in the 31ſt Year of King Edward the IIId: And it ſtaid in this Name for ſeveral Generations: But at length James Gore ſold it to Thomas Roydon of Eaſt Peckham; and his Son parted with it the ſame way to Mr. Chriſtopher Wood; and his Grandſon was the Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time.

Simon Meapham, a Kentiſh Man, born at Meapham in this County; was Parſon of this Pariſh, at the Time that he was elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

ULCOMB, Hulecombe, Olecombe, Wolecombe, lies near the Middle of Kent, about Two Miles and an half South Weſtward from Lenham, in the Lath of Aylesford, and Eaſt Diviſion of Juſtices.

Part of it (viz. the Burgh of Kingſnode) is in the Bailiwick and Lath of Scray, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County; and the Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over it; as being in the Hundred of Feverſham, which belonged to that Abbey.

The reſt is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eythorn, Lath of Aylesford, and Weſt Diviſion of the County. The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims there alſo.

'Tis all in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Sutton.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 16 l. 5 s. 10.

The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Eythorn, and is called All-Saints: It anciently belong'd to Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and being taken from thence in the Year 941, was reſtored by King Edmund. And about 430 Years after, was made a Collegiate Church by Stephen Langton, Archbiſhop, whoſe Head had the Title of Arch-Preſbyter.

Places of Note here:

1. Ulcomb Manor: The Seat of the old Family of the St. Legers (now called Selinger, in Latin de Sancto Leodegario) was in this Pariſh; and ſeveral of them lie buried in this Church; ſome of above 260 Years ago: As John Saintleger, Eſq; and Margery his Wife, only Daughter and Heir of James Donnet, in the Year 1442: Ralph St. Leger, 1470. Here are alſo Memorials of William Maydeſton, in 1410. And a Fair Monument of Sir Francis Clerk. Sir Robert de Sancto Leodegario came hither with William the Conqueror: And the Family have a Tradition, That he with his Hand ſupported the King when he went out of his Ship to land in Suſſex: His Lands here at Ulcomb are mentioned in Domeſday Book; and the Evidences of the Family ſhew that theſe Lands were taken from a Pagan Dane, whom he had conquered, and who inhabited in this Place.

Guy de St. Leger, as we find in Fuller's Eccleſ. Hiſt. was appointed by King William the Iſt, to be an Aſſiſtant Knight to Adelmere, one of the Monks of Ely. Ralph de St. Leger was one of thoſe Kentiſh Gentlemen that accompanied King Richard the Iſt to the Siege of Acon: And an Inſcription on the Lid of his Coffin in the Vault of this Church, ſhews, ſaith Philpot, that he was engaged 15 Years in the Holy War. Another Ralph St. Leger and Hugh St. Leger were Recognitores Magnæ Aſſiſæ, in the 2d Year of King John. Sir Ralph St. Leger, Sir John, and Sir Thomas were in the 28th Year of King Edward the Iſt, with that King at the Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland; and were then Knighted for their Bravery: And afterwards you read of ſome of this Family in almoſt every great Expedition. And their Alliances by Marriage have been alſo very great and honourable: Sir Thomas ſecond Brother to Sir Ralph St. Leger, married Anne Dutcheſs of Exeter, Siſter to King Edward the IVth, whoſe only Daughter and Heir Anne, married Sir George Mannors Lord Roſſe, from whom the Rutland Earls and Dukes are derived. Sir James St. Leger Brother to this Gentleman, married Anne, one of the Daughters and Coheirs of Thomas Botelir, Earl of Ormond; and from whom the St. Legers of Devonſhire are extracted: Of which Family was Sir William St. Leger, Lord Preſident of Munſter in Ireland, An. 1642: Sir Anthony St. Leger, Father of Sir Warham, was Lord Deputy of Ireland; and his Second Son Sir Anthony St. Leger, Father to Sir Anthony of Wierton Houſe in Boughton Monchenſie, died Maſter of the Rolls in Ireland. At length Sir Anthony St. Leger parted with his Eſtate here to Mr. Serjeant Clerk of Robeſter, Father to Mr. Francis Clerk; deſcended from Henry, who was Second Brother to Sir John Clerk, that took the Duke of Longuevile Priſoner, at the Battle fought between Bomy and Spours.

2. Boycot is a Manor which formerly gave Name to, and was the Seat of Stephen, John, and Alexander de Boycot: The laſt of which lived in the Reigns of King Edward the IIId, and Richard the IId. After which John Boycot had Iſſue Two Sons, John and Stephen: One of which ſold his (Gavelkind) Portion to Richard Hovenden; and the other his, to William Adam; from whom it went by Donation to Thomas Glover. After Hovenden it came into the Poſſeſſion of Clerk of Woodchurch: And Humphrey Clerk in the 19th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, conveyed it to the Lady Elizabeth Berkley; whoſe Grandſon Mr. —— Berkley was Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time.

3. Kingſnoth is a Manor which did belong to the Abbey of Feverſham; but after the Suppreſſion, it was, in the 32d Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, granted by that Prince to Sir Anthony St. Leger, Knight of the Garter, Lord Deputy of Ireland, and one of the Privy-Council; whoſe Son Sir Warham St. Leger, in the 10th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſold it to William Iſley, Eſq; who not long after paſſed it away to Anthony Sampſon; who in the 21ſt Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, alienated it to James Auſtin; and he An. 1599, ſold it to Robert Cranmer, whoſe Daughter Anne carried it to her Husband Sir Arthur Harris of Crixey in Eſſex; and he gave it to his Second Son Mr. John Harris, whoſe Son and Heir Mr. Cranmer Harris of Lincolns-Inn was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

Ralph St. Leger, in King Henry the IIId's Reign, obtained the Grant of a Fridays Market, and a Fair for Three Days, at Nov. 1. for the Manor of Ulcomb; and proved his Right to it before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign.

UPCHURCH, lies towards the North Side of Kent, about Three Miles and an half North Weſtward from Milton, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Milton, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is called St. Mary's.

A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 11 l. per Ann.

There is a Tradition that one Woodokes was very anciently buried in or near one of the Walls of this Church; where Wever ſaw an old Monument, garniſhed with Acorns and Oak-leaves.

Places of Note here:

1. Upchurch Manor. This Place was once Part of the Inheritance of the great Family of the Leybourns: Roger de Leybourn being in Poſſeſſion here, in the 50th Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign; and his great Grandchild Juliana de Leybourn, who ſurvived her Two Husbands

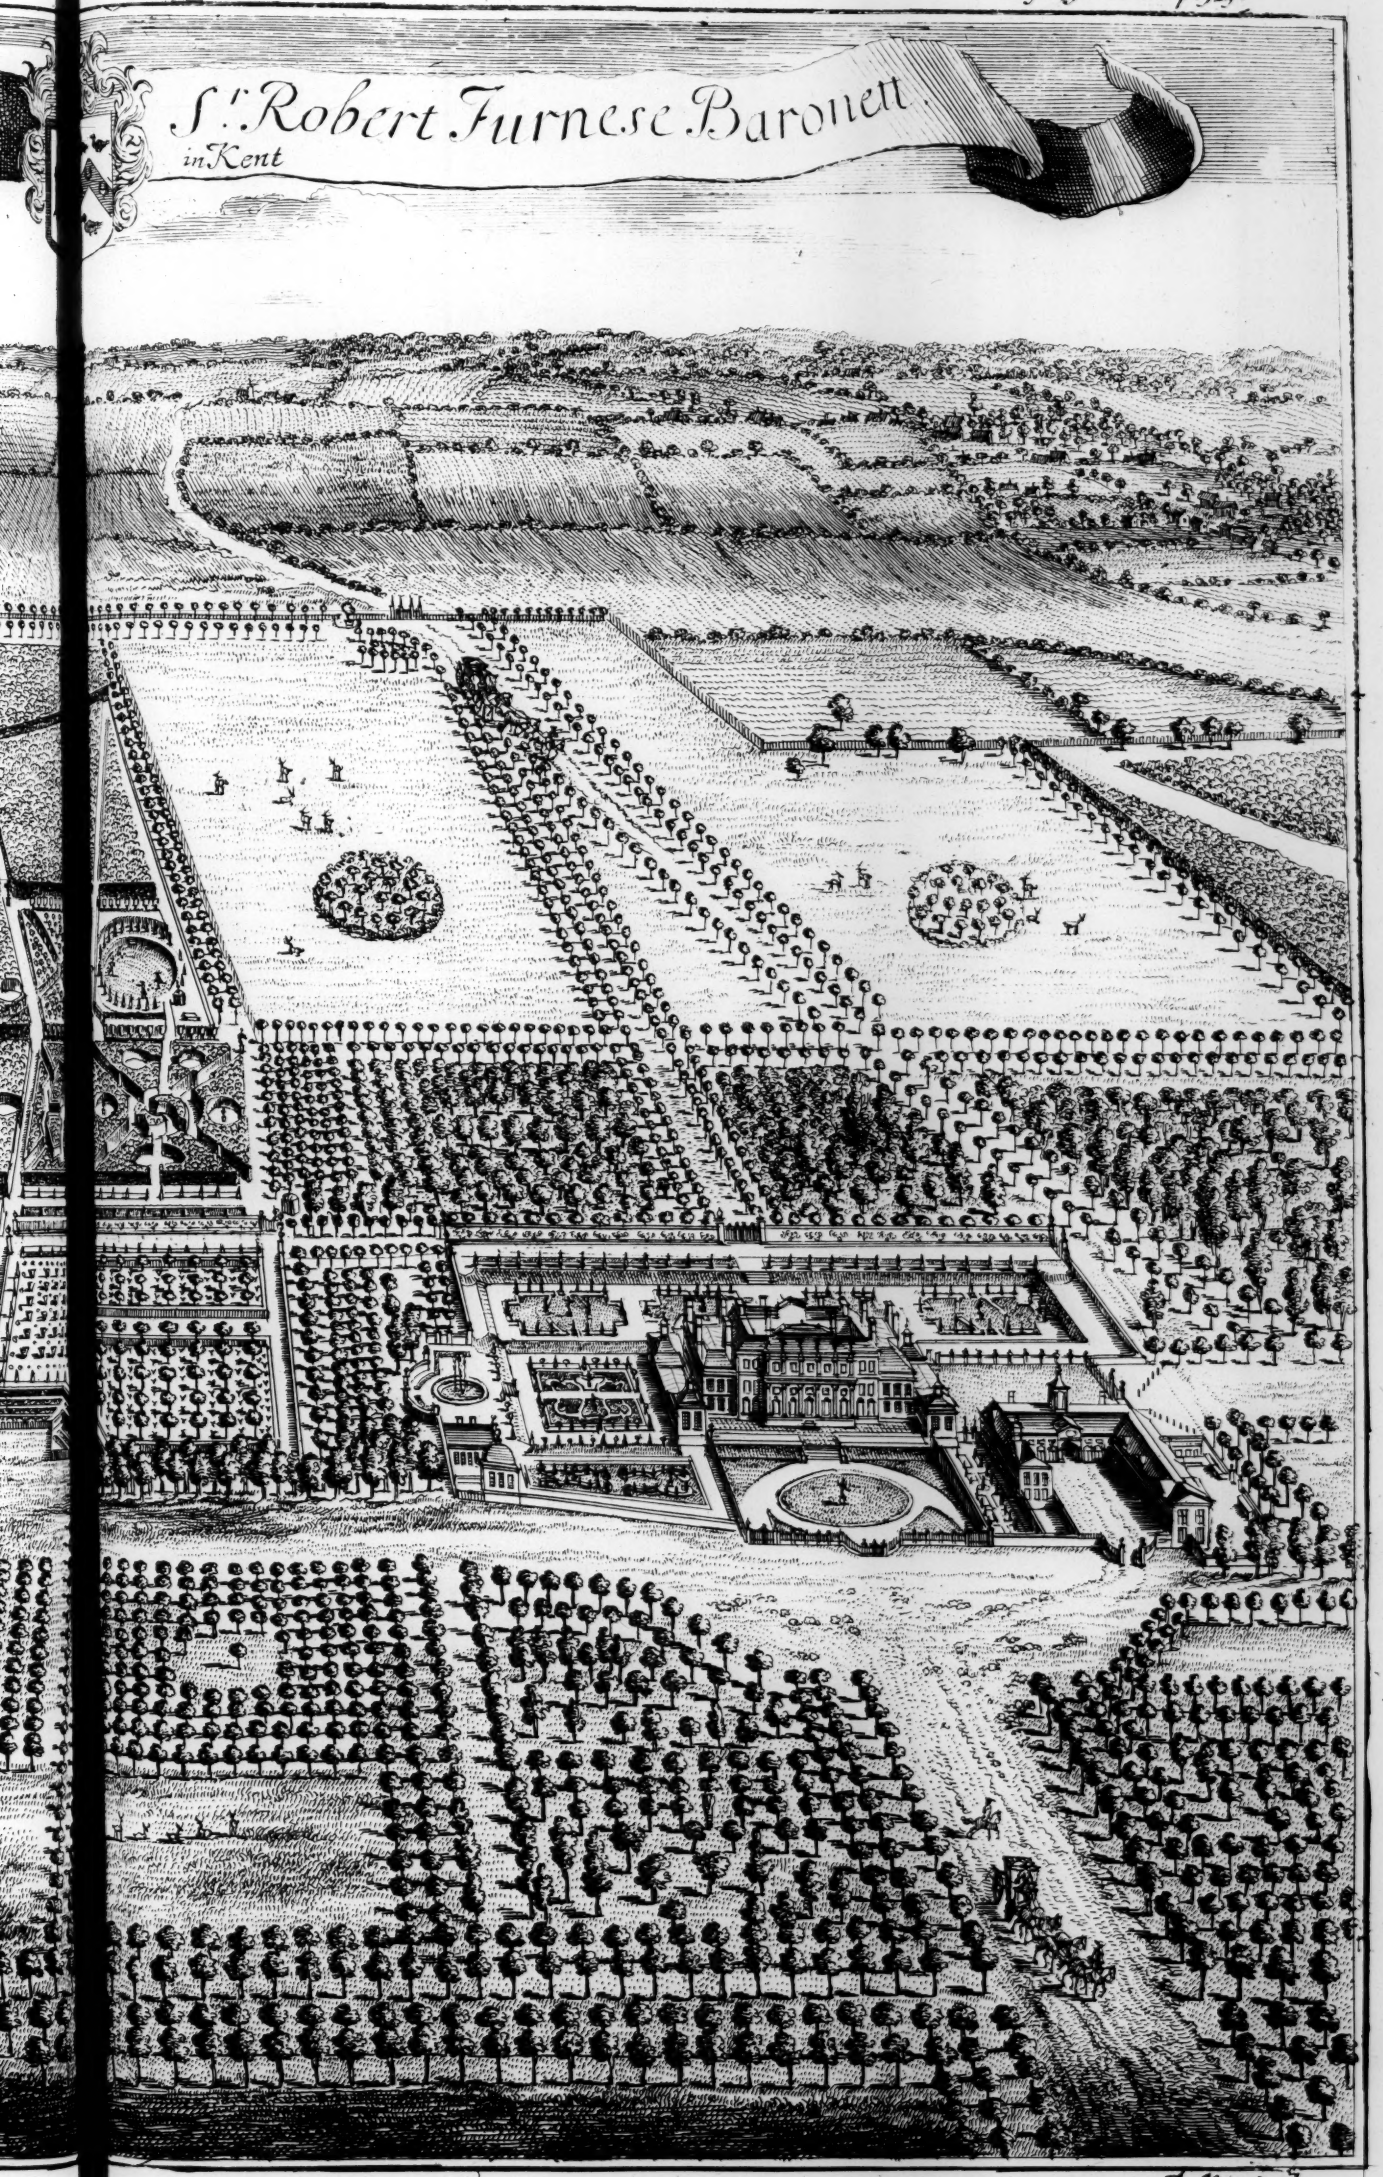
Sr. Robert Furnese Baronett in Kent



J. Kip Sculp:

John de Haſtings, and William de Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon, died poſſeſs'd of this Manor in the 43d Year of King Edward the IIId; but leaving no Heir at all, it eſcheated to the Crown, and thereupon was by that Prince, about Seven Years afterward, ſettled on the Abbey of St. Mary Grace on Towerhill, London. But on the Suppreſſion King Henry the VIIIth granted it to Thomas Green, Eſq; whoſe Deſcendant in King James the Iſt's Reign, ſold it to Apſley; and the Poſſeſſion was in his Family in Philpot's Time.

2. Ham, 3. Sharpenaſh, and 4. Weſtcourt, are Three little Manors in this Pariſh, which anciently were Part of the Revenue of the Abbey St. Auſtin's in Canterbury; but after the Suppreſſion, King Henry the VIIIth granted them to William Hatch, deſcended from William Hach of Allen in Devon, who not long after ſold them to Thomas Green, Eſq; above-named; written in Deeds (ſometimes) alias Norton: And from hence after ſome Years they went again by Sale to Alderſey, Anceſtor to Terry Alderſey of Swanton Court in Bredgar; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Dr. Battely had ſeveral Urns, Pots, &c. of a black Earth which were dug up here; and ſome were found in the Bottom of the River: But all of them lay in ſuch irregular Order, and in ſuch a Soil, as ſhews them rather to have belonged to ſome ancient Pottery, than to have been of the Sepulchral Kind.

Eleanor Wife to King Edward the Iſt, gave the Manor of Upchurch to the Hoſpital of St. Katherine's by the Tower, ſaith Stow: And therefore how after that it could get again into the Family of the Leybourns is hard to account for; and therefore probably this may be one of Philpot's many Miſtakes.

WALDERSHARE, lies towards the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Four Miles and an half Southward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eaſtry, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. A Vicarage, valued in the King's Books at 5 l. 8 s. per Ann. In the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to All-Saints, and was about 400 Years ago appropriated to Weſt Langdon Abbey: The Building is now very ſmall, and all over-grown with Ivy, and without any Steeple: In it are ſome fine Monuments of the Family of Monins: And in a ſeparate Chancel built for that Purpoſe, Sir Robert Furneſe, Baronet, hath lately erected a moſt Stately Monument to his Father Sir Henry Furneſe; The Figures, which are in white Marble and as large as the Life, are very finely carved, and the Pyramidal Figure of the Monument is very Magnificent; and in the whole, 'tis much the fineſt that I ever ſaw. It was made by Mr. Green of Camberwell.

Places of Note here:

1. Walderſhare Manor. This at the Time of the Norman Conqueſt, ſaith Kilburn, was under the Dominion of Sir William Mamouth, whom he calls Lord of Walderſhare. Mr. Philpot ſaith, This Place was anciently the Seat of the Eminent Family of the Malmains: John de Malmain is in the Liſt of thoſe Gentlemen who came in with King William the Iſt. And Mr. Fuller mentions one John de Malmains, who was Standard-Bearer to the Norman Footmen, and was joined by King William the Conqueror, as an Aſſiſtant to Odo one of the Monks of Ely. Henry Malmains, was one of thoſe Kentiſh Gentleman that attended King Richard the Iſt, into the Holy Land, and aſſiſted him at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine. John de Malmains was one of the Recognitores Magnæ Aſſiſæ for this County, in King John's Reign, a Poſt then of great Honour and Truſt. Sir Nicholas de Malmains was with King Edward the Iſt, at the famous Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, and was Knighted there. Nicholas de Malmains died poſſeſs'd of this Eſtate, and much other Land hereabouts, in the 23d Year of King Edward the IIId (a). But his Grandſon Henry Mailmains dying without Iſſue-Male, about the Beginning of King Henry the IVth, Agnes his only Daughter carried Walderſhare to her Huſband Thomas Goldwell of Great Chart: But however he had a Kinſman, Thomas, Son of John Malmains, who had ſome Share in this Manor of Walderſhare, and which by an Heir General of his, went in Marriage to John Monins, Eſq; who about the Beginning of King Henry the VIth's Reign purchaſed all the Reſt of the Goldwells, and ſo became entire Lord of Walderſhare. He was deſcended from John Monins, Eſq; who in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId, held Lands at Swingfield in this County, as appears by the Book of Aid: And he was allied to William Monins or Monings, who was ſeveral Times Knight of the Shire for the County of Norfolk in King Richard the IId's Reign. John Monins, this Man's Son, was a Perſon ſo eminent in this County, that he obtained an Indulgence under the Seal of Pope Sixtus the IVth, dated 1474, to carry along with him a Prieſt and a Portable Altar, in his neceſſary Journeys. His Grandſon John Monins compounded with Thomas Hobbys, in the 20th Year of King Henry the VIIth, for 10 Marks, as part of his Fine, to be excuſed from being made Knight of the Bath, at the Creation of Henry Prince of Wales. Edward Monins, Eſq; was Juſtice of the Peace for Kent, about the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and his Deſcendant Sir William Monins was made Knight and Baronet, on June the 29th, in the 9th Year of King James the Iſt; whoſe Son and Heir Sir Edward Monins, Baronet, was the Poſſeſſor of Walderſhare in Philpot's Time. There were Three Branches of this Family of Monins: The firſt of which lived here at Walderſhare; the ſecond lived at Lydden; and a Third went into Norfolk and Suffolk: And Alice Monins of that Branch, was Mother to Archbiſhop Parker.

This Eſtate, Manor, and Seat, is now in the Poſſeſſion of the Worthy Sir Robert Furneſe, Baronet, Son to the late Sir Henry Furneſe, who built here, within a Noble Park, a very fine Houſe, encompaſſed with ſpacious Gardens; in which are very long and pleaſant Walks, which lead into Rows of many large Timber Trees: Here is alſo a very fine Bowling-Green, and all Things elſe agreeably and magnificently correſponding.

2. Apulton, and 3. Southwould, are Two ſmall Manors in Walderſhare Pariſh, which Philpot hath placed wrongly, in Eaſt Langdon. They did very anciently belong to the Family of Malmains; but when Henry de Malmains being engaged in a Rebellion with Simon de Montfort, againſt King Henry the IId, had forfeited all his Eſtate to the Crown, had it not been ſaved by the Mediation of the Abbot of Langdon; his Son and Heir Sir John Malmains, in the 6th Year of King Edward the IId, in Gratitude gave theſe Two Manors to that Convent for ever. In the firſt Year of King Richard the IIId, the latter of theſe was exchanged by the ſucceeding Abbot, with Robert Monins, Eſq; for Manſuers Langdon. On the general Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries, Theſe were by King Henry the VIIIth, in his 29th Year, exchanged with Thomas, Archbiſhop of Canterbury: And in the Iſt Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, were re-aſſumed by the Crown again, by another Exchange.

WAL-

WALMER, lies at the East Side of Kent, adjoining to the Sea, about Four Miles and an half South Eastward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Eastry, Lath of St. Auſtin, East Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices of the Corporation of the Town and Port of Sandwich, whereof it is a Member; and the Liberties of that Town and Port, and of the Cinque Ports, claim over it: 'Tis in the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: A Curacy, and ſo not valued in the King's Books: The Church is dedicated to St. Mary.

A Queſtion ariſing in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, about aſſeſſing this Pariſh, between the Juſtices of the County, and the Inhabitants of Walmer: The King ended it by uniting Walmer, by his Letters Patents, to the Port of Sandwich. And here alſo he built a Caſtle for the Defence of the Sea-Coaſt, which is called Walmer-Caſtle.

Place of Note here:

Walmer was anciently one of the Principal Seats of the famous Family of Crioll; Matilda Widow of Simon de Crioll, died poſſeſs'd of it in the 52d Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign; as alſo did Nicholas de Crioll, in the 31ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, who Ten Years before was allowed here all the uſual Rights of a Manor. John de Crioll was here in King Edward the IVth's Reign: And in the 1ſt Year of King Henry the Vth, William Keriell, for ſo the Name began now to be written by ſome of the Family. This Gentleman left it to his Son Sir John Crioll of Sarre in the Iſle of Thanet; who had the Command of a good Part of King Henry the Vth's Army at the Battel of Agincourt; he died in the 9th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, and left his Son Sir Thomas Crioll or Keriell, Knight of the Garter, his Heir: Of this Noble Gentleman, thus Drayton in his Poly-Albion, p. 295.

Then here our Keriell claims his Room among the Reſt,
Who juſtly if compar'd might match our very beſt:
He in our Wars with France, with our great Talbot [oft;
With Willoughby and Scales, now down and then a- [loft;
Endur'd the ſundry Turns of often varying Fate.
At Clermont ſeiz'd the Earl before his City Gate:
Eight Hundred faithleſs French who took or put to [Sword,
And by his Valour twice to Artois us reſtor'd.

He was Governor of Gourney in Normandy, and loſt his Life at Home, in the ſecond Battel of St. Albans, fighting for the Cauſe of the Houſe of York. He left no Iſſue-Male; but one of his Daughters and Coheirs carried Walmer in Marriage to John Fogge of Repton, Eſq;. His Son Thomas Fogge was Serjeant-Porter of Calais; but left only Two Daughters, of which Anne carried this Eſtate firſt to William Scott, and then to a ſecond Husband Henry Iſham. And his Son Edward Iſham, about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, leaving an only Child Mary, it went by her in Marriage to Sir George Perkins: And by his Daughter it went to Sir Richard Minſhull of Cheſhire, who was created Baron Minſhull, in the Year 1642: He was deſcended from that Eminent Soldier Michael de Minſhull, who for his glorious Services performed under our King Richard the Iſt, at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine, had the Aſſignment for ever of the Creſcent and Star for the Coat Armour of his Family. This Baron and the Lady Mary Perkins joined in a Sale of this Eſtate, in the 2d Year of King Charles the Iſt, to James Hugiſſen of Lingſtede, Eſq; and his Great Grandſon, William Hugiſſen, is now the Poſſeſſor.

Mr. Darell in his Manuſcript about the Caſtles in Kent, ſaith, That in his Time there was the Remains of a Camp on the Side of a Hill, not far from Walmer, which was then called Kingſdown: And the Camp, he ſaith, was called Roman Codde: And he fancies it to have been the Place where Julius Cæſar lay encamped at his firſt Landing: And perhaps he might, after his Landing, lie there for a Night or ſo, in his March into the Countrey.

WALTHAM, lies about the Middle of the Eaſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles Eaſtward from Wye, in the Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of St. Auſtin. Part of it is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Bridge and Petham, and in the Lath of St. Auſtin. But the other Part; viz. ſo much of it as is in Townburgh, is in the Bailiwick of Chart and Longbridge, Hundred of Wye, and Lath of Scray; and the Liberty of Wye claims over it. And the reſt is in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Stowting, and Lath of Shipway. 'Tis in the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; the Church ſtands in the Hundred of Bridge and Petham, and is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. 'Tis a pretty large Building, though of but one Iſle, the Tower in the Middle, with a Spire; in the Church no Memorials or Ancient Monuments. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 15 s. 4 d.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here.

1. Waltham Manor; this was anciently Part of the Demeſne of the Knights Templars; and on their Suppreſſion was, in the 2d Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, ſettled on the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem: Here it ſtaid till the general Diſſolution of all the Religious Houſes, and then coming to the Crown, was granted, about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, to John Manwaring, Eſq; by whoſe Daughter and Heir Hope Manwaring, it went to Humphrey Hamond: But on his Death ſhe married again, to Mr. Robert Stapleton, (the Gentleman that tranſlated Juvenal, Pliny's Panegyrick, &c.) And he by Purchaſe from his Son-in-Law Mr. Manwaring Hamond, was in Poſſeſſion of this Eſtate in Philpot's Time.

2. Eſhmerfield is a Manor in Waltham, which anciently was Part of the Eſtate of the great Family of the Criolls: Bertram de Crioll died poſſeſs'd of it in the 23d Year of King Edward the Iſt; and though he left only a Daughter, yet this Place continued in the Tenure of a younger Houſe, till Benet de Crioll, Daughter and Coheir of Sir Thomas de Crioll, carried it to her Husband John Fogge, Eſq; whoſe Son Thomas Fogge, about the Beginning of King Henry the VIIth's Reign, ſold it to Sir Thomas Kemp: His Grandſon about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, left only Four Daughters; by one of which it went in Marriage to Sir Dudley Diggs: He ſold it to Mr. Thomas Twiſden, a younger Brother of Sir William Twiſden: And his Heirs paſſed it the ſame way to Sir John Aſhburnham, and his Widow held it at his Deceaſe, as Part of her Dower; and was in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

There is now a Place here called Aſhenfield, I know not whether the ſame with this: Which ſeems to have been formerly a Caſtellated Manſion; and now belongs to Francis Bartell, Eſq; of Rocheſter.

3. Wheta-

3. Whetacre is another ſmall Manor in Waltham, which once had Poſſeſſors of its own Name: Nigellus de Whitacre held it in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. Afterwards it came into the Name of Hills or Hells, deſcended from the Hells of Hells-Court in Wooditon; and in this it ſtaid till the Beginning of King Edward the VIth's Reign, and then was ſold to Prude; and from that Name it went the ſame way to Alderman Cockait of London; and thence again to Beacon; who I ſuppoſe was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

St. WARBURGH. See Hoo.

WARDEN, Werdon, lies at the North Side of Kent, in the Iſle of Sheppey, adjoining to the Sea, about Five Miles and an half Northward from Feverſham, in the Bailiwick of Milton, Hundred of the Iſle of Sheppey, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 4 l. 15 s. per Ann. In the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. But what Saint this poor Church was dedicated to I can't find; Quiſquis fuit ille Deorum, he ſeems quite to have deſerted this little Shrine: For in my Perambulation hither, I found the Door ſtanding open, the Church all out of Repair, a poor ragged reading Desk, and but half a Pulpit.

Place of Note here.

Warden did anciently belong to the Savages of Bobbing-Court: For in the 23d Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, Sir John de Savage obtained a Charter of Freewarren for his Lands here; as Philpot ſaith: But I think this could not be the Manor of Werdon; becauſe I find the Maſter of the Maiſon Dieu at Dover claiming the Manor of Werdon, and the uſual Privileges of it, before the Juſtices Itinerants, in the 21ſt Year of this very Reign.

But be the Savages Eſtate here what it will, before the Middle of King Edward the IIId's Reign, it was got into the Poſſeſſion of the Freminghams: In King Edward the IVth's Reign, Philpot finds it in the Name of Norton; and it ſeems to have ſtaid there till King Charles the Iſt's Reign, when it was alienated to Edmund Tooke of Dertford; and in his Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time.

N. B. 'Tis the more probable that the Manor of Werdon belonged to the Maiſon Dieu at Dover or Oſpringe, both Houſes of the Knights Templars; becauſe I find they had Land in this Iſland at Hokeling, Radymerſh, and Ryde; and ſome other Places in this Iſland. Perhaps the Savages had it, on the Diſſolution of that Order, in the 2d Year of King Edward the IId's Reign.

WAREHORNE, Wereborne, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Five Miles and an half Southward from Aſhford. That Part of it which is in the Burgh of Great Kenarton or old Herlackenden, is in the Bailiwick of the Seven Hundreds, Hundred of Blackborn, Lath of Scray, and Weſt Diviſion of the County. The reſt is in the Bailiwick of Shipway, Hundred of Ham, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County. The Liberty of Romney Marſh claims over Part of it; which therefore is in the Diviſion of the Juſtices of that Corporation: But the reſt of the Pariſh is in the Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway. The Liberties of Wye, and of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury claim alſo here.

'Tis in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; the Church ſtands in the Hundred of Ham, and is dedicated to St. Matthew.

Two Fairs are kept here; one at Ham, on May 3.; the other by the Church, on St. Matthew's Day.

Places of Note here:

1. Wereborne Manor. A. D. 1010. Elphege Archbiſhop of Canterbury adjoined one half of Wereborne to his Church: But the other Moiety belonged to a Family called Bedford: Richard de Bedford got a Grant of a Market and Fair here, in the 12th Year of King Henry the IIId, which was confirmed in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign. But in King Edward the IId's Reign this Eſtate was come into the Poſſeſſion of Hugh de Windleſore or Windſor; and in the next Reign was purchaſed by Morant of Morantſ-Court. William Morant was Sheriff of Kent in the 12th and 13th Years of King Edward the IIId's Reign, and had a Mandate ſent him, ſaith Philpot, that only one Bell ſhould be rung in any Steeple by the Sea-Coaſt in Kent. His Son Thomas Morant left only a Daughter, who married James Peckham of Yaldham, Eſq; who was Sheriff of Kent in the 3d and 12th Years of King Richard the IId; and in this Family it ſtaid till about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and then was ſold to Ellis; and from thence it was called Werehorn Ellis: But from this Name it went the ſame Way to Tufton; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of the Earl of Thanet.

The other half which belonged to Chriſt-Church in Canterbury after the Diſſolution, continued in the Crown till the 7th Year of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was granted to Mr. Thomas Paget, and Mr. Thomas Twiſden; the latter of which gave it the Name of Wereborn Twiſden: But not long after it was ſold alſo into the Tufton Family; and continued in the Poſſeſſion of the Earl of Thanet in Philpot's Time.

In Domeſday Book the Manor of Wereborne was eſtimated at one Plow-Land; and appretiated at 60 Shillings.

2. Tinton is a Manor here, which anciently belonged to the Priory of Horton by Hithe: And on the Suppreſſion, ſtaid in the Crown till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was granted to Sir William Sidley of the Friery in Aylesford; whoſe Grandſon Sir Charles Sidley, Baronet, was in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

3. Capell is a Place here, which gave both Name and Seat to a Family which had ſpread themſelves into Ivy-Church, Linton, Boxley, Horſmonden, Capell by Brenchley, and Capell in the Iſle of Sheppey. John de Capell lived here in King Henry the IIId's Reign, and was a great Benefactor to Boxley Abbey: But in the 15th Year of King Richard the IId's Reign, by a Siſter and Coheir of Richard at Capell, it went to Sir John Orlanſton in Marriage: But his Son Richard Orlanſton, Eſq; dying without Iſſue, by his Siſter it went to William Scott of Scott-hall; and in that Family it continued in Philpot's Time, being in the Poſſeſſion of Edward Scott of Scottſ-hall, Eſq;.

4. Ham is an eminent Manor in this Pariſh, which gives Name to a whole Hundred, and was anciently the Eſtate of the Orlanſtons: William de Orlanſton had a Charter of Freewarren for his Land here, in the 21ſt Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign. By a Daughter of this Family it went with Capell above-mentioned to the Scotts of Scottſ-hall; and in that Family it was in Philpot's Time.

5. Parkers is a Manor in Wareborne, which had formerly Owners of this Name: Edward Parker held it in the 9th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, Reign, (as appears by Rot. Eſc. N. 114.) and in this Family it continued till King Henry the VIIIth's Time, and then came into the Poſſeſſion of Engham; in which Name it ſtaid till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was ſold to Taylor; and thence to Collins; and thence again to Squire; and once more to Dr. Kingſley, Archdeacon of Canterbury; in whoſe Deſcendants the Poſſeſſion continued in Philpot's Time.

6. Hampton Cockleſcomb, is another Place here, which formerly had Owners of the Name of Hampton, who continued here for many Deſcents; till John Hampton, about the End of King Edward the IVth's Reign, ſold it to John May of Bibrook: By a Daughter of which Family it went to John Edolph; and by his only Daughter it went to William Wilcocks; who leaving only Two Daughters, Martha, which was married to Dr. Edward Ratcliff, Phyſician to Queen Elizabeth and King James the Iſt; and the other to one William Andrews; they divided this Eſtate between them: Ratcliff ſold his to Edward Holt and Andrew Marſh: And Andrew his, to Bridges and Philipſon.

WATRINGBURY, Wotringbery, Otteringaberia, lies towards the Middle of Kent, about Two Miles Southward from Weſt Malling, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Twiford, Lath of Ayleſford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. A Vicarage, and valued at 5 l. per Ann. in the King's Books: In the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. In the Church-yard is a fine Pyramidal Monument, with Urns, &c. of Marble, in Memory of Sir Oliver Stile, Baronet: And in the Chancel is a noble Monument of Oliver Stile, Eſq; and his Lady: There are alſo Memorials of ſeveral others of that Family.

1. Watringbury Manor. This had once Owners of the Name of Watringbury; whoſe Arms were Argent 6 Lioncells rampant Sables, but born I ſuppoſe 3 and 3; not 3, 2, and 1, for then 'tis the very ſame with the Arms of the Savages of Bobbing-Court: Philpot thinks, they took theſe Arms from the Lord Leybourn their Neighbour, and perhaps Lord Paramount.

2. Chart, and 3. Fowles. Theſe Watringburys had alſo Chart and Fowles, Two other Eſtates in this Pariſh; but they were gone hence before the End of King Henry the IIId's Reign, and were ſucceeded by the Leybourns of Leybourn Caſtle: Thomas de Leybourn died poſſeſs'd of it in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the IId's Reign: Hugh de Leybourn obtained the Grant of Tueſdays Market, and of a Fair for Three Days at the Feaſt of St. John the Baptiſt, for this Place, in the 4th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign. Roger Leybourn died ſeized of it, in the Beginning of King Edward the IIId's Reign, but without Iſſue-Male; by which means his only Daughter Juliana was ſo great a Fortune, that ſhe was called the Infanta of Kent. She was firſt married to John de Haſtings, a Kinſman of Lawrence de Haſtings Earl of Pembroke; and afterwards to William de Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon; but ſhe had Iſſue by neither; and dying without any Heirs, her Eſtate eſcheated to the Crown. And King Edward the IIId, in his 50th Year, granted Watringbury, Chart, and Fowles, to the Abbey of St. Mary-Grace on Towerhill; where they lay till the general Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries; but after that were, by King Henry the VIIIth, in his 36th Year, granted to Giles Bridges and Robert Harris, who ſoon after joined in a Sale of them to Sir Robert Southwell; and thence they went the ſame way, and in a ſhort Time, to Sir Edward North; and from him they were ſold to Sir Martin Bowes, who alienated them to Sir John Baker; who ſent them by Sale to Nevil de la Hay. This Gentleman had Iſſue George de la Hay, who about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſold Watringbury to Wilkinſon; and Chart and Fowles to Roger Twiſden, Eſq; Wilkinſon ſold his Part to Sir Thomas Stile, Knight and Baronet; whoſe Deſcendant, Sir Thomas Stile, Baronet, is the preſent Poſſeſſor. But Chart and Fowles went to Sir William Twiſden, Knight and Baronet; and his Son Sir Roger Twiſden was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

4. Weſtbury is another Manor here, which anciently had Proprietors of the Name of Weſtbury; the laſt of which was John Weſtbury, who bequeathed it by Will to his Niece Agnes Ellis; and ſhe, in the 23d Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, ſold it to Fiſhbourn; who parted with it the ſame way to Sir Thomas Browne, of Bechworth Caſtle in Surrey, Comptroller of the Houſhold, and Privy-Counſellor to King Henry the VIth: And his Deſcendant Sir Thomas Browne, in the 25th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſold it to Roger Twiſden, Eſq; whoſe Grandſon Sir Roger Twiſden, Knight and Baronet, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

5. Canons is another Manor here, which formerly belonged to the Prior and Canons of Leeds; but coming to the Crown at the General Diſſolution of the Abbeys, it was by King Henry the VIIIth, ſettled on his new erected Church, the Dean and Chapter of Rocheſter; and they now enjoy it, as they do alſo, the Parſonage of Watringbury. And ſome kind of Intereſt the Priory of Rocheſter had in Watringbury, apart from this of Canons (which was given to Leeds Abbey) as you will perceive by the Will of Birhtric, mentioned in Meapham: Where a Firm of Two Days is given to that Convent out of Watringbury.

N. B. Watringbury ought anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the Fifth Arch or Pere of Rocheſter-Bridge.

WESTBERE, lies towards the North Eaſt Side of Kent by the Stoure, about Three Miles North Eaſtward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanary of Weſtbere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: And the Church is called All-Saints; is very ſmall, but fair within Side.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here; and the Liberty of St. Auſtin's alſo: Becauſe it is in the Hundred of Blengate, which belonged to that Abbey.

'Tis a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. per Ann.

Places of Note here:

1. Weſtbere with the Appendant Manor of,

2. Hopland, were once Part of the Eſtate of a Family of the Name of Hopland: But which was extinct here before the End of King Edward the Iſt's Reign: In which Prince's Time, the St. Lawrences were in Poſſeſſion of Weſtbere, by Purchaſe from Hugh de Bere: And both theſe Manors ſtaid in the Poſſeſſion of St. Lawrence, till about the Beginning of King Henry the VIth's Reign, and then Hopland was conveyed to John Iſaack: And in this Name it continued till near the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and then was ſold to Tourney of Saltwood; who parted with it the ſame way to Steed. But Weſtbere went by a Daughter of the Name of Iſaack to Apulderfield; and and by a Daughter of that Family to Sir John Phineaux: And by another Heir General it became the Poſſeſſion of Sir John Smith; and in Philpot's Time was the Eſtate of his Grandſon Philip Viſcount Strangford.

Somner in his Chartham News ſaith, an Iron Anchor whole and ſound, was found deep in the Earth here, on digging for a Well; as were alſo many Oyſter and Cockle Shells; which he takes to be an Argument, that the Sea once came up hither; but I think it will ſcarce prove that, though it may be an Argument that the Stoure was once Navigable hereabouts.

There is another Manor in Weſtbere, omitted by Philpot, which is called,

Clinches, alias Hemphall; which by Sale came from the Family of Gilbert to that of Milles; and is now poſſeſſed by Samuel Milles of Herne, Eſq;.

Philpot ſaith, this Pariſh was called Weſtbere, to diſtinguiſh it from Bere, in St. Margaret's near Dover.

WESTGATE, Holy-Croſs in Canterbury, lies partly in the City of Canterbury, and partly without it in the County of Kent, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Hundred of Weſtgate, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery and Dioceſe of Canterbury: And the Church is called Holy-Croſs, and ſtands in the City.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims over the Manor of Weſtgate.

The Church now ſtanding was built by Archbiſhop Sudbury, in King Richard the IId's Time, inſtead of the Old Church which formerly ſtood over the City Gate; as this doth under the Wall.

'Tis a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 13 l. per Ann.

In the Church are Memorials of the Interment of Matthew, in the Year 1442; Colt in 1444; Colkyn, 1440; Ramſey, in 1495; Cornwell, in 1492; Hope, in 1458; Crane, in 1445; Nicholas Chilton, Vicar, in 1400; Robert Raynhull, Vicar, in 1416; Patricius Gerrard, in 1458; and of William Churnell, firſt Chantry Prieſt of Jheſus, in 1516.

For here was a Fraternity of Men that maintained a Maſs-Prieſt, who was called Jheſus Maſs-Prieſt; His Stipend, with the Charges of Wax and Wine allowed, was 7 l. per Ann. And the Pariſh-Clerk for Ringing the Bell to this Maſs at 6 in the Morning, had a Noble per Ann. And for very ſmall Gifts here, the Donors had the Title given them of Brothers or Siſters.

It had its Name of Holy-Croſs from a famous Crucifix or Image of Chriſt on the Croſs, which ſtood over the Porch or Entrance into this Church.

The Vicarage of this Church was made by Archbiſhop Stratford, about A. D. 1346.

One Thomas Wellys, who was called Biſhop of Sidon, was Vicar here; as alſo Rector of Woodchurch, and Prior of St. Gregory's in Canterbury, in the Year 1515.

WESTRAM, Weſterham, lies at the Weſt Side of Kent, adjoining to Surrey, about Five Miles Weſtward from Sevenoake, in the Bailiwick of Sutton-Bromley, Hundred of Weſtram and Edenbridge, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and lower one of Juſtices in that Lath.

In the Dioceſe of Rocheſter, and Deanery of Malling: The Church is dedicated to St. Mary. And the Advowſon of it was given by Eleanor, Queen to King Edward the Iſt, to the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and confirmed by the King: It was Part of the Exchange for the Port of Sandwich.

Here is a Market on Wedneſdays; and a Fair Yearly on our Lady's Birth-Day, or September the 8th.

This Pariſh ought anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the Fifth Arch or Pere of Rocheſter-Bridge.

This Town is famous for giving Birth to that Learned Confeſſor and moſt conſtant Martyr John Fryth.

The Right Reverend Dr. Benjamin Hoadly, the Preſent moſt Worthy Biſhop of Bangor, was alſo born here.

Places of Note here:

1. This Pariſh gives Name to the whole Hundred; and the Manor anciently belonged to a Family of the Name of Camville: William and Geoffrey de Camville came into England with King William the Iſt. And Geoffrey de Camville was one of the Recognitores Magnæ Aſſiſæ, in the 7th Year of King John. Another of the ſame Name was Knighted by King Edward the Iſt, in his Expedition into Scotland, and at the Siege of Carlaverock; But in him the Title of the Family ended as to the Eſtate here, in all Probability. For in King Edward the IIId's Time, it was got into the Poſſeſſion of the Abbot of Weſtminſter, who obtained the Market and Fair here, above-mentioned. At the General Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries, this was granted by King Henry the VIIIth to Sir John Greſham; and was confirmed afterwards to the Lady Beatrix Greſham, his Son's Widow, by Queen Elizabeth; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of Marmaduke Greſham, Eſq;.

N. B. I find the Abbot of Weſtminſter claiming the Privileges of a Manor here, before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign; ſo that before that, it muſt have been in his Hands. And he got a Grant of a Market here on Monday.

2. Broxham is a Place in Weſtram, which in the 11th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, was poſſeſs'd by John de Inſula or Iſley; and after that by Stephen de Aſhway, who had a Licenſe to encloſe a Park here, in the 41ſt Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. But about the latter End of King Richard the IId's Reign, it was ſold to Edward Lord Clinton: And one of that Family, about the Beginning of King Henry the VIth's Reign, conveyed it the ſame way to Thomas Squirrie, of

3. Squirrie's Court in this Pariſh; and he was deſcended from John de Squirrie, who lived here as long ago as King Henry the IIId's Time, and probably built or enlarged this Seat. The Arms of Squirrie are or were in the Glaſs Windows of Weſtram Church, in very old colour'd Glaſs. But this Thomas Squirrie dying in the 17th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, without Iſſue-Male, Margaret his Eldeſt Daughter carried both Broxham and Squirrie's Court, to her Huſband Sir William Cromer; in whoſe Family they ſtaid but till King Henry the VIIIth's Time; when I ſuppoſe, becoming forfeited to the Crown, that Prince granted them to Thomas Cawarden or Carden. And from this Name about the Middle of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, it was ſold to Beresford; who in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, ſoon parted with it the ſame way, to Thomas Lambert, Eſq;, who ſold it again to Mr. —— Leech, where it ſeems to have been in Philpot's Time.

A Squirrel eating a Nut.

But Broxham was ſold to Mr. Thomas Petley of Vilſton; and his Grandſon had it in Philpot's Time.

4. Well-ſtreet, and 5. Gayſam, are Two Places here, which anciently belonged to Atwell and Shelly. Atwell held the former of theſe, in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign; and in the 46th Year of the ſame Reign, Shelly was in Poſſeſſion of the other. And his Deſcendant, about the End of King Henry the VIth's Reign, ſold it to John Potter; a Succeſſor of whom purchaſed Well-ſtreet alſo: And in this Family both Places continued, till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then by Marriage of Potter's Daughter and Heir it went to Sir John Rivers of Chafford; who in King Charles the Iſt's Time, ſold Well-ſtreet to Mr. Thomas Smith, Scrivener in Milkſtreet, London.

6. Valons is a Place in Weſtram, which formerly belonged to a Family of that Name; and who in Latin Deeds are written de Valoniis. In King Henry the VIIth's Reign, this Eſtate was bought by Iſlip Abbot of Weſtminſter, and given to his Servant William Middleton, who much improved it with Building. But about the End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, it was ſold hence to one James Verſeline a Fleming; who gave it in Marriage with his Daughter Anne to Peter Mancing; and that Family were in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

The Vicarage of Weſtram, with the annexed Chapel of Edenbridge, is valued in the King's Books at 19 l. 19 s. 6 d.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, the Abbot of Weſtminſter had the Hundred as well as the Manor of Weſtram in Poſſeſſion; ſo that Philpot was miſtaken in ſaying, it came not to him till King Edward the IIId's Reign.

WESTWELL, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of the Middle of Kent, about Three Miles Northward from Aſhford, in the Bailiwick of Chart and Longbridge, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway. In the Deanery of Charing, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims over the Manor of Weſtwell. But the Liberty of Wye claims over the Burghs of Shottenden and Dean, which are in the Hundred of Wye: But the reſt of the Pariſh is in the Hundred of Calehill, in which the Church ſtands; and is called St. Mary's: which Church was A. D. 1397, by Licenſe from the King and the Pope, appropriated to Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, by Thomas Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterbury; though Somner makes the Time of it Three Years after; but that was only a Confirmation of it by King Henry the IVth.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims alſo in this Pariſh.

Places of Note here:

1. Philpot ſaith, Weſtwell Manor was given to the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, A. D. 1241. After the Diſſolution, it was exchanged with Thomas, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Crown, in the 39th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, whoſe Predeceſſors had a large Share of it before. But it was again aſſumed by Queen Elizabeth, in the Vacancy of that See: And after having reſted in the Crown a while, it was granted to Sir Nicholas Tuſton of Northfield, Father to John Earl of Thanet.

2. Ripley-Court is a Seat of good Antiquity in this Pariſh, and belonged to a Family of this Name: Richard de Ripley died poſſeſs'd of it in the 30th Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, being in an old Deed called Miles Archiepiſcopi; becauſe he held this Manor of the Archbiſhop by Knights Service. In King Edward the IIId's Reign, this Family was ſucceeded here by the Brockbulls, and after that by the Idens; a Name of good Note here, and about Iden in Suſſex. Alexander Iden was Sheriff of Kent in the 34th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign; and he was the Man which in the 28th Year of that Prince killed Jack Cade, who had hid himſelf in his Father's Grounds about Hothfield. From the Idens this Place was ſold to the Darells; and in the laſt Year of King Edward the VIth's Reign, George Darell, Eſq; conveyed it to Baker, Anceſtor to Baker of Windſor, the Proprietor in Philpot's Time.

3. Diggs-Court is another eminent Seat here, which belonged to the Diggs, who ſometimes wrote themſelves of Berham, and ſometimes of Weſtwell. Adomarus de Digge wrote himſelf of this Place in King Edward the IIId's Reign, and probably was a Judge. At length John Digge, Eſq; ſold it to Henry Aucher; in whoſe Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

4. Dean-Court is a Manor of Note here, which anciently belonged to the Huſſies, who were likewiſe in Poſſeſſion of Dean-Court in Wingham, in Philpot's Time the Seat of the Oxendens. Henry Huſſie, a Man of a great Eſtate in this County, both at Wingham, Lenham, Boughton, Malherbe, &c. died poſſeſs'd of this Place in the 18th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. And in this Name did it continue till King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and then was ſold to Sackville; and from thence to Milan; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

5. Naſhcourt is a Place which of old belonged to a Family, which wrote themſelves At-Naſh, and ſometimes Naſh. But in the 32d Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, it was in the Poſſeſſion of Alanus de Hennekin. But before the End of King Richard the IId's Reign, that Family had parted with it to the Brockhulls of Calehill: And Henry Brockhull, about the 12th Year of King Henry the IVth's Reign, ſold it to John Darell, Eſq; Sheriff of Kent the Year before, and Brother to Sir William Darell, then Under-Treaſurer of England: And here it ſtaid till King Edward the VIth's Time, and then was ſold to Sharp of Ninhouſe in Great Chart, who had been in Poſſeſſion for Four or Five Deſcents in Philpot's Time.

6. Beamonſton, uſually called Beamſton, lies partly in Eaſtwell, and partly in this Pariſh. And in King Edward the IIId's Time, was held by Thomas At-more: This Family ſold it to Amias; and thence in King Henry the VIIth's Reign it went the ſame way to Sir Thomas Moile, Father to John Moile, Eſq;. But by Sir Thomas's Daughter, who married Sir Thomas Finch, this Place went into that Name; and was in the Poſſeſſion of his great Grandſon Heneage Finch, Earl of Winchelſea, in Philpot's Time.

7. Pery-Town was once Part of the Eſtate of William de Aldon, who died poſſeſs'd of this Place in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign; and in this Name it ſtaid till the 27th Year of King Henry the VIth; and then was ſold to Cardinal Kemp; who the Year after ſettled it on his College of Wye. But in the 29th Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, that College being reſigned to the King, it remained in the Crown till that Prince in his 38th Year granted it to Thomas Cawarden or Carden; who not long after ſold it to Sir John Baker of Siſinghurſt: And his Succeſſor Sir John Baker, Baronet, A. D. 1657, ſold it to Nathaniel Powell of Ewherſt in Suſſex.

8. Wolton or Woditon is a Place here, which once was the Inheritance of Ivo de Woditon, A. D. 1236; whoſe Grandſon Richard de Woditon or Wolton, was a Man of Note, and held this Place and and Woditon in Barham of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury by Knights Service, at the making the Black Prince Knight: And in his Name did this Eſtate continue till near the End of King Henry the VIth's Reign, and then ſome Part of it was conveyed to John Hampton, who about the Beginning of King Edward the IVth's Reign paſſed it away to Richard Raſſell: But ſome Part of it being yet unſold, William Wolton, who died An. 1540. ordered it to be diſpoſed of for the Diſcharge of his Debts, which was done, and the Remainder conveyed to Raſſell; in whoſe Deſcendants it continued in Philpot's Time.

9. Long Beachwood was a Wood in this Pariſh, of above 1000 Acres; which was in the Poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in Matthew Parker's Time; who A. D. 1570, was ſued in the Exchequer for ſelling ſome Part of it, under a Pretence of its being the Queen's. The Council were clear, that the Title of the Archbiſhop was good; however the Crown claimed on; and the Archbiſhop, though he wrote to the Queen about it was fain to relinquiſh his Right: Some Courtier I ſuppoſe having got a Leaſe of it from the Queen. But Archbiſhop Whitgift at his firſt Advancement, being in good Favour at Court, recovered it again to the See; and turned out Sir James Crofts, who was then the Leſſee.

Weſtwell is a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 13 l. per Ann. The Church and Chancel are large, with Three Iſles, and a Spire Steeple; good painted Glaſs in the Windows: In the Chancel are Three Confeſſional Chairs, and Six Stalls like thoſe in Collegiate Churches. Here is alſo a Rood-Loft.

In the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt, Here was a Wedneſdays Market, the Benefit of which was claimed by the Priory of Chriſt-Church before the Juſtices Itinerant.

WHITFIELD. See Bewfield.

WHITSTAPLE, lies at the North Side of the County, near the Sea, about Five Miles Northward from Canterbury, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Hundred of Whitſtaple, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of Kent, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 20 l. per Ann. In the Deanery of Weſtbere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is called All-Saints, and is pretty large. And in it are Memorials of the Paramours; and of John Head, in 1444.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims over the Burgh of Tankerton; and that of St. Auſtin over the reſt of this Pariſh.

A Fair is kept here on Good-Friday.

Places of Note here:

1. The Manor of Whitſtaple, which gives Name to the whole Hundred; and was anciently a Part of the great Eſtate of Alexander de Baliol, Earl of Athol, who held this, and a Place called,

2. Grafton, in this Pariſh; and likewiſe a large Wood called,

3. Northwood, hereabouts, in the Reign of King Henry the IIId, whoſe Son John Earl of Athol, was taken Priſoner by King Edward the Iſt, in his Wars in Scotland, attainted and executed for Treaſon; and his forfeited Eſtate here was given by King Edward the IId to Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere: But he likewiſe forfeiting it by Treaſon in the 16th and 17th Year of that Prince, it came to the Crown again; and was by King Edward the IIId, in the 2d Year of his Reign, reſtored to his Son Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere, who at his Death left it to his Brother Giles de Bodeleſmere: But he dying without Iſſue, by Maud one of his Siſters, it went in Marriage to John Vere, Earl of Oxon; who died poſſeſs'd of it in the 34th Year of King Edward the IIId. Here it ſtaid a good while; but at length was ſold to Phineux, or Fineux; and by Elizabeth, Daughter of John Phineux, it went to Sir John Smith of Oſtenhanger: And in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of his Grandſon Philip Viſcount Strangford.

4. Cheſtfield, was once the Inheritance of a Family of this Name; for James Cheſtfield paid Aid for it at making the Black Prince Knight: Hence in King Richard the IId's Reign it was ſold to Henry Reyner, and thence again to John Roper of St. Dunſtan's; and in Philpot's Time, was poſſeſs'd by Edward Roper of Wellhall in Eltham, Eſq;.

5. Grimgill as uſually and vulgarly called, but its true Name is Greenſhields, and was once the Seat of a Family of that Name; John Greenſhields was in Poſſeſſion here in King Henry the VIth's Reign; and had a good Eſtate beſides about Sandwich and Wodensborough: From this Family it went by Sale to that of Queques of Quekes in Birchington in Thanet, and by a Daughter of that Name went ſoon after to Criſpe of Glouceſterſhire; and Nicholas Criſpe, Eſq; held his Shrievalty here in the 2d Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign; but from this Family at length it went by Sale to that of Paramour; and from thence after ſome Years, it paſſed the ſame way to Mr. Twiman of Canterbury, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

6. Condies-Place or Hall, in King Edward the IIId's Reign was the Seat of John Condie, who was eminent for taking a conſiderable Priſoner in one of that King's Battels at Swine in Normandy; and for it had 30 l. per Annum (a good Sum in thoſe Days) paid him out of the Staple at Canterbury: The Grant is dated in the 14th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. But his Son William Condie dying without Iſſue, his Siſter Margaret carried this Place in Marriage to Robert Grubbe; and by Agnes a Daughter of his, it went the ſame way to Mr. John Iſaack of Blackmanbury in Bridge, where it continued for many Deſcents.

7. Thornden, is a Manor here, which is Part of the Revenue of the Church of Canterbury; and now in the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Turner, Eſq; of Iſleden, in Leaſe for Three Lives; conſiſting of a Wood of about 800 Acres with a Manor-Houſe and Farm.

But 'tis extra-Parochial; and therefore hath been formerly omitted in all our printed Books of Kent.

It lies between Whitſaple, Herne, and Swaycliffe.

WICHELING lies about the Middle of Kent, about Two Miles Northward from Leneham, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyborne, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Eaſt one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Sittingbourn, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. Margaret, which is ſmall, but hath a Spire Steeple.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 4 l. 1 s. 8 d.

Places of Note here:

1. This Place was once Part of the Eſtate of the Cobhams of Sterborough; who were a Branch of the Cobhams of Cobham-Hall. Reginald de Cobham was Owner of this Manor, who ſate often as a Baron in Parliament, in King Edward the IIId's Reign. His Deſcendant Thomas Lord Cobham of Sterborough, died in the 11th Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign, and his only Daughter Anne carried this Eſtate to her Huſband Edward Lord Borough, who ſat in Parliament as Baron of Sterborough and Gainsborough, in the Reign of King Henry the VIIth. But his Grandſon Thomas Lord Borough ſold it to Edward Filmer, Eſq; whoſe Grandſon Sir Edward Filmer was in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, the famous Family of the Peyforers of Lyndeſtede, had ſome conſiderable Eſtate in this Pariſh; as appears by the Tower Records.

2. Meriam-Court is a Place here which Philpot p. 375. ſaith, did once belong to the Name of Hadds: But whether it were a Manor or not, he doth not mention.

WICKHAM near Fordwich, Wickham Breaux, lies towards the North Eaſt Part of Kent, by the River Stoure, about a Mile Eaſtward from Fordwich, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Lath of St. Auſtin, East Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is called St. Andrew's. 'Tis alſo in the Hundred of Downhamford, and the Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over it.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 29 l. 12 s. 6 d. per Ann.

A fair little Church, and good Remains of painted Glaſs: In it are Memorials of the Interment of Weld in 1420: Of Thomas Beak Owner of Superton, in 1559.

Place of Note here.

This Place is called Wickham Brews or Breaux from a Family of that Name, which anciently were Poſſeſſors of it.

In the 20th Year of King William the Iſt's Reign, Odo Biſhop of Bayeux, held this Place of his Brother the Conqueror; as he did alſo Trendle Park adjoining thereunto: And there was a Compoſition between this Man and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for his incloſing Land in the ſaid Park.

So that here was Land encloſed in a Park long before that at Woodſtock in Oxfordſhire, which is ſaid to be the firſt in England.

In King Henry the IIId's Reign, it was in the Poſſeſſion of the Brewſes, who were Barons of Brembre in Suſſex: And William de Brewoſa, who held it in the Reigns of King Edward the Iſt, and King Edward the IId, was ſummoned to Parliament in both thoſe Reigns. But this Name went out in King Edward the IIId's Time; for in the 4th Year of that Prince, it was in the Poſſeſſion of Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Kent. In the 20th Year of that Prince, it was held by William Longſpey: And in the 26th Year of that King, John Earl of Kent died ſeized of it: And Ten Years after, it was in the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Holland Earl of Kent: In the IId Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, Lucy, Wife of Edmund Holland Earl of Kent had it: And then it devolved to Edmund Mortimer Earl of March. Not long after this it came to be the Inheritance of the Tiptofts. But in the 10th Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign, John Tiptoft Earl of Worceſter forfeited it to the Crown, where it continued till the 1ſt Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and then was granted to Anthony Brown Viſcount Montague, whoſe Eldeſt Son ſettled it on his ſecond Son Mr. Staniſlaus Brown, whence it went by Sale to Sir Henry Palmer, Baronet, Uncle to the Preſent Sir Thomas Palmer.

In the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, the Bridge of Grave in this Pariſh being broken down, and Enquiry made upon it, before the Juſtices Itinerant, it appeared, that it was to be repaired by William de Brewys, as Owner of the Manor of Wickham Brews; and accordingly he had Orders to make it good.

Eaſt-WICKHAM, lies at the North Weſt Side of Kent, near the River Thames, about Two Miles and a half South Eaſtward from Woolwich, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Dartford, Hundred of Little and Leſnes, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath.

In the Deanery of Dartford, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; the Church is called St. Michael's. In thoſe Editions of the Valor Beneficiorum which I have, it is not rated in the King's Books.

Place of Note here:

Eaſt Wickham Manor. This Place was once Part of the Demeſnes of the great Family of the Montchenſeys: William de Montchenſey held it at his Death, in the 52d Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign; and his only Daughter and Heir Dionis, carried it in Marriage to Hugh de Vere: But he died without Iſſue, in the 7th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, and the Inheritance went to William de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, half Brother by the Mother's Side to King Henry the IIId, and who had married Joan, Siſter and Heir to the above-named William de Montchenſey: His Son and Heir Aymer de Valence, dying without Iſſue, Iſabel one of his Siſters and Coheirs carried this Eſtate to her Husband Lawrence de Haſtings, Earl of Pembroke; and his Grandſon John de Haſtings Earl of Pembroke died poſſeſs'd of it, in the 13th Year of King Richard the IId. But then Reginald Grey was found to be his Heir: And in his Family it continued till the Beginning of King Henry the VIth's Reign; and then it was paſſed away to William Lord Lovel; But his Grandſon, John Lord Lovel, alienated it in the Beginning of King Edward the IVth's Reign, to John Lord Howard, afterwards created Duke of Norfolk; and who appearing at the Battel of Boſworth, in the Cauſe of King Richard the IIId's Reign, this Eſtate was ſeized upon afterwards by King Henry the VIIth; and ſo it continued in the Royal Revenue till the laſt Year of King Edward the VIth's Reign, and then was granted to Sir Martin Bowes, who not long after ſold it to Alderman Olyff of London; whoſe only Daughter and Heir Joan, carried this Eſtate to her Husband John Leigh, Son and Heir of Nicholas Leigh of Addington, Eſq;.

His Son Sir Olyff Liegh, very much enlarged and improved the Seat by Building here; and Chriſtian the Widow of his Son Sir Francis Leigh was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

I find by the Tower Records, that in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, Plumpſtede, Bixle, Leſnes and Woolwich, were all reckoned as Appendages to this Manor of Wickham.

Weſt WICKHAM, lies at the Weſt Side of Kent, adjoining to Surrey, about Three Miles Southward from Bromley, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Bromley, Hundred of Ruxley, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. It is in the Deanery of Dartford, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter; and the Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 11 l. 10 s. 10 d. per Ann.

The Liberty of the Dutchy of Lancaſter claims over the Manor of Weſt Wickham, and over the Meſſuage and Lands called Spring Park, Old Park, Friths Wood, and Chambers Grove. Place

Place of Note here:

West Wickham Manor was once in the Poſſeſſion of the eminent Family of Huntingfield: Peter de Huntingfield of this Place was Sheriff of Kent the 11th, 12th, and 13th Years of King Edward the Iſt's Reign; and is in the Liſt of thoſe famous Kentiſh Gentlemen that aſſiſted that King at the Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland; for which he was Knighted: His Son and Heir Sir Walter de Huntingfield, in the 11th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, obtained a Charter of Free-warren for his Land here; a Market on Mondays, and a Fair yearly on the Vigil of St. Mary Magdalen. And his Son Sir John de Huntingfield paid Aid for Three Knights Fees in Kent, at the making the Black Prince Knight; and was ſummoned to ſit in Parliament as a Baron, about the End of that Prince's Reign. He died without Iſſue; and this Eſtate went by Joan, a Couſin of his, in Marriage to Copledike in the laſt Year of King Richard the IId's Reign. But in the 17th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, it was tranſplanted into the Family of Squirrie; for Thomas Squirrie died poſſeſſed of it in that Year: His Son John Squirrie dying without Children, his Siſter Dorothy, one of his Heirs, carried this Eſtate in Marriage to her Husband Richard Mervin, who not long after ſold it to Richard Scrope; who in the 7th Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign, alienated it by Fine to Ambroſe Creſeacre; who ſold it alſo to Henry Heydon, Eſq; (a), who built a very handſome Houſe upon it; from him it deſcended to the famous Sir Chriſtopher Heydon: And he about the latter End of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſold it to Sir Samuel Lennard; in whoſe Family it was in Philpot's Time; and ſtill continues in the Poſſeſſion of the Worthy Sir Samuel Lennard, Baronet.

(a) This ſeems to be a Miſtake; for Sir Edward, Heir to Sir Robert Belknap, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, ſold it, 7. K. H. 8. to Sir John Heydon, together with the Manors of Keſton, Baſton, and Southcote.

Not far from West Wickham, is a ſmall Intrenchment, which Dr. Holland, in his Notes on Camden's Britannia, ſaith, was caſt up by old Sir Chriſtopher Heydon, a Man of great Command in theſe Parts, when he trained the Countrey People. Engl. Edit. Camd. Brit. p. 187.

WILLESBOROUGH, Wivelisbergh, lies towards the South East Part of Kent, by the River Stoure, about a Mile and a half South Eaſtward from Aſhford, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, Lath of Scray, East Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway; in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Limpne: The Church is dedicated to St. Mary.

A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 16 s. 8 d. per Ann.

The Church is fair, with Two Iſles, and in it are Memorials of Ellis; and of Barry above 240 Years ſince, (this Family of Barry were in Kent in King Richard the Iſt's Reign); alſo of Hauke, of John of Gore, of Maſters; and a fair Monument of John Bois, Eſq; who married a Thompſon of Kenville in Petham.

The Liberty of St. Auſtin claims over the Manor and Parſonage of Willesborough; but that of Wye over the Burgh of Henewood.

Place of Note here:

Willesborough Manor, was once a principal Part of the Revenues of the Family of Brent, derived from Falcatius de Brent, a Man of great Fame formerly for being a valiant and skilful Soldier: And in this Name it continued for many Ages, till it came down to John Brent; and his Son leaving no Iſſue, his Siſter Margaret became his Heir, and carried this Eſtate in Marriage to John Dering of Surrenden Dering, Eſq;: But A. D. 1635. Sir Edward Dering ſold it to Robert Scott of Canterbury, Eſq;, and his Son and Heir Thomas Scott, Eſq; was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

WILMINGTON, in the Textus Roffenſis, Wilmuntune, where 'tis called a Chapel, lies towards the North West Part of Kent, about a Mile South Weſtward from Dartford, in the Bailiwick of Sutton Dartford, Hundred of Dartford and Wilmington, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, West Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery of Dartford, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter: The Church is dedicated to St. Michael; and was given to the Priory of St. Andrew's in Rocheſter, by King Henry the Iſt. Wherefore the Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims here.

Places of Note here:

1. Ruebill Manor; ſo written formerly, but now called Rowebill. This was anciently the Eſtate of an Illuſtrious Family, which were written Giſe, and from hence the Giſes or Guiſes of Hereford and Glouceſter, were originally derived, ſaith Philpot. Anſelmus de Giſe had a Charter of Freewarren for his Lands here, in the 22d Year of King Edward the Iſt. But by his Grandſon John Giſe it was ſold to Nicholas Brember, who in the 12th Year of King Richard the IId's Reign, being attainted of High Treaſon, forfeited it to the Crown; and that Prince Two Years after granted it to Adam Bamme of London; in which Name it continued till about the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was ſold to Brett; and from his Deſcendant it paſſed the ſame way to Smith, in which Name it continued in Philpot's Time.

2. Highlands. This was Part of the Revenue of the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem; and continued ſo till the general Diſſolution of all the Religious Houſes; and then was by King Henry the VIIIth, in his 35th Year granted to Sir Thomas Moile, and Sir Maurice Dennis; the latter of which ſold his Share to the former: And by Amy Daughter and Coheir of Sir Thomas Moile it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Kemp; whoſe Son Sir Thomas Kemp conveyed it to his Brother Mr. Reginald Kemp; and he to Lancelott Bathurſt, Eſq;; whoſe Son Sir Edward Bathurſt, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

3. Stonehill or Wardendale, is a Manor in this Pariſh, which now belongs to the Dean and Chapter of Rocheſter; the Houſe is called the Court Lodge, becauſe the Court of the Manor was lodged or kept there.

4. Grandiſons. This Place was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Eminent Family of the Grandiſons, before Otho de Grandiſon, who was Governor of Jerſey for Life by Grant from King Edward the Iſt, removed himſelf to Seale, in this County. His great Grandſon, Sir Thomas Grandiſon, dying without Iſſue in the 49th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, left it partly to John Northwood, who had married Agnes his Siſter and Coheir, and partly to Margaret his own Widow. After whoſe Death, ſome how or other it went into the Poſſeſſion of Richard Fitz Allen Earl of Arundell. In King Henry the VIth's Reign, it was in the Poſſeſſion of Richard Nevil Earl of Warwick; and after him, in that of George Duke of Clarence, who married Iſabell his Daughter and Coheir. But his Son Edward Plantagenent Earl of Warwick being beheaded in King Henry the VIIth's Reign, about the Affair of Perkin Warbeck, it went to his Siſter Margaret, ret, Counteſs of Salisbury, who married Sir Richard Poole: Their Son Henry Poole, was with his Mother attainted of Treaſon, in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and therefore this Place became forfeited to the Crown, and was by that Prince in his 25th Year granted to his Brother Geoffrey Poole; who not long after ſold it to Sir Thomas Kempe; and he about the 10th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, ſent it the ſame way to Mr. John Mabbe; and he to Sir Chriſtopher Hern; who about the Middle of King James the Iſt's Reign, ſold it to Cole, and he alienated it to Sir Thomas Smith, ſecond Son to Cuſtomer Smith of Weſtenhanger; and in his Deſcendant it continued in Philpot's Time.

WIMLINGSWOLD, Womenſwold, Wymingſwold, vulgo Womenjole, lies towards the Middle of the Eaſt Part of Kent, about Four Miles and an half North Eaſtward from Eleham, in the Bailiwick of Eaſtry, Hundred of Wingham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

The Church is dedicated to St. Margaret, and was anciently a Chapel to Nonington; and is now united to it, and both make one Curacy: In it is nothing remarkable but a Monument of William Netherſolle. In the Chancel are Two old Arches for Tombs, but the Inſcriptions are gone.

Place of Note here:

Netherſolle is an ancient Seat here, which in King John and King Henry the IIId's Time was the Inheritance of a Family of this Name, being then in the Poſſeſſion of Richard de Netherſolle: In King Henry the VIIIth's Reign it continued in the ſame Name, and belonged then to John Netherſolle, Eſq; who was ſuch a Favourite in that Court, that he was indulged to be covered with a Cap in the King's Preſence; and in the Deſcendants of that Name and Family the Poſſeſſion was in Philpot's Time.

WINGHAM, Wengeham, Wengam, lies towards the North Side of Kent, by the River Stoure, about Three Miles South Eaſtward from Fordwich, in the Bailiwick of Eaſtry, Hundred of Wingham, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here, and that of St. Auſtin over the Rectory of Wingham.

'Tis in the Deanery of Bridge, and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church is dedicated to St. Mary, which is fair, with a large Tower, and a Steeple covered with Lead. In it is a noble Monument of Sir Thomas Palmer, who was High Sheriff of Kent, in the 37th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and created Baronet, in the 19th Year of King James the Iſt's Reign: He married Margaret Daughter of Edmund Pooley of Suffolk, Eſq; A. D. 1625. Alſo a fair Pyramidal one of the Oxenden Family of Dean Court in this Pariſh. A Stone with this Inſcription (if I read right, for the Letters are not very plain) John de Suceſter Rector, in 1270; the moſt ancient I have met with in the County. Here was buried alſo Thomas Chicheley, Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Provoſt of Wingham, A. D. 1466. This Pariſh is not valued in the King's Books, being now accounted as a Curacy only; but formerly it was very conſiderable, giving Name to the whole Hundred in which it ſtands. A. D. 1282. it was divided into Four Pariſhes, viz. Wingham it ſelf as the Mother-Church, Aſhe, Goodneſton, and Nonington. Aſhe had to it Two Chapels, as Overland and Richborough; and Nonington had Wimingſwold. It was alſo about Five Years after made a Collegiate Church by Archbiſhop Peckham. Of which more under Wingham College in its proper Place.

In the 7th Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign, a Market was obtained to this Place by Stephen Langton, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. In the Chancel are Stalls for the 20 Prebendaries of Wingham College, but 'tis ſaid the Foundation was not for above 6.

Places of Note here:

1. Wingham Manor. This in Domeſday ſtands thus:

Wingeham eſt proprium Manerium Archiepiſcopi, & ita T. E. R. ſe defendebat pro xl. Sull. & nunc pro xxx. & v. & valet c lib. hoc quod Archiepiſcopus habet inde.

And the Archbiſhops had a good Houſe on this Manor (as well as on many other of their Manors in Kent, which I have mentioned in their proper Places.) For it appears that Archbiſhop Baldwin, who lived in the Time of King Henry the IId's Reign, lay here, when he had the Contention with his Convent of Chriſt-Church, about the Collegiate Chapel at Hackington. (See that Place.) And Two of thoſe Monks coming hither to ſerve a Proceſs upon him from Rome, though he ſubmitted to it, and allowed it good, yet he diſmounted the inſolent Meſſengers, and ſent them Home to their College on Foot.

At this Houſe alſo did Archbiſhop Winchelſey entertain and lodge King Edward the Iſt, when he came into Kent, to ſee after the Defence of the Sea-Coaſt, and to charge the Eccleſiaſticks as well as Laity, with Horſe and Armour, againſt an Invaſion.

And here it was that the ſame Prince received Information, that his Kinſman Sir Thomas Turkeville, whom he had ſent with an important Commiſſion into Gaſcoigne, had fallen into the French King's Hands; and being impriſon'd at Paris, had for fear of his Life, and to gain his Liberty, diſcovered all King Edward's Councils to the French King, and promiſed to betray him. But King Edward laid ſuch good Wait for him, that he ſeized him at his Return, had him drawn through London Streets and then hanged him.

Here alſo lay King Edward the IId, A. D. 1324. conſulting with Walter Reynolds, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and with other of the Lords and Gentlemen of Kent, about his deſign'd Voyage into France, to do Homage to the King of that Countrey: And at laſt he ſent his Son Prince Edward thither on that Errand, whom he had made Duke of Aquitain. The young Prince and his Mother went over, but the Conſequence of it loſt King Edward his Life and his Crown.

This Manor continued in the Poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, till the 29th Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was exchanged with the Crown for other Lands, where it ſtaid till about the Middle of the Reign of King James the Iſt, and then was ſold to the City of London; which City afterwards parted with it the ſame way to Sir William Cowper, Knight and Baronet, Anceſtor to the preſent William Lord Cowper Baron of Wingham, now a ſecond Time Lord High-Chancellor of Great-Britain.

2. Wingham College. The State and Conſtitution of this, you will find in the Chapter of Religious Houſes. After the Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries, the Eſtate belonging to it came to the Crown, and tarried there till King Edward the VIth, in the laſt Year of his Reign, and then then was granted with the Church impropriate and all the Parochial Tithes to Sir Henry Palmer, Knight, a Gentleman deſcended from a very ancient Family in Suſſex; and which no doubt took its Name from ſome Perſons who returned ſafe from the Holy War, and who uſually brought Palm-Branches home along with them, as a Token that they had performed the Vow of the Cruſado, and therefore were called Palmers (a). In the 7th Generation from Ralph Palmer of Suſſex, in King Edward the IId's Reign, was deſcended Sir Edward Palmer of Angmering in Suſſex, who by a Siſter and Coheir of Sir Richard Clement, of the Moat in Ightham, in this County, was the Father (b) of Three Sons, born on Three ſeveral and ſucceſſive Sundays: John the Eldeſt of the Trine, was born on Whitſunday, and was twice Sheriff of Suſſex and Surrey; viz. in the 25th and 35th Years of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign: Thoſe Counties being then in one Sheriffdom. Thomas the youngeſt was born on Sunday Sevennight after that Whitſunday, and made his Fortune at Court, under King Henry the VIIIth's and King Edward the VIth's Reigns, and being Knighted he began to build a ſpacious Houſe of Brick, in the Strand in London, which afterwards on his Attainder, coming to the Crown, was granted to Sir William Cecil, Lord Burleigh and Lord High-Treaſurer of England, who enlarged and finiſhed it. For Sir Thomas unhappily engaging with the Duke of Northumberland, in the Cauſe of the Lady Jane Gray, was by Queen Mary's Order Beheaded on Towerhill; where he had the Courage and Conſtancy to declare himſelf a Proteſtant; when the poor Duke, in Contradiction to his former Declarations, profeſs'd himſelf a Papiſt.

(b) Fuller's Worthies in Kent.

Henry the Middle Son, born the Sunday after that Whitſunday, was likewiſe advanced to the Honour of Knighthood, and tranſplanted himſelf hither to Wingham; where his Family continues to this Day.

This Gentleman followed the Camp, and that way made ſome Additions to his Paternal Fortune. He was made Maſter of the Ordinance at Guiſnes in Picardy; and had his Arm broken when old, in an Engagement with the French; and afterwards, when the Duke of Guiſe having taken Calais, ſat down before Guiſnes, this Gentleman then above 70 was there ſlain. His Son Sir Thomas Palmer was Sheriff of Kent in the 37th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and created Baronet, in the 19th Year of King James the Iſt's Reign, and lived to keep 60 Chriſtmaſſes without Intermiſſion, and with good Hoſpitality, at this Houſe. He had Three Sons, all Knighted: Sir Roger the ſecond Son was at firſt Cup-bearer to the Two Princes of Wales, Henry and Charles; and at the Coronation of the latter, was made Knight of the Bath, then Maſter of the Houſhold, and at laſt Cofferer; he died without Iſſue. Sir James the Youngeſt, by his firſt Wife, was the Head of the Family of Palmer in Buckinghamſhire; and by his ſecond Lady, the Father of Roger Earl of Caſtlemain. Sir Thomas the Eldeſt, died during his Father's Life Time; but left behind him Sir Thomas Palmer, Baronet, who was a great Sufferer for his Loyalty in King Charles the Iſt's Reign, and died under Confinement on that Account: He was ſucceeded by Sir Henry Palmer, Baronet, who was High-Sheriff of Kent in 1691, and a Gentleman of eminent Fidelity and Affection to the Conſtitution both in Church and State. But having no Iſſue, he left this Eſtate and his Honour to his Worthy Nephew Sir Thomas Palmer, Baronet, now Member of Parliament for the City of Rocheſter, as he was before Knight of the Shire for this County, in the 8th Year of the late Reign.

3. Wenderton, is an Ancient Seat here, eminent for its excellent Situation, fine Air, and good Proſpect; for many Hundreds of Years it had Owners of this Name; one of which John Wenderton, is famous in Fox's Martyrology for the Penance impoſed on him by William Courtney, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for being deficient in ſome Services due to the Archbiſhop's Manor of Wingham, A. D. 1390. But the laſt of this Name who enjoyed this Seat, was another John Wenderton, who in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, ſold it to William Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And he deviſed it at his Death to his Brother Hugh Warham; whoſe Deſcendant Hugh Warham, about the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, ſent it the ſame way to William Manwood, Eſq;; and he about the Middle of the next Reign alienated it to Vincent Denn, Eſq; who left it to his Nephew Mr. Thomas Denne of Grays-Inn; he ſettled it by Will, on his Brother Mr. John Denne of the Inner-Temple, and he left it to his Four Siſters; one of which married Mr. Roger Luckyn, who purchaſed the Remainder of the other Three Siſters. And afterwards it was ſold to Mr. Thomas Gender; in whoſe Poſſeſſion it now continues.

4. Twitham (vulgo Twittam) was once the Seat of an ancient Family of that Name: Allen de Twitham was amongſt thoſe brave Kentiſh Gentlemen who aſſiſted King Richard the Iſt, at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine: But after many Deſcents, this Place went by a Daughter Elizabeth Twitham, in Marriage to Mr. Richard Oxenden; and in Philpot's Time, it continued in the Poſſeſſion of Mr. Henry Oxenden of Brook Place.

5. Brook Place, or uſually Brook, was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the Wendertons, and continued ſo a long while; till by Jane an Heir General of that Name, it went in Marriage to Mr. Richard Oxenden, who much improved it by Building; and from him it deſcended to Mr. Henry Oxenden above-mentioned by Philpot; and continues ſtill in that Family, the preſent Poſſeſſor being the Widow of Richard Oxenden, Eſq; Barriſter of Grays-Inn.

6. Dean-Court now Dean-Houſe, is a Place here which once had Owners of the Name of Huſſey, who alſo had Poſſeſſion of Dean-Court in Weſtwell. But from this Name, Philpot ſaith, it was ſold to the Oxendens, and became their Seat; as it ſtill continues to be, being the Reſidence of Sir Henry Oxenden, Baronet, Member of Parliament for the Port of Sandwich: And a pleaſant Houſe it is, with good Gardens; and ſome very good Pieces of Painting.

7. Trapham. This was once Part of the Eſtate of the Harfleets, but is now come by Purchaſe into the Poſſeſſion of Brook Bridges, Eſq; of Goodneſton, who hath pulled down a good Part of it, and made a Farm Houſe of the Remainder.

A. D. 1710. Mr. Wood Tenant here to the Lord Cowper, finding his Plow to ſtrike againſt ſome hard Thing, dug, and found a Coffin or Cheſt of large thick Stones, joined together and covered at the Top, with another Stone: The Stones were about Four Foot in length, Two in Breadth, and Four Inches in Thickneſs; the Coffin about a Foot deep; at the Bottom were ſome black Aſhes, but nothing elſe in it. They ſearched round about, and could find no Urns, Medals, Bones, &c. The Miniſter of Aſhe told me, that juſt ſuch another was dug up at Goſhall in Aſhe Pariſh: Whether theſe rude Stone Coffins were Britiſh, as I think, or any older than the Time of the Danes, I ſhall leave the Learned to judge.

The firſt Writ of Summons directed to Robert Winchelſey, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the 23d Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, that ever was ſent (according to Dr. Brady in his Treatiſe of of Engliſh Burghs) to order the Archbiſhop to aſſemble his Clergy together, for chuſing proper Perſons to go to Parliament, is dated from Wengeham; which probably is this Place.

WITTERSHAM, Witriſcheham, lies in the Iſle of Oxney, at the South Side of Kent, by the River Rother, adjoining to Suſſex, about Three Miles Southward from Tenterden, in the Bailiwick and Lath of Shipway, Hundred of Oxney, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and Deanery of Limpne; and the Church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt; and is reputed to have been a Collegiate one: For Kilburn ſaith, there was a College near it, whoſe Time of Suppreſſion doth not appear: But its Memory ſeems to be plainly retained by the Manor-Houſe here being yet called the College of Witterſham.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here; that of the Dean and Chapter over the Manors of Witterſham and Palſter in this Pariſh.

A. D. 1032. Eadſine, Archdeacon of Canterbury, with the Conſent of King Canutus, gave Witterſham and Palſter to Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, as ſome ſay: Others ſay, that Canutus gave it to him for the Uſe of that Church.

A Fair is kept here, May 1.

In the Eaſt Window of the North Chancel (called Acton Chancel) are or were the Arms of Watton, anciently Owner of the Manor of Palſter; and in the firſt of the North Windows in this Chancel is alſo a Memorial of the ancient Family of Petleſden; and near the Entrance, one of Audian or Odiarne, once Owner of Acton, of above 180 Years ſince.

The Pariſh is a Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 15 l. 8 s. 6 d.

Places of Note here:

1. On the Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, Witterſham Manor was granted to Henry Criſpe, Eſq; whoſe Son Sir Nicholas alienated it to James Hales, Eſq; and he ſoon after to Freak, where it ſtaid till the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was by Sir Thomas Freak ſold to Sir Thomas Biſhop, whoſe Daughter Jane carried it in Marriage to Edward Alford, Eſq;, who had Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

2. Palſter is a Manor here, which had anciently Owners of the ſame Name; but they were extinct before King Edward the IIId's Time from them; about that Time it went to the Charles of Addington: But from this Family by a Daughter, it went to William Snath; and by his Daughter to Watton: In which Name it continued till King Henry the VIth's Reign, and then paſſed away to Robert Rudſton, Eſq; in whoſe Family it continued till King Charles the Iſt's Reign, and then was ſold to Sir Edward Henden, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, who dying without Iſſue, gave it to his Nephew Sir John Henden; whoſe Son Edward Henden, Eſq; was in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

3. Owlye, anciently written Ovely, is another Manor here, which had alſo of old Owners of this Name; but before the Reign of King Richard the IId, gave Place to the Odiarnes: How long it ſtaid here, doth not diſcover it ſelf; but in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, it was got into the Poſſeſſion of the Mayneys of Biddenden; and there ſtaid till in King Charles the Iſt's Time, it was by Sir John Mayney of Linton, Knight and Baronet, ſold to Peter Ricaut, Eſq; who parted with it the ſame way to Mr. Menell of London, in whoſe Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time.

WOLDHAM, Uldeham: The Place on the Down free from Wood; for ſo Wold ſignifies in Oppoſition to Weald:

Lies towards the North Part of Kent, by the River Medway, about Two Miles and an half South Weſtward from Rocheſter, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Larkfield, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. In the Deanery and Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 14 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann.

The Church which is ſmall and mean, with a low Tower, is dedicated to All-Saints. In it are Memorials of the Interment of William Bewley, in 1611: Of Roger Monox, in 1602, who at 23 Years of Age, was famous for his Skill in Latin, French, Italian, and Spaniſh; in all which Languages there are Motto's round his Tomb. Memorials alſo of Seller. A Stone Stair-Caſe in the Church, which formerly led up to a Rood-loft.

Formerly there was a Spire-Steeple here; and Stephen Slegg, who was Sheriff of Kent, in the 27th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, left by his Will 100 Marks, to be diſburſed on the Church and Steeple's Repairs.

The Liberty of the Biſhop of Rocheſter claims here, becauſe Woldham was very early given to the Priory of St. Andrew's, and confirmed by King Henry the Iſt. The firſt Donor was King Ethelbert, A. D. 751. but ſome of his Succeſſors took it away from the Church again: But at length one Ælfſtane Heahſtanine bought it of King Eadmund at the Price of 1200 Marks of Gold, and 30 Pounds in Silver. And his Son Ælfegus paid the greateſt Part of the Money: And King Eadred, Edmond's Succeſſor, confirmed to Ælfſtane and Ælphege the Poſſeſſion of this Eſtate. Ælphege alſo, to appeaſe his Brother Ælfric for ſo large a Donation to the Church, gave him Land at Earith, Cray, Ainsford, and even at Woldham, for his Life-time; and after his Brother's Death Ælphege took all into Poſſeſſion again, and gave his Nephew Eadric, Ælfric's Son, Earith, Crey, and Woldham, reſerving Ainsford. This Eadrick died alſo before him, and then he re-aſſumed all to himſelf. And Eadric leaving a Wife only and no Children, he gave her Crey. Some time after this, finding himſelf ill, he ſent for Dunſtan, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and before him made his Will, giving one Third of his Eſtate to the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury; another to That of Rocheſter, and the reſt to his Wife. In proceſs of Time, one Leoffuna, who married Eadric's Widow, endeavoured to overthrow this Will. But as I have mentioned already in Earith, where the Matter was heard, it remained good; and Woldham continued in the Church of Rocheſter. The full Proceſs of this Matter is in our Textus Roffenſis, f. 147. and from thence copied by Dr. Hicks in his Diſſertatio Epiſtolaris, p. 59.

In the Textus, f. 152, is a Grant of Woldham and Littlebrook to the Priory of Rocheſter, by King Ethelred, and conſigned to Godwin Biſhop of Rocheſter, of Six Manſæ, Sulingæ, or Plow-Lands; and one Plow-Land at Littlebrook. The Boundings are in Saxon, at the End of the Grant, which is dated, A. D. 995. But one would think from what appears in that Manuſcript, f. 172, that Woldham had been in a peculiar Manner appropriated to the Biſhop's Uſe; for 'tis there ſaid, That becauſe Fracenham was too far off for the Monks to viſit it, therefore Biſhop Gundulf gave the Convent Woldham in Exchange for it.

In

In Domeſday Book 'tis ſaid, Woldham ſe defendebat T. E. R. pro vj. ſolinis, & nunc pro iij. & eſt appretiatum xiij. libr.

I find by the Textus Roffenſis, that anciently there were reckoned two Woldhams; the Greater, and the Leſſer: The former of which is in the Cuſtumale called Woldham Monachorum.

And in the Cuſtumale Roffenſe, there is frequent mention made of a Water-Mill at Woldham: And the Cuſtom was, once a Year, every Houſe was obliged to ſend one Man for a Day, to clear the Paſſage-Ditch and Mill-Pond, that the Water might come well to turn the Mill. And there were two particular Acres of Land which paid 12 d. a-piece Annual Rent. The Occupiers of which were to clean the Ditch that led from the River to the Mill-pond. In the Cuſtumale above-mentioned is a long and particular Account of the Services and Cuſtoms of the Tenants, (p. 20.)

And of the whole Land, which was reckoned at 10 Juga, 6 Juga and an half were of one Service, and 3 and an half of another, which was leſs ſervile; for the Tenants did pay a Rent in Money, and were only obliged beſides to make ſo much Malt, and to deliver it at the College in Rocheſter, whereas the Tenants of the 6 and an half Juga, were obliged to almoſt all Kinds of Labour.

In the 7th Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, the Biſhop of Rocheſter claimed the Privilege of a Manor here by Charter from King Henry the Iſt, and was allowed it.

Places of Note here:

1. Woldham Manor. This ſtaid in the Priory of Rocheſter, till the general Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries, and then was ſettled on the new Cathedral Church, which ſtill enjoys it.

2. Rings. This is a ſmall Manor, but yet extends partly into St. Margaret's Pariſh, and was eminent formerly for being ſome Part of it the Eſtate of the Noble Family of Coſington of Coſington in Aylesford; and the other Part of it belonged to the Name of Carter: From Coſington the firſt Part went by Sale to Wherne of Wherne's Place in Cuckſton; and Carter alienated his to Lawrence, who not long after ſold it to Hadds of Meriam Court in Wycheling; from him it went ſoon the ſame way to Thomas Roydon of Roydon Court in Peckham; who was one of thoſe who in the 31ſt Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, got an Act of Parliament to alter the Tenure of their Lands from Gavelkind to Knights Service. From Roydon it was ſold to Brockhull of Aldington Septvans in Thurnham; and Henry Brockhull alienated it to Sir John Lewſon, whoſe Son Sir Richard Lewſon ſold it to John Marſham, Eſq; originally extracted from the Marſhams of Norfolk, and equally eminent for his learned Works; as the Preface to the Monaſticon Anglicanum; his accurate Diſcourſes upon the Prophet Daniel, &c. And I ſuppoſe Wborne's Part went with his other Eſtate to Lewſon, and ſo alſo into the Marſham Family; and is now conſequently with Starkeys, in the Poſſeſſion of the Right Honourable the Lord Romney.

3. Starkeys is a Place in Woldham, which anciently went by another Name, viz. Little Woldham: And though without any Manſion-Houſe on it, had the Eſteem of a Manor. In the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, it was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir John Buckland; and afterwards by Purchaſe went into the Name of Newman; but ſtaid there not above a Deſcent or two, before it was ſold by Henry Newman to Humphrey Starkey, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, in King Henry the VIIth's Reign: And though it was called Starkeys from him, yet it ſtaid not long in the Family, before it was ſold to Sir John Rainsford, who had a good Eſtate about Looſe and the Two Peckhams: From this Name it went by Sale into that of Lambe; and thence to Sir John Lewſon, Eſq; whoſe Son Sir Richard Lewſon parted with it to John Marſham, Eſq; above-mentioned.

At this Place of Starkeys I ſaw the Remainder of a pretty large Chapel.

4. Beaulies Court is a Place here which anciently was written Sellers, and gave Name to a Family ſo called. It appears by the Book of Aid, that John at Seller held this Place in Service of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. Their Arms were in a Window in Woldham Church, and were Argent a Saltier between 4 Mullets Gules, which is now quartered by Beauly: For by a Female Heir Sellers went in Marriage to one of that Name; and they changed the Name of the Houſe to Beaulies Court: And in Thomas Beauly, Merchant of London, a Deſcendant of this Family, was the Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time. But this Houſe is now called, Halls Place, and is in the Poſſeſſion of Mr. ——— Mauley: And in the Windows here I ſaw remaining the above-named Arms of Seller.

WOODE, otherwiſe Woodchurch, St. Nicholas at Wood; lies at the North Side of Kent, near the Sea, in the Iſle of Thanet, about Five Miles Northward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices of the Town and Port of Dover, (of which it is a Member), and the Liberties thereof, and of the Cinque Ports claim over it.

This Pariſh was in the Deanery of Weſtbere, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: But the Church hath been ſome time demoliſhed, and the Pariſh laid to Birchington. It was a Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 15 l. 19 s. 7 d. per Ann. And the Church was dedicated to St. Nicholas. See Birchington.

This Church was ſtanding when Symondſon's Map of Kent was made, and had a Spire Steeple: And though the Pariſh be joined to Birchington, it continues diſtinct as to all Kinds of Taxations.

A Controverſy ariſing in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, between the Juſtices of the County and this Pariſh, as to its Aſſeſſment, &c. the King ended it by uniting Woode by his Letters-Patents to Dover.

The Principal Street in Woode is called Acoll, and lies between Queker and Cleves, a little on the Left Hand, as you go from Margate to Monkton.

As this Place took its Name from a Wood, which formerly was in being here; ſo no doubt there was a large Quantity of Wood-Land formerly in the Iſland of Thanet, though there be ſo little now; as indeed the Names of many Places do ſtill teſtify. But no doubt it was cleared and grubbed up, as ſoon as the Inhabitants diſcovered the much greater Advantage which would ariſe from ſowing Corn here; all Kinds of which almoſt thrive well, and abound all over the Iſland.

WOODCHURCH, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles Eaſtward from Tenterden, in the Bailiwick of the Seven Hundreds, Hundred of Blackborne, Lath of Scray, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and lower Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

'Tis in the Deanery of Limpne, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is called All-Saints. A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 26 l. 13 s. 4 d. per Ann.

The Liberty of Wye claims over the Den of Plurenden in this Pariſh: And all of it that is in the Manor of Appledore is in the Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury.

The South Chancel of the Church was founded by the Family of Herlackinden, whoſe ancient Seat is in this Pariſh, and called Old Herlackinden. And in it are many of that ancient Family interred; viz. William Herlackinden, Eſq; in the Year 1081: Of Margaret Herlackinden, Daughter and Heir of Guy Ellis, 1479; Of Roger Herlackinden, Eſq; in 1523. As is alſo Sir Edward Waterhouſe: And in the Eaſt Window is or was the Arms of Ellis.

In the North Wall of the great Chancel is a Monument of Thomas Herlackinden, Eſq; A. D. 1554. In the Eaſt Window of the North Chancel are or were ſeveral Effigies of the Clerks; and one in the North Window of William Harey.

Places of Note here:

1. Woodchurch was once the Habitation of a Family of this Name of good Antiquity. Roger de Woodchurch is often mentioned in the old dateleſs Deeds and Evidences relating to this Place; and was Grandfather to that Sir Simon de Woodchurch, who was Knighted by King Edward the Iſt, at the Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, where his Bravery got him the Name of Malleus Scottorum. He married Suſan, Daughter of Henry le Clerk of Munſidde; and had with her ſo great an Eſtate, as that he changed his Name for hers; and the Family ever after wrote themſelves Clerk, who continued here till about the Year 1594, and then Humphrey Clerk, Eſq; ſold it to Walter Herlackinden, Eſq;; by whoſe Daughter and Heir (Deborah) it went to Sir Edward Hales, Baronet; and his Grandſon of the ſame Name was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

2. Plurinden is a Branch of that Eſtate which once belonged to the ancient Family of Engeham; in ſome old Deeds written Edingham, in others Hengham; and who appear to have been Reſident here, as long ago as our firſt King Edward: But Vincent Engham of this Family, ſold this Eſtate in Queen Elizabeth's Reign to Roger Twiſden, Eſq; Grandfather of that Sir Roger Twiſden, Baronet who had Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

3. Townland is another Manor here, which had Owners of this Name in King Henry the IIId's Time: And one of this Family, John de Townland, was a great Benefactor to the Priory of Leeds; and among other Things left them this Manor at his Deceaſe, in the 47th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign. After the Diſſolution of the Abbeys, this Eſtate was granted to Thomas Lord Cromwell; but on his Attainder, in the 32d Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, it came to the Crown again; and about Three Years after, was granted to Sir Thomas Moile, Chancellor of the Augmentation Court. In Two Years Time he ſold it to Goodwin and Acos; who joined in another Conveyance to Lucas: Hence in the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, it went the ſame way to Godfrey; and then again by Sale to Mary Guldeford; and after that again, from her to Richard Guldeford; and at laſt from him to John Shelly of Michelgrove in Suſſex; in whoſe Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

4. Henberſt was once the Reſidence of a Branch of the Henberſts of Staplehurſt; and who ſometimes wrote themſelves Engherſt; from an early Date, this Name held it here till King Henry the VIIth's Reign, and then Sir Thomas Hengherſt leaving only a Daughter, ſhe carried it to her Husband Mr. Humphrey Wiſe; by whoſe only Daughter it went alſo the ſame way to Mr. Robert Maſters; and his great Grandſon was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time, and lived at Canterbury.

5. Henden is a Place here which anciently was in the Poſſeſſion of the Lord Burwaſh or Burgherſt: Bartholomew Lord Burgherſt had a Charter of Freewarren for it in the 18th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign: From this Family it went to the Capells of Capell-Court in Ivie-Church; and Richard Capell died poſſeſs'd of it in the 15th Year of King Richard the IId's Reign: But hence, after ſome Generations, it went by a Daughter to Herlackinden; and thence by another Daughter of that Name, to Sir Edward Hales, Baronet; and in his Grandſon's Poſſeſſion (Sir Edward Hales of Tunſtal) it remained in Philpot's Time.

6. Herlackinden is a Burgh in this Pariſh, which for many Hundred Years was the Inheritance of a Family of this Name; and one of which, Kilburn ſaith, was buried in the South Chancel, A. D. 1081. Philpot endeavours to account for the modern Shape of the Date, by ſuppoſing that a former one, in Saxon or ſuch early Letters, was inſcribed on the Tomb, and the Preſent one ſupplied about King Henry the IVth or Vth's Reigns. This Burgh was in the Poſſeſſion of Thomas Herlackinden, Eſq; in Philpot's Time.

7. Engham, or Edingham, was anciently the Seat of a Family of this Name, before they went to Singletons in Great Chart; and they continued in Poſſeſſion of this Place from a very early Date, till about Queen Elizabeth's Time; but then it was ſold to Baker, and in that Name continued in Philpot's Time.

WODENSBOROUGH; or as 'tis now called Winsborow, lies at the Eaſt Side of Kent, about a Mile and an half South Weſtward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick of Eaſtry, Lath of St. Auſtin, and Eaſt Diviſion of the County.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claims here.

Part of it, that is, the Lands which were once Part of the Manor of Boxley, is within the Diviſion of the Juſtices of the Town and Port of Sandwich; and the Liberties thereof, and of the Cinque Ports, and St. Auſtin, claim over it; but the reſt is in the Hundred of Eaſtry, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of St. Auſtin.

'Tis in the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

A Vicarage, and valued in the King's Books at 10*l.* 0*s.* 10*d. per Ann.*

The Church ſtands in the Hundred of Eaſtry; and is called St. Mary's. In which are Memorials of the Interment of John Paramour, in the Year 1513: Of Nicholas Heyre, in 1528.

Verſtegan thinks that this Place took its Name from Woden the famous Saxon Deity; (to whoſe Honour our Wedneſday is dedicated.) And I agree with him in the ſame Opinion; and can't but think, That the high Mount by the Churchyard was the very Place where that Idol was worſhipped. See the Figure of him from Verſtegan's Book, called the Reſtitution of decayed Intelligence. Here Place the Figure.

Woden was the Saxons God of Battel, as Mars was of the Romans.

They tell you that a moſt valiant and victorious Prince among them, was very anciently of this Name, and after his Death was worſhipped as a Deity: Woden in their Language ſignifies Fierce or Furious (hence our old word Wood): And Bede tells us, That the great Grandfather of Hengiſt, the firſt Saxon Commander that came over hither in King Vortiger's Time, had this Name of Woden: And ſome will have the God Woden to be call'd ſo from him: But the Deity is

is, I hope, of a much longer ſtanding than that Prince: But of this more when I come to ſpeak of the Origin of the Saxons that invaded England.

Places of Note here:

1. Shelving, very anciently was the Eſtate of the Houghams of Hougham by Dover; as ancient a Family as any in theſe Parts: Robert de Hougham attended King Richard the Iſt to the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine: And Sir Robert his Son died poſſeſs'd of this Manor, in the 2d Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign. But his Son Robert left only Two Daughters; of which Benedicta Hougham marrying one John Shelving, carried this Eſtate to him, which then began to be called Shelving, after his Name. And he built the Seat here. From Shelving one Moiety of this Eſtate went by Sale to St. Leger; and then both Shelving and he joined in a Conveyance to Dynely: From hence it was ſold to White, and by him to Knight; who parted with it the ſame way to Mr. Soloman Hougham of Sandwich, whoſe Son Mr. Richard Hougham was Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time: And ſo Shelving came back to the Houghams again; for Solomon Hougham was a direct Deſcendant from the ancient Family of the Houghams.

2. Ringleton: This was anciently the Inheritance of Perot: Thomas Perot being poſſeſs'd of it at his Death, in the 4th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign: At laſt a Daughter of this Family transferred the Property to her Husband Mr. William Langley; and here Ringleton continued for ſeveral Generations; till at laſt it was ſold to Mr. John White, a Merchant of the Staple, and a great Benefactor to the City of Canterbury: His Succeſſor ſold it to Mr. Butler of Heronden in Eaſtry; from which Name it went the ſame way to one Mr. Neame; whoſe Son Daniel Neame ſold it to Mr. Spencer of Sandwich: But Nicholas Spencer his Succeſſor, dying without Iſſue, it went by his Siſter in Marriage to Mr. Hughs; deſcended from the Hughs of Middleton Stoney in Oxfordſhire; a Branch of the Family of Hughs in North-Wales: And in this Name the Eſtate continued till a Daughter carried it to —— Champneys of Bexley, Eſq;.

3. Upper Hamwold, was once the Eſtate of the Greenſhields; whoſe principal Reſidence was at Greenſhield in Whitſtaple, corruptly called Grimgill. (See Whitſtaple): And Henry Greenſhields who died in the 22d Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign, was by his Will a moſt munificent Benefactor to the then poor and neceſſitous People of that Town of Sandwich. After the Greenſhields were extinct here, the Ellis's had this Place in Poſſeſſion; but I know not whether by Purchaſe or Marriage: They ſold it to Francis; and thence again it went by Sale to Wilſon; and from him, after the ſame way, it paſſed to Parboe; whoſe Widow held it in Jointure in Philpot's Time.

4. Grove, and 5. Upper Hamwold, are two little Manors, which in the 32d Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, were in the Poſſeſſion of Peter de Goldsburgh; but about the latter End of King Richard the IId's Reign, they were both ſold to Langley of Knowlton; from whence about the latter End of King Henry the VIth's Reign, they went the ſame way to Sir John White of Canterbury, Merchant of the Staple, who died poſſeſſed of them in the 9th Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign. After this Family it came into the Poſſeſſion of that of Stoke: And one of that Name about the latter End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, ſold them to Nicholas Mois, Gent. Hence they went to Everard; and from thence to James; in one of which Name they remained in Philpot's Time.

6. Poltmans or Poultons, (as 'tis vulgarly called) was anciently the Seat of a Family of this Name, and was a Caſtellated and Moated Houſe; but about the 15th Year of King Richard the IId's Reign, Peter Poltman ſold it to Langley of Knowlton; in which Family it continued till the latter End of King Henry the VIth's Reign, and then was ſold to Sir John White of Canterbury, who order'd it, by Will, to be ſold; (for ſome Pious and Charitable Uſes); and accordingly it was purchaſed by —— Boteler of Heronden in Eaſtry; from whence it came to be ſold to Benskin, and from him it paſſed the ſame way to Mr. William Barne of London; and is now come to his Nephew Mr. William Barne.

The Road between Aſhe and this Place in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, was called Lovekeſtrete.

In Ringleton Field in this Pariſh, about Five Years ago was found a fine Gold Coin, weighing about 12 Shillings, with a Loop of the ſame Piece to hang it by. And with this Figure and Inſcription: On the Fore-Side was the Buſt of a Young Man in Armour, with an Helmet on his Head, and a Spear on his Right Shoulder. The Reverſe hath a Victory, with a long Sword in her Hand, and the Point turned down. See the Figure.

N. B. 'Tis now in the Hands of John Full of Wodensburgh.

And Mr. Lovell, the Miniſter of this Pariſh, ſhewed me two very fine and ſharply ſtamp'd Gold Coins of Arcadius, and Honorius, which were found hereabouts: I think at Richborough.

WOOLWICH, Wolewich, Wolnewich, lies at the North Weſt Part of Kent, adjoining to the River Thames, about Five Miles and an half Northward from Bromley, in the Bailiwick of Sutton-Bromley, Hundred of Blackheath, Lath of Sutton-at-Hone, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and upper one of Juſtices in that Lath. Part of it lies on the other Side of the River, on the Eſſex Shore, but is in Kent.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 7 l. 12 s. 5 d. per Ann.

'Tis in the Deanery of Dartford, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter. The Church is dedicated to St. Mary: And was given to St. Andrew's in Rocheſter, by King Henry the Iſt (a). In it one William Prene, Rector of this Pariſh, founded a Chapel, and gave the Belfrey to it, and was buried there above 240 Years ago.

(a) Text. Roffenſ. f. 186. b.

In this Church alſo was a Memorial of the Interment of Colin above 300 Years ſince. John Colin died in 1397; William Prene in 1464. But that is gone, and nothing elſe now remarkable.

A Market is kept here on Fridays.

In this Pariſh is one of the Famous Docks to build Ships in for the Royal Navy of Great-Britain: Of which in its proper Place.

Places of Note here:

Woolwich was in the Beginning of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, in the Poſſeſſion of Gilbert de Mariſco (ſo called from his Eſtate being in the Marſhes) and he held this under the Notion of half a Knight's Fee of Warren de Monchenſie Baron of Swanſcombe. In the 17th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, it was owned by Sabina de Windleſor; and ſhe held it of the aforeſaid Barony. After her it came to the Poſſeſſion of John de Pultney; who in King Edward the IIId's Time ſold it to William Chichley, Kinſman to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury of that Name; whoſe Son John leaving only one Daughter Agnes, ſhe carried this, and a great deal of more Land hereabouts, to her Husband John Tatterſhall. About the End of King Edward the IVth's Reign, this Eſtate was alienated from this Name to that of Boughton; from thence it went the ſame way to Heywood; and from thence to Sir Nicholas Gilbourne, whoſe Son Henry Gilbourne, Eſq; was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

It appears by Pat. 17. of King Edward the IId, That a Commiſſion was granted to repair a great Breach, which the Thames had made into the Marſhes, between Greenwich and Woolwich.

I find by the Tower Records, that in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt, Iſabella de Veſcy claimed the Privileges of a Manor at Woolwich; perhaps ſhe married Gilbert de Mariſco, abovementioned.

In another Place, I find Woolwich reckoned as Part of the Manor of Wickham, in the ſame Reign.

Here is a neat Alms-Houſe for poor Widows, with an high Brick Turret overlooking the Thames.

On the Warren, or as 'tis now called Woolwich Green, the Officers of the Ordnance uſually prove and try their new caſt Guns, Mortars, &c.

This Pariſh hath 500 Acres of Land, and ſome few Houſes (ſaith an old Manuſcript which I have ſeen) on the Eſſex Side of the Thames; and there was alſo a Chapel of Eaſe.

WOOTTON, Wotton, Wodeton, Woditon, lies towards the Middle of the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Three Miles North Eaſtward from Eleham, in the Hundred of Kinghamford, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

Part of it is in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, and Part in that of Eaſtry. 'Tis in the Deanery of Eleham, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. The Church ſtands in the Bailiwick of Bridge and Petham, and is called St. Martins.

A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 8 l. 10 s. 4 d. per Ann.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop and Dean of Canterbury both claim here.

A. D. 687. King Cedwald, with his Wife Keneldritha, gave this Place to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Theodorus; and Archbiſhop Ælpheg, A. D. 1010. adjoined it to the Convent of Chriſt-Church there.

Places of Note here:

1. Gedding, which was given to Theodore, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Priory of Chriſt-Church, by King Cedwald and Keneldrith his Queen A. D. 687; and was appointed for the Maintenance of the Sacriſt; which was then ſo conſiderable an Office, that he had 11 others under him. Vid. Philpot, p 368.

On the General Suppreſſion King Henry the VIIIth granted it to Mr. Edward Foch of Hells-Court in this Pariſh: And in that Name it ſtill continued in Philpot's Time.

2. Hells, is a Place here, which had for its Owners till King Henry the IVth's Reign, the Hells of Hells-Court in Aſhe by Sandwich; but then it went into the Poſſeſſion of the Merryweathers; from whence about the latter End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, by a Daughter it went to the Fochs, and was in their Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time.

3. Wickham Buſhes is another Manor here, which was anciently the Inheritance of the Guldfords: Henry de Guldford paid Aid for it, at making the Black Prince Knight: But in a Deſcent or Two after this, it came into the Family of Diggs of Diggs-Court in Berham; and here it ſtaid till King James the Iſt's Reign, and then was ſold to Coppen, in whoſe Family it was in Philpot's Time.

WORDE, Worth, lies at the Eaſt End of Kent, near the Sea, about a Mile Southward from Sandwich, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eaſtry, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath: In the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury: The Church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: 'Tis ſmall and mean; and hath no Monuments but an Altar-Tomb, over John Philpot, Yeoman. 'Tis reckoned only as a Chapel, and ſo not valued in the King's Books.

The Liberty of the Dean of Canterbury claims over that Part of the Pariſh, which is in the Manor of Lyde-Court: That Manor being given to that Church, by King Henry the VIIIth, in the 33d Year of his Reign.

The Situation of this Place is low and unhealthy.

Places of Note here.

1. Sandown is a Manor in this Pariſh, which in King Henry the IIId's Reign belonged to the Family of Perot: And Thomas de Perot died poſſeſſed of it in the 4th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, and then it had the Privileges of Infangtheff, Outfangtheff, Toll and Team, Sac and Soc, Tumbrell and Pillory, &c. But it ſtaid here but a little while, and then by a Female Heir paſſed to Langley of Warwickſhire, who by marrying into the Family of Peyton, brought it to that Family, ſo that Sir Robert Peyton of Peyton-Hall, about the Beginning of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, entred upon it as Heir at Law to Edward Langley, of Knowlton; and he aſſigned it to his Second Son Mr. John Peyton, whoſe Deſcendant Sir Thomas Peyton ſold it to Sir John Narborough, by whoſe only Daughter it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Daeth, as Knowlton did; which ſee.

One Branch of this Family of Peyton, from a Manor in Suſſex of that Name, were called Ufford; and ſome of them were Earls of Suffolk, and bore that Name of Ufford; but with the ſame Arms as the other Peytons.

2. Lyde-Court (written Hlyden in old Records) is a Manor here, which at the Requeſt of Janbert, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was by King Offa, An. 874, given to the Church of Canterbury, as 3 Sullings or Plow-Lands: And here it ſtaid till the General Suppreſſion of the Abbeys; and then continued in the Crown till Queen Elizabeth in the Beginning of her Reign granted it to William Lovelace, Eſq; Serjeant at Law, whoſe Son Sir William, ſold it to Sir John Smith, Grandfather to Philip Viſcount Strangford, the Poſſeſſor of it in Philpot's Time.

There is an eminent Farm here, called Felderland, which belongs to the Harveys of Combe.

WORMSELL, lies near the Middle of Kent, about Three Miles and an half North Weſtward from Lenham, in the Bailiwick and Hundred of Eyehorne, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and Eaſt Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath.

The Liberty of St. Auſtin claims here.

'Tis in the Deanery of Sutton and Dioceſe of Canterbury, and the Church is dedicated to St. Giles. 'Tis a very ſmall Pariſh: A Rectory, and valued in the King's Books at 10 l. per Ann.

In the Church are Memorials of the Interment of ſome of the Family of Tildens; and in the Church-yard Two or Three Tombs of the Thatchers; and of the Woods of Northwood in this Pariſh.

Wormſell was always eſteemed as an Appendage to the Manor of Boughton Malherbe; and hath had the ſame Proprietaries; viz. Gatton, Dene, Corbie, Corbie, and at laſt the Wottons; where it continued till about the End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was ſold to Dynely; and thence it paſſed the ſame way to Sydley; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Charles Sydley, Baronet.

WROTHAM, Wroteham, from the Plenty of Worts or Plants hereabouts: In Domeſday Book, Broteham:

Lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Part of Kent, about Three Miles and an half Weſtward from Weſt Malling, in the Bailiwick of Hoo, Hundred of Wrotham, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and South one of Juſtices in that Lath. 'Tis in the Deanery of Shoreham, and ſo a Peculiar to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter. The Rectory with the Chapel of Stanſted annexed, is valued in the King's Books at 50 l. 8 s. per Ann. And the Vicarage at 22 l. 5 s. 10 d. per Ann. The Rectory was formerly impropriated and leaſed out, by the Archbiſhops of Canterbury; but the late Excellent Prelate Thomas, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, among a great many other good Things which he was continually doing, let the Leaſe run entirely out, and then annexed the great Tithes to the Vicarage, by which means Wrotham is now become one of the beſt Livings in Kent.

The Church is large, with a good Tower. In the Chancel are 16 Stalls, like thoſe in a Collegiate Church; which perhaps were made for the Clergy attending on the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, when he reſided here. Here is a Veſtry with a Chimney in it. In the Churchyard near the Church Door, were formerly Two Monuments of Martin Peckham, Eſq;, and of his Wife Margery, Daughter of — Yaldham, Lord of the Manor of Yaldham, a great Heireſs: And in the Church are ſeveral Memorials of the Interment of others of that Name; ſome of them 200 Years ago. And of one Richard James, in 1501, a great Benefactor to the Church; and whom the People will have to have been a Blackſmith, becauſe of the Figure of a Pair of Pinchers upon his Tomb: As alſo of Stratton Gawge and Burgony, very ancient.

The Liberty of Wrotham claims here; and that of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury over the Manor of Wrotham.

A Market is kept here on Tueſdays, which was obtained by Walter Reynolds, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the 8th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign. And a Fair on St. George's Day, viz. April 23. to which Saint probably the Church was dedicated.

This Pariſh ought anciently to have contributed towards the Repair of the Fifth Arch or Pere of Rocheſter-Bridge.

Here was anciently a Manſion Houſe belonging to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury; but about 350 Years ago, Simon Iſlip pulled it down, and carried the Materials to Maidſtone, to finiſh the Palace there which his Predeceſſor John Ufford had begun; and towards which he obtained a Licenſe from the Pope, to levy the Tenths throughout his whole Province.

At this Houſe Archbiſhop Richard, Becket's immediate Succeſſor, had ſuch a terrible Dream, that the Fright conſequential thereupon, coſt him his Life, as you will find at large in another Place.

Places of Note here:

1. Wrotham Manor: Of this there is the following Account in Domeſday Book.

Wrotebam eſt Manerium Archiepiſcopi & T. E. R. ſe defendebat pro viij. Sull. & eſt appretiatum xxiv. lib. & tamen ille qui tenet reddit inde de firmâ xxxv. lib.

And in the Poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury it continued till the 29th Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was exchanged with the Crown by Thomas Cranmer for other Lands. And it continued there till the 6th Year of King Edward the VIth's Reign, and then was granted to Sir William Maſon, who partly ſold it, and partly gave it in Dower with his Daughter, married to Robert Bing, Eſq;, whoſe Deſcendant, Mr. John Bing ſold all his Title and Intereſt here to William James of Ightham, Eſq;, deſcended from an ancient Family called Halſtrecht, near Utrecht in the Low Countries: And this Manor with all the Demeſnes thereof is now in the Poſſeſſion of the Worthy William James, Eſq; Grandſon of William James, Eſq; abovementioned.

As to whoſe Arms, Philpot ſhews that our great Camden made a Miſtake; for he repreſents them as Argent a Chevron between 3 Mill Rinds Sable: Whereas the true Arms of Halſtrecht and James he ſaith are, Argent two Barrs crenelle Gules, in Chief 3 Pheons Sable; but of late Years the Pheons have been omitted.

The Manor and Pariſh of Wrotham are very large, as comprehending almoſt the whole Hundred. There are 6 Villa's or diſtinct Borſholderſhips within this Manor; viz. Wrotham Town, Stanſtede, Nepane, Wingfield, Roughway, and Hale. The Borſholders of which, as alſo the Conſtables for the Upper and Lower Diviſion of the Hundred are all of them Annually choſen at the Court-Leet of the ſaid Manor. Beſides which, the Borſholders for the Boroughs of Ightham and Shepebourn are bound to pay Suit and Service at the ſeveral Leets of the ſaid Manor. To which Manor belong all Royal Franchiſes, as being a Liberty within it ſelf; and the Lord hath all Deodands, Fellons Goods, Waifs, Strays, Treaſure Trove, &c.

Not many Years ſince, in the Time of Sir Demetrius James, by the Earth being caſt up by a Mole, and after by Digging, was diſcovered a conſiderable Quantity of Britiſh Silver Coins, of the ſame Sort with ſome of thoſe deſcribed by Mr. Camden, which were ſeized by the then Lord of the Manor.

And within this few Years, within the Time of this preſent Lord of the Manor, upon the grubbing up of a Tree, in the Place called the Camps in Wrotham, great Numbers of ſmall ſolid Pieces of Braſs were found; which were conjectured to be the Pieces of Weapons or Armour of ſome Principal Military Officer there buried, and broken in that Manner at his Interment: As Mr. Puckle, Bariſter at Law, of the Middle Temple, writes me word, who married the preſent Mr. James's Siſter.

2. Wingfield, is a Manor here which anciently had Proprietors of the Name of Quintin: And Gilbert Quintin and Joan his Wife, did by Fine levied in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, alienate it to Reginald Peckham; and his Deſcendant James Peckham, about the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, ſold it to Nicholas Miller of Horſenells Crouch, Eſq;, who dying without Iſſue, left it by Will to his Nephew Sir Nicholas Miller: And in Philpot's Time it was in the Poſſeſſion of Humphrey Miller, Eſq;; but now is the Inheritance of a Female Heireſs of the Name of Miller.

3. Barſted, is another Manor here, which came to Reginald Peckham, by the ſole Daughter and Heir of Sir Thomas Morant: And in Philpot's Time was in the ſame Name, being the Poſſeſſion of Reginald Peckham of Yaldham, Eſq;; But I hear 'tis lately ſold to one St. Loe.

4. Yald-

4. Yaldham, Ealdham, Aldham, is a Seat of conſiderable Note in this Pariſh; and had anciently Poſſeſſors of its own Name; of whom Thomas de Aldham was with King Richard the Iſt, at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine: His Deſcendant was Sir Thomas de Aldham, one of whoſe Daughters and Coheirs, Margery, carried it in Marriage to Martin de Peckham, Son of John de Peckham, who alſo was at the ſame Siege. And from him it deſcended in the ſame Name, till it came down to Reginald Peckham, Eſq; the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time: But I hear it is now alſo ſold to St. Loe.

5. Ford, is a Place here, which was a good while the Inheritance of Clerk, written in old Deeds le Clerk: John Son of John Clerk was ſecond Baron of the Exchequer in the Beginning of King Henry the VIth's Reign; from him deſcended to Sir William Clerk, who was killed in the late Civil Wars on the King's Side, at the Battel of Cropready-Bridge: His Lady had it in Poſſeſſion in Philpot's Time, but ſince 'tis ſold to John Know, Gent.

6. Sore Manor in Plaxtoole, which was formerly a Burgh belonging to Wrotham, but is now a Pariſh by it ſelf, (ſee Plaxtoole) and is ſpoken of there, though wrong placed here by Philpot.

7. Horſenells Crouch is mentioned by Philpot, as the Seat of Nicholas Miller, Eſq;; and as being in this Pariſh.

In Blackſole Field in this Pariſh, the Lord Bergavenny and Sir Robert Southwell the Sheriff of Kent, with about 500 Gentlemen and Yeomen, routed the Iſleys and their Party (who were engaged in Sir Thomas Wyat's Rebellion) entirely; ſo that Sir Henry Iſley fled into Hantſhire; and they purſued them near Four Miles, as far as Hartley Wood: About 60 were taken Priſoners, and a great many killed.

WYE, lies towards the South Eaſt Part of Kent by the River Stoure, about Three Miles and an half North Eaſtward from Aſhford, in the Bailiwick of Chart and Longbridge, Hundred of Wye, Lath of Scray, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in the Lath of Shipway.

The Liberty of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury claimeth here; but the Liberty of Wye claims alſo over the ſame: And in it there is a Court of Record held on every Monday Three Weeks, for determining all Actions, Real, Perſonal, and Mixt.

Wye hath a Market on Thurſdays; and a Fair on March 12. being St. Gregory's Day.

It is in the Deanery of Bridge and Dioceſe of Canterbury; and the Church was dedicated to St. Gregory and St. Martin. Which is accounted as a Chapel, and ſo not rated in the King's Books.

The Pariſh Church, according to Tradition, ſtood anciently on a little Hill, juſt at the Entrance into the Town from the River, and which is now called Boltſhill; but was removed to the Place where it now ſtands by Cardinal Kemp. It was originally a Rectory; but the Convent of Battle in Suſſex, who had the Patronage of it, no doubt ſoon appropriated it to their own Abbey; though when the Vicarage was made Dr. Brett writes me word, he can't diſcover; but it muſt be before the Year 1384; for then the Vicarage was taxed at 6 l. 12 s. 4 d. per Ann. The new Church built by the Cardinal, was a very handſome large Building, with Three Iſles, and as many Chancels; and a Tower and Steeple in the Middle, which ſtood on Four lofty Arches, ſupported by a like Number of large Pillars. The great Chancel was made Choir-Faſhion, well Wainſcoted, and Seated round. The North Chancel was appointed for the Burying-Place of the Kemps, who reſided at Ollantigh in this Pariſh: And in the South Chancel the better Sort of the Pariſhioners were uſually interred.

A. D. 1685. The Steeple fell down, (Kilburn and Lambard ſay, it had been before fired by Lightning) and beat down the greateſt Part of the Middle Chancel, and almoſt all the Two Side ones, and one Part of the Body of the Church. It defaced utterly all the Monuments in the North Chancel, belonging to the Kemp and Thornhill Families; and broke the Tombſtone which covered the Bodies of the Father and Mother of the Cardinal.

On this, the Pariſh put up Boards at the Eaſt End of the Body of the Church, but let the reſt lie in Ruins, till about the Year 1706; and then at laſt cleaning away the Rubbiſh, they took down the Remainder of the old Chancels, and built up a ſmall one in their Room: They made alſo a low flat Tower; and ſo it ſtill continues. The preſent Building is neat but ſmall: And when I was there, I ſaw Fragments of ſeveral old Tombſtones lying open in the Church-yard, which formerly lay in the Iſles and Chancels; and ſome Statues and Fragments of Monuments lay in Heaps at the lower End of the Church.

This Church was made Collegiate by Cardinal Kemp, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was born here, and who founded here a College of Secular Prieſts; of which I ſhall ſay more in its proper Place. In the Church were Memorials of the Interment of one John Andrew, in the Year 1481: Several of the Kemps and Thornhills; and another of Elizabeth, Wife of Thomas Godfrey of Lyd.

The Reverend Dr. Brett informs me, there is a Tradition, That anciently the Town of Wye, which now ſtands between the greater Stoure, and the Foot of the high Hill called Wye Down; which Wye Down is Part of a Ridge of Hills, that beginning at Chartham are continued to the Sea, between Folkſtone and Hythe; and they afford a moſt lovely Proſpect all the Way as you ride over them. The Tradition is, he ſaith, That the Town of Wye was anciently placed in the Bottom or Valley, which lies between Wye Down and Crundale, and is now called Pett-ſtreet. And there are indeed ſeveral deep Wells, which no doubt were dug for the Benefit of ſome Inhabitants. This Place alſo is ſtill called the Town Borough; whereas that on which Wye now ſtands is called Bewbridge Borough.

Formerly there was a Wooden Bridge at Wye: But the preſent one is finely built of Stone, with Five Arches; It was done at the County Charge A. D. 1630: Sir John Honywood, and Robert Moyle, Eſq; being Treaſurers.

Wye was once famous for a pretended Miraculous Well, at a Place called Witherton here. 'Tis a ſmall Spring called St. Euſtace's Well; and very probably took its Name from that Euſtachius Abbot of Fai, who is mentioned by Mat. Paris, An. 1200, (p. 201.) to have been a Man of Learning and Sanctity, and to have come and preached at Wye; and to have bleſſed a certain Fountain there; ſo that afterwards its Water was endowed with ſuch miraculous Virtue, that it would cure all Diſeaſes, and even reſtore loſt Habits; if, as Camden ſaith, you will believe Roger Hovenden; and withal, have a general Inclination to credit ſtrange Stories.

Dr. Brett alſo ſuggeſts to me, that before the Building of Rocheſter-Bridge, the High or Common Way from Dover to London, was through this Town: Which for other Reaſons I judge not to be improbable. And this Place was formerly very full of Inns, there being ſeveral private Houſes, which are ſtill in Conveyances and Leaſes, called by the Names of the Bull, the Chequer, the Vine, &c. And the Gate-Houſes of ſome of thoſe Inns were ſtanding within Memory. This Road went on to Lenham, and ſo to Aylesford; and pretty direct and ſtrait. And I gueſs it was uſed by the Romans, towards the latter End of their Stay here, ſometime before they left Dubris, and made Lemanis their Port. And this Conjecture will, I think, receive ſome Confirmation from the Account I have given you before in Crundale, of a Roman Burying-Place being found there; for they uſed to bury near the Sides of their Publick Ways; and that Place is ſituated pretty near to this Way.

From the Top of that Hill above-mentioned, called Wye Down; as well as from one oppoſite to it in Eaſtwell Park, which I have before taken notice of, may both the Seas be plainly ſeen; viz. That at the Buoy of the Nore, at the Joint-Mouth of the Thames, and Medway towards the North: And the Other, to the South over Romney Marſh, towards the Coaſt of France.

At this Place Major George Somner, Brother to the famous Antiquary, was killed in an Engagement againſt the Rebels, A. D. 1648.

Places of Note here:

1. Wye Manor. This which is called the Royal Manor of Wye, contained 7 Hides or Plow-Lands, and was given by King William Iſt, (being Part of the Demeſnes of the Crown) to the Abbey of Battle in Suſſex: The Chronicles of which Place ſay, that there were of old Twenty Two Hundreds and an half ſubject to it: If ſo, Lambard judges that Wye was anciently of the ſame Extent, as the whole Lath of Scray or Sherwinhope: And this is, I ſuppoſe, what Philpot means, when he ſaith that Twenty Two Towns lying from hence in the Way to Battle, did anciently belong to this Manor. He ſaith alſo, that the Sheriffs Deniers or Tertium Denarium, was reſerved in this Grant. (a)

The ſame King granted alſo to Battle-Abbey all Wreck (a Norman Word from Varech in that Language) of the Sea, falling on Denge Merſh, which was a Portion of Wye; and all Craſpeis, i. e. Craſſpiſſe, great or Royal Fiſhes, which ſhould be taken on that Coaſt.

Here King Edward the IId, after the Burial of his Father, and before his own Coronation, kept his Chriſtmas in the Houſe of the Manor of Wye.

His Father brought a Writ of Right to claim this Manor in the 21ſt Year of his Reign; but the Abbot appeared, and the King deſiſted.

This Manor with 2. Aldons, 3. Dods, 4. Weſture, 5. Bromsford, 6. Shotenton, and the Manor of the Vicarage, on the Suppreſſion of the Monaſtery, came to the Crown, and ſtaid there, till Queen Elizabeth granted them to her Kinſman Henry Cary, Baron of Hunſdon; whoſe Grandſon Henry Earl of Dover, ſold them to Sir Thomas Finch, Earl of Winchelſea; and his Son Heneage Earl of Winchelſea was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

7. Ollantigh, is a Seat where Cardinal Kemp built an Oratory or Chapel: The Houſe was erected by Sir Thomas Kemp, who was made Knight of the Bath, at the Marriage of Prince Arthur, Eldeſt Son to King Henry the VIIth: And in this Name it continued till his Deſcendant Sir Thomas Kemp having no Iſſue-Male, left his Eſtate to Four Daughters, which were married to Diggs, Cutts, Chichley, and Skippeth; who all joined in a Sale of it to Sir Timothy Thornhill, whoſe Grandſon Mr. Henry Thornhill was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time. And ſince I hear it is ſold to Colonel Denew.

At this Place near the Houſe is a very high Mount, artificially, I believe, made in a Conical Form, and is called Barrow-Hill; which may induce one to think, as it did Dr. Plott, That it was a Tumulus, Low, or Barrow caſt up over ſome eminent Roman Officer.

Dr. Brett tells me, he hath heard ſome old Men ſay, That they remember it much more Conical than 'tis now; for Richard Thornhill, Eſq; the Grandfather of the preſent Mr. Thornhill, took off the Top to make a Bowling-Green on it: And Mr. Forſter Miniſter of Crundale aſſures me, That he hath been credibly informed, that when the Top was taken off, Bones, &c. were found within it. But he well obſerves the Baſis is ſo very large, and no hollow Place being found near it, from whence ſo great a Quantity of Earth ſhould come, as would rather incline one to belive it Natural, at leaſt in Part.

It is indeed a very large Barrow, if it be one; as the Fact of finding Bones there muſt determine it to be, if that be true.

8. Bilting is a Place which lies partly in Wye, and Part in Godmerſham. The Manſion Houſe here called Deal-Place, is in Wye; and it hath a Manor belonging to it, which is called Hinxhill. It was anciently, and for many Generations, in the Poſſeſſion of a Family of the Name of Bilting, and which continued here till about the 9th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, when William Bilting dying without Iſſue, Arthur Franklin and Richard Vidian were found to be his Heirs: And this Part fell to Franklin's Share; where it continued till King Charles the Iſt's Reign; and then partly by Marriage, partly by Sale, it went to Mr. William Cowper of Maidſtone: From that Name it went by Purchaſe into that of Farnaby: And James Grandſon of John Farnaby, ſold it to Edward Filmer, Eſq; Son to Sir Edward Filmer, Baronet.

9. Raymonds is a Place in Wye, which gave the Sirname to a Family, which for many Hundreds of Years were Stewards of Battle-Abbey: But at length it got ſome-how into the Name of Beck; where it had continued in Philpot's Time for ſeveral Deſcents.

And he ſaith, that the Raymonds of Eſſex, Norfolk, and ſeveral other Counties in England, are all Branches from this Stock.

10. Perry-Court. This was anciently the Inheritance of the Aldons, but was purchaſed of one of that Name by Cardinal Kemp, in the 28th Year of King Henry the VIth's Reign, and ſettled on his College of Wye, where it ſtaid till the general Diſſolution of the Religious Houſes in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, and then was granted to Mr. John Buckler; who about the Beginning of King Edward the VIth's Reign, ſold it to Sir William Damſell: By one of his Four Daughters and Coheirs, it went in Marriage to Burſton; and thence by Sale, about the Beginning of King James the Iſt's Reign, to Moile of Buckwell: Robert Moile, Eſq; ſold it to Sir Thomas Finch, who was created Earl of Winchelſea; and his Son Heneage Earl of Winchelſea was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

11. Neckbolt: This Place, though no Notice be taken of it by our Kentiſh Writers, is yet very famous for Tile-Lodges: And the very beſt Tiles in Kent are here made, and ſent into all the Eaſtern Parts of this County.

It appears by the Conſuetudines ex Domeſday, as publiſhed by Dr. Gale in his Hiſt. Britan. Vol. I. p. 790. That there were ſome Lands in Wye, which anciently held by the Tenure of Guarding the King's Perſon for Three Days, whenever he ſhould come to Sandwich or Canterbury.

12. Pickarſdane is a fine Valley in this Pariſh, which is famous for a Spring of Water, which comes down from the Hills; And near this was formerly a Building called,

13. Fanſcomb-Barn: Both which Places a Noble Kentiſh Poeteſs hath dignified by the following Poem, in Imitation of the famous Milton.

FANSCOMB-BARN.

In Imitation of Milton.

IN Fanſcomb-Barn (Who knows not Fanſcomb-[Barn?)
Seated between the Sides of riſing Hills,
Whoſe Airy Tops o'er-look the Gallick Seas,
Whil'ſt Gentle Stoure thy Waters near them flow,
To beautify the Seats that crown thy Banks.
——— In this Retreat
(a) Through Ages paſt conſigned for Harbour meet,
And Place of ſweet Repoſe to Wand'rers Poor,
The weary Strolepedon felt that Eaſe,
Which many a dangerous Borough had deny'd
To him, and his Budgeta, lov'd Compeer;
Nor Food was wanting to the happy Pair;
Who with meek Aſpect, and precarious Tone,
Well-ſuited to their Hunger and Degree,
Had mov'd the Hearts of Hoſpitable Dames,
To furniſh ſuch Repaſt as Nature crav'd.
Whilſt more to pleaſe, the ſwarthy Bowl appears,
Replete with Liquor, globulous to ſight,
And threatning Inundation o'er the Brim:
Yet, e're it to the longing Lips was rais'd,
Of him who held it at its due Deſert;
And more than all intreated Bounty priz'd;
Into the ſtrong Profundity he throws
The floating Healths of Females blith and young,
Who there had rendevous'd in paſt Delight,
And to ſtol'n Plenty added clamorous Mirth:
With Song and Dance, and every jovial Prank,
Befitting buxom Crew, untied by Forms.
Whilſt kind Budgeta nam'd ſuch ſturdy Youths,
As next into her tender Thoughts revolv'd:
And now were ſtraggling Eaſt, and Weſt, and [South;
Hoof-beating, and at large, as Chance directs,
Still ſhifting Paths, leſt Men (though ſtil'd of [Peace)
Should urge their calmer Thoughts to Iron War,
Or force them to promote coercive Laws;
Beating that Hemp, which oft entraps their Lives:
Or into Cordage pleated and amaſs'd,
Deprives unruly Fleſh of tempting Skin.
Thus kind Remembrance brought the Abſent near,
And haſten'd the Return of either's Pledge.
Brown were the Toaſts, but not unſav'ry found,
To Fancies clear'd by Exerciſe and Air;
Which the ſpirituous Nectar ſtill improves:
And gliding now through ev'ry cheriſh'd Vein,
New Warmth diffus'd, new Cogitations bred,
With Self-conceit of Perſon, and of Parts.
When Strolepedon (late diſtorted Wight,
Limb-wanting to the View, and all miſnap'd)
Permits a pinion'd Arm to fill the Sleeve,
E'rſt pendant, void, and waving with the Wind:
The Timber-Leg obſequiouſly withdraws,
And gives to that of Bone Precedence due.
Thus undiſguis'd that Form again he wears,
Which Damſel fond had drawn from Houſhold Toils,
And ſtrict beheſt of Parents, old and ſcorn'd:
Whilſt farther yet his Intellects confeſs
The bouzy Spell dilated and inhanc'd,
Ripe for Deſcription, and ſet Turns of Speech,
Which to Conjugal Spouſe were thus addreſs'd.
My Wife, (acknowledg'd ſuch through maunding [Tribes,
As long as mutual Love, the only Law,
Of Hedge or Barn, can bind our eaſy Faiths)
Be thou obſervant of thy Husband's Voice,
Sole Auditor of Flights and Figures bold;
Know, that the Valley which we hence deſcry
Richly adorn'd, is Fanſcomb-Bottom call'd:
But whether from theſe Walls it takes the Name,
Or they from that, let Antiquaries tell,
And Men, well-read in Stories obſolete,
Whilſt ſuch Denomination either claims,
As ſpeaks Affinity contiguous ——— ———
Thence let thy ſcatter'd Sight, and oft griev'd Smell
Engulf the Sweets, and Colours free diſpos'd
To Flowers promiſcuous, and redundant Plants.
And (if the drowzy Vapour will admit,
Which from the Bowl ſoon triumphs o'er thy Lids
And thee the weaker Veſſel ſtill denotes)
With Looks erect obſerve the verdant Slope
Of graceful Hills, fertile in Buſh and Brake,
Whoſe Height attain'd, th' expatiated Downs
Shall wider Scenes diſplay of rural Glee;
Where banner'd Lords, and fair eſcutcheon'd Knights,
With gentle Squires, and the Staff-griping Clown,
Purſue the trembling Prey impetuous:
Which yet eſcaping, when the Night returns,
And downy Beds enfold their careleſs Limbs,
More wakeful Trundle (Knapſack-bearing Cur)
Follows the Scent untrac'd by nobler Hounds,
And brings to us the Fruit of all their Toil.

Thus ſung the Bard, whom potent Liquor raiſ'd,
Nor ſo contented, wiſh'd ſublimer Aid.
Ye Wits! (he cry'd) ye Poets! (Loiterers vain,
Who like to us, in Idleneſs and Want
Conſume fantaſtick Hours) hither repair,
And tell to liſt'ning Mendicants the Cauſe
Of Wonders, here obſerv'd but not diſcuſs'd:
(b) Where, the White Sparrow never ſoil'd her [Plumes,
Nor the dull Ruſſet Cloaths the Snowy [Mouſe.
To Helicon you might the Spring compare,
(c) That flows near Pickerſdane renowned Stream,
Which, for Diſport and Play, the Youths frequent,
Who train'd in Learned School of ancient Wye;
Firſt at this Fount ſuck in the Muſes Lore,
Whence mix'd with Product of the Indian Cane,
They drink delicious Draughts, and part inſpir'd
Fit for the Banks of Iſis, or of Cham;
(For Cham and Iſis to this Bard were known;
A Servitor, when young in College-Hall;
Though vagrant Liberty he early choſe,
And yet, when Drunk, retain'd Poetick Phraſe)
(d) Nor ſhou'd, quoth he, that Well, o'er-hung with [Shade,
Amidſt thoſe Neighbouring Trees of dateleſs Growth,
Be left unfathom'd by your nicer Skill,
Who thence cou'd extricate a Thouſand Charms:
Or to oblivious Lethe might convert
The ſtagnant Waters of the Sleepy Pool.

(a) This Fanſcomb-Barn is now down, but formerly by Cuſtom, was a Kind of privileged Retreat for Beggars.

(b) This Barn was alſo deſervedly Famous for Breeding White Sparrows, and White Mice.

(c) Pickerſdane is a Valley below Wye Downs, where there is an Excellent Spring of Water, which is much frequented by the Scholars of the Free-School at Wye; who go there to drink the Water with Sugar: And this hath been an Ancient Cuſtom, and is counted a great Diverſion.

(d) A verp deep Well within a little Wood near the Place, where Fanſcomb-Barn ſtood.

But moſt unhappy was that Morphean Sound;
For lull'd Budgeta, who had long deſir'd
Diſmiſſion fair from Tales, not throughly ſcann'd,
Thinking her Love a Sympathy confeſt,
When the Word Sleepy parted from his Lips,
Sunk affable and eaſy to that Reſt,
Which Straw affords to Minds unvex'd with Cares.

YALDING, Ealding, i. e. the old watry Place, lies towards the Middle of the Weſt Part of Kent, by the River Medway, about Four Miles Southward from Weſt Malling, in the Bailiwick of Twiford, Lath of Aylesford, Weſt Diviſion of the County, and the South one of the Juſtices in that Lath. Moſt of it is in the Hundred of Twiford; but the reſt, being the Burgh of Ragmerhill, is in the Ancient Demeſn of Aylesford. That Part of the Pariſh which holds of the Manor of Weſt Farley, is in the Burgh of that Name: And the Borſholder thereof is choſen at the Court-Leet there: And that which holds of the Manor of Hunton, is in the Burgh of Hunton; the Borſholder being choſen at the Court-Leet there: And the Inhabitants of neither of theſe Burghs owe Service to the Court-Leet for the Hundred of Twiford, though they are both within that Hundred; but at that Court a Conſtable may be choſen for that Hundred, out of either of thoſe Burghs.

The Pariſh is in the Deanery of Malling, and Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

The Church is in the Hundred of Twiford, and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

A Fair on Eaſter Tueſday, procured by Hugh de Audley. And a Fair for Three Days; the Middlemoſt of which is the Feaſt of St. Peter and St. Paul. Pat. 12. Ed. 2. N. 57.

Here is a fair Stone-Bridge over the Medway.

The Steeple was burnt down.

In the Chancel is a fair Marble Monument of Ambroſe Ward, Eſq;, who died in the Year 1637. His Wife was Daughter of Mr. Thomas Moris of Horton; where lie alſo ſeveral others of this Name.

And there is a very old Tomb of ſome one whoſe Arms are Ermin a Bend Gules.

Places of Note here:

1. Yalding, was anciently Part of the Eſtate of the de Clares, Earls of Glouceſter and Hertford (a), in whoſe Family it continued till Margaret Daughter and ſole Heir of Gilbert de Clare, who died in the 8th Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, carried it by Marriage to Hugh de Audley, who in Right of his Wife, was alſo Earl of Glouceſter: His Daughter Margaret marrying Ralph Earl of Stafford, brought it into that Family; where it continued till King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, when coming to the Crown on the Attainder of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham, that King granted it to Henry Somerſet Earl of Worceſter; from whom it went to the Family of Abergavenny; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of the Right Honourable John Nevil Baron of Bergavenny: And in that Family I ſuppoſe it ſtill continues.

2. Woodfold, in the 20th Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, was held by Anſelmus de Quintin, who paid Aid for it then at making the Black Prince Knight; from whoſe Family it went to that of Burton; where it continued for ſome Generations, and then was ſold to the Vanes, a Younger Branch of the Earl of Weſtmorland's Family; and in their Poſſeſſion it was in Philpot's Time.

3. Lodingford, a Manor once belonging to that mighty Priory of Bermondſey; but on the Suppreſſion of all the Religious Houſes, after having ſtaid a ſmall Time in the Crown, it was granted to Thomas Wood, Eſq; who alienated it by Sale to George Fane, Eſq; Anceſtor to the Earls of Weſtmorland; in whoſe Poſſeſſion it now is.

(a) And in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, I find them claiming all the Privileges of a Manor here, before the Juſtices Itinerant, and it was allowed.

BOOK I. PART III.

Of the Weald of Kent. Romney Marsh. The Rise and Course of the Rivers. The Roman Ways, Stations, Camps, Castles, Ports, and Forts of Kent. And other Monuments of Antiquity.

Of the WEALD.

HAVING thus largely gone through the Description of the County of Kent, as to its Cities, Towns, and Parishes; and taken notice of every Thing which I thought worthy remarking therein: As also having given the best Account I could get of the Manors and Seats, and of the Descents of the Estates of the most Eminent Families in the County; I come next to say something, according to the Method I proposed, of that large Tract of Land called the Weald, or most commonly the Wild of Kent. The Word Weald is Saxon, and signifies a Woody Tract: As Wold in the same Language is used for a hilly Place, with no Wood upon it; and hath much the same Sense as Downs, so signifies Cotswold in Gloucestershire: And the Alps of Italy, Camden saith, in an old Glossary, are called the Wolds of Italy. And because great Woods and Forests have been often Receptacles for Robbers, such Persons the Saxons called Weald genga; and Weald Hlothas, if they robbed in Troops or Companies. And from Walda came the old barbarous Latin word Gualda for a Wood or Grave.

The Britains called this Place Coit-Andred; that is, the great or large Wood. And doubtless this was anciently a Place of very large Extent (a); for it appears from the Saxon Chronicles, from Henry of Huntingdon, Asserus Menevensis, &c. that accounting from Old Winchelsea Westward, it reached 120 Miles in Length, and 30 in Breadth, towards the North. Some begin the Account of this Distance from the Portus Lemanis; which latterly was pretty near the Place where the Old Town of Winchelsea stood; which was swallowed up and destroyed by the Sea in King Edward the Ist's Reign. Leland saith, it stood at the Mouth of the Limen, which is very true, I believe, if meant of that last Mouth which it had in Kent, before it took to its present Course by Rye. This Town began to be hurt by the Sea, A. D. 1280. when 300 Houses were lost: And it was quite lost and destroyed in about Seven or Eight Years after.

And that this Tract of the Weald reached into the Western Parts of Sussex, is plain from the Descent of those Saxons, which about A. D. 477. landed at Cymenes Ora (a Place so called from Cimenius one of Ella's Sons) and beating them back, drove them, 'tis said, into the adjoining Wood Andredslege; or the Place or Tract, of the Wood Andred; which sometimes also was called Andredswald and Andredsbergh.

Sir Edward Dering in a Manuscript of his which I had the Favour to see in the Dering Library at Surenden, thinks it probable, that the Weald extended Eastward from Winchelsea into Kent much after this Manner; and to have had in our County these Boundaries; viz. from Kent-Hatch over-against Limesfield in Surry, to Idehill, Riverhill, Molehill, Peckhambill, Taldinghill, Cocks-Heath, Bocton Monchensie, Sutton, Ulcomb, Bocton Malherbe, Egerton, Pevington, Pluckley, great Chart, King's Noth, Munford, and so to the Side of the Hill of the Mersh, Aldington, Bonington, Bilsington, Orlaston, Ham, Werehorne, Kenardington, and Appledore, and thence to the Place where the River Rother opened into the Sea at Old Winchelsea; and he thinks that within these Bounds towards Sussex, all is to be accounted the Weald, from the Top of those Hills, including their Sides and Descents. (b)

He judges also another Opinion probable, which extends the Weald even as far as the next Ridge of Hills, beginning at Brasted, and so to Morants-Court, Otford, Wrotesham, Byrling, Burham, Boxley, Detling, Harrietsham, Lenham, Charing, East-well, Wye Downs, and so away to Folkstone: And he thinks, that one of these two Rows of Hills must unexceptionably be the Northern Bounds of the Weald of Kent.

That these latter are the true Bounds, he infers from what Lambard saith, p. 212. of his Perambulation; whose Words are these:

If a Man minding to pass through Kent towards London, should arrive and make his first Step on Land in Romney Marsh; he shall rather find good Grass under Foot, than wholsome Air above his Head. Again, If he step over the Hills, and come into the Weald, &c. But this really proves against his Opinion; because the Hills, which a Traveller bound from Romney Marsh towards London must go over, can't be Folkstone, Wye Downs, &c. unless he will go backwards; but they must be those about Aldington, Bilsington, &c. in his direct Way thither, which are the former, and much more probable Bounds of the Weald of Kent. But as Mr. Lambard saith in the same Book, p. 225. There can be no other certain Bounds of the Weald assigned, than such as have been above-recited, out of the Ancient Historians: For though in old Time when it was a meer Solitude, and no where inhabited, it might easily be circumscribed; so being continually since that made less by Industry, it could not long have any permanent or standing Bounds. And therefore I shall not venture to give you any Opinion of my own about it.

Sir Edward Dering, in the Manuscript Tract above-mentioned, argues well in general for the Extent and Bounds of the Weald; viz. That within those he assigns, there have been no Remains of Antiquity found hardly at all, at least not in Comparison of what have been discovered in other Places; which will agree much better with his former than his latter Boundaries: For I have and shall shew, that within the latter several Roman Remains have been found. But indeed when you come within the former Boundaries, the Soil usually changes from a Sand to a Clay: And the old Names, or the Terminations of the Names of most Places within them, relate to Woods and low Situations; such as Den, Hyrst, Ford, Well, &c. but scarce any expres the Habitation of Men there, or the Situation of Towns, &c. Such as Chester, Burgh, Don or Dun, Thorp, Ton, (b) Markham in his Enrichment of the Weald of Kent, p. 2. saith, It hath been found by divers late Verdicts, that the Weald reaches from Winchelsea, and that Hill there, unto the Top of Riverhill: And neither farther towards London, nor shorter towards Tunbridge.

Wic,

Wic, Hall, or Ham. And to this Rule of judging there are but few Exceptions, tho' ſome there are.

By a Grant of King Ethelbert Pren, A. D. 774. it appears that much Salt was made about Limne; and 'tis ſaid, that in the Wood Andred, near that Place, there were then 121 Clauſtra for making Salt. The Weald therefore did then extend thus far Eaſterly in this County.

But let this great Foreſt extend as far as it will, it was certainly of old, a Deſart, and a Waſte, and neither planted nor peopled; but filled only with Herds of Deer, and Droves of Swine: And anciently, no doubt, was ſuppoſed to belong only to the King: For there is no mention of it but in Royal Landbocs or Donations, ſaith Somner. Hence it had the Name of Saltus Regalis, Sylva Communis, &c. And it ſeems not to have been parcelled out into Pariſhes or Manors, till after the Time of the Norman Conqueſt. There being no mention in Domeſday Book of any independent Manors in the Wild; much leſs was it made any uſe of, or improved in the Romans Time, who were kept out of it probably by the Thickneſs of its Woods, and the Badneſs of its Ways.

See Drayton in his Polyalbion, Song 18.

Old Andredſweald at length doth take her Time to [tell,
The Changes of the World that ſince her Youth befell.
When yet upon her Soil ſcarce human Foot had trode;
A Place where only then the Sylvans made abode:
Where fearleſs of the Hunt, the Hart ſecurely ſtood,
And every where walk'd free, a Burger of the Wood;
Until thoſe Daniſh Routs, whom Hunger ſtarv'd at [Home,
Like Wolves purſuing Prey, about the World did [Roam:
And ſtemming the rude Stream, dividing us from [France,
Into the ſpacious Mouth of Rother fell by Chance.
Which Lymen then was called; when with moſt irk- [ſome Care,

And when at laſt ſhe found, there was no way to [leave
Thoſe whom ſhe had at firſt been forced to receive;
And by her great Reſort ſhe was, through very Need,
Conſtrained to provide her Peopled Towns to feed;
She learn'd the Churliſh Axe, and Twybill to prepare,
To feel the Coulters Edge, and ſharp the furrowing [Share.

And in Song 17.

Jove's Oak, the warlike Aſh, vein'd Elm, the ſof- [ter Beech,

Tough Holly, and ſmooth Birch, muſt altogether burn;

And the poor woful Wood, is laſt to Ruin ſold.

But in the Donations of Lands lying out of the Weald, to the Convents of Canterbury and Rocheſter, and other Religious Houſes, there is frequent mention made of Pannage for Hogs in Andred. If a Prædium or a Poſſeſſion were given to any one out of the Weald, in the Nature of what we call now a Manor, or a Lordſhip, it was uſually the way to accommodate it by an additional Grant of a Common of Pannage, which was mentioned in the Deed; and after, it had a Limitation to one or more Dens or Denberæ, as the word then was; and ſometimes Wealdbera. Thus in the Grant of King Offa, of Frindſbury and Æſtlingham to the Priory of Rocheſter, dated in the Year 764, there is added towards the End: Adjectis iv. Denberis in Communi ſaltu, hoc eſt Weald ſe weſtra; viz. Billingden, Cealcbyras, Meoſden, and Rindigſell. (a)

And the ſame kind of Gift is made by King Ecbert to the ſame Convent, in his Grant of Halling. (b).

(b) Ibid. fol. 128.

And as the Learned Spelman ſhews from Domeſday Book (c); Theſe Dens were of no determinate Bigneſs nor Extent: In Tarentforde viij. Denæ Parvæ, & iij. Magnæ. Epiſcopus Baiocenſis in Manerio de Ow habet tres Denas quæ valint xx ſol. And in another Place cited by him are theſe Words: Et Tres Denæ de Sylva reddunt 30 Porcos. The Word Dena comes from the Saxon Dene, which ſignifies a Valley, low encloſed Place, or Den. And doubtleſs they were ſometimes Encloſures taken out of the great Royal Wood or Weald, and granted by the Sovereign to particular Convents, Places, or Perſons. For perhaps at firſt the Liberty of Pannage was granted in common; but very great Trouble and Difficulty ariſing, in finding out their own Hogs, 'tis likely they got leave by Degrees to incloſe and divide it into Partitions within a Hedge: And theſe Partitions or Encloſures doubtleſs were what is abovementioned under the Name of Dens, Denberies, or Wealdberies; which had alſo particular Names aſſigned them, to diſtinguiſh them one from another, as appears by very numerous Inſtances in our old Charters. And no doubt but in Proceſs of Time alſo, they cultivated and tilled ſome Part of the Land within the Diſtricts of their Denberies: And theſe being dependant on Manors elſewhere ſituated, did not, when let out to Tenants, exempt them from paying Services and Cuſtoms, in Proportion to their Tenancies; as Mr. Somner in his Royal Ports and Forts, p. 107. hath ſhewn, againſt Lambard's Opinion, Perambulation, p. 225. who judges, "That "though the Property of the Weald did become "by Degrees to belong to certain known Owners, "as well as the reſt of the Countrey; yet was "it not then (ſaith he) allotted into Tenancies, "nor manured like the reſt; but that even as "Men were contented to inhabit, and by Piece-"Meal to rid it of its Wood, and to break it "up by the Ploughs: So this latter Rent differ-"ing from the former of the Tenants without "the Bounds of the Weald, both in Quantity "and Quality, (as being greater than it, and "yielded rather as a Recompence for Term, "than as a Quit-Rent for any Service) did long "after by little and little take its Beginning". But that the Weald did yield Quit-Rents, Cuſtoms, and other uſual Services; beſides Fealty, Suit of Court, Reliefs, &c. Mr. Somner, as is above-ſaid, ſhews; and in Particular he mentions theſe following:

(c) In Verbo Dena, in Gloſſar.

1. Gavel Swine, a Cuſtom ſo called when they paid Swine in Kind; but if redeemed with Money, then it was called,

Swine Peny, and Swine Money; and was a Rent for the Lord's Leave and Sufferance to his Tenant, that he might keep and feed Swine of his own, or take in other Men's to feed within his Denbery.

And thus alſo there was Gavel Bord, Gavel Timber, and Gavel Refter; in order to repair the Lord's Houſe, charged upon the Wood-Lands, after the Agreement below-mentioned, to take a Rent of Aſſize in Money for the Wood.

2. Scottale, which was a Shott or Contribution from the Tenants, to make a Proviſion of Ale, to entertain the Lord or his Bayliff or Beadle, whenever he held a Parrock; i. e. a Court which was anciently held in the Weald; and was ſomething like the Swainmote in the Foreſt: Here an Account was taken of the Swine Gavels, and Swine Money, due from the Tenants; and of other Cuſtomary Services. And our Author judges probably enough (a), That the Word Paddock is but a Corruption from Paroc; which word Paddock not only ſignifies a particular Place in the Blean Wood in Eaſt Kent, but is often uſed for a ſmall Park about a Gentleman's Houſe. This Scottale ſeems to be the ſame with what Bracton calls Filetale, perhaps for Fieldale, or Gildale.

3. Pannage, in Latin Peſſona; this was the Profit ariſing from taking in Hogs, to be fed and fatted with the Maſt of the Place. And out of this Pannage Tithe was in thoſe Days uſually paid.

4. Gate-Penny. This was a Rent which the Tenant paid for the Liberty of one or more Gates for his Ingreſs and Egreſs to and from his own, by the Lord's Land.

5. Summerhus-Silver. This he proves from a Paſſage in the old Cuſtumale of Newington near Sittingbourn; where are theſe Words —— Homines quoque de Walda debent unam Domum Æſtivalem, quod Anglicè dicitur Sumerhus, aut 20 ſol. dare.

For it was the Cuſtom then it ſeems, for the Lords or Proprietors of theſe Dens in the Weald, to go thither in the Summer-Time, to take care of, and to diſpoſe of their Pannage; and in order to their better Accommodation, ſome kind of Houſe or Habitation was to be provided for them, by their Tenants, or elſe a Rent was to be paid in lieu of it, in Money: Which was the Summerhus-Silver.

6. Corredy. This was a Proviſion of Diet, as the other was of Lodging; for their Lords coming on ſuch an Occaſion; as is now the Cuſtom when Fellows of Colleges, or Prebendaries of Churches, viſit their Manors and keep their Courts ——— Thus in an old Cuſtumal formerly belonging to Ickham Manor in Kent. Et in quolibet Anno debet invenire Corredium, & omnia neceſſarie Domino cum veniret videre Peſſonam; vel Famulo ejus.

7. Danger. This is thus explained in an Accompt-Roll of Charing Manor in this County, A. D. 1230 —— Et de xxvj. ſol. & viij. den. de Waldis ut poſſint arrare & ſeminare Tempore Peſſonæ ſine dampno Archiepiſcopi. For the Tenant in the Weald could not Plow or Sow his Land in Pannage-Time without the Lord's Leave, for fear of endangering the Lord in his Pannage: And therefore it was alſo called Lef-Gavel, Lefe-Rent, Lefe-Service, and Lef-Silver. (b).

Theſe Dens which were thus ſet out in the Weald, for the Agiſtment and Feeding of Hogs, (and in Proceſs of Time of other Droves of Cattle,) were at laſt called Drove Denns: As he that had the Care of Driving the Cattle to and fro as there was Occaſion; viz. the Hog-Herd, Neat-Herd, &c. was called Drof-Mannus the Drover, as the uſual Word is now.

And Land held by the Service of Driving the Lord's Cattle to and from their Pannage, was called Drof-Land.

The Weald then 'tis plain, ſaith Somner, like as other Places, yielded Quit-Rents, Cuſtoms and Services, of old, as well as at preſent; and if the Particulars above-mentioned be not Evidence enough, he adds this further to put it out of all Diſpute; viz.

In King Edward the IIId's, and King Richard the IId's Reigns, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Prior of Chriſt-Church, among other ſuch like Lords or Owners of the Wealdiſh Denns; finding themſelves aggrieved by their Tenants there; as alſo by others, in waſting and making Havock of their Woods; which in and by former Feofments they had expreſly reſerved from their Tenants to themſelves, beſides Fealty, Suit of Court, &c. They, I ſay, in order to quit and rid themſelves of further Care and Trouble about their Woods, entred into a Compoſition with their Tenants; and for a new Annual Rent of Aſſize (generally the ſame with what was paid before) made the Wood over to them by Indenture of Feofment in Perpetuity, either to be cut down, or left ſtanding at the Tenants Choice: Reſerving ſtill their old or wonted Rent, and all their former Services, except Pannage and Danger; which now upon parting with the Wood, there was no longer any Reaſon to require. And ever ſince that Time, the Intereſt of the Lords ſo compounding hath been taken off, as to the Wood it ſelf; and nothing left remaining but ſo much Rent of Aſſize, the new and the old, with the former Services.

And many ſuch Compoſitions between the Archbiſhop and Convent aforeſaid, and their reſpective Tenants, Mr. Somner ſaith, he had ſeen.

This large Tract of the Weald is by no means, generally ſpeaking, unhealthy, except where the Ground is Marſhy and Swampy, as it is in the Low-Lands near the Sea and River every where. The Ways indeed are very bad in it, in Winter or wet Weather; becauſe the Soil is generally upon a Clay. But in the Summer 'tis all a Garden, and in a dry Seaſon the Ways are rather better for a Coach, than they are any where elſe, being without deep Roots. And from the Tops of the adjacent Hills, it is the fineſt Proſpect imaginable to look down into the Weald in Summer-Time; for the whole being in a manner compoſed of Incloſures, the Corn Fields and Meadows of different Colours, adorned with all manner of Flowers, the Green Woods and Hedge-Rows, and the Towns and Villages here and there interſperſed, do afford ſo very great and agreeable a Variety of View, that I never ſaw any Thing any where more delightful and charming. And this large and extenſive Proſpect renders the Seats of thoſe Gentlemen which are ſituated on the Edge of the Hills from Riverhill, Burſton Park in Hunton, Boctton, Monchenſie, Boctton Malherbe, &c. exceedingly pleaſant, in all good and clear Weather.

ROMNEY MARSH.

Romney Marſh is a large Tract of Land in Kent, in Lambard's Time containing, if you confine it ſtrictly to Romney Marſh properly ſo called, about 24000 Acres; but if you will include Walland and Guildford Merſhes, in Kilburn's Time, it contained above 44200 Acres; and now doubtleſs much more, there having been Abundance of Land gained from the Sea, and Inned ſince Kilburn's Time.

This Place is deſervedly eminent throughout all the Realm, ſaith Lambard, as well for the Fortility and Quantity of the Soil and Level; as alſo for the Ancient and Wholeſome Ordinances there uſed for the Preſervation of the Banks and Walls againſt the Rage and Inundation of the Sea.

In the Summer-Time, when 'tis all green and filled with Cattle, it affords a very beautiful Proſpect to the Eye from any of the Adjacent Hills: So that Drayton might very juſtly dreſs it out out as he doth, in order to make the River Rother fall in Love with her. (a).

Appearing to the Flood moſt bravely like a Queen,
Clad all from Head to Foot in gaudy Summers-
[Green;
Her Mantle richly wrought with ſundry Flowers and [Weeds,
Her moiſtful Temples bound with Wreaths of quiver[ing Reeds:
Upon her Loins a Frock, with many a ſwelling Pleat, Emboſs'd will well-ſpread Horſe, large Sheep, and [full-fed Neat;
Some wallowing in the Graſs, there lye a while to bat-
[ten,
Some ſent away to kill, ſome thither brought to fatten.
With Villages amongſt, oft powdred here and there:
And that the ſame more like to Landskip ſhould appear,
With Lakes and leſſer Fords to mitigate the Heat
In Summer, where the Fly doth prick the gadding Neat Forc'd from the Brakes, where late they brouz'd the [Velvet Buds,
In which they lick their Hides, and chew their ſavoury [Cuds.

As to the Antiquity of this Marſh; ſome are of Opinion, that the very Name ſhews it Roman, and this is not improbable. But I think Lambard's Etymology more juſt, that 'tis from the Saxon Rumen-ea; i. e. the large or roomy Place by the Water: For ſo it was certainly written during ſome Part of the Heptarchy; though afterwards corrupted into Rumenal and Romenale: And 'tis called expreſly Rumenea in a Grant of Plegmund Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the Priory of Chriſt-Church there, in the Year 900.

But as this Marſh was certainly the firſt that was Inn'd or gained from the Sea in England; as appears by the Laws and Conſtitutions of it, which are the Rule and Standard in all other Places; and as the Time of its Inning is not mentioned in any of our Hiſtorians; ſo I incline to the Opinion of Sir William Dugdale (b), that it was certainly either inned by the Romans themſelves, or by the Britains, from their Direction and Inſtruction. For certain it is, that neither the Britains nor Saxons had Skill enough to effect ſo great a Work, without the Help and Aſſiſtance of a Politer People. But the Romans had enured themſelves to ſuch Works as theſe, before ever they came hither, or at leaſt ſettled here; as appears by their Recovery of the Pompeine Merſhes (c). The making of the Foſſa Mariana (d): Their Drayning the Fenns about Placentia (e), which was done by Scaurus that made the Æmilian Way: And thoſe alſo in Gallia Cis-Alpina: Their Care of the Lands on the Banks of the Tiber in Auguſtus's Reign; and their draining the Fuſcine Lake, which Pliny propoſed to the Emperor Trajan to attempt; and which was throughly effected by Adrian (f).

And that the Romans when they were in Britain did employ their Soldiers this Way, appears plainly from what Tacitus tells us (g) of the Britains Complaints: That the Romans had worn out their Strength, and waſted their Bodies. In ſylvis & Paludibus emuniendis; i.e. as I think it may well be rendred in cutting down Woods, and Draining and Imbanking of Fenns.

And that Holland and Marſh-Land in the great Level were thus gained from the Sea, or other Waters, and drained and Inned by the Romans; though probably not till after Romney Marſh, which being in Kent the Place of their firſt and uſual Landing in Britain, would firſt offer it ſelf to their Care; is plain both from their Coins, ancient Urns, and other Antiquities plentifully found there; and alſo from thoſe great Barrows or Heaps of Earth, ſtill ſtanding near that Level; which as Tacitus ſhews in the Place laſt mentioned, they did uſe to caſt up over the Bodies of their Generals; and even over great Numbers of common Soldiers, ——— Et Regum Cineres excelſo monte quieſcunt.

Lucan.

'Tis highly probable therefore that the Romans taught the Britains how to do it, and employed them in the Works of Draining and Inbanking in this very Place of Romney Marſh: Which tho' anciently it were all Sea, eſpecially at high Water, and Spring Tides; yet we find in a few Hundreds of Years, after the Romans Departure from Britain, it was cultivated and inhabited in ſome Meaſure. For An. Dom. 796. we have an Account (h), That Kenulf King of Mercia waſted Kent, & Provinciam quæ dicitur Merſcware: Which muſt be Romney Marſh; becauſe as Camden hath obſerved, and every one but moderately acquainted with the Saxon Hiſtories knows, that the People of Romney Marſh were uſually called Merſcware; that is, The Marſh Men, as they are to this Day.

And that Romney Marſh was the firſt Land which was inned or gained from the Sea in Britain; receives a further Confirmation from hence. That we find the Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances for the Conſervation of the Marſh, to be (like our common Laws) without any known Original; being at firſt, Conſtitutions probably made by ſome even of the Old Britiſh Kings or Rulers in Kent, as well as by the Saxons during the Time of the Heptarchy. For in the 35th Year of King Henry the IIId, they are called Ancient and Approved Cuſtoms (i). And within the Diſtrict of the Marſh the King had anciently neither Waſte nor Wrecks; but they were appropriated to ſuch Manors as border'd upon the Sea, upon the Account of their great Charges in Fencing and Banking againſt the Invaſion of the Sea Water. At this Time it appears that there were 24 Jurors or Jurats, as they are now called, who were Time out of Mind elected by the Commonalty, and ſworn to do the beſt they could, to preſerve the Marſh from the Overflowings of the Sea; and they had by Cuſtom and Preſcription Power to raiſe a Tax for that Purpoſe; which was confirmed by the King's Letters-Patents at Romney, Sept. 20. in the 36th Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign.

And in the ſame Reign ſeveral Complaints being made by thoſe 24 Jurors, that ſome Perſons having Land in the Marſh, did not pay their due Proportions towards the Walls and Banks againſt the Sea; the King directed a Precept to Henry de Bathe, a famous Juſtice Itinerant about that Time, to enquire into, and to regulate this Matter; who calling to his Aſſiſtance Nicholas de Handlo, and Alured de Dene, held a Seſſions at Romenhalle, in the 42d Year of King Henry the IIId's Reign, the Sheriff of Kent being by Order preſent; and having ſummoned in ſeveral lawful Men out of the adjacent Bailiwicks, they made thoſe Laws and Conſtitutions, which are called the Ordinances of Henry de Bathe (k): From which Laws all England take Directions about Sewers. And then alſo the Meaſurement of the Marſh was taken by a Rod or Perch, not of 16 Feet and a half, which is the common one now, but of 20 Feet in length.

Now alſo the King having Notice that the Haven of Rumenale was in Danger of being ſpoiled, to the no ſmall Damage of the Publick, and the exceſſive Annoyance of the Town, unleſs the Courſe of the River of Newenden, whereon the Haven was founded, and being then diverted by the Overflowings of the Sea, were re-reduced to that Port; which could not be done but by making a new Channel, near the old Courſe, which ſhould go from a certain Croſs belonging to the Hoſpital of infirm People at Rumenale (and ſtanding by Aghenepend) unto Effetone, thence to Malepend, and thence deſcending unto the ſaid Port: So that a Sluice be made under the Town of Apultre to receive the Sea Water, entring the ſaid River by an Inundation from the Parts about (old) Winchelſea; another Sluice to be made at Snergate; and a third near the ſaid Port, to let the Water into the Sea there, and to prevent its Return.

In the 16th Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, another Commiſſion was granted to John de Lovetot, and to Henry de Apuldreſield, to view the Banks and Ditches in Romney Marſh, and other Places on the Sea Coaſts in Kent; and to enquire into the Matter, and to report by whoſe Default, the Damage, which was great, had happened. Theſe Commiſſioners of Sewers proceeded, as Henry de Bathe had done, and made ſeveral new Ordinances.

They ſate alſo on the 5th of December following as Juſtices of Sewers; but in that were oppoſed by the 24 Jurors of the Marſh: The Oppoſition was allowed as good; and a common Bailiff agreed on.

And Two Years after, the King iſſued out another Commiſſion to Henry de Apuldreſield and Bertram de Tancrey, to enquire into, and to Remedy all Damages done by the Sea, to the Walls and Banks of the Marſh; as alſo to the Lands lying by the Sides of the River of Thames, who likewiſe made ſeveral new Ordinances.

And ſeveral of our Kings did afterwards confirm theſe Ordinances by their Letters Patents.

In the 2d Year of King Edward the IId's Reign, William de Walleins, and others, being made Commiſſioners of Sewers, did by the common Conſent of the Lords of the Marſhes of Lyd and Oxney, and by Appointment from them, ordain, that from henceforth, the Bailiff of Romney Marſh ſhould over-ſee the Bailiffs and Jurats of the ſaid Lyd and Oxney: And on Occaſion ſummon them together, with the 24 Jurats of the Marſh, to fit Places, to conſult about making Laws and Ordinances for the Defence of the Lands in the ſaid Marſhes, &c.

Saving the Tenor of the Charter granted by the King to the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh: And the Ordinances of Henry de Bathe, John de Lovetot, and their Aſſociates, ſtill to remain in full Power.

But however, on a Complaint made by Simon de Iſlip, Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the 33d Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, a new Commiſſion was granted to Thomas Lodelow, Robert Belknap, and Thomas Colepeper, in the 35th Year of that Prince, to over-ſee the Banks and Ditches of the Marſh, and to order them to be repaired; and Theſe alſo made divers new Ordinances; which you will find in Dugdale, p. 31.

And the Subſtance of all which above-mentioned Ordinances, I ſhall give you below in the Charter of Romney Marſh.

King Richard the IId granted by Patent, in his 14th Year, at the Requeſt of the Inhabitants of Romney Marſh, to the preſent Bailiff and Jurats, and to their Succeſſors for ever; That they ſhould be exempt from ſerving at any Aſſizes or Juries, or Inquiſitions, or any Recognitions, as well within Kent as without it, except in what ſhould relate to the King or his Heirs. Which Exemption was afterwards confirmed by King Henry the IVth, and King Henry the VIth.

And King Edward the IVth in his firſt Year Incorporated the Bailiff and the 24 Jurats, and Commonalty of Romney Marſh; impowering them to purchaſe Lands and Tenements, to have a common Seal, to hold a Court every Three Weeks, and to hold all Pleas of Action, Real and Perſonal, Civil and Criminal; and to chuſe Four Juſtices of the Peace of their own yearly, beſides their Bailiff, who hath the ſame Authority; and to have alſo the Return of all Writs, the Benefit of all Fines, Forfeits, and Amerciaments, the Privileges of Leet, Law-day, and Turn; and Exemption from Toll and Tare, Scot and Lot, Fifteen and Subſidy, and from ſo many Charges, that Lambard thinks, no other Place in England hath the like.

And this was done to invite Men to inhabit the Marſh; which was before pretty much deſerted on the Account of the Invaſions of Foreign Enemies, and the Unwholſomeneſs of their own Soil and Situation.

The Court for this Corporation and Liberty is kept at Dimchurch, in a Place built on Purpoſe for it; which is called the New-Hall.

Within this Liberty of the Marſh are Nine Pariſhes; viz. Dimchurch, Newchurch, Burmerſh, St. Mary's, Hope, Ivy-Church, Snave, Brenſet, and Snergate. Beſides Three others, which are long ſince decayed and demoliſhed; viz. Eaſtbridge, Orgareſwick, and Blackmanſtone.

In the 14th Year of King Edward the IVth's Reign, the King having Information of the great Danger of the Marſh, by the Decay of the Walls, &c. and the Force of the Sea; He appointed by Commiſſion Sir John Fogge, and others, to enquire into it, and to remedy it. And thoſe Gentlemen made ſome new Statutes and Ordinances; which you may ſee in Dugdale, p. 52.

In the Ordinations of Romney Marſh, the word Inſtneys is ſometimes uſed: Thus, Quælibet Acra pro Wallis, Inſtneys, &c. which an ancient Interpreter renders, for Walls and Water-Gangs.

But Spelman ſeems to render it more naturally; from the Saxon Inſetena; which is a ſecond Wall or Ditch, ſet within a Former; an Inſet Wall or Ditch, to defend and keep out, in caſe the former ſhould be broken or damaged.

The Charter of Henry King of England, concerning the Ordinance of Romney Marſh.

HENRY, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, &c. To all his Bayliffs, and Faithful Subjects, to whom the preſent Letters ſhall come Greeting.

Becauſe by 24 Lawful Men of Romney Marſh (Time out of Mind) hereunto choſen and ſworn, Diſtreſſes ought to be made upon all thoſe, which have Lands and Tenements in the ſaid Marſh, to repair the Walls and Waterganges of the ſame Marſh, againſt the Dangers of the Sea: And alſo upon all thoſe, which are bound and charged for the Reparation of the ſaid Walls and Waterganges: We have granted to the ſame 24 Men, that for the Safety of the ſaid Marſh, they cauſe thoſe Diſtreſſes to be done; ſo that they be made equal according to the Portions, greater and leſſer, which Men have in the ſame Marſh, and according to that which ſome are bound and charged. And therefore we will and grant, that none of our Sheriffs of Kent, or any of their Bailiffs, do in any wiſe intermeddle touching thoſe Diſtreſſes made by Conſideration of the ſaid 24 Jurats, to avoid the ſame Danger. For whoſoever ſhall bring Complaint unto us, of the Conſideration of theſe Diſtreſſes, we will cauſe Juſtice to be done unto him in our Court; and that Juſtice we reſerve ſpecially to our ſelf, or our ſpecial Commandment.

In Witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe Letters to be made Patents. Witneſs my ſelf at St. Edmond's, the 2d Day of September, in the 36th Year of our Reign.

The Ordinance of Henry of Bathonia, Juſtice of our Lord King Henry, Son of King John, made by Precept of the ſame Lord the King, upon Contention ariſen between the 24 Jurors, and the Men of Romney Marſh, touching Reparation of the Walls and Waterganges there; being at Romney on Saturday next after the Nativity of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, in the 42d Year of the ſaid King Henry, adjoining to him Nicholas of Handlo, and Alured of Dene, &c.

OUR Lord the King hath given in Charge to Henry of Bathonia, That whereas Judgment ought to be done by 24 Lawful Men of Romney Marſh, to diſtrain upon all thoſe which have Lands and Tenements in the ſaid Marſh, to repair the Walls and Waterganges of the ſame Marſh, againſt the Force of the Sea, and Inundation of other Waters; and alſo upon all thoſe which are bound and charged with the Reparation of the ſame Walls and Waterganges. And to the ſame 24 Jurors, our Lord the King, by his Letters-Patents, hath lately granted, that for Safety of the ſaid Marſh they ſhould cauſe Diſtreſſes to be made, ſo that they may be duly done, according to the Portions greater or leſs, which Men have in the ſame Marſh; and according as ſome are bound and holden hereunto. So that no Sheriff of Kent of our Lord the King, or any of his Bailiffs, do in any wiſe intermeddle with thoſe Diſtreſſes, made by Conſideration of the fore-ſaid 24 Jurors, for avoiding the Danger afore-ſaid. But if any ſhould think himſelf grieved unjuſtly, touching the Conſideration of thoſe Diſtreſſes, and would complain thereof, he ſhall bring his Complaint unto him our Lord the King, and he would cauſe Juſtice to be done to him in his Court; and that Juſtice had ſpecially reſerved to him our Lord the King, or to his ſpecial Mandate. The ſaid 24 Jurors (for the Conſideration and Reſiſtance of certain Men of the ſame Marſh, which are bound to repair the ſame Walls and Waterganges, according to the Quantity of the Lands and Tenements, which they have in the ſame Marſh) cannot make the ſame Diſtreſſes whereby the Walls and Waterganges lye ruinated; by reaſon whereof the Inundations of the Sea, and other Waters, do over-flow a great Part thereof, to the great Detriment of our ſaid Lord the King, and the Men of the ſame Marſh: He our Lord the King, hath appointed the ſaid Henry, his Juſticer, to hear and determine the Contentions ariſen, touching the ſame Reparation, between the ſame 24 Jurors, and Men of the ſaid Marſh. And to provide for Security and Defence of the ſaid Marſh, againſt the Inundation and Peril of the Sea, and other Waters, by Reparation of the ſaid Walls and Waterganges, to be made by them which are bound to repair it, according to the Quantity of the Lands and Tenements, which they have in the ſame Marſh, and according to that which ſome are other ways bound and holden here-unto.

Our ſaid Lord the King commanding the ſaid Henry, that at the Day and Place which he ſhould limit, he ſhould provide to diſpatch the ſame as is afore-ſaid: And what he ſhall do therein, that to him the ſaid Lord the King he make known diſtinctly and plainly in Writing, that the ſaid Lord the King might cauſe it to be enroll'd, &c.

By which Mandate, the ſaid Henry, in the Day afore ſaid being at Romney, joining to him the ſame Nicholas de Handlo, and Alured of Dene, and the Sheriff of Kent aſſiſting him, which by Precept of our Lord the King, at the ſame Day, cauſed to come before him ſo many and ſuch honeſt and lawful Men of this Bailiwick, by which the ſame Strifes may be ended, and the ſame Proviſion may the better be effected, none of the ſame Marſh then withſtanding it; the ſaid Henry, in the Preſence of the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh, then being there, with their Council pleading, ordained as followeth.

THAT is to ſay, That by the whole Commonalty of the ſame Marſh, 12 lawful Men may be choſen; to wit, Six of the Fee of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Six of the Barony; which being ſworn, ſhall meaſure the Walls new and old, and thoſe which ought to be new erected. And the ſame Meaſuring ſhould be done by one and the ſame Perch; to wit, of 20 Feet; and afterwards the ſame Jurors upon their Oaths, alſo by the ſame Perch, ſhall meaſure by all the Acres, Lands, and Tenements, which are ſubject to Danger within the ſame Marſh: Which Meaſuring being done, the 24 Jurors by the Commonalty being firſt elected and ſworn, having no Reſpect to the Quantity of the Walls, Lands, and Tenements, which are ſubject to Peril, by their Oath ſhall ordain how much appertaineth to every one to uphold and repair the ſame Walls. So that for the Portion of Acres of Lands, lying ſubject to Danger, there be aſſigned to every one his Portion of Perches by certain Bounds; ſo as it may be known where and by what Places every one ought to make defenſible, and when need ſhall be, by whoſe Occaſion the Force and Peril of the Sea ought to be withſtood, by repairing the ſaid Walls: And there ought to come the 24 Jurors, to ſee through which of the ſaid Places ſuch Need chanceth, and to whom the ſame Places were aſſigned to be defended, and ought at the ſame Time to be repaired: Which the common Bailiff ſhall give notice to them, to whom the ſame Places were appointed to be kept, that they repair and mend the ſame Places, within the Time by the ſame 24 Jurors appointed: Within which Time if they neglect to do it, the ſaid common Bailiff, of his own Charge, ſhall repair ſuch Defaults, by the View of the 24 Jurors; and the ſame Party neglecting, ſhall be compelled to pay double Coſts to the ſame Bailiff, for his Charges laid out on the ſame Reparations; which double Coſts muſt be reſerved for the Benefit of the ſame Reparations.

And moreover the Negligent herein may be diſtrained by his Lands within the ſame Marſh. And if any Perches of Lands be holden in common of Partners, ſo that to every Partner, a certain Place for the Portion of his Part cannot be appointed; to wit, all or half a Perch, by reaſon of the Smallneſs of the ſame Perch; then by the Oath of the 24 Jurors, it ſhall be ordained and ſeen, how much the ſame Land, which is ſo holden in common, ought to defend; and there ſhall be a certain Portion of Defence aſſigned to the ſame Partners in common, for the Portion of their common Land.

And if any of the Partners ſhall be remiſs in defending his Part, when the ſame Partners ſhall be warned by the ſaid Bailiff, the Part of the Partner ſo remiſs, may be aſſigned to the other Partner, which ſhall make the Defence. And they which hold in their own Hand the Part of the Partner neglecting, ſhall keep it until he neglecting ſhall pay double the Coſts beſtowed about about the ſame Defence, containing his Part by the View of the 24 Jurors for the Benefit of the ſame Reparations, as is aforeſaid. And if all the ſame Partners ſhall be negligent about the ſame, then the ſaid common Bailiff ſhall make the ſame Defence of his own Coſt, and may diſtrain the ſame Partners afterwards for double the Coſts, about the ſame Defence, by View of 24 Jurors, as is aforeſaid. The Right of the chief Lords of the Fee in the aforeſaid Marſh, which they have towards the Tenants of this Defence, according to their Feoffments, reſerved. And that all the Lands in the Marſh may be kept againſt the Force of the Sea, and Inundations of freſh Waters by the Walls and Waterganges, by the Oath and Conſideration of 24 Jurors, for the leaſt Hurt and beſt Safety, as of old Time was uſed. Saving alſo the Honour of the Charter of our Lord the King, to the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh granted, That no Sheriff, or any his Bailiff or Miniſter, make any Diſtreſs within the ſame Marſh, by occaſion of any the ſaid Articles, as in the ſaid Charter is contain'd; which Charter, this Ordinance notwithſtanding, ſhall continue in his perpetual Force, &c.

The King to the Sheriff of Kent Greeting.

WHEREAS we lately appointed our Faithful and Beloved Henry de Bathonia, to hear and determine Variances, depending between 24 lawful Men of Romney Marſh, by whoſe Conſideration the Walls and Waterganges of the ſaid Marſh, againſt the Force of the Sea, and Peril of other Waters there over-flowing, ought to be repaired: And ſuch as have other Lands and Tenements in the ſame Marſh, which ought and were wont to repair thoſe Walls and Waterganges. And the ſaid Henry going in Perſon to thoſe Parties; ordain'd, That according to the Conſideration of the ſaid 24 Jurors, Diſtreſſes ſhould be made for Reparation of the ſaid Walls and Waterganges. So that no Sheriff or other his Bailiff do intermeddle with the ſame Diſtreſſes, as in the Rolls of our Chancery expreſſing that Ordinance is contained. Nevertheleſs you have releaſed thoſe Diſtreſſes for this Deed, by 24 Jurors, to the Prejudice of their Conſideration. And becauſe if any think himſelf grieved of the ſame Conſideration, for which he will complain, he ought to come to us to ſeek Remedy. We command you that in no wiſe you meddle with the ſame Diſtreſſes, but cauſe them to be returned by the 24 Jurors, and their Bailiff, appointed hereunto, that no further Complaint thereof comes to us, for which we may be diſpleaſed with you.

Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter the 20th Day of April, in the 43d Year of our Reign, by Henry de Bathonia, &c.

Then followeth the Number of all the Acres within the ſame Marſh, as is found by Meaſure taken in the 42d Year of King Henry; and alſo the Agiſtatio, as well in the great Wall of Apuldre, as in the little Wall, to the Quantity of the Lands holden within, &c.

Hamo Pitte, John Cobbe, Henry le Long, and John Ermynard, were attached to anſwer unto Godfrey le Faulconer; for that they with others, lately came to the Manor of the ſaid Godfrey in Hurſt, and his Goods and Cattles there, found to the Value of 20 l. took and carried away; and other Damages and Grievances to him there did, to his great Loſs, and againſt the Peace, &c. And whereof the ſaid Godfrey complaineth, That on Thurſday in Eaſter-Week, in the Year, &c. the ſame Hamo, with others, took 10 Kine in the Town of Hurſt, &c. whereby he ſaith he is damnified, and hath loſt to the Value, &c. and thereupon bringeth Suit, &c. And the ſaid Hamo, and others, came and defended, &c. and ſo far worth as is againſt the Peace, &c. When, &c. And they will acknowledge that they took 10 Kine aforeſaid, &c. of the ſaid Godfrey juſtly, and in the Peace of our Lord the King; becauſe he ſaith, that the ſaid Godfrey hath Lands, &c. in Romney Marſh, where all the Tenants having Lands and Tenements in the ſame Marſh, ought, according to the Quantity of their Land, to make Walls and Waterganges againſt the Sea, for the Inundations of the Waters: And 24 lawful Men of the ſame Marſh, being choſen by the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh, and the Jurats, ought to make Diſtreſſes on the Tenants, in the ſame Marſh, according to the Quantities of the Tenements, when it ſhall be needful to repair the ſaid Walls and Waterganges: Which Jurats in the ſame Marſh, as the manner is, for that they all could not be at Lieſure, have choſen the ſaid Hamo to diſtrain, and have made him their Bailiff to do it. And this Liberty they have by ancient Cuſtom of the ſame Marſh; and by the Charter of our Lord the King; which they produce in theſe Words.

Henry, by the Grace of God, &c.

Whereby he ſaith, That by means of the Default of the ſaid Godfrey, he lawfully took the ſame Diſtreſs, for repairing the ſame Walls and Waterganges: Of which, in the Wall of Apuldre, there were aſſigned to him for his Part, by the ſaid Jurats, Three Perches and an half at leaſt, at his Charges to be repaired; and more according to the Inundations of the Waters, if it ſhall be needful through divers Places; and that they take a greater Diſtreſs, unleſs they will do it; they put themſelves upon the Countrey, &c. Notwithſtanding they ſay, they took of one A. B. Six Bullocks, who was the Farmer of the ſaid Godfrey; and Ten Lambs of T. N. Tenants of the ſame Godfrey, by reaſon of the Defects of the ſame Walls and Waterganges: For which they afterwards paid, and had their Beaſts again. Being required for what they made the firſt Diſtreſs, and for how much the ſecond: They ſay, that the firſt Default of the ſaid Godfrey, was eſteemed at Four Marks; and the ſecond Default at Four Shillings. And the ſame Godfrey ſaith, That he holdeth his Tenements in the ſame Marſh, of the Gift and Grant of the Lord Henry, late King of England, Grandfather to our now Lord King Henry; the which the ſame Lord Henry hath given to one William, the Son of Balder, the Predeceſſor of the ſaid Godfrey, whoſe Heir, &c. By which Grant his Predeceſſors, and he afterwards, held his Tenements in the ſame Marſh, always as freely and quietly as the ſaid Balder held them before. And they ſay that neither of his Predeceſſors, nor of him, any ſuch Cuſtom was ever ſought to repair the ſame Walls and Waterganges; unleſs Five Years paſt, after that the ſaid Hamo was made Bailiff, to keep the ſaid Walls and Waterganges; neither did they ever at any Time do it. And he bringeth the Charter of the ſaid King Henry, in theſe Words:

Henry, by the Grace of God King of England, &c. To the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c.

And ſaith, That by the ſame Feoffment his Anceſtors have held the ſame Tenements ſo freely, that they never made or repaired the Walls nor Waterganges; neither was he after that he held thoſe Lands, nor his Predeceſſors, diſtrained, until now Five or Six Years paſt, that the ſaid Hamo, and others, have took the Beaſts, and as they know which made upon him the ſame Diſtreſs, for Default of Reparation of the ſame Walls and Waterganges, which neither he, nor his Predeceſſors, have done, nor never uſed to do, deſireth Judgment of their Acknowledgment.

And the ſaid Hamo, and others, ſay, That as for ſome Time there was Controverſies betwixt the Tenants in the ſaid Marſh, upon the Reparation of the ſaid Walls and Waterganges; ſo that Plea was moved thereby in the County before the Sheriff: For which, the 24 Jurats finding themſelves grieved, came to the Court of our Lord the King, and complain'd of the ſaid Sheriff; alledging, That the ſame Plea appertain'd not to the Sheriff, to be holden ſo, that by Council of our Lord the King it was provided, that there might be ſent the Juſtices of our Lord the King, to ordain and diſpoſe, that which ſhould be meet to appeaſe thoſe Strifes. So that Henry de Bathonia was ſent thither; and all the Tenants of the ſaid Marſh had Summons of 40 Days, as he was in the Journey with the Juſtices.

And the ſaid Henry, having ſeen the Walls and Water-Banks aforeſaid, by Aſſent and Will of the whole Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh, hath ordained that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and all Tenements in the ſame Marſh, ſhall contribute, according to the Quantity of their Tenure, to make again the ſame Walls and Waterganges; whereby as the ſaid Godfrey will be defended by the Walls and Waterganges, he requireth that he contribute to repair them, as before the ſaid Juſtice it was ordained. And that the Ordinance is ſuch as aforeſaid, he referreth himſelf to the Records of the Rolls of the ſaid Henry Bathonia. Alſo he ſaith, That it is needful that he contribute to the Repair of the ſaid Walls, &c. For that he ſaith that except his Land ſhould be defended by the ſaid Walls, all his Land would be over-flowed and waſhed. And the ſaid Godfrey ſaith, That although the ſame Ordinance had been made by the ſaid Henry, the ſaid Godfrey never conſented thereto; neither was ſummon'd nor call'd to come before him, to make the ſame Ordinance: He alſo ſaith, That neither before the Ordinance nor after, he nor his Predeceſſors did lately make ſuch Contribution, but always held their Lands quietly, from all manner of Exaction, according to the Tenor of the ſaid Charter of King Henry, Grandfather to the now King, until Two Years paſt, the ſaid Hamo, and others, took his Beaſts; whereof he prayeth Judgment, Whether the ſame do hurt him in this Behalf. And the ſaid Hamo, and others, ſay, That he had a common Summons of 40 Days, as all the Commonalty of the ſame Marſh had, which he ought not to be ignorant of; whereby he ſaith, That although he would not come thither, as he ought, with his Neighbours, he ought not to be therefore freed from the ſaid Contribution to repair the Walls; inſomuch that it is the common Benefit of all the Tenants in the ſaid Marſh, that as well his Land, as the Land of the other Tenants, may be defended by the ſame Walls and Waterganges; whereof he deſireth Judgment: He alſo ſaith, That after the ſame Ordinance, the ſaid Godfrey, and thoſe Men, have given a Mark to repair the Walls and Waterganges aforeſaid, before the ſaid Hamo was Bailiff; and that he is ready to verify the ſame, &c. And Godfrey ſaith, That he holdeth himſelf to the ſaid Charter of our Lord the King, and to his Liberty which he and his Predeceſſors uſed; againſt which, no Ordinance being made by the ſaid Henry, can nor ought to hurt him: And he well defendeth, That neither he, nor any by him, hath given any Thing at any Time before the ſaid Ordinance, nor after, to the ſame Reparation. And this he is ready to verify, &c. Afterwards, in the Morrow after St. Martin, in the 42d Year, there came the ſaid G. H. and others, &c. And it was commanded to the Sheriff, that he cauſe to come in Three Weeks after Eaſter, whereſoever 12 as well Knights as, &c. by which, &c. and which neither, &c. nor have Lands in the ſaid Marſh, &c. If the ſaid Godfrey, and his Predeceſſors, after that they had his Land of Hurſt, of the Gift and Grant of our Lord King Henry of England, &c. together with other Men, having Land in the ſaid Marſh, were wont to repair the Walls and Waterganges, and to contribute with the ſame Men, to repair them when it hath been needful: Whereof the ſaid Godfrey, by a certain Ordinance in which he granted before Henry de Bathonia, whom the Lord the King had ſent in that Behalf, gave a Mark to repair the ſaid Walls and Waterganges, before the ſaid Hamo was Bailiff of the ſaid Marſh, as the ſaid H. and T. do affirm: Or if the ſaid Godfrey, or his Predeceſſors, was freed from thoſe Reparations of the Walls and Waterganges, and Things incident thereunto, by Charter of the ſaid King Henry, Grandfather, &c. So that the ſaid Godfrey hath not agreed to the ſame Ordinance, nor ever gave any Thing to repair the ſaid Walls and Waterganges, as the ſaid Godfrey alledgeth; becauſe as well, &c. Afterwards, from Three Weeks after Eaſter, in the 42d Year, the Sheriff hath not ſent his Writ; therefore he in pity, &c. That is to ſay, Fulk Payforor.

Therefore, as before it is given in Charge to the Sheriff, that he cauſe to come here 15 Days after the Day of S. Trinity, whereſoever, &c. 12, &c. by which, &c. and which neither, &c. Afterwards, at their Day, there came the ſaid Godfrey, H., and others, and deſired Judgment to be done, according to the Record and Proceſs of the ſame Plea: And the Plea was recited before the Lord the King and his Council; and becauſe it is found according to that Record, that the Lord the King had ſent otherwiſe Henry Bathonia his Juſtice, thereunto aſſigned unto the ſame Romney Marſh, who diſpoſed that all thoſe which had Lands and Tenements in the ſame Marſh, ſhould according to the Quantity of their Tenements, contribute to repair the Walls and Waterganges of the ſaid Marſh; as the ſaid Hamo, and others alledge: To which Contribution the ſaid Godfrey is not bound, as the ſaid Godfrey ſaith, neither is it as yet manifeſt in the Court of the King: Hereof the ſaid Ordinance and Diſpoſition, without the which they cannot rightly proceed unto Judgment, Day is given them in 15 Days after the Day of St. Michael; whereſoever, &c. and in the mean Time, the Rolls of the Time of the ſaid Henry de Bathonia are ſought; and it muſt be known, that it is forbidden, that the ſaid Hamo diſtrain the ſaid Godfrey, whilſt the Plea dependeth. Afterwards, in 15 Days after the Day of St. Michael, in the 43d Year, &c. the ſaid Godfrey came, &c. withdrew himſelf off of his Writ, againſt the ſaid Hamo, and others, &c. And therefore be in pity, &c. And further, he granteth for himſelf and his Heirs, that from henceforth they ſhould cauſe to be repaired the Walls and Waterganges, for his Part of the Quantity of his Lands, together with his Neighbours, as the Cuſtom of his Country is, without Contradiction or Cavillation for ever.

And the ſaid Hamo hath granted and bound, for himſelf and others, that he will account before the 24 Jurors of the County, choſen upon the Diſtreſſes and Beaſts taken of the ſaid Godfrey, for repairing the ſaid Walls and Waterganges, from the Beginning of this Plea till now, &c. And thoſe Diſtreſſes, according to the Quantity of the Part happ'ning to him, ſhall in the mean ſpace ſatisfy, for Reparation of the Walls and Waterganges aforeſaid, as is afore declared by the Diſtreſſes. That the ſaid Hamo, and others, ſhall pay in all Things that ſhall be enjoyned by the ſaid Account between them, of the Surpluſage received of the Beaſts, ſold by the ſaid Godfrey, by the ſame Occaſion. And the ſaid Godfrey hath granted, That if the ſaid Hamo verify by Account, that the Beaſts taken by him in the Name of Diſtreſs, by Occaſion aforeſaid, in Value cannot ſatisfy for the Part of his Quantity of Land, for the repairing of the ſaid Walls and Waterganges; that he the ſaid Godfrey will ſatisfy him in all Arrearages, from the Beginning of the ſame Plea till now, by the View and Eſtimation of the ſame 24 Jurats of the Countrey, &c.

THE Ordinance of the Lord John de Lovetot, and Henry de Appledorefield, Juſtices of our Lord the King, of all the Marſhes of Romney and Oxney, to the County of Suſſex.

Before John de Lovetot, and Henry de Appledorefield at Romney, the 5th Day of December, in the 16th Year of King Edward the Son of King Henry.

Our Lord the King hath ſent to his Well-beloved and Faithful John de Lovetot and Henry de Appledorefield, his Writ in theſe Words:

Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitain, to our Well-beloved John de Lovetot, and Henry de Appledorefield, Greeting.

KNOW ye, that whereas we are bound, by Reaſon of our Princely Dignity, and by Oath, to provide for the Safety of our Kingdom, We have aſſigned on every Side you to over-ſee the Walls and Ditches by the Sea Coaſts, and the Parts thereto adjoining, in the County of Kent, diverſly ruined by the Rage of the Sea, to enquire by whoſe Default ſuch Hurt hath happened there; and of all thoſe which hold Lands and Tenements in thoſe Parts, and by any means have Defence and Safety, or may have Defence or Safety by thoſe Walls and Ditches; and them for the Quantity of their Lands and Tenement, or by the Number of Acres of Land, or by Carucata's, for the rated Portion of their Tenure, to diſtrain, together, with Bailiff of the Liberties, and others of theſe Parts, to repair them in neceſſary Places, as often, and where as need ſhall be; ſo that none having Lands or Tenements of this, or other, of what Condition, State, or Dignity, that they be, which have any Defence by the Walls and Ditches, whether it be within the Liberty or without, ſhall be ſpared in this Behalf. And therefore we command you, That for the Execution of this Buſineſs, you behave your ſelves ſo faithfully and diſcreetly, that as well Men reſident in the ſame Places, as their Lands, may be ſaved againſt like Perils, and caſually no worſe in like manner happen; and you upon that which you ſhall do or ordain in this Behalf, under your Seals, and the Seals of the Jurors, as well Knights as other honeſt and lawful Men, you diſtinctly and publickly certify us. For we have commanded our Sheriff of the ſame County, that at certain Days and Places, which he ſhall hint to them, he ſhall cauſe to come ſo many, and ſuch honeſt and lawful Men of his Bailiwick, by whom the Truth of the Matter, may be known and enquired in the Premiſes.

In Witneſs whereof, &c. Witneſs Edmund Earl of Cornwall, our Conſtable at Weſtminſter, the 15th Day of November, in the 16th Year of our Reign.

By which Mandate it was commanded to the Sheriff, that he ſhould come before the ſaid Juſtices here at this Day, 24 Jurors of Romney Marſh, and all the Lords of the Towns of Romney Marſh, and ſuch and ſo many honeſt and lawful Men, of the ſeveral Lands near to the Sea Coaſts, in his Bailiwick, by which the Truth of the Matter in the Premiſes may the better be known and enquired of; and further to do that which in the Premiſes ſhall be ordained.

Who now came. And the ſaid 24 Jurors of the ſame Marſh, together with the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh alledged, That the Lord King Henry, Father of the now King, by his Charter hath granted unto them certain Liberties in his Lands of the ſame Marſh, and requir'd that their Liberties aforeſaid may be reſerved unto them, and that nothing be attempted or ordained to the prejudice of the ſame Liberties; and produce a Charter of the Lord Henry our King aforeſaid, in the Words.

Henry, by the Grace of God, &c.

They alſo alledged, that the Lord the King, Father of our now Lord the King, in the 52d Year of his Reign, by reaſon of certain Diſcord ariſen amongſt diverſe Men of the ſaid Marſh, by means of repairing the ſaid Walls and Waterganges; did ſend Henry de Bathonia, his Juſtice to thoſe Parts, to hear and determine the Strifes grown of the ſame Reparation, between 24 Jurors and the Men of the ſaid Marſh; and to provide for the Safety and Defence of the ſaid Marſh, againſt the over-flowing and danger of the Sea, and other Waters; by repairing the ſaid Walls and Waterganges by them, which for Reparation thereof are bound according to the quantity of their Lands and Tenements, which they have in the ſame Marſh: Whereby they affirm, that the ſaid Henry de Bathonia, by Authority of the ſame Mandate of our Lord King Henry aforeſaid, hath ordained and eſtabliſhed for them a certain Law and Ordinance, by which that Marſh is hitherto kept and conſerved; and therefore require, that by that Ordinance and Law, they may hereafter be tried and defended as heretofore they have been accuſtomed. And to that end, they brought the ſaid Ordinance of the ſaid Henry de Bathonia under the Seal of our Lord the King, in theſe Words; Before Henry de Bathonia, &c. as before, &c.

And becauſe the Ordinance of the ſaid Henry plainly ſeemeth agreeable to Equity, and hitherto hath been allowed; It is commanded and appointed, That the ſaid Ordinance be in all Points obſerved, without Impeachment; adding, nevertheleſs, that becauſe in the ſame Ordinance nothing was expreſſed of the choice of a common Bayliff of our Lord the K., in the ſame Marſh, by what means, and by whom that Choice ought to be made: It is agreed, that from henceforth the ſaid common Bayliff of the ſame Marſh, departing or deceaſing, another which is Reſident, and hath Lands in the ſame Marſh may have his Place: And that the ſame Choice from henceforth be made, by common Aſſent of two Towns of the ſaid Marſh, or by their Attorneys, and where the greater Number agrees, it ſhall ſtand at their Choice, becauſe it hath been ſo accuſtomed to be done. And for levying the Double, and of the Coſts beſtowed for the Reparation of the Defaults of the ſaid Marſh, for the Puniſhment of ſuch as neglect to repair thoſe Defaults; it is agreed, that the ſame Double be levied, as in the former Ordinance was appointed; and that the Double be reverted for the common Benefit of repairing the ſame Marſh

Marſh, and not be reſerved for the uſe of the ſaid Bayliff hereafter. And becauſe in the ſame Marſh divers Walls and Waterganges, to whoſe repairing and maintaining, the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh do not Contribute, but only they which have Lands adjacent and neareſt to the ſaid Walls and Waterganges; and ſome by Oppreſſion of the Lords of the ſaid Marſh, do Pay but ſometimes for the Repairing and Upholding the ſame for 40 Acres; how much others for 50 Acres, that which ſhall be more againſt the Law of the Marſh and Ordinance of the ſaid Henry de Bathonia; it is agreed and ordain'd, that notwithſtanding any Cuſtoms uſed before of any, all and ſingular having Lands and Tenements which are ſubject to the Danger of the Sea, and have their Safety alſo for the ſame, may henceforth be diſtreined to repair and ſupport the Walls and Waterganges.

So that all do contribute equally according to the Numbers of Acres, which they have there, ſo as none be ſpared of what State and Condition ſoever they be, which thereby have Safety and Defence. And becauſe in that Marſh of Romney, beyond the Water-ſtream of that Dock, ſtretching from Snergate towards Ramen-Hall, on the Weſt Part of the Creek, unto the County of Suſſex, there was no certain Law of the Marſh appointed nor uſed, but of ſuch as hath Lands at will therein; whereby divers Perils, intollerable Loſſes had happened by Inundation of the Sea, that from henceforth ſuch Dangers may be prevented for common Benefit ſeen unto; It is agreed, and jointly ordained, that in the Marſh beyond the ſame Creek towards Suſſex, there be appointed to be choſen by the Commonalty, Jurors, which for Security of thoſe Parts in this behalf ſhall be Sworn, and having reſpect to the Number of Acres which are ſubject to the ſame Peril, and to the quantity of Walls and Waterganges, there to be repair'd and maintain'd, by their Oath, ſhall Conſider and Ordain as much as ſhall be needful to repair and uphold them. So that every one for the Portion of Acres ſubject to the ſame Danger, do equally contribute to ſuſtain them; ſo that according to the Portion of their Acres and their Value, there be aſſigned to every one in the ſame Walls and Waterganges his Portion of Perches, to be holden, as is contain'd more plainly in the Ordinance of the ſaid Henry de Bathonia. And moreover, for that hitherto in thoſe Parts beyond the ſame Dock towards Suſſex, there was no common Bailiff appointed, which ſhould provide and take heed of the Dangers there happening for the common good of thoſe Parts, and that hereafter no like Perils there happen; it is ordain'd, that henceforth there be choſen a Bailiff in the ſame Marſhes beyond the ſaid Watercourſe towards Suſſex, to overſee, and keep, and to repair the Walls and Waterganges, by the Places and Terms of the ſaid Marſh, where he ſhall ſee it moſt convenient for the whole Commonalty. And cauſe the Jurors of the ſaid Marſh to meet together at Places requiſite, when it ſhall be needful to make Ordinances and Conſiderations for the Safety of the Lands of thoſe Parts; and to diſtrain therefore, and Double to be taken of the Negligent when need ſhall be; and to levy according to the Form in the ſaid Ordinance of Henry de Bathonia contained, at the Choice of the ſaid Bailiff, when it ſhall happen to be done; and that the Lords of the Towns of the ſame Marſh be always aiding, and call'd beyond the ſame Watercourſe towards Suſſex, if they will be there, and the Jurors and whole Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh. It is alſo ordain'd, from henceforth, that the ſame common Bailiff of the King in Romney Marſh, be Overſeer of the ſame Bailiff and Jurors in the Marſh beyond the Watercourſe towards Suſſex, and all the Jurors on either ſide of the ſaid Watercourſe choſen, when it ſhall be needful, do cauſe to aſſemble, to execute their Ordinances and Conſiderations for Safety of the Lands of the ſame Marſhes; ſo that always on either ſides of the ſaid Watercourſe, they ſtand to the Ordinance and Conſideration of the ſaid Jurors, for the leſs Damage and better Safety of the Land, any Cuſtom notwithſtanding; ſaving always the Tenor of the Charter of our Lord the King, granted to the Commonalty of the ſame Marſh, and the Ordinance of the ſaid Henry de Bathonia, to endure for ever in its own Force.

Before William de Walleynes and his Fellows aſſigned to over-ſee the Walls and Waterganges in the County of Kent; On Monday next enſuing the Feaſt of St. Mildred the Virgin, at New-Church, in the 2d Year of the Reign of King Edwnrd, Son of Kind Edward:

It was ordain'd of common Aſſent of the Lords of the Marſh of Lydd and Oxeney, and on the Part of our Lord the King commanded, that henceforth the common Bailiff of our Lord the King in Romney Marſh, do overſee the ſame Bailiffs and Jurors in the ſame Marſhes of Lydd and Oxeney, them, and alſo 24 Jurors in Romney Marſh when need ſhall be, he cauſe to meet at fit Places, to conſult of Ordinances, and make there Awards, for ſafety of the Lands of the ſaid Marſhes; So that they always ſtand to the Ordinance and Cuſtom of the ſaid Jurors, for the leaſt Hurt and beſt Safety of the Land, any Cuſtom notwithſtanding. Saving always the Tenor of the Charter of our Lord the King, granted to the Commonalty of the ſaid Marſh, and alſo the Ordinance of the Lord Henry de Bathonia, and the ſaid John de Lovetot and his Fellows, which ſhall continue in their Strength.

The Ordinance of the Lord Thomas de Lodelow, Juſtice of our Lord the King, and his Fellows, at Crowthorn, on Monday next after the Feaſt.

In the 33d Year of the Reign of King Edward IIId. after the Conqueſt, by Virtue of a Commiſſion of the Lord the King to them directed, whoſe Tenor follows in theſe Words.

The King to his Well-beloved and Faithful Thomas Lodelow, Robert Belknap, and Thomas Culpeper, Greeting.

BY the grievous Complaint of the Reverend Father, Simon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and others, having Lands within the Precinct of Romney Marſh, we are advertiſed, that whereas all their Lands lie nigh to the Sea-Coaſts, and without continually keeping the Walls, Gutters, Ditches, and other Defences, as well for avoiding the Sea Water, as excluding the Freſh Waters there made, by no means can be defended and ſaved: For which, in the Time of the Lord Henry, late King of England, our Great Grandfather, by Henry de Bathonia and his Fellows, Juſtices of the ſame our Grandfather, to overſee the Walls, Ditches, and Sluces, and the Defence thereof, and to cauſe to be made and repaired; amongſt others it was ordain'd, That whoſoever of the Tenants and Men Reſident within the ſaid Precinct, whom the greater Part of the Lords, having Rule within the ſaid Precinct would chuſe, ſhould be Bailiff, to levy the Aſſeſments, for Reparation and Upholding the Walls, Sluices, Ditches, and Defences aforeſaid: As in the ſame Ordinance is more apparent; and albeit according to the ſame Ordinances, John at Leſe, Tenant and Reſident within the ſame Precinct, to the ſaid Office of Bailiff, to levy the Aſſeſments aforeſaid, by the Lords in the ſame Marſh in Form aforeſaid within that Precinct, was Choſen and Deputed: Notwithſtanding Matthew at More, and others his Confederates, by their falſe Deceits, being Confederate and Knit together to make another Bailiff, there by their own Aſſent, which might be partial to his Friends, and unduly burthen others againſt the ſaid Ordinances, did ſo terrify the ſaid John, and cruelly threaten him, and otherwiſe hinder him, that he cannot nor dare take upon him the Office accordingly; and and ſo in Default of the ſame Bailiff, all the ſaid Marſh, by overflowing of Waters daily coming, remaineth in Peril to be ſpoiled, unleſs ſpeedy Redreſs in this behalf be had.

We reſpecting the Hurt and Peril, which as well to us as to all our Kingdom, and eſpecially in thoſe Parts, by overflowing hereof, unleſs meet Defence to exclude and avoid the ſame Waters be done, may happen; and willing to prevent theſe Hurts and Dangers, have aſſigned 3 or 2 of you to overſee and repair the Walls, Sluices, Ditches, and their Defences made in the ſame Marſh; and to overſee the ſame Ordinances: and in Caſe that the Ordinances, for the Safety and Defence of the ſaid Marſh be found inſufficient for the ſame overflowing, to correct and amend thoſe Ordinances, and if need ſhall be, to ordain anew ſuch, as the ſaid Marſh may be defended againſt the ſame Waters, from henceforth, what Chances ſoever ſhall happen, and for grevious Puniſhments againſt thoſe, which againſt the Form of the Ordinances by you, 3 or 2 of you, to be done, in any wiſe, will not come, or will forſake your Decrees: And that you cauſe the ſame Ordinances to be proclaimed, that they be for ever circumſpectly obſerved in thoſe Parts; and that ye cauſe all things elſe to be performed, which for the Safety and Defence of the ſaid Marſh, and excluding and avoiding the ſame Waters, ſhall be needful and fit. And alſo to enquire by the Oath of Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County of Kent, of the Confederacies, Covens, and Allegations aforeſaid, and alſo of the Treſpaſſes and Contempts to us by the ſaid Matthew and his Complices in that behalf made, and of the Names of thoſe Adherents, and that ye hear and determine the ſame Confederacies, Covens, Allegations, Treſpaſſes, and Contempts aforeſaid, to be heard and determin'd according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of our Realm. And therefore we command you, that at certain Days and Places, which you, 3 or 2 of you, ſhall limit in that behalf; ye hear and determine all and ſingular the ſame Buſineſs, and the Confederacies, Covens, Allegations, Treſpaſſes, and Contempts aforeſaid, in Form aforeſaid.

And that ye do further that which to Juſtice ſhall appertain according to the Law and Cuſtom of our Realm. Reſerving to us the other Amerciaments thereby accruing.

For we have commanded our Sheriff of the ſame County, that at certain Days and Places which you, 3 or 2 of you, ſhall appoint him, he cauſe to come before you, 3 or 2 of you, ſo many of ſuch Honeſt and Lawful Men of his Bailywick, by whom the Truth of the Matter in the Premiſes may be known and enquired. In Witneſs whereof, &c. Witneſs, &c. at Weſtminſter the 7th Day of February in the Year above-ſaid.

By which Mandate, the ſaid Thomas, Robert, and Thomas, in the Year, Day and Place aforeſaid, by conſent of the Lords, Bailiffs, 24 Jurors and Commonalty of the ſame Marſh, that is to ſay, by John Francis, the Attorney of Lord Simon of Meopham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; the Abbot of St. Auguſtin of Canterbury; the Prior of Chriſt's-Church of Canterbury; Simon, Maſter of the Houſe of God's-Gifts; Edmond Staplegate, Lord of Bilſington the Leſs, and other Lords hereunto ſpecially choſen, with certain alſo of the Commonalty, to wit by William of Ecchingham, and Stepehen de Valeyns Chriſtus, William de Horne, and James de Capele, hereunto for the ſaid Commonalty Elected, have ordain'd and eſtabliſh'd, that the common Bailiff of Romney Marſh which hath Lands, and is alſo Reſident there, be choſen by the common aſſent of the Lords of the Towns of the ſame Marſh, or by their ſpecial Attorneys; and where the greater Part of them in Number ſhall agree, their Choice ſhall ſtand in keeping Aſſemblies at Deme-Church, or New-Church, or other meet Places within the Precinct of the ſaid Marſh, in quindena of St. Michael yearly, by the Summons of the ſaid Bailiff, except within that Year for ſome neceſſary and reaſonable Cauſe, that Bailiff ought to be put out, and another ſet in his Place; and if he which is choſen being preſent, will not take upon him that Office, he ſhall be forthwith amerced in 40 s. which the ſucceding Bailiff may cauſe to be levied of his Goods and Chattels, for the common Benefit of the ſame Marſh. And ſo let there be a new Choice made forthwith of another Bailiff, which will allow of the Oath and Office, and let him have for his Labour the Fine to be levied, which happen of the Aſſeſments; and alſo the Double of all his Tenths laid out for the Negligence of others whatſoever. And if he which is choſen be afterwards hindred by any, whereby after he is choſen, he dare the leſs take upon him that Office, forthwith thoſe Hinderers ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed by the ſame Chuſers, as the ſame Bailiff ſhould be puniſhed, if he would refuſe the ſame Oath and Office.

And if it happen, that he in the Time of his Election ſhall be abſent, he ſhall be forthwith diſtrain'd by the preceding Bailiff of the ſaid Marſh, by all his Goods and Chattels; and they ſhall be beſtowed in Places meet and accuſtomed, and there detain'd until he ſhall come to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Abbot of St. Auguſtin, the Prior of Chriſt's-Church in Canterbury, which for the Time ſhall be, or to one of them, which for the Time ſhall be, and will perform the Oath, and thereupon ſhall bring their Letters marked with their Seals to the preceeding Bailiff, and ſhall do the ſame within Six Days next after the Choice made, otherwiſe let him be payned as is aforeſaid; and ſtraitway let a new Choice be made; at which princial Aſſembly the ſame common Collectors of all the preceeding general Aſſeſments, and alſo the Defrayers thereof, ſhall Accompt before the ſaid Lords or their Attorneys, if they will be preſent, unto the Bailiff, 24 Jurors, and Commonalty of the ſame Marſh. And let the Accompt be done by Indentures made betwen them and the Bailiff, and 24 Jurors and Commonalty of the ſame Marſh; let the Accompt of the Bailiff for thoſe things which happen to him, be done in the ſame Manner; and if any of the ſaid 24 Jurors do make Default in the ſaid principal Aſſemby, unleſs he hath a reaſonable excuſe, ſhall be amerced in 12 Pence, to the uſe of the Commonalty, to be levied by the Bailiff. And if it happen that any of the 24 Jurors depart within the Year, or ought to be put out of his Place, others muſt be choſen, and ſet in the principal Aſſembly, by the Lords of the Fees, the Bailiff, the 24 Jurors, and the Commonalty, of the beſt Diſcretion and Ability of the ſame Marſh, to make up the ſame Number of 24. In the like manner alſo let it be done, touching the Collectors and Defrayers; ſo that they may not be choſen of the ſaid Jurors, if the ſame Lords will be preſent. And if any of the ſaid 24 Jurors, Collectors, or Diſburſers, ſhall be choſen, and will not be ſworn, let him be amerced in 20 s. to be levied as is aforeſaid, and forthwith others choſen and charged in their ſtead. And if the ſaid 24 Jurats ſhall be ſummon'd whereſoever within the Precinct of the ſaid Marſh, at a common or ſpecial Meeting, where all but Eight or Ten of them at leaſt were abſent; ſo as Judgment and Award for Safety of the ſaid Marſh may not be made for Safety of the ſame Marſh, in default of the greater Number being away, every of them being abſent, ſhall be amerced by the Bailiff in 6 d. as is aforeſaid to be levied. Of which and other like things the ſaid Bailiff ſhall Accompt in the principal Aſſembly aforeſaid. Alſo every of the ſaid 24 Jurors ſhall Swear, that he will make true Judgment and Awards with his Fellows, Jurats, without ſparing any, Rich or Poor, as well touching taking Diſtreſſes, as of the Walls, Lands, Waterganges, Sewers, Ditches and Gutters, Bridges and other Impediments whatſoever, happening within the Precinct of the ſame Marſh, to be removed, and to puniſh Offences; and that they be attendant on the Bailiff of the ſaid Marſh; the Diſtreſſes taken and detain'd by the ſpace of 3 Days, and more, to Praiſe and Sell in Places accuſtomed; and that he cauſe all the Judgments and Awards by them made to be enrol'd, and the Indentures thereof to be made between them and the Bailiff of the ſame Marſh, which for the Time ſhall be. And the Collectors and Defrayers choſen as is aboveſaid ſhall Swear, that they will truly Levy, Collect and Diſpoſe, and alſo Accompt of all Aſſeſments impoſed by the Lords, Bailiffs, and 24 Jurors, or the greater part of them; and in like manner let it be made and obſerved in all Waterganges within the Precinct of the ſaid Marſh, and before the Lords of the Towns if they will be preſent. Alſo the Bailiff ſhall Swear, that he ſhall make true Execution of the Judgments and Arbitrements of the ſame 24 Jurors, and of thoſe things which appertain to them to judge and award. And that he in proper Perſon, all the Collectors and Defrayers, as well the general as ſeveral Aſſeſments, as is aforeſaid, ſhall charge by Oath faithfully to Levy, Collect, Beſtow, and Accompt. And that in proper Perſon, he overſee all the Walls, Lands, Waterganges, Sewers, Gutters and Bridges, when it ſhall be needful, at leaſt twice in the Year, once in the Month of January, and the 2d time in the Month of June. And that he ſhall deliver to his Succeſſor all the Evidences which be in Cuſtody, as well Charters of the Kings of England, containing Liberties and Cuſtoms of the ſame Marſh, as Rolls of Judgments, Conſiderations and Awards by the aforeſaid 24 Jurors, with all the proceedings of the Accompts, Collections, and Expences whatſoever in his time had: And that the Clerk of this Bailiff, may have for his Labour of the Commonalty of the ſame Marſh 6 s. 8 d. And that it be not lawful henceforth to make Dams, or Fords, or other Impediments in any Lands, Waterganges, Ditches, or common Conduits in the aforeſaid Marſh, whereby the right Courſe of Water may in any wiſe may be hindred. And if any do it, and it be teſtify'd by the Bailiff and 6 of the Jurors, or by the Commonalty of the Conduit where Damage ſhall be done, let him be preſently amerced according to the Quantity of the Offence, by the ſaid Bailiff and 24 Jurats, and forthwith levied for common Benefit as aforeſaid. And nevertheleſs, if any other then the Commonalty ſhall be hurt thereby, and the ſame be proved by Teſtimony of the Bailiff, and of 6 of the Jury, let him recompence the damnified: Alſo they Ordained and Eſtabliſhed, that every Aſſeſment in the ſame Marſh ſhould be proclaim'd in certain publick Places, and that Day of Payment thereof be aſſigned and proclaimed, that none Ignorance may excuſe, when, and in what Place it ought to be Paid. Alſo they have Ordained and Eſtabliſhed, that every Acre, for the Walls and Waterganges, be bought for 40 s. And that it be not lawful for any one to take away Labourers being in common Work, for his own private Buſineſs, nor to keep them in any other Place, until the ſame Work be finiſhed; and if any one be convicted thereof, by Teſtimony of the Bailiff and Jurors in common Aſſembly, he ſhall be amerced in 10 s. which muſt be levied forthwith by the ſaid Bailiff to the common Profit as above, &c. Alſo they Ordain'd and Eſtabliſh'd, that all the Conduits within the ſaid Marſh, thro' all the Lands and Tenements in every Watergange be ſo kept, that is to ſay, that the Water run not down out of the right Courſe to the Damage of any body, under pain of the Quantity of the Offence, to be levied by the Bailiff, to the uſe of the Commonalty, when any one is thereupon convicted by Teſtimony of the Bailiff and 6 of the Jurors in a common Aſſembly.

And becauſe of old, it is granted by our Lord the King, that all the Lands near to the Sea Coaſts, be kept by Laws and Ordinances, Statutes and Cuſtoms of the ſaid Marſh of Romney, from the Iſle of Thanet, unto Pevenſis, as well in the County of Kent, as in the County of Suſſex, it may be lawful for the ſaid Bailiff and 24 Jurors, to ask and have their reaſonable Coſts, of thoſe which will bring to Places, whether they be Lords, or of the Commonalty, where they ought to make their Ordinances according to the Law of the Sea Coaſt, as well in Walls, as in Waterganges, Gutters, Sewers, Fiſhings, and other things whatſoever touching the ſame Law. Alſo they have Ordained and Eſtabliſhed, that if any make Reſcues upon the Bailiff of the Marſh, or his Miniſters, for any Diſtreſſes whatſoever taken upon whomſoever, by occaſion of the ſame Articles, or of any Ordinance made or to be made for the Benefit of the ſame Marſh, and thereupon by Teſtimony of the ſaid Bailiff, and 6 or 8 of the Jurors of the ſaid 24, or of the Conduit, where the Diſtreſs ſhall happen to be taken, he be convicted, let him be pay'nd by Amercement of 20 s. to be levied to the uſe of the Commonalty by the Bailiff as aforeſaid. In like manner let it be done, in Places where the Law of the Sea-Borders runneth 'twixt the Iſle of Thanet and Pevenſis, or in the County of Kent, or in the County of Suſſex.

Of the RIVERS of KENT.

AS 'tis a very great Advantange to any County to be well water'd with Rivers, Brooks, &c. So 'tis a much greater to have ſome of thoſe Rivers Navigable, and to have the Benefit of Water-Carriage to and from the Metropolitical City, or Chief Mart, or Place of Trade. In which reſpect, Kent is more happy than I think any County in Great-Britain. For beſides its nearneſs to London, its being encompaſs'd on two Sides of it by the Sea, it hath the Benefit of two noble Navigable Rivers, the Thames and the Medway: The one running 40 Miles together by its Northern Edge; and the other taking a Navigable Courſe of nearly as great a length in the Midſt of it.

1. Of

1. Of the THAMES. This famous River is mentioned by Julius Cæsar, in the 5th Book of his Commentaries, by the Name of Tamesis; and by Dion Cass. Lib. 40. who calls it ταμεσας. But indeed some of the Copies of Ptolomy seem to be much corrupted; for in some its Name is written Famissa, and in others Hymensus. And the Learned Editor of the last Edition of Cambden's Britannia in English, in his Notes on Wiltshire, hath shewn, That Tems, Temis, or Thames, was the old and constant Name of this River, before its Conjunction with the Isis, notwithstanding the common Notion of Scholars hath been otherwise. And he takes the Name to be Originally British; because one may observe several Rivers in divers Parts of England of almost the same Name with it; as Tame in Staffordshire, Theme in Herefordshire, and Tamar in Cornwal, &c. and Mr. Llwyd affirms it to have the same Signification with the British Taff, which is the Name of many Rivers in Wales: and he saith the Romans did use to change the Pronunciation of the British (F) or (V) into (M) as the Latin Word Demetia, is in Welch Dyfed; Firmus, is Firu; Amnis, is Avon; and Terminus, Turvin, &c.

Mr. Cambden also hath observed, that there is no River in Europe into which the Tide flows with so long a Course, as it doth into this River of Thames: For indeed it flows up in this Noble River as far as Richmond in Surrey; which is a mighty Advantage, both for the Carriage of Vessels on its Surface, and also for preserving its Water sweet and wholsome, and improving the Taste of its various and numerous Shoals of Fish.

And what a glorious View of Trade, Plenty and Riches doth this mighty River afford, in the Ships of almost all Nations in the World, which lye from Billingsgate on each side of it to the Point; and to Ratcliff-Dock? How are the Kentish Banks of it adorn'd with most useful and convenient Docks to build and refit Ships, both for the Royal Navy of Great Britain, and for the Service of our British Merchants? What a Noble Prospect doth that mighty Hospital of Greenwich, the Park and Town, afford? Which yet is exceeded by another from thence down upon the River; exhibiting not only a perpetual Variety in the Course of the Ships, Vessels, and Boats up and down the River; but also of the City of London itself, and of all the Country adjacent on each side of the Thames.

When one contemplates this, 'tis impossible to forget the Beautiful Description of this River given by Sir John Denham, in these Words:

Thames the most lov'd of all the Oceans Sons
By his old Sire, to his Embraces runs;
Hasting to pay his Tribute to the Sea,
Like Mortal Life to meet Eternity.
Tho' with those Streams he no resemblance hold,
Whose Foam is Amber, and whose Gravel Gold:
His genuine and less guilty Wealth t' explore,
Search not his Bottom, but survey his Shore.
O'e which he kindly spreads his spacious Wing,
And hatches Plenty for th' ensuing Spring:
Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
Like Mothers who their Children overlay;
Nor with a sudden and impetuous Wave,
Like Kings profuse, resumes the Wealth he gave.
No unexpected Inundations spoil
The Mowers Hopes, nor mock the Plowman's Toil.
But Godlike his unwearied Bounty flows,
First loves to do, then loves the Good he does
Nor are his Blessings to his Banks confin'd,
But free and common as the Sea and Wind;
When he to boast, or to dispense his Stores,
Full of the Tribute of his grateful Shores;
Visits the World, and in his flying Towers Brings home to us, and makes both Indies ours.
O could I flow like thee, and make thy Stream,
My great Example, as it is my Theme!
Tho' deep, yet clear; tho' gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without Rage, without ore-flowing full!
Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose Fame's in thine like lesser Currents lost;
Thy Nobler Stream shall visit Jove's Abodes,
To shine among the Stars, and bathe the Gods.

After this River hath washed Deptford and Greenwich, it goes on to Woolwich, where, like as there is at Deptford, is also another very convenient Dock, for building and repairing Ships for the Royal Navy; of both which I shall give a particular Description in its proper Place.

Next it goes on to Plumpstede; in the Mershes belonging to which, over against Lesnes, was formerly a very great Breach, in the Bank of the Thames; as is described in Simondson's Map of Kent. But after some Time it was filled, and made up again, as I hope the present one at Dagenham, on the other Side of Thames will shortly be; or else much Damage must ensue to the Navigation of this mighty River: For all Breaches both detach away, for a Time, Water from the River, and also bring into it, and lodge there, just as much Slub, Earth, &c. as if taken out of the Bottom of the River, would fill up the Chanels, which the Water makes within the Breach. And indeed, if the Banks of all Rivers be not kept up in good Order, the Water will wash away by Degrees the Earth from their Sides, and deposit it at the Bottom of their Chanels, which will render them by Degrees more Shallow, than they would otherwise be.

And I am informed by good Hands, That this very River was found to be above Four Feet more Shallow or Shoal, in the Year 1676, than it was at the Restoration: And that King Charles the IId, who often went down this River, and was very careful to preserve its Chanel, found it to have swarved up above Three Feet in his Time.

If this be the Case, and the usual Method of clearing the Bottom (by only Two Men in a Lighter) should be found, as it seems to be, insufficient for that Purpose, it will behove the Government to take some speedy Care about it, to remove all the present, and hinder all future Obstacles or Detriments to the Navigation of this River.

Or else great Inconveniences may arise to the Ships of the Navy Royal, as well as to those of our Merchants, in their winding up and down in this River. For if it lost Four Feet of its Depth in 16 Years, over-against Deptford, as is above suggested; What may it not have lost in above 40 Years since that Time?

I have heard that there were Two Surveys taken of this River, by Order of King Charles the IId. One, of the General Depths of it, in its several Parts below Bridge; which was performed by the Care of Sir Jonas Moore.

The other was of the Encroachments made upon it; and this was done by Mr. Collins; and a very good Draught of it was made by his accurate Hand.

I suppose the Commissioners of the Navy, or the Master and Brethren of the Trinity-House may have seen, or may have both these in their Possession. And I hope I need not use many Words to tell them what good Uses may be made of them, if compared with a new Survey, which seems necessary now to be taken.

After this, the River goes on to Earith, a little beyond which, it receives in one Stream united, the Rivers Cray and the Darent; as it had before done the Ravensbourn at Deptford. Next it proceeds ceeds to Greenhithe, Northfleete, and ſo to Graveſend; below which, over-againſt Higham, and Cliff in Kent, it forms the Road called the Hope: After which, receiving a ſmall Brook or two, it runs directly away for the Nore; and there joining with the Water of the River Medway, empties it ſelf into the German Ocean.

How to ſail up into the River from the Sea, either from the North, Eaſt, or South, I ſhall particularly ſhew, when I come to deſcribe the Sea Coaſts of Kent, in the Natural Hiſtory Part.

2. The RAVENSBOURNE. As to the Reaſon of the Name of this pretty Rivulet, I can find nothing: But one would think, that by calling the next River the Cray; and the Town of Aylesford upon the Medway, Eglesford and Eyleſford, as 'tis often written in old Charters; that they had ſome fancy to liken theſe three Rivers to the Raven, the Crow, and the Eagle, but why, I know not.

This Bourn riſes at Hollywoodhill in Keſton Pariſh, not far from the famous old Camp; and runs from thence by Heyes, to Bromley; where on the Right Hand it takes in a ſmall Brook, as it doth another on the ſame Side, about half way between Bromley and Leweſham: At the North End of which latter Place it receives another little Brook, which comes down from Leigh, and thence paſſing under Deptford-Bridge, diſcharges it ſelf into the Thames, in that Pariſh.

In its ſhort Courſe, it turns ſeveral Mills; and in particular at South End, moves the Engines by which the famous Mr. Ephraim How makes the beſt Knife-Blades in England; and who hath built himſelf a pretty and convenient Houſe here.

3. The CRAY; perhaps from Crecca, a Creek: As Creeklade in Wiltſhire is called Creccanford; and we have a Place upon this River, which is called Creccanford or Crayford.

It riſes at Newell, in Orpington Pariſh; and runs by St. Mary Cray, Paul's Cray, Foots Cray, and North Cray, to Bexley, and thence to Craford; a little beyond which, joining with the next River the Darent, it runs with it by the New River into the Thames, through Dartford Creek.

4. The DARENT, or Dærent, often called in the Saxon Tærent; and Dartford, Tærentford: And therefore perhaps takes its Name from the Saxon Tær; which ſignifies Flowing; and this probably from the Britiſh Dour or Dowre, Water: And Wendan to wind along, whence Went: For 'tis ſometimes written Darwent: And Leland ſaith Dourwent; i. e. Clear Water.

This River riſeth, as Kilburn ſaith, at Squirries in the Pariſh of Weſtram; (Hollingſhead ſaith at Tunbridge) and by Titſey runs to Braſtede, where it receives on each Side, a ſmall Brook; thence it flows to Sundrick, and thence to Chepſtede; and a little beyond that, receiving a ſmall Rill which comes down from a Place called Bradbourn; and after that Two others, one from Seale, and another from Kemſing, goes on to Ottford, and thence to Shoreham, Lullingſtone, Aynsford, Horton-Kirby, Franks, Sutton-at-Hone, Darent, and Dartford; a little beyond which Town taking into its Channel the River Cray, it diſembogues into the Thames, at a Place called Dartford Creek; by which Veſſels and Boats can go up a little way with Goods from London.

Of this River thus ſings our famous Spencer. Fairy Queen, Book IV. Cant. 11. where mentioning the Rivers attending on the Thames:

— And the ſtill Darent, in whoſe Waters clean,
Ten thouſand Fiſhes play, and deck his pleaſant Stream.

On this River were anciently Two eminent Mills, ſaith Lambard, one for making all Sorts of Paper, and the other for drawing Iron into Wires. And there are ſome Paper-Mills upon it now.

5. The MEDWAY. This Lambard thinks took its Name either from being in the Middle of the Kingdom of Kent; or elſe from its running between the Two Biſhopricks in this County; for Midweg ſignifies Midway; as Mid-dæg is Mid-day: Unleſs, ſaith he, ſome will rather have it derived from Medſæg, becauſe of the fruitful Meadows which it maketh all along in its Courſe. Mr. Camden judges its old Britiſh Name to have been Vaga; and that the Saxons added the word Med to it; which perhaps may ſerve to reconcile an odd Name of this River to us; for Hollingſhead, Vol. 2. p. 52. ſaith, the old Name of the Medway, in ſome Saxon Charters, is Wedring; which probably may be a Miſtake for Medring or Medering: But he ſaith farther, that under this Denomination it gave Name to a Town, formerly ſtanding between Malling and Eaſt Farley: He thinks alſo that Waterdown Foreſt in Suſſex was ſo called (as if Wederington) from that old Name of this River. But ſince all allow, that Rocheſter was called in Latin Durobrevis, from the Britiſh Dourbryf, a ſwift Stream; why ſhould we not think That the ancient Britiſh Name of this River. But enough of its Name.

This eminent River hath Four Heads.

1. One about Crowherſt in Surrey; whence the Stream, which ſeems anciently to have been called the Eden, running to Edenbridge, paſſes thence to Hever, and after that to Chiddingſtone: A little beyond which, it receives into it another Branch of the Medway, which comes out of Suſſex from Waterdown Foreſt; another that comes from Cowden out of Surrey, and a ſmall Brook which comes alſo from about Speldherſt and Bydeborough, and is called Bentham Brook: After which it goes by Penſhurſt and Leigh to Tunbridge Town; where it divaricates into ſeveral Streams; and a little beyond it takes in a Rill, which comes from the South Frith. When it comes over againſt Hadloe, it receives another Brook into it, which is compoſed of Four Branches; one of which comes from Shibbourn, another from Ightham, which is called the Shod; a third from the North Weſt Side of Camphersfwood; and the Fourth, a little to the Southward of Oxenheath. Between Hadloe and Brand-bridge it receives a Brook running from Badſell near Capell; and after you are over the Bridge, parts and makes a ſmall Iſland, called the Woodfalls: After which it receives the Weſtern Stream of the Twiſt, and goes on to Twiford Bridge, and ſo to Yalding, where it receives that Branch of it which comes from Great Chart and Pluckley, &c. Not long after this, taking in another Brook which comes down from Mereworth and Watringbury, it paſſes by Teſton and Weſt Farley; and thence going between Barming and Eaſt Farley, and receiving into its Chanel the Looſe, a fine Brook riſing at Langley, runs to Maidſtone, where it begins to become a perfect Meander.

The Fair Medwaga, that with Wanton Pride, Forms Silver Mazes with her crooked Tide.
Blackmore.

Whoſe wanton Tide in wreathing Volumes flows,
Still forming Reedy Iſlands as it goes.
And in Meanders to the Neighbouring Plain,
The liquid Serpent draws its Silver Train.
Idem.

For

For after having run a little way North to Allington, and there receiving on the Right Hand a little Brook, which deſcends from Boxley, it turns Weſtward to Aylesford, and ſo to Myllhall; where receiving on the left a little Stream from Eaſt Malling, it runs Northward again by Burham; and juſt before it comes to Snodland takes in Two Rivulets; a pretty large one, which comes down from Wrotham, Addington, and Laybourn; and a ſmall one, which comes from Comford Park (that was) to Birling. Hence it goes on leaving Halling on the Left, and Woldham on the Right, to Cuckſtone, and ſo to Rocheſter-Bridge. After which, winding on between Friendsbury-Hill and Chatham, it runs to Upnor Caſtle; and then turning Eaſtward, about a Mile and an half, and at laſt Southward, it goes to Gillingham; when turning about Two Miles and an half Eaſtward, and then as much Northward, goes Eaſtward again one Mile and an half; then it winds Southward about a Mile, and then Northward about Two Miles; and after this Eaſtward about Three Miles, it at laſt turns Northward again, and runs out into the Sea, between the Iſles of Shepey and Grean. After 'tis gone paſt Gillingham, it receives ſome ſmall Brooks on both Sides, which come from Hoo, Stoke, and Allhallows, on the Weſtern; and from Unchurch, Halſtoe, and Iwade, on the Eaſtern Side: And is alſo, before it come to Sheerneſs, joined by the Water which runs from Queensborough to Kings-Ferry, Elmley, and Harty; and ſo out into the Sea, at the Mouth of the Eaſt Swalle: As its other Mouth between Grean and Sheerneſs, is called the Weſt Swalle. The Water between Shepey and the main Land of Kent is called the Welle; and in the Statute of 4. K. H. 7. the Water of Yendall is mentioned, but ſpelled wrong; it ſhould be the Water of Yenlade or Inlade; for 'tis now called the North Inlet.

2. The Second Head of this famous River is from a forked Stream, which riſes one way at Fant, and another at Stewards Mead in Suſſex, and joining together about Beyham-Abbey, runs afterwards to Lamberhurſt; where it receives a Three-forked Stream; the middlemoſt of which is called the Theyſe, and runs down from Theyſhurſt in Suſſex; the Weſtern one comes from Wadehurſt; and the Eaſtern from Flymwell; and theſe after joining run to Beule-Bridge, and ſo by Scotney into the former Stream, which comes from Bayham-Abbey: Which now goes on to towards Horſmonden, where it receives the Beule, a ſmall Brook which riſes from Two Heads, about Bedgebury and Glaſſenbury, and paſſes by Goudhurſt: From Horſmonden it flows to ——— Bridge, and thence to a Place called the Twiſt, which I believe is a Corruption from Teyſe, the Name of the Stream before its Partition; and here it ſpreads into two Parts: One of which runs to the Weſt towards Twiford-Bridge, and ſo into that Branch of the Medway which comes from Tunbridge, as is above deſcribed; and the other runs Eaſterly to Marden, and Huntonford, and thence turning Weſtward, empties it ſelf into the Tunbridge River at Yalding.

3. A Third Branch of the Medway riſes not far from Goldwell in Great Chart, which joining with another little Stream running down from Pluckley, goes to a Place called Romeden, and thence to Smarden and Uddenham-Bridge: Soon after which it receives a Stream on the left, which comes from Cranebrook; and another on the Right Hand, compoſed of Two Brooks, which run into it from Egerton and Boctton-Malherbe: Hence it goes on to Hedcorne, where it receives a forked Brook, running down from about Ulcomb and Eaſt Sutton; and after having paſſed Newbridge, receives on the Left a Rill which comes from Comdens Hill beyond Staplehurſt; and then goes to Hockingbury-Bridge; and taking in on the Right a ſmall Brook which comes down from Chart-Sutton, it paſſes to Herſfield-Bridge: After which, receiving another ſmall Brook which comes from Boctton-Montchenſie, it goes under Stilebridge to Huntonford, and ſo thence into the ſecond Branch of the Medway laſt mentioned.

4. The Fourth Branch of this River riſes at Biggenheath in Leneham, and taking in a Brook or two from Harrietſham on one Hand, and Bromfield on the other, it proceeds to Leeds Caſtle; and thence being augmented by two other little Streams, which run down from Hollingbourn and Allington Cobham, it flows to Berſtede, and from thence through Maidſtone Town, into the Body of the great River, and with it goes on to Rocheſter, &c.

Hollingſhead ſaith, This laſt Branch was formerly mighty beneficial to the Clothiers; for lying ſo near the Fullers Earth, they uſed to bring their Cloaths from Ten Miles round about to be fulled here. But now I think there are no Fulling-Mills hereabouts.

The River Medway, the aforeſaid Hiſtorian ſaith, was once ſo famous for Sturgeon, that the King, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, had each a Duty out of it.

In this River lies always the greateſt Part, and the largeſt Ships of the Royal Navy; between Chatham-Dock and Gillingham: The Manner of their Moorings ſhall be conſidered in its proper Place; only give me leave to ſuggeſt here, that this River ſeems capable of being well ſecured againſt the Invaſion of any Enemy, very eaſily; That is, by keeping the Forts which are already upon it in good Order, and letting ſome Marines, or other Soldiers, conſtantly to do Duty there; neither of which being now done, they are of no manner of Uſe: And eſpecially if other Forts were built at Elmley, and at King's-Ferry, to ſecure the Paſſage of the Eaſt Swalle: As alſo at the Eaſt Point of the Iſle of Shepey, at the Muſcle Bank in Lird Reach, at the Point of Sheerneſs, and in the Iſle of Grain.

And another Fort might alſo be built to ſecure the Paſſage into Gillingham Creek.

In Praiſe of this River, thus ſings the Famous Spencer, Book IV. Cap. 11.

XLV.

Then came the Bride, the loving Medway came,
Clad in a Veſture of unknown Gear,
And uncouch Faſhion; yet her well became;
That ſeem'd like Silver ſpringled here and there,
With glittering Spangs, that did like Stars appear,
And wav'd upon like Water Chamelot,
To hide the Metal, which yet every where
Bewrayed it ſelf, to let Men plainly wot,
It was no mortal Work, that ſeem'd, and yet was not.

XLVI.

Her goodly Locks a-down her Back did flow
Unto her Waſte, with Flowers be ſcattered,
The which Ambroſial Odours forth did throw:
To all about, and all her Shoulders ſpread,
As a new Spring: And likewiſe on her Head,
A Chapelet of ſundry Flow'rs ſhe wore,
From under which the dewy Humour ſhed,
Did trickly down her Hair, like to the Hore
Congealed little Drops, which do the Morn adore.

XLVII.

On her two pretty Handmaids did attend
One call'd the Theyſe, the other call'd the Crane;
Which on her waited, Things amiſs to mend,
And both behind held up her ſpreading Train:

Under

Under the which her Feet appeared plain,
Her Silver Feet fair waſh'd againſt this Day;
And her before there paſſed Pages twain,
Both clad in Colours like, and like Array,
The Down, and eke the Frith, both which prepar'd
(her way.

6. The STOURE. The ancient Britiſh Name of this River ſeems to have been Dour: Whence the City of Canterbury was called Durwhern; and from hence doubtleſs came the Latin Name Durovernum, Dorobernia, &c. Sture, or Stowre ſome think was given it for its Rapidity; tho' others judge it took that Name from Æſtuarium, and was called at firſt Æſture, and by Degrees Sture, or Stoure, of which I have ſaid ſomething in the beginning of this Hiſtory. Pliny mentions a River in the Alps, (a) of the Name of Stura: And in England we have ſeveral others ſo called, as in Dorſetſhire, Eſſex, &c.

(a) Lib. 3. c. 13.

Our Kentiſh Stoure, as well as the Medway, is accounted by ſome to have four Heads. But I chuſe rather to make two Stoures, the Greater, and the Leſſer.

The Greater Stoure hath two Heads. 1. At Streatwell in Leneham: Which Brook receiving another ſmall one, on the Left Hand about Calehill, runs to Little Chart; after which taking in another Brook, which comes down from Charing, it proceeds on to Hothfield, and about Half-way between that Place and Aſhford, is increaſed by another Stream, which runs down from Weſtwell: From hence going on between Aſhford and Willesborough, it turns away North; and being ſomething augmented by two little Brooks which run into it from Kennington and Eaſt-Well; it flows pretty ſtrait on to Wye, probably ſo called for its Situation on the Gwy, or Wye in Britiſh. The River runs next to Godmerſham, Shansford-Bridge, Chartham, Milton, Thannington, and ſo to Canterbury: And after having paſs'd thro' that ancient City, it runs by Sturry, and thence between Fordwich and Weſtbere, to Stodmarſh, Grove-Ferry, and Sarre, and then taking in a Brook on the Left Hand, which comes from Chiſtlet, it runs into the Sea at New-Haven.

2. This River Stoure, hath another Head at Poſtling-Church, whence the Stream runs to Stanford, and thro' Weſtenhanger-Park; a little after which it receives a Brook which riſes at Stowting, and runs down into it by Horton-Priory, and Sellinge: going on from Sellinge, it receives a ſmall River from Scot's-Hall, and proceeding on its Courſe by Merſham and Sevington, it receives a little Brook, which runs down from Pickerſdane, near the Pariſh of Brook: And thence it flows between Aſhford and Willenborough into the firſt Stream.

The Leſſer, or Eaſtern Stoure, riſes at Lyminge, and flowing directly to Eleham, and thence to Wigmere, goes on between Kingſton and Berham to Biſhopsbourn; and taking in a ſmall Rill, which comes from Hautsbourn; this Bourne proceeds on to Bridge, and from thence to Patricksbourn and Bekesbourn; and after that, croſſing the Road between Canterbury and Sandwich, it runs between Littlebourne and Ickham, to Wickham-Brewx; and receiving into it 2 or 3 little Brooks, which come from Wingham and Wodensborow, (or Winsborow) it flows on to Preſton, and thence to Stourmouth (once perhaps the common Mouth of both the Stoures) and thence running on a little further towards the Weſt ſide of the Iſle of Thanet, it winds Northward, and joining the firſt Stream, runs with it into the Sea.

Kilburn reckons another Head of this Stoure; but it ſeems rather to be the Riſe of a Diſtinct Bourn or Rivulet. It breaks out of the Earth, at or near Great Mongeham, and flowing to Northbourne, or Norbourn, where it receives a ſmall Brook, paſſes by Ham, and then takes in another little Stream which runs from Eaſtry: Thence it goes on to Worth and Sandwich; paſſes by Richborow, Ebbesfleet, and Nethercourt, and meeting with the firſt great River Stoure, near Sarre, runs with it into the Sea.

Hollingſhead mentions ſome other Brooks, which then ran into the Stoure, beſides thoſe I have named: As Fiſhpole-Brook, which riſing in Stoneherſtwood, runs into this River 4 Miles from Canterbury.

Bridge-water, which he ſaith riſes at St. Marybourn Church (I know no ſuch Place) and goes by Biſhopsborun into the Stoure.

Witham, which he ſaith, riſes about Witham, ſhort of Adſham, and falls into the Bridge-Water, at Ond-Mill, or Wenderton.

There have been, perhaps ſome Alterations hereabout, as to the Courſe of theſe Streams ſince his Time; but I am inclined to think, that theſe 3 Brooks are the ſame with thoſe which I mentioned above, as running into the Leſſer Stoure from Wingham and Wodensborough; for Wenderton; and Witham, or Twitham, (Twittam 'tis now called) are Places in Wingham Pariſh.

The largeſt Channel of the greater Stoure ran anciently through the midſt of the City of Canterbury, by King's-Mill.

In the beginning of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, a Propoſition was made, to render that Part of this River which lies between Canterbury and Fordwich, anſwerable to the Fordwich River; or to bring Lighters and Boats to both alike. And an Act of Parliament paſſed, allowing and encouraging the Project: The Mention of which you have in Somner's Canterbury, Page 21. But nothing appears to have been done in it; perhaps, becauſe of ſome Difference between the Archbiſhop and the City; which there certainly was at that Time, and which made him build a Palace at Otford, inſtead of Canterbury, as he at firſt deſigned.

But however, an Attempt was made by Mr. Alderman Roſe, to render it Navigable, in Queen Elizabeth's Time; who was a great Benefactor to it, and an Encourager of it. And the good Alderman left 300 l. in his Will towards this uſeful Work. And Mr. Batteley tells us, Page 23. of his Hiſtory of Canterbury, That this River hath been lately ſo cleanſed and deepned, that Lighters and Boats may and do now come up to Canterbury from Sandwich, laden with Coals, &c.

In Somner's Time, there were but 5 Mills on this River, in and near Canterbury; whereas in King Stephen's Reign there were 7 more.

One would think, by what Philpot ſaith, (Pag. 62.) That the Leſſer Stoure was once Navigable up as far as Bekesbourn at leaſt; for he tells us, there was anciently a ſmall Navigation, from the Stoure to Bekesboune; and this receives ſome Confirmation from Bekesbourn's being a Member of the Cinque-Ports, as it is to this Day, and belongs to Haſtings in Suſſex.

7. The River ROTHER: perhaps from the Saxon Rothor, an Oar, divides Kent and Suſſex; and takes its Riſe in the latter of thoſe Counties near Argusbill, in Rotherfield Pariſh; which no doubt derives its Name from this River. After it hath run by Mayfield, and received at Bevilham, a Brook which comes down from Wadehurſt, it flows to Itchingham, whence moving towards Saleburſt, it takes in a Stream which comes down from Burwaſh, and thence proceeds to Bodiham, and entring Kent in Sandherſt Pariſh, it is augmented by a Brook, which riſing about Flymwell, runs into it by Hawkherſt, Wygſell, &c. After this, it goes on to Newenden; and a little before you come to Maytham-Ferry, it takes in a Brook on the Left Hand; and on the Right opens into a Stream, which running under Kent-Bridge into the Rother again, ſerves to make Oxney an Iſland: After this, the River goes on towards Witreſham, and receiving a Brook which comes down from Tenterden, goes on to Small-hyth, and thence to Reading; where it receives another Brook on the Left Hand; as it doth alſo one more on the ſame ſide, (after running a little further) which comes down from Woodchurch. Then it flows to Apuldre, and there turning Southward, it goes on by the Eaſt ſide of Oxney Iſland, by Iden and Playden in Suſſex: And leaving Guilford in that County alſo on the Left, opens into the Sea at Rye.

Hollingſhead ſaith, that beyond Apuldre, it receives into it the Billy, a Brook which runs down from about Bilſington; and this in ſome Maps is called Syd-Brook. But this rather went into the old Chanel of the Rother, when it ran directly from Apuldre to Romney along by the Rhee-wall. And tis more than probable, that anciently this River, after its paſſing Apuldre, ran along under Kenardington-Hill, Werborne, Hamgreen, Rucking, Bilſington, Bonnington, Hurſt, Merwood, Lime, and ſo to Weſt Hithe, and thence to the preſent Hithe; for the Cliffs appear to have been waſhed away by the Courſe of ſome Water all along under thoſe Towns; and the Ground ſtill remains lower there, than in any other part of the Marſh; for the Ditches here will continue full, when thoſe about Dymechurch and Romney are ſewed out and empty.

By a MS. communicated to me from a Gentleman in Romney, it appears, that between the Years 1533, and 1635. the Courſe of this River, which before that Time ran between the Iſle of Oxney and Apuldre, was by the Conſent of the ſeveral Perſons concerned in the Levels, turned on the other ſide of the ſaid Iſle, and made to paſs between it and the Pariſhes of Bexley, Peaſmerſh and Iden, through Witreſham Level.

I have already on other Occaſions taken Notice, that this River was the Ancient Limen; which will receive a further Confirmation from a Grant in the Cotton Library, from Ethelbert, King of Kent, to Limne Church, where 'tis ſo called: And an Oratory ſaid to be near its Mouth, which was dedicated to St. Martin, A. D. 741. And in a Commiſſion of Sewers granted in the 10th of King Edward IId. Robert Bridge, and Redhill, are ſaid to lye on each ſide of the River Limen. Dugdale, Inbanking, Page 83.

8. The WANTSUME. Whether this ancient Water ſhould be called a River or not, I will not diſpute. It formerly received into it both the Stoures, about the Place which is now called Stourmouth; and was ſo conſiderable as to be an excellent Harbour for, and to afford a ſafe and eaſy Paſſage for Ships from Sandwich towards London, without going round by the Northforeland. Bede, ſaith it was in his Time 3 Furlongs over (a), and was uſually paſſable at two Places; at Sarr, where then were kept two Ferry-Boats; tho' now there be only a Poor Wooden-Bridge: And at Stonar; where now indeed there is a Ferry-Boat; but the Water is ſo low and narrow, as that 'tis fordable at Low-Water.

I conjecture, that in the Romans Time, the Name of this Road or Harbour was Serra; but the Saxons called it Wantſume, perhaps from the Want or Deficiency that they found accruing to its Water: Which when it firſt began, 'tis not poſſible to determine.

The Wantſume had two Mouths or Paſſages into the Sea: Of which the Northern one was called Northmuthe: A Place which Mr. Somner and the laſt Editor of Cambden place, by a great Miſtake, at the Mouth of the Medway. But Mr. Harriſon in his accurate Deſcription of England, ſaith, 'tis but 7 Miles from Sandwich: And a Saxon Charter in the Monaſticon, Vol. 1. p. 87. places it rightly near Regulbium, or Reculver. Its other Mouth was to the Eaſtward of Sandwich.

And it appears by the Charters of the Monaſtery of St. Auſtin in Canterbury, that the Bounds of the ancient Haven of Sandwich, were from Peperneſs the Eaſtern Mouth of the Wantſume, to Mearsfleete: Which latter is a Promontory to the North, as the former is to the Eaſt. And they had a Duty on all Ships which went from Sandwich (thro' the Wantſume) to North Muthe.

Giraldus Cambrenſis (in Angl. Sacr. Vol. 2. p. 57.) mentions an Outer and Inner Haven at Sandwich: (i. e.) One without the Town Eaſterly towards Peperneſs: And another between the Town and Northmuth, where the Wantſume opened into the Northern Sea. Which will ſerve in ſome Meaſure to reconcile us to Somner's Opinion, that Sandwich was the Portus Rutupinus: And alſo to Dr. Plott's, That it was at Stonar; for in Truth, each of theſe was a Part of this once Glorious and Spacious Harbour, whoſe Extent I believe of old, was over all the Level. But of this more in another Place.

Tho' Kent abound but little with Stone, as having I think not above 3 Quarries of any Note in the whole County; yet there are, I believe, above 40 Stone-Bridges, and ſome of thoſe very noble and handſome ones, over its Rivers.

Of the ROMAN WAYS in KENT.

THE Ancient Romans diſtinguiſhed their Ways into theſe Three Kinds.

1. The Viæ Regiæ, Baſilicæ, Prætoriæ, Conſulares, Militares, Privilegiatæ, Illuſtres, Frequentatæ, Celebres, Eximiæ, Curſus Publici, &c. for by theſe and ſuch like Names they were frequently called: Theſe were the greateſt and moſt publick, and eminent High Roads: And therefore were called in William the Conqueror's Time Chemini Majores: They were ſuch here as went quite through our Kingdom from Sea to Sea. Of which ſort we had but 4 here in England, viz. Watlingſtreet, the Foſs, Ikenildſtreet, and Ermingſtreet; and the firſt of theſe Four I ſhall have Occaſion only to ſpeak to; becauſe that only paſſed thro' Kent.

By King Edward the Confeſſor's and other of our Saxon Laws, all Offences committed on theſe Roads, were Cogniſable and Tryable only by the King himſef.

2. The Viæ Vicinales. Theſe went only a-croſs from one Station to another. And in King William the Iſt's Reign, were called the Chimini Minores: Offences committed on theſe were cogniſable and puniſhable by the Earl or Alderman in the Saxon Times; or by his Vice-Comes or Sheriff.

3. The Viæ Agrariæ. Which were private Roads leading from one Village to another.

The Viæ Publicæ, Whether Majores or Minores, were ſometimes raiſed above, and ſometimes made level with the Ground: And moſt times trenched on both ſides. Sometimes they were raiſed only with Earth, Sand, Gravel, &c. and ſometimes paved; which was their Cuſtom in Moiſt and Boggy Grounds. And the Roman Manner of making theſe Ways, is thus deſcribed by Statius. Lib. 4. in Vita Domitian.

Hic

Hic primus labor inchoare ſulcos,
Et reſcindere Limites; & alto
Egeſtu penitus cavare Terras:
Mox hauſtas aliter replere foſſas,
Et ſummo gremium parare dorſo,
Ne Natent ſola, ne maligna ſedes,
Et preſſis dubium cubile ſaxis, &c.

So that they firſt laid out the Bounds of their Length and Breadth; then they dug a Trench, and removing the looſe and falſe Earth, filled the Trench with good ſolid Ground, and then if neceſſary, paved them with Stone.

Theſe Publick Ways were alſo ſometimes called Aggeres, and very often Stratæ the Streets, as they are called to this Day in many Places of England.

On the Sides of theſe Stratæ or Common Ways, they very frequently caſt up Tumuli of Earth, over the Graves, where the Bones or Aſhes in Urns of their great and eminent Men were buried. For they always buried near the Way-Sides, and not in Cities, which was forbidden. Hence the common beginning of an Epitaph, Siſte, Viator, &c. And theſe Tumuli, Barrows, or Lows, as ſome call them, over our Northern Commanders, have, by ſome of our modern Antiquaries, been divided into two Sorts; the Rudiores and Ornati: The former of theſe, which conſiſted only of Earth, are the moſt ancient; but the latter, which uſually are encompaſſed with a Circle of Stones, are perhaps in Memory of ſome great Saxon or Daniſh Generals, tho' of much later Antiquity than the former.

The Old Roman Watlingſtreet Way, ſome think took that Name from one Wætle; I know not what Son of ſome Saxon King; who though mentioned by Simon of Durham, and by Aſſer Meneveniſis, hath his Name no where to be found in our Saxon Hiſtories or Chronicles. Though it muſt be owned, that the Saxons called Old Verulam Watlingaceſter; becauſe it was ſituate near the Watlingſtreet Way.

(a) Lexic. Saxon. in Verbo.

Camden hints at its having been by ſome ſo called from one Vitellius, to whoſe Charge this Way was committed. Somner thinks (a) it may be derived either from the Saxon Wædla, a Beggar; becauſe ſuch would frequent the publick Roads: Or from the Latin Vado, quaſi libera vel publica iter facientium via; a free Way for all Men to go in.

Dr. Plott in his Oxfordſhire derives it from the Saxon Wætel, which ſignifies a Fence made with Stakes, and Branches of Trees wrought in between them; as if the Romans had at firſt uſed ſuch Hedges to keep up the Way, when newly made.

This Way was made here by the Labour of the poor Britains Hands; as we find them complaining in Tacitus: Condemned Criminals were alſo appointed to work upon them. Along theſe High Ways Auguſtus at firſt had certain young Men, placed at a ſmall Diſtance one from another; but after that, Wagons, to afford ſpeedy Diſpatch of Intelligence from all Parts of the Empire: And near theſe Roads were all their Cities built, and their Manſions or Inns placed for the Accommodation of Travellers; as alſo the Mutations or Places where the Travellers or Paſſengers changed their Horſes, Carriages, &c. And therefore as Camden well obſerves, whoever ſeeks for the Places mentioned in Antoninus's Itinerary, any where but on theſe Ways, will certainly wander and run into Miſtakes.

The Roman Watlingſtreet Way comes by Hendon to Hamſted-Heath; and after you are down the Hill, branches it ſelf into Two Parts: One of which goes to Portpool, thence to Holbornbridge, and ſo on to Watlingſtreet in London, which it gives Name to, and ends at London-Stone, which very probably is the Lapis Milliaris or Bound-ſtone of it.

The other Branch runs to the Weſt Part of Weſtminſter, and ſo over the Thames into Kent, as it was anciently accounted, a little above the Archbiſhop's Palace at Lambeth; or where now the Horſe-Ferry is.

And the Learned Dr. Gale, whom I here follow, ſaith, that about (b) Two Miles South from London, this Roman Way divides it ſelf into Three Branches: The Weſtermoſt Part of which, he ſuppoſes, went towards Kingſton, by Wimbleton, Wimbledune (i. e. ſaith he, for Windledune, ad Vindili Flumen). The middle Branch he fancies went to Stretham, Croydon, and ſo over Woodcotte Common; where common Fame ſaith, was once a City, and where he places the Neomagus of Ptolomy, and the Noviomagus of Antoninus. But herein I muſt beg leave to differ from that Learned Antiquary; ſince I have placed this Station on the Downs, ſomewhere about Crayford in Kent; which is directly in the Way to Rocheſter, and lies on that Third Branch of this Roman Way, which the Doctor owns muſt run on the Left Hand of this middle one; and which indeed is the True Watlingſtreet Way, and traceable directly to Rocheſter and Canterbury, and ſo to Dover; as you will ſee below. But this Woodcote is ſo very much out of the way to Rocheſter, that I can never allow it to have been any Station on the Watlingſtreet Way; though that there might formerly have come another Way through Kent over this Place, as I give ſeveral good Reaſons to conjecture in this Hiſtory, ſo Dr. Gale himſelf ſeems to own in his 85th and 86th Pages of the Comment on Antoninus.

(b) In Anton. Itin. p. 71.

And as to what he urges of Ptolomy's placing the Neomagus amongſt the Regni; I have ſhewed elſewhere, that the Regni did not then ſignify the Inhabitants of Surrey, ſtrictly ſpeaking, but in general the People near the Sea; as the Belgæ were the Inlanders: And in this I have Mr. Camden's Authority to confirm my Notion, tho' he likewiſe place the Noviomagus at Woodcote. Talbot mentions Two Ways, which were anciently in uſe to go from Dover to London: A Shorter, and a Longer (c). And perhaps the latter might once paſs this Way.

(c) Burton's Anton. p. 177.

But to put this Matter paſt all Doubt and Diſpute, that the Old Roman Watlingſtreet Way went directly from Lambeth-Ferry to Rocheſter and Canterbury, and ſo to Dover; I ſhall next give you an accurate Account of the Roman Ways in this County, from Dr. Robert Plott's and my own Obſervations.

That Gentleman ſeems once to have deſigned to compoſe and publiſh an Hiſtory of this County: And in order thereunto he began a Perambulation in Queſt of the Old Roman Ways, and ſome other Antiquities in Kent, in the Year 1693. which in ſome Meaſure he performed: And by the Favour of his Widow, and his Son-in-Law, I have by me the Account of his Obſervations, made for that Purpoſe. Which Perambulation, except an Account of ſome Manuſcripts relating to Kent, of which he had formerly a Catalogue, expreſſing where moſt of them were to be ſeen, is the only Thing I ever ſaw of the Doctor's on this Subject; and I believe it was all he ever did towards it, of any Moment.

This Roman Watlingſtreet Way is pretty plain on Blackheath, running from the Bowling-Green-Houſe along by Mr. George Moult's Houſe, and pointing Weſt North Weſt towards London, and Eaſt South Eaſt towards Shooters-hill. A little beyond the South Eaſt Corner of Greenwich Park-Wall, it leaves the common Road on the Left Hand; and though it appears there but faintly, yet 'tis viſible enough, and inclines Eaſterly: A little before you come to the Corner of the Hedge on the Right Hand, where the common Dover Road, and that to Leigh part, are Three Tumuli or Barrows, one of which is a pretty large one. On the Left Hand Side of this Way in Greenwich Park, are many more ſmall ones, I believe near 50: And there are Four or Five more on the ſame Side, a little before you come to the Place where a poor old Man uſually ſtands to beg, and hath built himſelf a little Hutt. After you part from the Turning to Leigh, you find not any certain Marks of the Roman Way, till about half a Mile before you come to Shooters-hill, but there it lies very plain and high, with Ditches on each Side of it. Afterwards, before you go over the Hill, and as you go up and down it, you ſee a Patch or two of it here and there interſecting the common Road; and it appears very obſcurely till you come to Bexley-Heath: But there it is plainly viſible running its former Courſe, South South Eaſt, between the Two common Ways now in Uſe, for a great way: But at laſt entring the Southermoſt Horſe-way, it croſſes it, and leaves them both, running on the Right Hand to the Corner of the Wood, and ſo down the Hill towards Crayford; though here much broken.

And ſomewhere hereabouts I would place the Noviomagus of Antoninus on ſome Hill or Down before you deſcend into Crayford Street; it being the due Diſtance from the Old Londinium: And there being a Place in the upper Part of Crayford, called May-ſtreet or May-Place, the Seat of the Worthy the Lady Shovel: Perhaps that Name may retain in it ſomething of Magus; the Letters (g) and (y) being often confounded by the Anglo-Saxons; as in Dæg Day, and in this very Caſe Mæg for poteſt, may or can.

Between Crayford and Dartford very little of this Old Way appears. But juſt beyond the Town of Dartford, after you are up the Hill in Dartford Brent, it ſhews it ſelf very conſpicuouſly, quite leaving the common Road going on the Right Hand, and running directly South South Eaſt as before; and entring among the Enclоſures, goes to a Farm-Houſe called Woodcoks-Hall, and having in ſome Places an Hedge ſtanding on it, proceeds thence to another Farm, called Blackſole; and from thence, though covered with Wood in many Places, towards a Village called Stonewood: Hence perhaps it runs more towards the Left Hand, and inclines to Northfleet; (for Dr. Plott ſaith, that Place is by ſome ſtill called Watlingſtreet); and leaving Southfleet and Scadbury on the Right, leaves Northfleet Church on the Left Hand, keeping pretty near to the preſent Highway. About Shinglewell it ſhews it ſelf in ſeveral Places, with the Hedges ſtanding upon it, ſometimes on the Right, and ſometimes on the Left Hand; and now and then falling in with the Road-way, proceeds on to Cobham Park, where the Park Pale ſeems to ſtand upon it for a little way; but ſoon after leaving the Pales, as may be ſeen, ſaith Dr. Plott, in the Paſſage out of the North Gate of the Park, where the Way ſeems to croſs it, it runs into a thick Wood, where 'tis not to be followed.

At Northfleet I agree with Mr. Somner to place the ſecond Station from London; in the Itinerary called Vagniacæ.

In order to find where this Roman Way croſſed the Medway, Dr. Plott in his Perambulation rightly enquired for the moſt fordable Place of that River; for doubtleſs then there were neither Bridges nor a Paſſage by Boats, over ſo broad a River: And he ſaith he found that Place to be at the Point of Land in Frinsbury Marſhes, where, by its Courſe, the Roman Way ought to run; and where there was a Shallow quite acroſs the River: And the Tradition is, that it might have been paſſed there within the Memory of our Grandfathers; there being not above Three or Four Foot Water upon a low Ebb; and that in their Paſſage over, they uſed to tread on the Heads of Horſes. And what makes this the more probable is, That on the other Side of the Medway, juſt above the Hill Houſe, there is a very large raiſed Way running quite acroſs one Field, and pointing, as this Way hath all along done, South South Eaſt: Indeed in the next Fields above, the Plow hath deſtroyed its Track, if it did go that Way; which I ſuſpect; becauſe then it muſt have left Rocheſter almoſt a Mile on the Right Hand; whereas, that is in all Editions of the Itinerary agreed upon to be the next Station after the Vagniacæ. And about this the Doctor doubts a little himſelf; and therefore in Queſt of the Roman, he ſaith, they rather chuſe to follow the common Dover Road up Chatham Hill; where nothing of this ancient Roman Way appears till you come up to the Top of it; but after that, the Left Hand Hedge of the common Road ſeems to ſtand upon it for a great way; as may not only be perceived by the riſing and falling of the Ground on each Side; but by the Breaks of the Hedges, and the Interſections of other Croſs-ways between this and Rainham: And ſo again on the Right Hand between Rainham and Newington, though a little before it came to the latter of thoſe Places, it ſeems to fall in with the common Way: And indeed I cannot ſay that it appears any where hereabout ſo very plainly, as that by the View of it alone, one might conclude it to be the true Roman Way. On the Hill a little beyond this preſent Town of Newington, I place the Old Durolevum in the Itinerary; for the Reaſons I have given, where I have ſpoken particularly of this Place. (See Newington in Part 2.) 'Tis probable the Watlingſtreet Way paſſed over Caycot-hill, a Place here in the Road to Sittingbourn, as there is another called Cay-ſtreet: And both which the Tradition is, took their Names from ſome Action of Caius Jul. Cæſar: Which I ſhall conſider, when I come to diſcourſe of the Tranſactions of the Romans in Kent. There ſeems to be ſome Remains of this Way at Chalkwell, and betwixt that and Sittingbourn; but neither there, nor at Swanſtreehill beyond Sittingbourn, nor in the Road to Bapchild; though ſome old Ruins of it ſeem to appear, could one have concluded any Thing certainly about it, were it not that it ſhews it ſelf ſo viſibly at Greenſtreet, as to leave no Diſpute: For there, leaving the common Road on the Right Hand, it runs along with a fair Bank riſing in the middle, and falling on each Side, for a very conſiderable Length: And no doubt the Place took its Name from being ſituated upon the Old Roman Strata or Street.

About three Quarters of a Mile North Eaſtward from Greenſtreet, is a Place called Caſtle Grove, in which are ſome riſing Banks which ſeem to run round, and return into themſelves again; whether they are any Remains of a Roman Fortification, may be juſtly doubted: I judge rather that they are Daniſh or Britiſh; but there ſeems to have been ſome Kind of Entrenchment here, which is enough to give Name to the Place.

About a Mile alſo, South South Weſt from Tenham Church, and on the Left Hand of the common Road, is a Field called the Sand-Downs, which bids fair to have been ſome ancient Fortification: 'Tis invironed on all Sides with a riſing Bank, including alſo a little Wood; and in the middle of it there is a large Tumulus, Barrow, or Lowe, hollow on the Top, as moſt of them are (becauſe all artificial Ground is apt to ſink) and covered with a Thicket. And Dr. Plott fancies, that if the Durolevum did really ſtand 16 Miles from Rocheſter, (as in the Peutingerian Tables it is but 7; and in some Copies of the Itinerary 13), it ought to be placed here; or if that won't do, about Bapchild. But I think Newington will keep its Claim to this Station, by what I have said of it, in its proper Place.

But to go on again in Pursuit of the Roman Way: It appears a little, but very brokenly, about Ospringe Beacon; after which it shews it self not at all, till you come to the End of Bolton Bleanstreet, but there indeed it appears plain on the Left Hand, and runs up the Hill nearly parallel to the common Road, to the Place where the Beacon stood, and is afterwards to be seen in several Places as it runs along towards Harbledown, where it appears on the Left Hand upon a Green; whence running through Harbledown, it seems to go towards the Mount, where a Piece of it appears running through the City Wall; though the common Tradition is, that it goes towards Winchep Gate: This agrees with what Mr. Somner saith, that the Tradition is, That the Way from London to Canterbury was anciently through Winchep Gate; but he determines nothing about it himself; and I can add nothing to it more than this, That as 'tis plain the Roman Way can be traced over the Blean to Harbledown; the Bolton Way into Canterbury must probably have been the most ancient one: And that as to the Novelty which he speaks of about it, it can only relate to the Repair of it, and making it good by that handsome Causey, which is now the Course of the common Road. And therefore if ever the Roman Road entred Canterbury at Winchep Gate, 'tis probable it was before it was walled and ditched round; and that it turned that way towards the Right Hand assoon as you come down the Hill from Harbledown. But let it enter the City where it will, no doubt, it passed through it by what now bears its Name there; viz. Watlingstreet; and thence out of Riding-gate towards Dover: And I doubt not but as Riding-gate shews its great Antiquity, by having its Arch turned with Roman Bricks; so out of it also went the other Roman Way to the Portus Lemanis, which is now called Stone-Street; of which more below.

But the Watlingstreet Way goes on hence towards Bridge: within three Quarters of a Mile of which Place, it appears very plain and visible, lying entire and high, almost to the very Town's End, and pointing according to its old Direction, nearly South South East. After you are got through the Town, it shews it self very fair again upon Barham Down, where it leaves the present Dover Road on the Left Hand, and running along by some paled Inclosures, within which on the Right Hand, was a Barrow or Tumulus, with a little dead Tree standing on it, when Dr. Plott made this Enquiry, over-against Sir Hewet Aucher's House. Further on, on the Left Hand of the Way, on this Side the Windmill, to the North West from it, and Eastward from Kingston Church, lies a small Camp; the Extent of which is not now to be determined; because the North East Vallum is wanting. Over-against this old Encampment the Roman Way enters into Two plowed Grounds, and there disappears for about Two Furlongs; but beyond them it discovers it self again as plain as before, and running the same Course, with regard to the Point of the Compass; and here on the Left Hand rises a large Tumulus or Barrow. About a Furlong after this, it crosses the present Dover Road, at about a Quarter of a Mile East North East from Barham Church, and runs strait up to the Corner of an Hedge, belonging to Denhill House, near which Place there is also another Tumulus or Barrow, though less than that last mentioned. After this, running along by Dens-Grove, at the End of it, it crosses a Lane, and enters into the Inclosures, tending to Minsen Wood, which entring, it becomes scarce visible for a while; but at the Farm called Ropers sole it appears again, running through a Wood, and afterwards haying Hedges made across it, and some standing on it, till it runs out into a Green beyond Whitings Way, near Geddings, where it joins with the common Road again, which it had hitherto left on the Right Hand since its crossing it. And henceforward it is plain enough to be seen at several Places, till you come to Lidden, where one would think it loses it self in the hollow Way; as it usually doth in most Valleys which are low and wet. But Dr. Plott observing a raised Bank, running along about a Bow's Shot off on the Right Hand of the Road, for a great way between Lidden and Ewel; and about half a Mile before you come to the latter Place, finding a Tumulus near it on the Right Hand; I think rightly concludes, that the Roman Way ran along there; and 'tis likely that whereever they carried it thus along the Side of an Hill, the Romans contented themselves with casting up a Bank only to make the Way level and commodious for Travelling; and made no Ditch along the Side of the Hill. Between Ewel and Buckland, all along over-against River, it joins the common Road again, and lies fair and high; But 'tis quite lost again in the low Grounds, between this and Charlton, and so on to Dover. The Tradition is, That it crossed the River at Charleton, and thence took its Course on by the Park Wall, directly into Dover Town, at the West End of St. James's Church; and thence proceeded to its End at Fords Corner; which was the ancient Landing Place from Foreign Parts, and consequently the true Portus Dubris: That where the present Pere is, being of a much later Date.

And thus ends this Famous Roman Way; which though its Track be lost in a great many Places; and that sometimes for a great way together, doth yet afford us so many fair Pieces, and those lying and pointing nearly all the same way, viz. South South East to trace it out by; that there can be no possible doubt of its running this direct Course from Lambeth-Ferry to this Place. And what occasioned Mr. Camden, Lambard, and some others, to judge it went such a strange round-about Course as to go first to Woodcote Common in Surrey, and thence to Maidstone in Kent, before it came to Rochester, I shall consider hereafter.

The other Branch of this Roman Way, or rather another particular Roman Way there was which led from Canterbury to the old Portus Rutupensis, as the other above described did to the Portus Dubris. There can be no Question but that this Way went out of the City of Canterbury about Burgate; and perhaps the Wall of St. Austin's Abbey may stand upon it; but no Track or Footsteps of it are to be seen till you come to the Turning towards Stourmouth; but there 'tis visible on this Side the Park Wall, pointing East and by South, and West and by North. The Moat Wall being set upon it. Above Fishpool Hill it seems to appear again, holding the same Course (which is one of the best Ways to distinguish a Piece of it by) and so again at some Places between Littlebourn and Bromling; but no where so plainly as in the Mill Meadow, lying to the West of Wingham Church, where it runs the whole Breadth of the Meadow, leaving a noble large Tumulus or Barrow above and behind it; as there are one or two more in a Field adjoining just against it on the other Side of the common Road: Here in this Meadow it points exactly as before East and by South. But now running more Easterly by Sir Thomas Palmer's House, it goes on the Left Hand Side of the Town of Wingham, and entring the Corn Fields, is not to be ſeen any more; only that there is a large Tumulus on the Left Hand Side of the common Road, after you come up the Hill from Wingham, on the Sand Hill, which ſhews us nearly, whereabouts it went: But 'tis not viſible, I ſay, till you come within a Mile of Aſhe, to a Place called Shatterling; where it ſeems to join with the common Road. And as Dr. Plott obſerves, one could hardly determine its Courſe here by bare View; but that it diſtinguiſhes it ſelf ſo plainly by another very fair Tumulus or Barrow, adjoining to the Road on the Left Hand, at a Place called Broombill, of about 100 Yards in Compaſs at the Bottom, and hollow on the Top: And alſo by another a little way from it in a Field towards the North Weſt. The former of theſe Tumuli, I cauſed to be dug down as low as the Surface of the common Ground: But I found ſomebody had been affected with the ſame Curioſity before me, and had dug it to the very Bottom; what they found I know not; but I met with nothing that I could judge Roman.

After this, Dr. Plott ſaith, he could neither ſee nor hear of any Marks of it, in its Courſe to Richborow Caſtle: I my ſelf went ſeveral Times to trace it from Broombill to that Place, but without any Succeſs; not being able to ſee any Signs of its entring Richborow Hill. And therefore for that, and for ſeveral other Reaſons, I conclude it went not that way, but to Sandwich, in or near the Courſe of that which is now called the Old Way to Sandwich, through Woodensborough: At which Village ſeveral Roman Medals have been found; and one in Gold I ſaw, which was taken up there lately. And as the whole Courſe of the Water of Wantſume from Reculver (the old Regulbium) to Sandwich, was the ancient Portus Rutupenſis: So I believe Sandwich to have been the uſual Place of Landing, to go by Land through Canterbury to London; and that Richborow Caſtle was rather a Station or Gariſon, where Part of the Army lay as it were encamped. And this I think the careful View of both Places, which I have many and many Times taken, will convince any one of. But of this more, when I come to ſpeak of Richborow Caſtle.

There was yet a Third Roman Way which went from this ancient City of Canterbury to the Portus Lemanis: The way out of Canterbury into this Roman one, was doubtleſs through Riding-gate, but not a Track of it is to be ſeen now till you come about half a Mile beyond Stubbington Farm, where it points towards Canterbury North North Eaſt, and runs South South Weſt over Iffindown; ſhewing it ſelf very plainly, till you come to Hermans Hole, where 'tis loſt, as uſually, in the Valley. But going up Hermans-Hole-hill, it appears very plainly, and continues ſo for many Miles in length; raiſed high in the Middle, and falling off, on each Side, and paved all the way with rough Flints; which is ſo very hard to the Horſes Feet, that Men uſually ride along in the Ditches below to avoid it, and leave the Old Roman Way, which in many Places is therefore over-grown with Buſhes and Wood. Perhaps this is one of the faireſt Pieces of the old Roman Way, to be found any where in England; and as it takes its Courſe on, over againſt Stowting, hath by it on the Downs a very fair Tumulus. But here are no ſuch Fortifications as Philpot mentions, p. 341. in his Villare Cantian; As either Dr. Plott or I could diſcover. Beyond Stowting, as it runs towards Stanford, it winds about a little, and much more doth it bend afterwards to go down Hempton-Hill: Whence after you come into the Valley, it quite diſappears, as the beſt of theſe old Ways do; but I judge it went thro' Weſtenhanger Pariſh, directly to Stutfal-Caſtle: Below which was certainly the moſt ancient, or firſt Portus Lemanis.

Portus Lemanis.

For it ſeems plain, that the River Limen, or Rother did once hold its Courſe this Way from Apuldre, at leaſt at Low Water, and Neep Tides, under Kenardington-Hill, Werehorne, Rucking, Bilſington, Bonnington, Hurſt, and Lymne, and ſo to Weſthithe, and the preſent Hithe; the Bottoms of the Cliffs been having waſhed and worn away by the Water, all along under thoſe Towns; and the Ground ſtill remaining lower here than in any other Part of the Marſh, as appears from the Ditches, which will remain full of Water here, when thoſe higher in the Marſh near Dym-Church and Romney are ſo empty, that the very Sewers have little Work to do. I ſay the River Rother held its Courſe this way, at leaſt at Low-Water, or Neep Tides, for I ſuppoſe the whole Level of Romney Marſh to have been then uſually overflown with the Sea, but at ſuch Times; and before the inning and draining of the Marſh was begun. But afterwards, when the Sea either began to withdraw itſelf by degrees and to fall ſhort of Stutfall (as I judge it did about that Time) or was endeavoured to be kept out by Art, then probably Weſthithe became the Portus Lemanis, as Dr. Plott conjectures with great probability: And the Time of this, was, one would think, before the Romans left Britain, becauſe the whole Arch of the Weſt Door of the now demoliſhed Church of Weſt Hithe was all turned with Roman Brick; and this Place certainly was much more conſiderable formerly: there yet remaining the Ruins of another Church or Chapel, within a Bow's Shot of the former. If any one ſhould make it an Objection to this Notion; that it implies, that there were Churches and thoſe Chriſtian too, here in the Romans Times; I anſwer, that I think it no unaccountable Suppoſition at all; but it is indeed a farther Proof of what hath been advanced on good Authority by very great Men; which is, that Chriſtianity was planted in this Iſland very early; and that probably by St. Paul himſelf. And if in Britain, no doubt in Kent, where was the uſual Landing Place for all ſuch as came over from Rome, France, &c.

But to go on; It ſeems very probable alſo, that in proceſs of Time, the Advance of the Tides into the Mouth of the old Limen or Rother, falling ſtill ſhorter and ſhorter, Veſſels at length could not come up ſo far as to Weſt-Hithe; but were forced to make uſe of a new Haven, according as the Sea fell ſhort, and as the River changed its Courſe, and left the Foot of the Hills: For it ſeems to have run at laſt near a Mile to the Southward of the Hills and to have fallen into the Sea about Willup Gutt: Where I believe it had a Stone-Bridge then built over it, now called Bottolph's-Bridge; one Arch of which is ſtill remaining above Ground: And as Dr. Plott well obſerves, this bids fair to be the moſt ancient of any Stone one in England. And he ſuggeſts, that the Veſſels not coming up any farther than to this Bridge, might Occaſion the Difference which there is in ſome Copies of Antoninus's Itinerary from others: As in that of Ferom Surita; which hath it, ad Pontem Lemanis, inſtead of the others, which made it ad Portum Lemanis. And this will help us much in accounting for the Diſtance, for 'tis full 16 Italian Miles from Durovernum, or Canterbury, to this Bridge.

But the Sea continuing ſtill to withdraw it ſelf, and at length, no doubt giving Encouragement for Inning of ſome Part of Romney Marſh; the River might by this means have its Courſe ſtopped near Apuldre, and be turned down along the Rhe-Wall or Bank: And then the Sea quickly choaking up the former Mouth of it at Wyllup, there being now no longer any Current of Water from the Land to keep it open, no more Veſſels could come to that Port or Bridge: And con-conſequently they were forced to ſeek out a New Port; and probably they then took to the preſent Hithe: Which 'tis likely was always an Open Port, and the Sea coming up to it. But it doth not ſeem probable, that the River Rother ever, much leſs now, had a Paſſage into the Sea near Hithe; but ran out after it left Willup, firſt at Old, and then at New-Romney; which then might begin to be a Port. And ſo both Hithe and That might continue in a flouriſhing Condition, from hence to the Time of Edward the Confeſſor: When, as Mr. Somner ſaith, the preſent Five Towns, which ſtill retain the Name, were erected into Ports. And had not they been then in a flouriſhing State, no Reaſon can be given for their being made the Cinque-Ports, nor for being endowed with ſuch Privileges and Immunities as we find they were. And that the preſent Hythe was uſed thus as a Port, even before the Departure of the Romans from Britain, Dr. Plott thinks reaſonable to conclude; from the paved Way made after the Roman Faſhion all along up the Hill, not only to Saltwood-Caſtle, (which perhaps the Archbiſhops of Canterbury might have made for their own Conveniency) but a Mile farther onwards, and leading into the former Stoneſtreetway. And he judges, that the Romans, having now loſt their Ports at Stutfal, Weſt-Hithe, and Buttolphs's-Bridge, and being now removed to the preſent Hithe, might make this paved Way, and endeavour to join it into their their former One to Stutfall, for their better Conveniency of Travelling to Durovernum: To which let me add, that perhaps this might be the beginning of a new Way, which they might make from this Port, and from Saltwood-Caſtle directly to London, which might fall in about Charing and Lenham, with a former Road to London, which they ſeem to have uſed from Dover, while Dubris was their Port. And this Road, by Lenham, would alſo go by Maidſtone, and ſo account for ſome of the Reaſons given by Camden and others, for ſuppoſing theſe to have been Roman Stations; The latter, the Vagniacæ, the former the Durolevum of Antoninus's Itinerary. Robert Talbot in his Annotations upon the Itinerary, as I find him cited by Burton; ſaith, that there were anciently two Roman Ways which paſſed through Kent: Whereof one was Via longior quidem ſed per loca Inhabitatiora Planioraq; & prorſus aptiora ad conductum Excercitûs; altera autem Directior magiſq; compendiaria: But what he adds, that Croyden being the Poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, was aſſigned with other Towns, as a ſhorter way to London, which went from Canterbury to Charing, thence to Maidſtone, thence to Ottford, and thence to Croyden, and ſo to London, ſeems to be a miſtake: for no doubt this was done purely to accommodate the Archbiſhops in their Journey, that they might Lye or Dine every Day at a Palace of their own, as they had one at Charing, at Maidſtone, at Ottford, and at Croyden; and this made them not value going about, as this way certainly is from Canterbury. But from Dover, or from Hithe to London, it was certainly a good deal nearer to go by Charing, Maidſtone, &c. than to go into the other Road, by Canterbury, Rocheſter, &c. And therefore 'tis not at all unreaſonable to think, that the Romans did make uſe of this Way: and this may be the Roman Way, which Higden ſaith, paſſed thro' the Middle of Kent, as indeed this doth; but the Watlingſtreet Way doth not. Dr. Gale in his Comment upon the Itinerary, p. 85. ſaith expreſly, that as Stoneſtreet Way went from Canterbury to Stutfall-Caſtle, ſo there was another Prætorian Way, which went from Saltwood Caſtle to Lenham; and that theſe two Ways interſected each other at Leminge; and he ſaith, that the old Word Lemen, and the Modern one Leming, did anciently ſignify a Publick Way: And that Lenham took its Name (quaſi Lemingham) from being ſituated on this Prætorian Way: And the ſame Original, he judges Lambeth, which he ſaith ſhould be written Lemehith, to have; and for the ſame Reaſon; as being ſituate by the Publick Roman Way, which there croſſes the Thames. And he ſaith, that the Publick Roman Way from Iſurium to Cataractonium, that is, from Aldborow to Richmond, as he interprets it, is called Leming-Lane: As Lemington in Glouceſterſhire, he judges to have had that Name from its being ſituate on the Foſſe Way: And the Lacus Lemanis in Italy, for being ſituate near the Roman Military Way there.

And as to Saltwood-Caſtle, 'tis not improbable, that the Sea might come up once, very near it; an Anchor having been plowed up there within this few Years, ſaith Dr. Plott; and 'tis not improbable, that the firſt Port of Hithe might be here about the Time that Old Romney became a Port: For Dr. Gale ſaith, Saltwood-Caſtle is a Roman Building, and that in ſome very ancient Writings, he ſaw theſe Words, Burgus de Heth pertinet ad Saltwood. But of this Caſtle more in another Place.

Upon the whole, therefore, I think it more than probable, that there was an old Roman Way, which went from Dover directly to London, (without going into Watlingſtreet Way) after they began to uſe the Portus Dubris: And another which fell into this, firſt from Stutfall, and after from Saltwood-Caſtle: And that this Way might go by Liminge, not far from Crundale; and by Wye, Charing, Lenham, Berſted, Boxley, Maidſtone, Trotſclive, and perhaps by Oldburgh in Ightham, and ſo to Farnborough, and by Keſton-Down to London: Since in all theſe Places ſome Roman Remains have been found; enough to ſhew that the Romans had been this Way, and had made Settlements and Burrying Places upon it, and along by its ſides. Which the Judicious Mr. Camden, Lambard, and ſome others obſerving, and not rightly diſtinguiſhing it from the Roman Watlingſtreet ſo fully deſcribed, made that go very far out of its direct Courſe to Maidſtone and Lenham: and placed the Roman Stations of Vagniace and Durolevum at thoſe Towns. But I hope the Diſcovery of the Courſe of this latter Way, will ſet it all right, and ſerve in ſome Meaſure to excuſe the Miſtakes of thoſe great Antiquaries.

As it hath been juſtly accounted one of the beſt Rules to judge where the Roman Stations were, and what courſe their Publick Ways took, by the Coins, Urns, Roman Bricks, Pavements, &c. which where ever found, are ſure Indications of that People's having been there; ſo that will ſufficiently ſerve to trace out to us this latter Roman Way from Dover firſt, and afterwards from the Portus Lemanis to London.

Dr. Gale in his Antonin. Iter. IV. p. 86. ſaith, that Roman Coins have been dug up at Newington, near Hithe, and Stowting: I have mentioned a famous Roman Burying Place, not long ſince diſcovered at Crundale. I have heard, that Roman Antiquities have been found about Charing; and Philpot ſaith the ſame of Lenham; and on the Left Hand of the Road, from thence to Maidſtone beyond Berſtede, in Boxley Pariſh, a Roman Burying Place was lately diſcovered, by Mr. Watts, as I have mentioned in that Place: Philpot takes notice alſo of many Urns dug up at Comb-Bank in Sundriſh, as I have obſerved there. And if Oldburgh in Ightham be a Roman Fortification, as ſome think; this Way could not go very far from it; and would either run to the famous Camp on Keſton Down; or ſo near it, that one would, on that account be apt to pronounce it Roman; if Roman Bricks, and ſome other of their their Remains had not been found there, as they have; and which, with other Conſiderations, hardly leave us any room to doubt its having been a Camp made by that People; tho' the Time when it was ſo made, be not ſo eaſy to determine.

Of the Caſtles, Watch-Towers, Ports and Forts of Kent.

Of theſe I ſhall diſcourſe in an Alphabetical Order, as I have before done of the Towns and Pariſhes.

ALLINGTON. This was a Caſtle of Note in the Saxons Time; and was called the Caſtle of Medway; it was raz'd to the Ground by the Danes, when they ravaged theſe Parts; but after the Conqueſt it was rebuilt again by Earl Warren; and from him went to the Lord Fitz-Hughes: And by his Daughter and Heir to Sir Giles Allington, from whom both it and the Pariſh took their Name: But Philpot from Darell and Mr. Marſh, ſaith, That this Caſtle was erected by William de Columbariis, or Columbers, perhaps in King Stephens's Time.

And Darel ſaith further, that in 8 King Henry IIId. when, as appears by the Tower Records, there was an exact Survey taken of all the Caſtles in England, and the Names of ſuch returned, as were either the Governors or Proprietors of them; one of this Family was found to be Poſſeſſor of this Caſtle, and Lord of the Mannor annexed to it. But about the End of that Reign, it came into the Poſſeſſion of Sir Stephen de Penchester, who had it by Purchaſe, I ſuppoſe, from one Osbert as appears by the Tower Records; he was afterwards Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports: and married Margaret, Daughter of the famous Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent. If this Caſtle was ever deſigned for a Place of Strength after the Conqueſt, it muſt have been, as is above hinted, in King Stephen's Time, or thereabouts, and probably it was afterwards razed and diſmantled: For it appears, ſaith Philpot, by the Patent Rolls in 9 King Edward the Iſt. that a Licenſe was then granted to him to build a Caſtle here, and to Fortify and Embattle: Which when it was done, denominated it Allington Penchester: He built a fine Tower here, which was called Solomon's Tower. And he had alſo from the ſame Prince a Charter of Free Warren, the Grant of a Market on Tueſdays, and of a 3 Days Fair at the Feſtival of St. Laurence. But he deceaſing without Iſſue Male, by one of his Daughters it went into the Poſſeſſion of Stephen de Cobham; and continued for many Deſcents in that Eminent Family. And in the beginning of King Edward the IVth's Reign, it was become the Eſtate of the Brents; but ſtaid not long there before it was Sold to Sir Henry Wiatt, Privy-Counſellor to that King. But his unfortunate Grandſon, Sir Thomas Wiat forfeited it to the Crown in 2d Queen Mary's Reign, together with his Life. It ſtaid here but a little while before Queen Elizabeth granted it to John Aſtley, Eſq; Maſter of the Jewel-Office: and his Son Sir John Aſtley dying without Iſſue, it deſcended to Sir Jacob Aſtley, who was created Lord Aſtley by King Charles the Iſt at Oxford: And in his Deſcendant, the Poſſeſſion continued in Philpot's Time.

And this is all I can Collect about this Caſtle: Only let me add here in General, what Selden (a) and Daniel (b) tell us about theſe Kind of Caſtles:

About the Middle of King Stephen's Reign, ſaith the former, Caſtles were erected in almoſt all Parts of the Kingdom, by the ſeveral contending Parties: And each Owner of a Caſtle was a kind of Petty Prince, Coining his own Money; and exerciſing Sovereign Juriſdiction over his People. And Daniel ſaith, that there were 1117 Caſtles built in England in his Reign; King Stephen giving leave to every one almoſt to embattel, &c. but in the Agreement between him and Duke Henry, afterwards K. Henry the IId, they were all ordered to be demoliſhed. This Agreement was made at Wincheſter, A. D. 1154.

(a) Jan. Anglo. f. 85.

(b) Hiſt. of England. p. 79.

APPLEDORE, Apuldre-Caſtle. This, tho' an ancient Fort, yet appears to have been Originally but a ſmall Place. And A. D. 893. was taken by the Danes and demoliſhed.

But they built another and larger in its Room, which they fortified. Of which Building Kilburn ſaith, he knows not what became, unleſs (which is not improbable) it was deſtroyed by the French; who Auguſt 10. 1380. burnt the Town of Appledre; And Philpot ſaith, till that Time it remained, and was accounted one of the Caſtles of Kent.

There is another Tradition, that the preſent Church of Appledore was built out of the Ruins of the Caſtle, and in the Place where it ſtood; which the Situation conſidered, is not unlikely.

Others think that the Remains of this Caſtle appear on Windmill-hill, where many Parts of old Stony Foundations have been dug up.

BELLIRICA, or Belcaire, i.e. Bellocaſtrum. See Court up Strete, below.

CANTERBURY-Caſtle. Camden obſerves of this Place, that it carries no great appearance of Antiquity; and indeed it doth not appear to have been ſtanding, when the City, was ſacked by the Danes in King Ethelred's Time; there being no mention of any Caſtle, in any Relations or Accounts of that Siege and Maſſacre. He thinks it to have been built by the Normans, as many others were, ſoon after the Conqueſt, to bridle and awe the People. But Somner ſhews from Domeſday Book, that it muſt be older than that Time: For King William the Iſt. had it in Exchange from the Archbiſhop, and the Abbot of St. Auſtins; to the former of whom he gave 14, and to the latter 7 Burgeſſes for it: And I believe he determines the Age of it pretty nearly, when he ſaith, it was erected between the Daniſh Maſſacre above-mentioned, and the coming of the Normans: And 'tis likely it was built for the better Security of the City for the future, againſt ſuch Invaſions, Sieges, and Devaſtations as that barbarous People had made there: Of which more when I come to ſpeak particularly of the Actions of the Danes in Kent.

The Paſſage towards this Caſtle from the City was formerly by a Bridge; beyond which was a fair Gate built at the Entrance of the Caſtle-yard; and there was a particular Porter appointed to keep this Gate.

The Entrance into it appears to have been by Steps, which Somner ſaith, were Porched over on the Weſt ſide.

For its better Defence and Security, it was fortified with a Barbican or Barbacan: Which Word Sir H. Spelman thus deſcribes (a). Barbacan eſt Munimen à Fronte Caſtri aliter Antemurale dictum: etiam eſt foramen in Urbium Caſtrorumq; mœnijs ad trajicienda miſſilia; nec non Specula, & Locus ubi excubiæ aguntur. (a) Gloſ. in voce.

Chancer alſo uſes it for a Watch-Tower. Spelman ſaith, 'tis an Arabick Word; or elſe Minſhaws and Somners's Etymology would be natural enough, from the Saxon Burgh-ic ken, I ken or ſee the Burgh: Becauſe it lies before a Caſtle, and and overlooks the Town. The Place where it ſtood, is that now called the Caſtle-Yard; for Somner ſhews, that it was without the City Liberty: On the Wall of the Caſtle-Yard, were ſeveral Watch-Towers, 4 at leaſt; and it was uſually called the Bulwark; ſo there is no doubt but it compoſed that Defence before the Caſtle, which was uſually called the Barbacan; and he determines its Situation alſo from its being in ſome old Records ſaid to lye by the Ditch del Bayle; which was that went round about the Caſtle-Yard Wall, before the Piece of the Wall was made between Winchep-Gate, and it on one ſide, and the like on the other.

This Caſtle, at this Day, holds by Grant from the Crown, of the Mannor of Eaſt-Greenwich: and including the Yards and Dikes about it, it takes up about 4 Acres of Ground: And 'tis now in the Poſſeſſion of Mr. Watſon.

In Archbiſhop Lanfranc's Time, there being a great Difference between him and the Abbey of St. Auſtins about Wido their 42d Abbot, the Monks being driven out of the Abbey, ſome were committed to Priſon, and the reſt ſheltered themſelves in the Caſtle for a while till the Buſtle was compoſed.

When Lewis the Dauphin arrived in the Iſle of Thanet, he came firſt to Sandwich, and afterwards to Canterbury, and took poſſeſſion of this Caſtle.

In the 12th of King of Henry the IIId, Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, was Governor of the Caſtle of Canterbury.

In King Edward the IId's Reign (and I doubt not, ſome time before, for I find it ſo in 21 King Edward Iſt.) it appears, that there was a common Priſon kept in this Caſtle; and Mr. Somner judges, that it continued here a long time after, till the ordinary Paſſage thro' the Caſtle-yard was ſtopped up; and the further Gate alſo ſhut, or rather made up; which was probably done in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, for then there was a Priſon by St. Jacob's, which after having continued there ſome time was changed to that in Weſtgate-ſtreet, where it is ſtill.

Dr. Plott in a Letter to Biſhop Fell, p. 108. of Leland's Collections, mentions ſome Hebrew Inſcriptions, which were written on the Caſtle Walls in Canterbury; and he ſuppoſes that they were put up there by ſome Jews, who were impriſoned here in King Richard the Iſt's, or King Edward the Iſt's Keign.

CHILHAM-Caſtle. This Place, according to ſome Writers, lays claim to very great Antiquity; for Kilburn and the Dering MSS. ſay, that it was A. D. 182. the Seat of Lucius, the firſt Chriſtian King, whoſe Hiſtory I ſhall enquire into more particularly, when I come to treat of the Romans in Kent. And if what Philpot relates of it be true, it will bid very fair for ſo great Antiquity: He ſaith, that when Sir Dudley Diggs cauſed his Workmen to dig down the Ruins of the old Caſtle, in order to make a good Foundation for that fine Houſe, which he erected there; they found plain Footſteps of a much more ancient Building under Ground, with many Roman Veſſels and Utenſils: and there was preſerved in his Time a kind of Senate-houſe, which was built round with Seats, cut out of an excellent and durable Stone. p. 117. Leland ſaith, it was called the Caſtle of Joſhua; but for what Reaſon I cannot find.

During the Time of the Heptarchy, it was under the Care of the Kings of Kent, and King Wightred in particular, fortified it and made it a Place of Strength and Defence. But it was afterwards ſacked and demoliſhed by the Danes, in their Incurſions into theſe Parts.

It ſeems to have lain deſolate after this till the Time of King William the Iſt. but he aſſigned it to Fulbert de Dover, with Lands to make it up a whole Knights Fee; and ſo it became a Member of the Caſtle of Dover; becauſe it was given him to enable him to aſſiſt John de Fiennes in the Guard of that Caſtle; and Fulbert was to find at his own Charge Fifteen able Soldiers, of which 3 were to mount the Guard at Dover Caſtle for a Month together, and to continue the Service for 20 Weeks in every Year.

This Fulbert's Name was originally Lucy, but he choſe rather to denominate himſelf from the Place of his Office. But his Son Richard, in a Charter dated the 16th of King John, by which this Caſtle is reſtored to Roheſia, or Roſe de Dover, with all its Appendages, is called Richard de Lucy. King John, the Year before, had committed the Cuſtody of this Caſtle to Thomas Peverell; and in that Grant 'tis called an Honour. It held of the King in Capite, and had about 18 ſeveral Manors dependant on it by Knights Service; and it had alſo ſeveral other Royal Privileges belonging to it, as I am informed. Lambard thinks it was for ſome Time in the Hands of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, becauſe King John came hither to treat with Stephen Langton, about a Reconciliation between them.

But certain it is, that by Roſe abovementioned, it went in Marriage to Richard, Baſe Son of King John: And by one of her two Daughters and Co-heirs, Iſabella, it went into the Poſſeſſion of David de Strabolgy, Earl of Athol. This Iſabella, afterwards married Alexander Baliol, who in her Right was Lord of Chilham, and called to ſit in Parliament by that Title. She died here at Chilham, A. D. 1292. And I find him claiming great Privileges here before the Juſtices Itinerant, in the 7th of King Edward the Iſt. as Hundred, Furcas, Tumbrel, Pillorium, Infangthef, Aſſiſam, Panis & Cerviſiæ &c. ſine cartâ, by ancient Cuſtom. And in the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt. he claimed Free-Warren here, and a Market on Tueſday; and an 8 Days Fair, viz. 3 Days before, on, and 4 Days after the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin. But Philpot ſaith, that David's Son, John Earl of Athol, ſtrenuouſly oppoſing King Edward the Iſt. in his Deſign of reducing Scotland, was taken Priſoner and was hanged at Canterbury on a Gibbet of 50 Foot high, and being cut down Alive, and Beheaded, had his Body burnt; and this Eſtate with the reſt was forfeited to the Crown, where it ſtaid till King Edward the IId. in his 5th Year granted the Caſtle and Manor of Chilham to Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmer. And he alſo forfeited it to the Crown by his Rebellion againſt that Prince; ſo that it was granted for Life only to David de Strabolgy, Grandſon to him abovementioned; and on his Death, returning to the Crown, it was in the 3d of King Edward the IIId. granted to Bartholomew Badeleſmer, Son to Lord Bartholomew above-named. His Son Giles died without Iſſue; but Margaret, one of his 4 Siſters and Coheirs, carried it in Marriage to William Lord Roos of Hemlake: Whoſe Deſcendant, Thomas Lord Roſſe eſpouſing the Lancaſtrian Cauſe, was taken Priſoner in a Battel by the Partiſans of the Houſe of York, and beheaded at New-Caſtle. And King Edward the IVth. had before given away this Eſtate, which was declared forfeited by his engaging with the Houſe of Lancaſter, to Sir John Scott, of Scott's-Hall, in Kent, Privy-Counſellor to that Prince. But his Grant was only for Life, and conſequently on his Death returned to the Crown; where it ſtaid till King Henry the VIIIth granted it to Sir Thomas Cheney, who reſided here when Leland made his Perambulation; and he ſaith, that the Buildings were very fine here; but Sir Thomas pulled it down, and carried the Materials to build his Houſe at Shurland in the Iſle of Sheppey. Henry Cheyney, this Gentleman's Son was created a Baron by Queen Elizabeth; but he was ſo very Profuſe and Extravagant in his Expences, that he ſoon was forced to ſell this, as well as moſt other parts of his Eſtate. This Caſtle and Manor was purchaſed by Sir Thomas Kemp; but his Son of the ſame Name leaving only 4 Daughters; by one of them, Mary, Part of this Eſtate went in Marriage to Sir Dudley Diggs; and the 3 others Sold him alſo all their Right and Title: Of whom Dorothy married Sir John Cutts; Anne, Sir Thomas Chichley; and Amy, Sir Henry Skippith. This Sir Dudley Diggs was Maſter of the Rolls, A. D. 1636. and a great Aſſertor (ſaith Philpot) of his Country's Liberty in the worſt of Times, when the Sluices of Prerogative were opened, and the Banks of the Law were almoſt overwhelmed with the Inundations of it. This worthy Gentleman, of whom this Noble Character is given, erected a fair Manſion-houſe, pleaſantly ſituated cloſe by the Caſtle. Becauſe Thomas Poſthumus Diggs, the laſt of the Family that lived at Barham, had ſome Time before this Purchaſe made by Sir Dudley, alienated the Manſion Houſe there, called Diggs-Court, with the Mannor of Outelmeſton, or Oulſton, which had been the Chief Seat of that Family for above 200 Years. Sir Dudley, therefore Sold the Mannor of Brome, and other Lands in or near Barham, which came to him as Heir Male of the Family, and purchaſed what he thought more convenient here, near Chilham; And at his Deceaſe left all his Eſtate here and elſewhere (except the Mannor of Feverſham, which he ſettled on his Second Son, John) to his Eldeſt Son Thomas Diggs, Eſq; and his Eldeſt Son and Heir was Sir Maurice Diggs, Baronet; but he, with ſeveral other Brothers dying without Iſſue, this Eſtate fell to the Youngeſt Son of the ſaid Thomas, Leonard Diggs, Eſq; who is the preſent Poſſeſſor, and hath two Sons John and Thomas.

The preſent Houſe is a very handſome Seat, the Rooms Good and Lofty, the Front Beautiful, and Grand, by the Aſcent up to the Door. The Proſpect is very fine, and the Gardens laid in Terras-manner, one under another, in good Order, and rendred yet more Ornamental by a fine Wilderneſs Work of Hornbeam.

The Old Caſtle is now only uſed for a Brewhouſe, with Lodgings for Servants.

There was a free Chapel erected here 1349. and dedicated to the Virgin, which had a perpetual Chaplain, as ſome ſay, appointed by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but others make it to have been in the Patronage of Margery the Lady Roos, Daughter of Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere; but this doth not well agree with Philpot's Account.

COLEBRIDGE-Caſtle, is in Bocton-Malherbe, and ſpoken of there: It doth not ſeem to have ever been deſigned as a Place of much Strength; it was ſituate under the Hill towards Headcorn, and in the 43d of King Henry the IIId. was the Eſtate of Sir Fulk Peyforer, who had a Licenſe to Build and Embattel here, according to the uſual Cuſtom in that Age. Afterwards it became the Eſtate of Roger Lord Leybourn, and by Juliana, his Daughter, went to William Clinton Earl of Huntington; but he dying before her, and ſhe leaving no Iſſue, it eſcheated to the Crown; and in the 21ſt of King Richard the IId. was granted to the Royal Chapel of St. Stephen, Weſtminſter; where it continued till the Diſſolution, and then in the 2d of King Edward the VIth, was granted to Sir Edward Wotton; and the Widow of his Grandſon, the Lord Thomas Wotton of Marley, was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

COURTOPSTREET-Caſtle: This, Lambard ſaith, was anciently called Bellirica, or Bellcaire, i. e. Bello-Caſtrum, the Fair Caſte. The Inhabitants will have Courtopſtreet to have been once an Eminent Town; and for Proof thereof, they ſhew the Ruins of their Fair-Caſtle, which ſtood, ſaith Leland, hard by the Chapel; and in his Time, they uſed alſo to ſhew a Mace and a Horn, as Badges of their having been formerly a Corporation: But Leland himſelf thinks it was only a Part of the Portus Lemanis; as it is now only one Part of the Pariſh Limne.

Probably, if there ever was a Caſtle and large Tower here; as indeed the Ruins and Foundations of Houſes often dug up on the Hill, do indicate: it was, doubtleſs, the Place where the Roman Watch-Tower did ſtand; and Five ſuch were built in this County; as at Reculver, Richborough, Anderida, Dover, and this: as is evident from the Notitia Imperii occidentalis; and by what is ſaid in the Hiſtoria Gildæ, Edit. Oxon. p. 13. But I don't take this Caſtle to have been that Roman Fortreſs, where the Band or Company of the Turnacenſes lay in Gariſon under the Command of the Count of the Saxon Shore; For their Station was more probably in Stutfall-Caſtle below, on the hanging of the Hill, juſt above the Old Portus Lemanis. But this might be the Place of the Watch-Tower; the Situation agreeing mighty well with ſuch a Deſign, which was to look out after the Saxon Pirates, who were continually infeſting the Coaſt in thoſe Days. Lambard thinks Limn-Church, and the old Seat of the Archdeacon of Canterbury, Limn-Court, were both built out of the Ruins of this Caſtle, and that of Stutfall.

COWLING-Caſtle, was erected by John Lord Cobham, who had a Grant and Licenſe for it in the 24th of King Richard the IId. Which Grant he cauſed to be carved or cut in a large Table on Stone, and placed on the Front of the Caſtle, where part of it remains viſible to this Day.

The Ruins ſhew it to have been a very ſtrong Place, and the Moat round it is very deep. The Gatehouſe is ſtill ſtanding, which is fortified with a Portcluſe or Portcullis; and machecollated; it hath alſo ſuch kind of Towers for its Defence, as were uſed in thoſe Days.

The Hiſtory of that Unfortunate, but Gallant Gentleman, Sir John Old-Caſtle, Lord Cobham, and Owner of the Caſtle, I have given you before, under Cobham.

Anno Dom. 1553. Sir Thomas Wyatt, when he roſe in Rebellion againſt Queen Mary, attempted to take this Caſtle; but it was very well defended by the Lord Cobham its Owner. By a Daughter of that Family, it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Whitmore, who Sold it to Frederick Herne, Eſq; the preſent Poſſeſſor.

DEAL-Caſtle. This, together with Sandown, Walmer, and Sandgate, were all built, as well as ſome others on the Coaſt of Suſſex, by the Command of King Henry the VIIIth. and by a Statute made for that Purpoſe in his 32d Year, were recommended to, and put under the Care of the Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports, to prevent any ſudden Invaſion from Abroad; which the King was then apprehenſive of, when he found the Emperor ſo offended at his repudiating Queen Catharine; and that the Dauphin of France had married the Pope's Niece, and the King of Scots the French King's Daughter.

They are all ſmall Caſtles built with round Ramparts, after the manner of thoſe Times, and DOVER Caſtle is ſituated upon the Southern End of that long Ridge of Rocks or ſteep Cliffs, which run from Deale to that Opening which is made at Dover, to form the Harbour and to receive the little (a) River into the Sea. This Ridge of Rocks the κρημνοὶ τῆς βρεταννῶν are called very juſtly by Cicero, Moles Magnificæ: And are well ſtocked with Samphire.

(a) Appian Lib. 2. εμφυλ.

Here, ſaith Camden is a large Caſtle placed like a little City, with ſtrong Fortifications and a great many Towers, which, as it were, threatens the Sea under it, from a Hill or rather a Rock upon the Right Hand ragged and ſteep, but towards the Sea riſes to a wonderful Height. And indeed the Precipice downwards is ſo very dreadful that it turns moſt People's Heads to ſurvey it.

It is thus beautifully deſcribed by Shakeſpear in his Tragedy of King Lear.

There is a Cliff, whoſe high and bending Head
Looks fearfully on the confined Deep ——
How dizzy 'tis to caſt ones Eyes ſo low?
The Crows and Choughs that wing the Midway Air,
Shew ſcarce ſo groſs as Beetles. Half way down
Hangs one that gathers Samphire: Dreadful Trade!
Methinks he ſeems no bigger than his Head.
The Fiſhermen that walk upon the Beach
Appear like Mice. And yond tall Anchoring Bark
Diminiſhed to her Cock (b); her Cock a Buoy
Almoſt too ſmall for Sight. The murmuring Surge
That on th' unnumbred idle Pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard ſo high. I'll look no more,
Leſt my Brain turn, and the deficient Sight
Topple down Headlong —— ——

(b) i. e. Her Cock-boat.

And in another Place he ſaith;

From the dread Summit of this Chalky Bourn
Look up: A Height —the ſhrill-gor'd Lark ſo far
Cannot be ſeen nor heard. —— ——

And Willielmus Pictavienſis thus deſcribes it:

Situm eſt Caſtellum in rupe Mari contigua, quæ naturaliter acuta undique ad hoc Ferramentis inciſâ, in ſpeciem Mari directiſſimâ altitudine, quantum Sagittæ jactus permetiri poteſt, conſurgit: Quo in latere unda marina alluitur.

This Caſtle is ſaid to contain 35 Acres of Ground; Six whereof were taken up by the old Buildings; and according to ſome, lays claim to very great Antiquity. Lydgate and Roſs, as cited by Lambard; and the fair Manuſcript Treatiſe written by Mr. William Darell, Chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, and dedicated to Cobham Lord Warden, which is now in the Library belonging to the Heralds Office at Doctors Commons, agree, that it was built by Julius Cæſar; and with theſe partly concurs a Manuſcript which I met with at Sandwich, which ſaith, That Caſſibelan built it at Julius Cæſar's Command, to awe the Britains. But Julius indeed ſtaid here ſo little a while, and was ſo warmly engaged by the Britains, that he could have neither Time nor Leiſure for ſuch a Work: However, the Roman Bricks, very plentiful ſtill to be ſeen about it, do ſhew it muſt have been built during the Time of their Continuance here: And perhaps ſome Watch-Tower might have been built there ſoon after Julius Cæſar's Time, probably by the Britons. Though the French Extract in the Monaſticon Anglican. Vol. II. p. 1, 2, 3, &c. out of the Tower Records, Ex Brev. in Anno 14. Reg. Ed. 2. doth expreſly tell us, That Julius Cæſar built it, (or rather it may be, ordered it to be built), to receive the Tribute paid by the Britains. But King Arviragus would not pay it, but took the Tower, and entrenched it, walled it, and fortified it againſt the Romans: And it ſaith further, That Claudius came over, and warred againſt him; but at length Things were compromiſed; and it was agreed, That Arviragus ſhould marry the Emperor's Daughter Gemuſſe, and pay the uſual Tribute. This is that Arviragus mentioned by Juvenal, in Sat. IV. v. 127.

—— Aut de Temone Britanno
Excidet Arviragus.

Camden ſaith alſo, That there was a Table formerly hung up in the Caſtle, which expreſſed, That Cæſar began to build here; and that Arviragus fortified it againſt the Romans, and ſhut up the Harbour. And Lambard ſaith, That the Inhabitants uſed to ſhew certain Veſſels of old Wine and Salt, and which were kept in the Caſtle in his Time, and affirmed to be the Remainder of ſuch Proviſion as Cæſar brought in hither. Camden was ſhewn here certain large Arrows, which he thinks, were ſuch as the Romans uſed to ſhoot out of their Engines, which were like unto large Croſs-Bows. But both Cæſar's Proviſions of Wine and Salt, and theſe Roman Arrows are now all gone. However, the middle Tower of the Church ſtill ſhewing plain Remains of Roman Work, there can be no doubt but it was began to be built during the Time of their being in Britain: And I think it very likely, that it might be as early as the Time of Arviragus.

Though perhaps ſome will rather be for fixing it to about A. D. 165. or as others more rightly ſeem to date it, in 179. when King Lucius reigned in Britain; and, as is ſaid, built a Church within this Caſtle. For though it doth not appear, that there ever was ſuch a King as Lucius over all Britain; yet 'tis probable, that there was one Lucius Son of Coilus, who might be a King under the Romans in ſome Part of Britain; and who was in Friendſhip with Marcus Antoninus Verus Cæſar. (a)

(a) Archbiſhop Uſher's Primordiæ, C. 3. p. 39, 40.

It was repaired and fortified by Wightred King of Kent; of which more by and by.

By what Pictavienſis above-cited tells us, one would conclude, that the Fortification of this Caſtle, to the Seaward at leaſt, when King William the Iſt Landed, was not ſo much from Art as Nature; or indeed rather a Mixture of both: The Top of the Cliff being cut with Tools of Iron into Embattlements. But theſe being of Chalk only were ſoon decayed, and then ſuch Walls as are now there, were built to ſupply thoſe Natural Bulwarks, as Mr. Somner hath obſerved: And this may help us to determine in ſome Meaſure the Age of the preſent Walls, towards the Sea.

It was formerly thought to be a Place of the greateſt Importance. Matthew Paris who lived in King Henry the IIId's Reign, calls it, Clavis & Repagulum totius Regni; And no doubt King William the Iſt thought it ſo too: For when he agreed with Harold in Normandy, that he ſhould put him into the Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England, after King Edward the Confeſſor's Death; in order thereunto he ſtipulated with him, that he ſhould deliver up to him Dover Caſtle, with the Well that was therein. And afterwards, when in the Battel of Haſtings, he had ſlain Harold and routed his Army, King William marched along the Sea-Coaſt to take Poſſeſſion of this Caſtle, whither great Multitudes of People had fled, as to a Place thought perfectly impregnable. Stephen Aſhburnham, whom ſome call a Baron, and Allan of Evering, as his Lieutenant, pretended to defend this Caſtle againſt him; but upon his Approach to it, they ſoon yielded to his Mercy. And ſome Writers ſay, he hanged up Aſhburnham; and Darell ſaith, he Beheaded him. But here he ſtaid himſelf about Eight Days, leaving his ſick and wounded Men, placing in it a Gariſon of Normans, and further fortifying the Caſtle; and then marched directly for London. In which March the Body of the Kentiſh Men came in to him voluntarily: As the City of Canterbury had ſent Deputies before to him at Dover, to make their Submiſſion.

Some Time after this, he made his Kinſman John Fiennes Conſtable of this Caſtle, by Inheritance; and made him alſo Lord-Warden of the Cinque Ports: And in order to enable him to bear the Charge of a Gariſon neceſſary to defend a Place of ſo great Truſt, he gave him, ſaith Lambard, 56 Knights Fees (126, ſaith Kilburn; and the Sandwich Manuſcript makes them 115.) of Land into his Poſſeſſion, and willed him to communicate ſome Part of that great Gift to ſome other valiant and truſty Friends, the better to ſecure this important Fortreſs. Accordingly he made choice of Eight other Worthy Knights; whoſe Names were William of Albrunce, Fulbert Lucy, William Arſick, Galfride Peverell, William Maynemouth, Robert Porthe, Hugh Crevequer, and Adam Fitz-Williams: And to theſe he imparted generouſly and faithfully, that which he had freely received from the King; and bound them by the Tenure of their Land, which he gave into their Poſſeſſion, to maintain 112 Soldiers; who were to be ſo divided, that 25 of them were continually to keep Watch and Ward within the Caſtle, during their appointed Times. And each of theſe had their ſeveral Charges, in diſtinct Towers, Turrets, or Bulwarks, as will further appear below, and to maintain and repair them at their own Expence: In Memory of which ſeveral of them bore the Names of theſe Eight Knights, and ſome retain it till this Day.

Kilburn and the Sandwich Manuſcript ſay, the Gariſon here conſiſted of 1000 Men; if ſo, then of theſe 112, the 25 who were upon Duty, may be eſteemed as Captains or commanding Officers over the reſt.

When King William went firſt into Normandy, after the Conqueſt of this Kingdom, the Kentiſh Men being grievouſly oppreſſed by Odo and Fitz Osborn, the Regents in his Abſence, ſent to Euſtace Earl of Bullen to aſſiſt them in ſurprizing this Caſtle. Euſtace attempted it with a good Fleet, manned with well choſen Soldiers, and joining with them attacked the Caſtle by Land: But he found it much better defended by the Norman Gariſon, than he or they expected; and ſo he ſailed Home with his Fleet re infectâ, loſing moſt of his beſt Men in the Attempt.

King Stephen alſo in the Contention that there was between him and Maud the Empreſs, about the Title to the Crown of England, thought nothing could be of more Service to him, than to get this Caſtle into his Poſſeſſion; and therefore he never ceaſed to ſollicite Walkelm, who then had the Cuſtody of it, till he got it to be delivered up to him.

And thus alſo, when Lewis the Dauphin of of France, in King John's Time, came hither at the Inſtigation of the Pope, and by the Invitation of the Nobility, to invade this Kingdom; and had, partly through Fear, and partly through the Treachery of the Barons, moſt of the Caſtles and Forts in the South of England delivered up to him; yet he did not think himſelf ſafe, becauſe he had not Poſſeſſion of this Caſtle of Dover; and King Philip his Father ſwore by St. James's Arm, That unleſs he had this, he had not gained a Foot of Land in England. Hither therefore he came, with all his Might and Power, and beſieged it cloſely and vigorouſly, cutting a Trench from the Poſtern Gate right down to the River, which hath ſince been called the Port Dyke. But Hubert de Burgh Earl of Kent, chief Juſticiary of England, Warden of the Ports, and Conſtable of this Caſtle, defended it ſo bravely, that the French made nothing of it, but were forced to give it over: And as Lambard obſerves, the Delivery of this Land from foreign Servitude at that Time, was entirely owing to the Valour and Conduct of this Gallant and great Earl of Kent.

In the Time that this Hubert de Burgh was Conſtable of this Caſtle, A. D. 1263, he changed, with King Henry the IIId's Conſent, the Service of Caſtle-Guard here into a Payment of Money; the Land being charged with 10*s.* for every Warder whom it was bound to find: And henceforth the Owners became diſcharged from all perſonal Service and Attendance for ever. And this new Rent was called Caſtleward. He influenced the King alſo to releaſe, by his Free Charter, the Cuſtom of Forage due to this Caſtle. After which he new regulated the Guard and Watch kept here, and increaſed the Number of the Gariſon and Warders. As appears by a Charter now in the Hands of my good Friend Peter le Neve, Eſq; Norroy. The Words are theſe:

——— Tandem Rex & Magnates ſecum conſiderantes non eſſe tutum Alienigenum & alterius Regis hominem habere Cuſtodiam Principalis Caſtri totius Regni; faciebant gratum Domino de Fiennes alibi, &c. Et Dominus Hubertus factus eſt Conſtabularius, &c. Qui perpendens quod non eſſet tutum pro Caſtro pro quolibet menſe habere novos Cuſtodes ad Wardam, procurabat per aſſenſum Regis & omnium militum prædictorum quod quilibet miles mitteret pro Warda unius Menſis x s. & quod inde ſtiparentur certi Homines electi & jurati, tam Milites quam Pedites ad Caſtrum cuſtodiendum, &c.

And thus it ſtood till King Henry the VIIIth did by Act of Parliament, in his 32d Year, alter both the Place and the Penalty of the Payment of theſe Caſtleward Rents: For whereas before they were payable only in this Caſtle, and doubled perpetually for every Default, it was now ordered, that the Rents ſhould be paid into the Exchequer at Weſtminſter; and the Forfeiture or Surſiſe, as 'twas called, ſhould be the double of the Rent only for once. He likewiſe, ſaith Lambard, beſtowed the Yearly Fee of 160 l. upon the Lord Warden and Conſtable, and maintained here a great many Soldiers; as he did alſo in the Caſtles of Deal, Walmer, Sandown, &c.

In the Barons Wars againſt King Henry the IIId, Simon Earl of Leiceſter their Leader, got Dover Caſtle out of the King's Poſſeſſion, and held it during his Life: And hither he uſed to ſend ſuch eminent Priſoners as he took in Battel. As he did in particular the King's Son, afterwards King Edward the Iſt. Some of which Priſoners after the Earl's Fall, aſſiſted King Edward the Iſt, in the Recovery of this Caſtle; for he beſieged it with Vigor, and took it; leaving in it, as Priſoner, Guy, this Simon Earl of Leiceſter's Son. But he corrupted his Keepers ſoon after, and made his Eſcape.

And to give you one Inſtance more of the Importance of this Caſtle in the Opinion of our Anceſtors: Matthew Paris tells us, That when King Henry the IIId invited over his own Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall, then King of the Romans, to come and ſee him, and to viſit alſo his Lands here: The Barons would neither let him, nor the King who came hither to meet him, enter into this Caſtle; nor any of their Re-

Retinue: So jealous were they of a Place of such Strength being in the Hand of the King or his Friends.

In King Richard the Ist's Reign, when he was Abroad Santering in the Holy Land, William Longchamp Bishop of Ely, the Chancellor and Regent of all England, first got into his Possession the Revenues of the Archbishop of York, and then imprisoned in this Castle Godfrey, the King's Brother, and Archbishop Elect of that Province. He caused him to be seized here as he came back from Rome, where he had been for his Consecration and Pall. But the King's other Brother, afterwards King John, raised a Force, and released the Archbishop, and drove the insolent Regent to take Refuge in this Castle himself; and he was afterward forced to live an obscure Life with Matthew de Clere, then Lord Warden and Sheriff of Kent, who had married his Sister.

From the Manuscript above-mentioned of Mr. Darell's it appears, that Hengist the Saxon made his Brother Horsa Governor of this Place.

Eadbald King of Kent founded a College for Secular Canons here, which stood near the Porta Coltonis. But King Wightred afterwards removed them down into the Town; of which more in its proper Place. This Kentish King also built a Wall to defend Dover Town against the Sea.

Darell tells us also, that anciently there were in Dover Castle all these following Towers.

1. The Turris Albranci, or Rokesleiana; so called from one Rokesley who was his Deputy; and William de Albrancis, who had the Custody and Propriety of it.

2. Chilham Tower; called also Chaldercott, from Fulbert de Dover's Deputy of that Name.

3. Hurst Tower.

4. Arsick Tower; from William de Arsick abovementioned. This was also called afterwards Say Tower, from Godfride de Say, who in King Henry the IIId's Time had the Custody, and was liable for the Repair of it: For which the King gave him Langdon near Folkstone, and Pevington by Pluckley.

5. Gatton Tower.

6. Beauchamp's Tower. This was called afterwards the Marshal Tower; from one of the Beauchamp's being made Marshal.

7. Ports and Gastings Tower: Latterly this was called Turris Mariana, because it was rebuilt by Queen Mary the Ist.

8. Newgate or Fiennes Tower. Here John de Fiennes lived himself; and this was the usual Place of Justice.

9. Clopton Tower: So called because it was rebuilt by one Clopton of Suffolk.

10. Terris Dei inimica.

11. Crevils, or the Earl of Norfolk's Tower. This stood right against the Bridge; which Darell saith the Romans built here with great Art. Near this Tower was a large Vault or Cave; out of which both Horse and Foot could issue or sally, if the Castle were attacked: 'Twas thought to have been the Work of the famous Hubert de Burgo, when he was Constable here: And in our Author's Time it was called the Barbacan.

12. St. John's Tower. And near this was also another Vault or Cave, for the same Purpose as the other. Towards the Maintenance of this Tower, Lands were given by the Crown, in Betshanger, Bleakstone, Rhadegaud, Wapingholt, Witfield, Tonterege, Hartbanger, and Ham.

13. The Watch Tower. This was maintained by the Inhabitants of Swinfield.

14. Averranches, afterwards Mansells Tower: Towards the Repair of which the Crown gave Alkeham and Maltaniam, as Darell calls it; perhaps the Manor of Malmains in Alkeham.

15. Pencheſter Tower; which took its Name from Stephen de Pencheſter. It was kept in Repair by Lands given to the Pencheſter Family by the Crown for this Purpose: And they lay about Postling, Horton, Rucking, and Blackmanstone.

16. Godwine's Tower. This stood by the Back-Gate; and was repaired by Land lying in Goodnestone, vulgo Gunston. And it was out of this Gate that the Brave Hubert de Burgh made that Sally, by which he drove off Lewis the Dauphin of France, and made him raise the Siege of this Place.

17. Turres Eschefordenses, or the Ashford Towers, were Three, and placed upon the long Wall.

18. Valence; afterwards Mortimer's Tower, was built near the Sea.

19. Clinton's Tower. Near this stood the Chapel or Church of King Lucius; which was built in the Form of a Cross, and had a strong Square Tower of its own, at the West End. And here the Annals of Dover say, was an Altar which was used by Austin the Monk.

20. Colton Gate: This stood at the West End of King Lucius's Church, and had a large Tower belonging to it; and from hence went a Wall and a Ditch along by the Place where the Colledge of Canons formerly stood to the,

21. Harecourt Tower.

22. Duke of Suffolk's Tower. This had good Lodgings and Accommodations made in it by King Edward the IVth; who laid out 10000 l. in building and beautifying this Castle.

23. The Royal Gate of the Castle, had Three Towers belonging to it: And here Manimoth, who was Marshal in King William the Ist's Reign, had his Habitation.

24. The Square Tower: In the middle of the Church or Chapel here, Mr. Somner thinks to have been the very Roman Specula or Watch Tower; because it hath Holes made in it of all Sides, to espy or look out: And he judges this rather to have been it, than the

25. Kings Keep or Dungeon: Because in this are no manner of Roman Bricks or Tiles, which do plentifully shew themselves in the former. And indeed this Keep was built A. D. 1153, by King Henry the IId, and probably was called the Kings Keep from him. He also enclosed the Dungeon about with a new Wall.

It is indeed a great Question, Whether either the Tower at the West End (though that bids fairest for it) or the Square one in the middle between the Chancel and Nave of this Church, were ever the actual Work of the Romans: They seem to me to have an Appearance of a much later Date, even since the Conquest; but I doubt not but they contain in them Roman Materials; and were erected out of the Ruins of the ancient Roman Buildings here. And as for that Tower in the Middle, it cannot be older than the Body of the Church, because it stands on the Four Arches or inner Coins of the Building; as is usual in the Norman Way of Architecture.

The Roman Specula or Watch Tower therefore it self is probably long ago decayed; but another may well be supposed to have been built in its Room, and out of its Ruins; which that at the West End of the Church appears to me to have been. However,

I agree with Mr. Somner entirely, as to the placing of the Pharos or Light-House; which Twine saith, he saw almost entire; and think the Ruins called the Devil's Drop; and which Darell, and some others, call Ara Cæsaris; on the the Hill over-againſt this Caſtle, was certainly the Place of its Situation. On this high Hill, by the Devil's Drop, are ſolemnly ſworn all the Lord Wardens of the Cinque Ports. And the Vulgar call this Place Bredin Stone; here all the Courts are kept, and moſt Buſineſs relating to the Ports is now done.

Below the Caſtle, under its ſteepeſt Cliff near the Sea, is a ſtrong Fort built; as is alſo another oppoſite to it on the Weſtern Side of the Harbour.

Beſides the great Sum laid out by King Edward the IVth, as is above-mentioned; King Henry, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, were at a conſiderable Expence, in the Repair of this Caſtle: And King Charles the Iſt laid out a good deal of Money here to prepare it for the Reception of his Queen Henrietta Maria, at her firſt coming over from France; and whom he here entertained.

Anciently here was a Commiſſary, who held his Court in this Caſtle; a Lieutenant, Marſhal, Learned Steward, Clerk of the Exchequer, Gentleman Porter, Four Yeoman Porters, a Serjeant at Arms, a Serjeant of the Admiralty, who was of old the Marſhal's Deputy: Serjeants to Arreſt, Serjeants of Artillery, a Serjeant to ſerve Proceſſes from the Caſtle-Court Gate: An Armourer, Smith, Plumber, Carpenter, Two Warreners, and a Prieſt; whoſe Houſe, Kilburn ſaith, was called Cocklecoe: And all theſe had Stipends or Salaries.

A. D. 1580. April 6. An Earthquake was felt here; which threw down a Piece of the Cliff, with Part of the Caſtle ſtanding on it next the Sea.

In the Church here lay the Effigies of Sir Robert Aſhton, Lord-Warden and Conſtable of the Caſtle, in the Year 1384: He had a Patent for Life, with a Salary of 300 l. per Ann. A Man of great Note and Eminence; for in the 42d Year of King Edward the IIId's Reign, he was made Admiral of the Engliſh Fleet from the Mouth of the River Thames, Weſtward. Three Years afterwards he was Juſticiary of Ireland; and Three Years after that, Treaſurer of the King's Exchequer here: He was alſo Executor of that Prince's laſt Will and Teſtament. He gave the great Bell in this Church. But that and its Fellows are now all removed from hence, and were made a Preſent of to the Church of Portſmouth; as I am informed.

Here alſo was buried Henry Earl of Northampton, who was Lord-Warden of the Ports in King James the Iſt's Reign.

Either in this Caſtle, which I think probable, or elſe in the Town below, as appears by the Notitia of the Weſtern Empire, lay the Præpoſitus Militum Tungricanorum, with his Men in Gariſon; ſub Diſpoſitione Viri ſpectab. Comitis Littoris Saxonici.

The Draught of Dover Caſtle hereunto annexed, is a Copy of one in Darell's Manuſcript Book, ſo often above-mentioned; and expreſſes I ſuppoſe, the State of it as it was ſtanding in Queen Elizabeth's Reign.

On King William the Iſt's Death, Eudo, who was his Steward, ſeized on this and the Caſtles of Haſting, Pevenſey, &c. in order to ſecure the Kingdom to William Rufus.

4. AYNSFORD Caſtle. This doth not appear to have been a Place of any Strength, but rather an embattled Manſion of the Ancient Family of the Eynsfords, and afterwards of the Arſicks. The Ruins of it were viſible in Philpot's Time. It, and the Eſtate belonging to it, and holding of it, might make up ſome of the Eighteen Knights Fees, which King William the Iſt gave to Robert de Arſick for his Aſſiſtance of John de Fiennes in the Guard of Dover Caſtle: Another of his Knights Fees lay at Mapleſcombe; another at Fremingham or Farningham; a Fourth at Combe, and a Fifth at Bekewell in this County. The reſt lay in Oxfordſhire, Dorſetſhire, Wiltſhire, and Lincolnſhire.

5. FOLKSTONE Caſtle. Philpot ſaith, That Eadbald King of Kent, built a Caſtle at the South Part of the Town of Folkſtone; on whoſe Ruins, after it had fallen to decay, William de Averranches erected another Fortification, the Remains of which were ſtill, he ſaith, in ſome Meaſure viſible. But Lambard ſaith, it is ſo ſwallowed up by the Sea, as to be departed out of Sight (a): Only ſome broken Walls, in which are ſeen great Bricks, the Marks of Britiſh Buildings, do remain. But what he means by calling them Britiſh Buildings, I can ſcarce comprehend: Though I find Mr. Camden, Burton, and ſome others, uſing the ſame Ways of Expeſſion for Bricks and Buildings, which are certainly either Works of Roman Hands, or of the Britons under their Direction. For that the Britons, before the Romans came hither, did ever make ſuch Kind of Bricks, or had any eminent Buildings either of Brick or Stone, is what I think we have no manner of Reaſon to conclude.

Mr. Camden thinks this Town of Folkſtone to have been one of thoſe Places, where, in the Reign of Theodoſius Junior, the Romans placed Forts to keep off the Saxons; and Watch-Towers (let me add) to diſcover their Approaches. One of the latter of which, probably, might be placed on Caſtle Hill; which lies about a Mile and an half North North Weſt from Folkſtone; and of which I have there ſpoken. But Caſtle Hill could not be this Caſtle mentioned by Lambard and Philpot, ſince both agree, that the Sea hath waſhed away and deſtroyed it; as it did the Nunnery and Four Pariſh Churches.

And 'tis much more probable that the Roman Gariſon, if ſuch was here, was placed about the Specula or Watch-Tower at Caſtle Hill, than ſo low down towards the Water, as Lambard places the Site of Folkſtone Caſtle. Though the Romans might build, or teach the Britons to do ſo, below in the Town; and that they might there alſo place a Fort to keep off the Saxon Pirates, and by this means make uſe here of ſuch Bricks or Tiles, as they did in other Places, I think very probable: And this will account for ſuch having been formerly found there.

GODDARDS Caſtle. See an Account of it in Thurnham.

HEVER Caſtle. See in Hever.

KEMSING Caſtle. This, Philpot ſaith, was a Place of Strength in King Henry the IId's Reign: Falcatius de Brent, jun. being Chattelan thereof. But 'tis now gone to perfect Ruin, and I believe was demoliſhed in or before King Edward the Iſt's Time; becauſe then I find it only ſtiled a Manor, and in the Poſſeſſion of Otho de Grandiſon. Placit. Coron. & Quo Warranto, in 21. K. E. 1.

LABORNE, or more truly Leybourn-Caſtle; Kilburn ſaith, and that as long ago as the Reign of King William the Iſt, this Place was in the Poſſeſſion of the Lord Leybourn: And Philpot ſaith, that it was built by ſome of that Family, and was eſteemed anciently as a Place of Strength. But he doth not carry its Age higher than King Richard the Iſt.; and then he finds Roger de Leybourn to have been one of thoſe Kentiſh Knights who accompanied that Prince into into the Holy-Land, and aſſiſted him at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine. Another Roger de Leybourn, is in the Liſt of thoſe who attended King Henry the IIId. in his Expedition into Gaſcony, in the 37th Year of his Reign; and afterwards he was deeply engaged with Simon de Montford, Earl of Leiceſter, in his Rebellion againſt that King: But he had the good luck to be pardoned at the Pacification of Kenelworth, in the 50th Year of that Prince. He charges him alſo with killing Ernulfus de Monteney, at a meeting of the Round Table in the 36th of King Henry the IIId. And ſaith, he married the Counteſs of Wincheſter. Sir Henry, and Sir Simon de Leybourn were both Knighted by King Edward the Iſt. at the Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, in the 28th Year of that Prince; and William de Leybourn, the Son of Roger, was in that Reign frequently ſummoned to Parliament as a Baronet: And by that Title ſubſcribed with the King and the reſt of the Peerage, to that Letter which A. D. 1301. that King ſent to the Pope, to juſtify the Grounds of his War with Scotland. This William, he ſaith, was the Son of Roger de Leybourn, who was Sheriff of this County in the 48th and 50th Years of King Henry the IIId. And I find him claiming Free-Warren and other Privileges of a Mannor, for this Place, before the Juſtices Itinerant for this County, in the 21ſt of King Edward the Iſt. The laſt Male of this Family, was another Roger de Leybourn, who left this Caſtle, and a very great Eſtate, to his only Daughter Juliana: She was married, firſt to John de Haſtings, and afterwards to William de Clinton, Earl of Huntington; but had no Child by either, and deceaſed in the 43d of King Edward the IIId. without any Heir that could bring any juſt Claim to her Eſtate; which therefore eſcheated to the Crown. And King Richard the 2d in his 9th Year, granted this Caſtle and Mannor to Sir Simon de Burleigh, Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports: But he being not long after attainted for High-Treaſon, it came to the Crown again: And in the 12th of King Richard the IId. was granted to the Abbey of Grace on Tower-Hill: Where it continued till the general Diſſolution of the Monaſteries.

And then in the 37th of K. Henry the VIIIth. was granted to Sir Edward North, who not long after ſold it to Robert Goſnold; and he in the 2d of Queen Elizabeth, parted with it to Robert Godden, whoſe Arms are now remaining in the Glaſs-Windows; but in a ſhort time, he Sold it to Sir John Lewſon, who parted with it the ſame way to Henry Clerk, Serjeant at Law, and Recorder of the City of Rocheſter; and his Son and Heir Francis Clerk, Eſq; was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time: From him it deſcended to Gilbert Clerk, Eſquire, of Derbyſhire; and thence went by Purchaſe to Captain William Saxby of Grange in this Pariſh, who is the preſent Poſſeſſor.

This Caſtle is now quite decayed and ruined, and hath only a Farm-Houſe in it.

(a) P. 64. Part 2. Mr. Batteley, in his Edition of Somner's Canterbury, ſaith, (a) that this Mannor and Caſtle did once belong to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and was alienated to the King, by the Conſent of the Dean and Chapter, in the 25th of King Henry the VIIIth. But how to reconcile this with Philpot's Account above given I can't ſee: Nor is it mentioned, either in Mr. Somner's, or his own Liſt of the Mannors in this County, which belonged before that Time to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

LEEDS-Caſtle: Kilburn ſaith, he finds that one Ledian, a Saxon, and Chief Counſellor to King Ethelbert the IId. did about 850 Years ago raiſe here a Fort or Caſtle to ſecure himſelf againſt the Danes. Tho it was after waſted by them, and ſo continued, till the Reign of King William the Iſt. And then Sir Hugh Crevequer, a Norman Nobleman, and one of the 8 Cheif Captains, or Lieutenant Governors of Dover Caſtle, built, or rather began to build a Caſtle here (as Stow ſaith in his Annals) in the Sixth Year of that Prince; and which was finiſhed by Adam his Grandſon.

And by the Bolt of the Catapulta, and ſome other Roman Antiquities, which have been found here, one may reaſonably conclude, that it might be a Place of ſome Note, and perhaps Strength, even in the Romans Time.

Philpot ſaith, That both the Town and Caſtle of Leeds were in the 20 of K. William the Iſt. as appears by Domeſday, aſſigned to Hamon de Crevequer, (whom Kilburn and Darell call Hugh,) for his Aſſiſtance of John de Fiennes, in the Guard of Dover Caſtle; And that he choſe this for the Capital Seat of the Barony of Crevequer, and of Chetham near Rocheſter; for of that Place he and ſome of his Poſterity wrote themſelves Barons. And here he erected a ſtupendous Caſtle, which from its being environed with Water, was called the Moat. This Hamon de Crevequer, whoſe Seal, or at leaſt that of ſome of his Deſcendants, was a Croſs Couped, born upon a Heart; married, ſaith Philpot, the only Daughter and Heir of William de Averrenches, Baron of Folkſtone; and by her had Robert de Crevequer, who by his Diſloyalty, loſt his Sovereign's Favour, and ruined himſelf. * After which it ſeems to have ſtaid in the Crown till King Henry the IIId's Reign; and then that Prince gave this Mannor and Caſtle to Roger de Leybourn, in Exchange for ſome Lands, which he had at Trotteſclive in this County (b). But not long after it got into the Crown again. For King Edward the IId. in his 10th Year, granted this Caſtle and Mannor, with the Advowſon of Leeds Priory, to Bartholomew Lord Badelſmere, Great Grandſon of Gunceline, who with his Brother Ralph de Badelſemere, accompanied King Richard the Iſt. into the Holy-Land; and were at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine.

(b) Pat. 52. H. 3.

And Gunceline his Father, was Chief Juſtice of Cheſter in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, a Place then of great Truſt and Honour. But as this Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere had a great Eſtate in this County, (for he had the Barony of Fits-Bernard at Kingſdown, Tong Caſtle, Chilham Caſtle, Ridlingſwould, and Hothfeild;) ſo his Pride and Ambition was proportionable to it; and at laſt proved his Ruin and Deſtruction. The Occaſion of which was this: Iſabella, King Edward the Iſt's Queen going on a Pilgrimage to Canterbury, and being benighted, deſired to lodge in this Caſtle: Which ſhe thought ſhe might well expect from Badeleſmere, who had been long the King her Husband's Steward: But when ſhe ſent her Marſhal before to give Notice of her Approach, he was denied Admittance, and told plainly, That neither the Queen nor any of her Retinue ſhould come into the Caſtle without a Letter from Lord Badeleſmere, who was then Abroad. The Poor Queen was loth to believe ſhe ſhould receive ſuch a rude Anſwer, therefore went her ſelf, but was treated after the ſame manner, and forced to take up with ſuch Lodgings as ſhe could get in the Neighbourhood, in

* The Tower Records, Clauſ. 1ſt of Edward the 1ſt M. 8. in dors. make Robert de Crevequer to have given this Caſtle then called the Moat, to William de Leybourn, which perhaps the Grantee got him to do, the better to confirm the Title from the Crown.

that Extremity. But complaining to the King of this Indignity, he reſented it ſo warmly, as that gathering an Army together about London, he immediately marched down hither, and laid Siege to the Caſtle, ſoon carried it, and hanged up the Chatellan, or Governor, Thomas Colepeper, who denied the Queen Entrance, and held it out againſt him †. He ſends alſo the Wife and Children of Badeleſmer, whom he found in the Caſtle to the Tower, and ſeiz'd upon his Goods and Treaſure. Upon this, Badeleſmer aſſociates with the Barons againſt the King, but unſuccesfully: For their Forces were defeated by King Edward; and Badeleſmer and Aſhburnham being taken Priſoners amongſt others, were Beheaded at Canterbury. On which Execution, this Caſtle and Mannor returning to the Crown, a Grant of it was made to Archbiſhop Arundel, whoſe Ambition was as great as his Birth; and who was then alſo Conſtable of the new-erected Caſtle of Queenborough, in the Iſle of Shepey. After his Death it came to the Crown again, and was a good while eſteemed as one of the King's Houſes; and as ſuch, put under the Cuſtody of ſome Eminent Kentiſh Gentleman. In King Henry the IVth's Time it ſeems to have been a Place of Note and Strength; if it be true, that King Richard the IId. was ſent Priſoner hither, as many of our Writers relate. But I think it was to the Caſtle of Leeds in Yorkſhire; becauſe 'tis ſaid by the Hiſtorians, that from thence he was removed to Pontfract in the ſame County.

In King Edward the IVth's Reign, Ralph St. Leger, Eſquire, was made Conſtable of the Caſtle of Leeds, and had one of the Parks alſo annexed to it in his Grant, for then there were two, tho' now neither is to be ſeen. And the Fee Simple continued in the Crown, * till King Edward the VIth. in his 4th Year granted it to Sir Anthony St. Leger, then Lord Deputy of Ireland: And who had done very great Services in that Kingdom. His great Grandſon Sir Warham St. Leger, ſold it to Sir Richard Smith; and his two Daughters joined in parting with it the ſame Way to Sir Thomas Colepeper of Holingbourn, who ſettled it in Marriage upon his Son Sir Cheney Colepeper, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Anno Dom. 1137. There being a Report, that King Stephen was Dead, Robert Earl of Glouceſter, Baſe Brother to Maud the Empreſs, fortified this Caſtle, in order to further her Claim to the Crown; as many other Noblemen did others, in other places. But the King ſoon drove him out of it.

Anno Dom. 1437. Queen Dowager Joan, 2d Wife to King Henry the IVth. and Daughter to King Charles the Vth of Navarre, was upon a Charge of High Treaſon committed Priſoner to this Caſtle.

LULLINGSTON Caſtle: See Lullingſtone.

MILTON Caſtle: See Kemſley Down in Milton by Sittingbourn.

NEWENDEN Caſtle: See Caſtle-Toll, in Newenden.

QUEENBOROUGH Caſtle: This Kilburn fancies to be of a very ancient Foundation, and ſaith, That King Edward the IIId did re-edify and enlarge it in the 42d Year of his Reign. But Philpot and Lambard ſeem to make that great Prince the ſole Founder of it: Who at its firſt Erection, called it Reginæ Burgus, or Queensborough, in Honour of his Queen Philippa, Daughter to William Earl of Hainault and Holland. He deſigned it as a Defence of the Mouth of the River Medway, againſt any Attempts from France, for the further Strength and Security of his Kingdom, and for a Refuge to the Inhabitants of the Iſland, in Caſe of any Invaſion, as the Letters Patents expreſs it. And in A. D. 1375. that King made many Ordinances here relating to Naval Affairs, which ſhew it then to have been a famous Place. In the Building of this Caſtle, the King was aſſiſted by that Great and Rich Prelate William of Wickham; who was Surveyor of the King's Works then, and afterwards made Biſhop of Wincheſter, Lord Privy-Seal, and at laſt Lord Chancellor.

He honoured the Governor of this Caſtle with the Title of Conſtable. And by the Catalogue of them here adjoined, it will appear ſeveral of them were very great and conſiderable Men.

Anno Dom. 1536. King Henry the VIIIth repaired and fortified this Caſtle, and at the ſame time built others, at Deal, Walmer, &c. for the Defence of the Sea Coaſts.

This Caſtle was ſtanding, ſtrong, and in good Repair, A. D. 1629. tho' there be now ſcarce any Remains of it viſible: The Ground where it ſtood is moated round; and there is a Well about 40 Fathom deep ſtill remaining. For Mr. Johnſton, in his Little Book, called Iter Plantarum Inveſtigationis ergo ſuſceptum, tells us, That he ſaw there a noble large Dining-Room, or Hall; where all the Arms of the Nobility and Eminent Gentry of Kent, were placed round the Top of it, and in the Middle, thoſe of Queen Elizabeth, with theſe Latin Verſes under in great Letters.

20. Philip, Earl of Pembrook and Montgomery, Baron of Shurland, and Knight of the Garter.

RECULVER Caſtle. Kilburn tells us, that the Emperor Severus, about A. D. 295; and the Sandwich MSS. alſo ſay, that Severus built Reculver in the Iſle of Tinlade: Which I gueſs to be Corruption in the Writing, inſtead of Ynlade: For Reculver is ſituate near to the North Inlet, or Ynlade: As I have before obſerved, when I ſpake of Sandwich and Thanet.

And as this Place, in a Charter of King Edmund, A. D. 784. is called Raculfceſter; We may conclude, as Mr. Burton doth, in his Comment on the Itinerary of Antonin. p. 41. That this Place, as well as many others, whoſe Names end in Cheſter, aroſe from the Ruins of ſome old Roman Caſtrum: For the Ancient Stations, ſaith he, about the Wall, the Carcaſſes of many of which do at this Day appear, are called by the Country People Cheſters. And in the Notitia Imperii occidentalis, we read, that the Tribune, or firſt Captain of the Band of the Vetaſians lay here in Gariſon, at Regulbium. The Place of this Fort, Caſtrum and Watch-Tower, was no doubt on the riſing Ground whereon the Church now ſtands; and where the Palace of King Ethelbert, and afterwards the Monaſtery ſtood: For that was the moſt proper Situation for the Uſe it was intended for; And Mr. Burton's Obſervation is very Juſt and True, That all the Roman Colonies, Towns, Stations, or Forts, were generally ſet upon Hills. And what their Uſe and Deſign was, we learn from Gildas's Hiſtory, who ſpeaking of the Romans here, ſaith, In Littore Oceani ad Meridiem quo Naves eorum babebantur, quia & inde Barbarorum irruptio timebatur, Turres per Intervalla ad Proſpectum Maris Collocabant, &c. And all agree, that one of theſe Watch Towers was placed here at Regulbium, or Reculver: There were Four more ſuch in this County, of which I ſhall ſpeak in their proper Places. And as to the Roman Antiquities, &c. found here in ſuch a prodigious Quantity; I have already treated largely under the Word Reculver, in Part II. of this Hiſtory.

RICHBOROUGH. By Leland and Philpot, called Ratesborough. In Latin Rutupiæ, Ritupis, Ritupiæ, Rutupis, Urbs Rutupina; in Saxon, ſaith Lambard, Reptaceſter: And he takes the Name of Richborough to come from the Britiſh Word Rhwyd, which ſignifies a Net, in token that it was a Place of Fiſhing: But more likely as Mr. Cambden gueſſeth from Rhyd-Tufith'; from the Sandy or Sandy-Bay near it, at Sandwich. And in this Etymology, Mr. Somner alſo acquieſceth. And adds, that ſince we now call a bowed Place, or Turning in the River of Thames, &c. a Reach; he fancies Richborough to be compounded from Reach and Berg, or Burgh; i. e. a Hill or Caſtle, at or near the Reach or Creek (a). The Author of the Notes upon Somner, would derive it from the Saxon Hricge, to denote its high Situation; ſo that Richborough ſhould ſignify a Burgh, or Caſtle upon a Hill.

(a) Rom. Portsp. 17.

As to the Latin Name Rutupiæ, or Rutubi, Dr. Batteley in his Antiquitates Rutupinæ, p. 31. ſhews from Pliny, that there were Rivers in Italy, called Rutubæ; and a Haven of the Name of Rutubis in Mauritaniâ Tingitanâ: As alſo a City in Sicily, called Rutupe: And to come nearer Home, as Bede and Oroſius call our Rutupiæ, Portum Rutubi; ſo there was a Haven in Gaul in Julius Cæſars's Time, which had the ſame Name of Portus Rutubi: And therefore I think he conjectures very naturally, that in Cæſar's Time, this Place might have the Name of Rutubi, from the Gallick one juſt abovementioned: Since as he obſerves, (b) Thoſe who came out of the Belgick Gaul into Britain (as no doubt our Kentiſh Inhabitants at firſt did) called their Towns and Cities here by the ſame Names with thoſe from whence they came. And this way no doubt we had the Names of Belgæ, Attrebatii, Pariſij, Cenomagni, &c. and perhaps our very Cantii from Cantiâ, a River in Gallia Belgica; as the Iceni, from the Icean Promontary, and the Britons themſelves from the Britanni Belgici. Dr. Battely alſo takes notice, that in the old Gloſſaries Rutubari ſignifies to rage like the Sea: And he quotes Noninus Marcellus, for ſaying, that Rutuba is that Perturbation of the Water, which ariſes from the Sea's being agitated by contrary Winds; and in this Senſe we find Lucian ſpeaking of this Coaſt in Lib. VI.

(b) De Bello Belgico Lib. 12.

—— Rutupinaque Littora fervent.

But leſt the Reader ſhould think, I ſtay longer about the Name of this Place than it deſerves; I muſt deſire him to take notice, that it hath been very much Celebrated by all our own Modern Writers of Antiquities, as well as taken notice by moſt of the Ancient ones. As by Lucan, Juvenal, and Auſonius, by Tacitus, Ammianus Marcellinus, and Oroſius: 'Tis mentioned in Ptolomy's Geography, and Antonines's Itenerary; in the Peutingerian Tabes, and the Index of Ravennas, and in the Notitia Imperii Occidentalis.

Nay, Dr. Batteley thinks, that the Inſcription mentioned by Cambden, when he treats about the Name of Britain; which there ſtands Nymphis Φ. N. D. Britton Triputien. Φ ſhould be read Riputien: And that even that is ſtill a Tranſpoſition of the Letters, inſtead of Ritupien: And indeed, tho' this may ſeem a little ſtrained, and therefore I don't build much upon it; yet certain it is, as Batteley ſhews, that ſuch Tranſpoſitions are not unuſual, of which he gives ſeveral Inſtances: As in καμυδολανον, for Camulodunum: Δοδυνος for Βοδυνος, &c.

And under this famous Name of Richborow, or Rutupiæ, there are three Things often mentioned by the Hiſtorical Writers, both Ancient and Modern; which will require our particular Regard, and to be treated of ſeperately, viz. The Haven, the City, and the Caſtle.

Richborow Haven.

The Haven, or Portus Rutipinus, hath formely been very Eminent, and celebrated in ancient Hiſtory. It was ſuch an one as the Greeks called ἀπροσόρμους; which had a Paſſage into it both Ways, and was Landlocked from Storms and bad Weather; and in the Itinerary of Antonine, it ſeems to be called Portus, καὶ ἔξοχην, becauſe there was no other ſo noted, Eminent and Large. And it had, as it were, two Parts; the outer one from Richborow towards the Sea Eaſterly; and the Inner one from Richborow to Reculver.

At this Harbour, which the Iſland of Thanet did anciently ſecure, in a good Meaſure, from the Rage of the Winds and Sea; ſo that Ships might lie here landlocked, and therefore was like that deſcribed by Virgil. Æneid. 1.

—— Inſula Portum
Efficit objectu Laterûm.——

At this Port, I ſay, 'tis highly probable, that St. Paul, the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, landed, when he came hither to preach the Goſpel to the Britains: And that he did come hither on that kind Errand, no one will doubt, after what the moſt Learned Biſhops Uſher and Stillingfleet have ſaid upon that Subject (a). And one would think Venentius Fortunatus alſo, as Dr. Batteley obſerves, had deſcribed this Haven, when ſpeaking of St. Paul's coming hither, he ſaith,

(a) In Antiq. Eccles. Britan. P. 4. & in Origin. Britan. P. 37.

Tranſiit Oceanum, vel quâ facit Inſula Portum. (b)

(b) In vitâ St. Martini.

Near ſome part of it, towards the Mouth of its Eaſtern Entrance, as I have already hinted from the Judicious Author of the Antiq. Rutupin; 'tis highly probable, Julius Cæſar landed in both his Expeditions hither, of which more hereafter; and it ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that Claudius the Emperor, and Veſpaſian, did likewiſe make this their Place of Landing. But certain it is from Tacitus, that Agricola did ſo: As alſo did Lupicinus, who was ſent hither by Conſtantius: as well as Theodoſius, when appointed to come hither by Valentinian: As we learn from Ammian. Marcell. xx. 1. and xxvii. 8. And I queſtion not but it was the moſt uſual Place of Landing, when any Perſons, Merchants, or others, came hither from Abroad.

Perhaps the particular Time of its being ſubdued by the Romans, and being uſed and fortified by them as their Port, was about A. D. 47. when Claudius ſent firſt hither Aulus Plautius, and after came himſelf. Plautius divided his Forces into 3 Parts, leſt attempting to Land all at one Place, the Expedition might have miſcarried. Here then was the Place, and this the firſt Time that the Romans did any great Matters in Britain.

Whoever indeed ſhould now ſee the Place where once this moſt famous Harbour was, and know nothing of the ancient State of it, would think it very extravagant to talk of a good Haven, where now there is ſcarce any Water at all.

Dives olim veteri Romæ dum regna manebant;
Nunc tantum limus, Statio & malefida Carinis.

But we learn from Solinus and Bede, and ſeveral ancient Charters, That this was once in a very different Caſe from what it appears in at preſent. The former of theſe Authors tells us, That the Iſland of Thanet was ſeparated from the main Land of Kent, by a ſmall Æſtuary (c). And the latter calls that Æſtuary, the River of Wantſumu, and ſaith it was 3 Furlongs over, and extended it ſelf each way into the Sea, viz. one way towards Sandwich, and the other towards Regulbium or Reculver, where it went out into the Sea at Northmutha. And as this Harbour thus ſituated; and having one Mouth opening into the Sea at Sandwich, was frequently called the Harbour of Sandwich, as well as the Portus Rutipinus; ſo the other Mouth of it, which opened Northward into it, near Reculver, occaſioned that Place to be called ſometimes Rutupium and Rutubi; and therefore there being two Rutupiæ, Richborough, and Reculver; they are almoſt always mentioned by the Latin Writers, in the Plural Number, by the Name of Rutupiæ: And all the Coaſt contiguous to them, was called, Littus Rutupinum.

And this continued a tolerable good Harbour above 1000 Years after the Time which Solinus mentions it: For it appears by the Saxon Chron. A. D. 1009; that the greateſt Fleet which ever had been then built in England, were ſent to this Harbour, and ordered to lye there to prevent the Incurſions of the Danes. And Florence of Worceſter ſaith, that in the ſame Year alſo, Turkil the Dane, with an innumerable Fleet of Daniſh Ships, who had joined him, came into this Harbour. And A. D. 1052. Harold's Fleet having ſpoiled the Coaſts of Eaſt Kent, came into this Port by the Sandwich Mouth; and went out of it by the other, i. e. Northmouth, towards London (d). Indeed Mr. Somner, and the laſt Editor of the Saxon Chronicles, miſtake this Northmuth, for a Place in the River Medway; which one would much wonder at in the former, who was ſo very well acquainted with Kent.

(d) Sax. Chron. An. MLII.

I think I need ſpend no time in ſhewing, that the old Harbour of Sandwich, was the ſame with this Portus Rutupinus, after what Somner hath ſaid on this Subject, in his Roman Ports and Forts: For 'tis ſufficient to tell you, that the Deſcriptions of both agree, as to the Bounds of it, and Entrances into it, ſo exactly, that there can be no doubt about it. And perhaps it may be ſome Confirmation of it to take notice, that Harpsfield, in his Hiſtory, p. 634, calls the Friars Carmelites, who had a Houſe in Sandwich Town, Prates Rutupini. And I don't queſtion, but that ſince Reculver was reckoned one of the Rutupiæ; ſo all the Coaſt from about the North Inlet, round about Thanet, and ſo to the South Foreland, was anciently called Littus Rutipinum: And which is celebrated by Juvenal for its Oyſters, Sat. IV. in theſe Words,

——— Rutupinove Edita fundo
Oſtrea.——

But as eminent as this Portus Rutupinus hath, you ſee, thus anciently been; there is now nothing to be ſeen of that Noble and Safe Road for Ships, which lay between the Iſland of Thanet and the Main; there being hardly any Water at all at one End of it; and at the other, by Sandwich, ſo little, that the Harbour is almoſt quite ſpoiled; and the Town by that means, proportionably gone to ruin and decay.

After this Harbour became ſubject to ſome Inconveniences, as probably it did about the latter End of the Romans Time; then Dover, or Dubris began to be uſed as a Port, and after that the Portus Lemanis: Of which ſee more in their proper Places.

Before I leave this Port, give me leave further with Dr. Batteley, to take notice of two Things. Firſt, that the Portus Trutulenſis, mentioned by Tacitus, in vitâ Agricolæ, as the Station of the Roman Fleet, was, as Beatus Rhenanus ſuggeſts, the ſame with our Portus Rutipinus; and was ſo called from the Trutæ or Trutulæ, i. e. the Trouts, which then probably might be very Eminent in this Road; as they are to this Day in the Stream or River that runs into it.

And alſo, That the Deſcription which Cæſar de Bell. Gallic. Lib. V. gives of this Iſland of Britain; Inſula natura Triquetra, cujus unum Latus eſt contra

contra Galliam; hujus lateris alter angulus, qui eſt ad Cantium, quo ferè omnes è Gallia Naves appelluntur, ad orientem ſolem; inferior ad meridiem ſpectat. Though moſt of our Writers have agreed to refer it to Dover; yet may with equal Propriety be ſuppoſed to relate to this Place; and then it will prove, that this Port was the uſual one, which the Ships from Gaul frequented. For Cæſar here ſpeaking of the whole Coaſt of Kent, or Cantium, calls that Part of it which he viſited, and lay open to Gaul, and to the Riſing Sun, Cantium: He ſaith nothing of Dover. And therefore ſince the whole Coaſt hereabouts was called Litus Rutupinum, and not Dubrinum; 'tis natural to conclude the Place where the Gallick Ships arrived, was this Port, and not that of Dover, which ſeems not then to have been in uſe.

And beſides this; when Cæſar ſaith, that the Port frequented by the Gallick Ships lay open to the Eaſt, and the other Parts of Cantium to the South; 'tis plain by the Former he cannot mean Dover: Which as Somner rightly judges, was not a Port till towards the Decline of the Roman Empire here.

Richborough City. As to the next Thing to be diſcuſſed about Richborough, whether there was ever a City here, many Things may be ſaid. Dr. Batteley thinks that it was famous as ſuch, and even as a Place of Trade before the Romans came hither.

And Oroſius and Burton both call it a City; Ptolomy reckons it one of the Three principal Cities of Kent: Of which as he makes London one, ſo perhaps Reculver was then the third; unleſs you will rather take in Canterbury.

But ſome fix this famous City of Rutupiæ in other Places: Twine at Dover, Somner at Sandwich; others at Canterbury (a), and even ſome at Rochester (b). As to the Two Places laſt named, 'tis not worth refuting the Opinion of ſuch Authors, as being Foreigners, know little of the Situation of our Towns. And that Dover or Dubris, and Rutupiæ, are two very diſtinct and different Places, is ſo plain from the Itinerary of Antoninus, from the Peutingerian Tables, and from the Notitia Imperii Occidentalis, that I ſhall not ſpend Time to ſhew it. Thoſe indeed, as Somner, and ſome other, who incline to think Sandwich to have been the ancient City Rutupiæ, approach ſomething near it, but don't come exactly to the Truth. Which is plain from hence, that no manner of Roman Coins or Antiquities, have ever been found at Sandwich; and whoſe Situation is ſo low and unhealthy, as by no means to equal the other Places, where the Romans with great Care and Caution placed their Cities (c): But if a City there was, as Bede expreſsly calls it, and as ſuch innumerable Quantities of Roman Remains, and in the greateſt Variety here found, do ſeem to intimate; Mr. Camden hath certainly rightly placed it on the Decline of Richborough Hill; where Coins and other Roman Antiquities have very plentifully been found; and Leland ſaith, in far greater Quantity than any where in England. And Somner (d) and Dr. Plott in his Manuſcript Treatiſe of the Roman Ways, are certainly both very much miſtaken, to look for the City within the Caſtle; and to make That and the Caſtle but one and the ſame Place. For a poor little City it muſt be, which was contained within the Compaſs of Eight or Nine Acres of Ground: And that is the moſt that the Walls of Richborough Caſtle include.

Dr. Batteley thinks it to have been one of thoſe Britiſh Cities on the Sea Coaſt, which Cæſar ſaith were divided from the Territories of Caſſibelane by the Thames, Lib. V. 11. and though he uſes the word Civitas ſometimes, to ſignify a Number of Men living together in a Gild or Society; yet as he often uſes Urbs and Civitas in the ſame Senſe promiſcuouſly with Oppidum; and as he ſaith the Britiſh Edifices were like thoſe of Gaul, 'tis very reaſonable to think that they had Towns and Cities built after the Manner of the Gauls.

And why might not the Two Rutupiæ, this Place and Reculver, be the Principal ones, at that time in Britain; for Cæſar mentions not London. And the Kentiſh Men he ſaith, were the moſt civilized of any other Inhabitants of this Iſland; and therefore moſt like to have Cities, which their Trade with Gaul would alſo promote.

About a quarter of a Mile Weſt from the Caſtle, is a very large Tumulus, which perhaps might anciently be caſt up over the Bones of Claudius Contentus, who had got a great Eſtate by putting out his Money to Uſury among the Britons; and who died, and was buried here: As his Nephew Auſonius tells us in theſe Lines.

Et Patruos Elegeia meos reminiſcere Cantus,
Contentum, tellus quem Rutupina tegit.

About the ſame Diſtance from the Caſtle, but more to the Southward, there ſeems to have been a little Camp, containing, I gueſs, not above an Acre of Ground, having a Mount at each Corner, and ſome Remains of an Entrance at each Side.

A quarter of a Mile alſo due Weſt from the Caſtle, I ſaw another fair and large Tumulus; which, if we believe Flavius Sanctius, who was Preſident here, to have been alſo buried in this Place, as is not improbable; may perhaps be put for the Tumulus of that Gentleman, Auſonius's Wife's Brother: And whom thus he celebrates;

Militiam nullo qui turbine ſedulus egit,
Præſide lætatus quo Rutupinus ager,
Octaginta annos cujus tranquilla ſenectus,
Nullo mutavit deteriore die.

RICHBOROUGH Caſtle.

The Caſtle here at Richborough is indeed a very noble Remain of Roman Antiquity: 'Tis ſituated on the Top of Richborough Hill, about a Mile and an half Weſtward from Sandwich. In Figure quadrilateral, about 150 Paces in length, and 105 broad; according to Dr. Batteley's Meaſurement, which I chuſe to mention rather than my own, becauſe I believe more accurate; tho' mine alſo comes very near it. And this Proportion between the Breadth and Length, was what, as Vegetius ſhews (a), the Romans uſually obſerved: The Walls are about 12 Foot thick; but their Height can't now be determined, becauſe they are no where entire. They are compoſed of Chalk Stones, round Pebbles, and Roman Bricks, thus; at about Three Feet and an half diſtance one from another, are double Rows of Roman Brick, each Brick being 16 Inches long, and 11 broad, and 1¼ thick. Theſe are the Διάστρωσις, mentioned by Vitruvius (b); Qui maximè religando confirmabunt Parietum ſoliditatem. And doubtleſs theſe Rows of broad Bricks or Tiles, which run at the Diſtance above-mentioned round all the Walls, do make very good Bandage; which otherwiſe could ſcarce be had in Walls, chiefly built of round Beach Stones as theſe are; and which no doubt they had from the then adjoining Sea-ſhore. Nennius in his Hiſt. Brit. Lib. 2. ſaith, there were formerly to be ſeen vaſt Numbers of ſuch Caſtles as this, built with Stones and Bricks, which Time hath now, generally ſpeaking, buried in Ruins. And when this and that of Regulbium or Reculver were ſtanding, each Mouth of this eminent Harbour was very well guarded.

The Eaſtern Wall is ſunk down and deſtroyed by the Fall of the Cliff; and the reſt are haſtening that Way, being moſtly o're-grown with Ivy, the Forerunner of Deſtruction to both Walls and Trees. Within theſe Walls, towards the North Part, Dr. Batteley ſaith, there are the Remains of ſome very ſtrong and ancient Walls and Foundations; and where he doth not doubt but the Prætorium ſtood, which the Romans placed after this Manner in every Gariſon. 'Tis now ſo fully over-grown with Buſhes, and filled up with Rubbiſh, that I could not get at it, to diſcover any Thing to form a Judgment by. Mr. Somner takes theſe for the Foundations of a Chapel, which he ſaith was formerly here: And though Dr. Batteley ſeems to explode that Opinion, Somner gives good Reaſons to eſtabliſh it: For he ſhews that one John Saunder a Prebendary of Wingham, Rector of Dimchurch, and Vicar of Aſhe, hath this Paſſage in his Will, dated A. D. 1509. viz. I bequeath to the Chapel of Richborough one Portuys printed, with a Maſs Book, which was Sir Thomas's the old Prieſt: And to the Uſe of the Chapel 20 s. to make then a new Window in the Body of the Church. You ſee therefore that here was a Chapel which was appendant to Wingham, as the Mother Church, like thoſe of Fleet and Overland, in this ſame Pariſh of Aſhe. The Track of the Ruins of this Chapel, which probably, as Leland ſaith, was dedicated to St. Auſtin, and built like other old Churches in the Form of a Croſs, is to be ſeen within the Walls of the Caſtle, and diſtinguiſhed in the Spring and beginning of Summer by the Thinneſs of the Corn growing over the Foundations of the Walls; and the Figure it makes is called by the People St. Auſtin's Croſs. But theſe are not the Tracks of the Streets of the old City of Richborough, mentioned by Mr. Camden; for thoſe he expreſsly ſaith were without the Caſtle, on the declining Part of the Hill; though Mr. Somner miſtakes him, and confounds one with the other.

And now I am about correcting Miſtakes, I muſt do ſo by another; which Men not diſtinguiſhing, that Regulbium or Reculver was anciently accounted as one of the Ritupiæ, hath occaſioned; viz. That King Ethelbert the Firſt had a Palace here at Richborough, as Leland and Lambard ſuggeſt: For the Palace of that Saxon King was undoubtedly at Reculver, after he had ſurrendred his Houſe at Canterbury to Auſtin the Monk, as I have there ſhewn; and was ſuppoſed only to be here, becauſe Reculver hath been formerly called Rutupiæ, as well as Richborough: And eſpecially during the Time of the latter Empire.

And this will ſerve in ſome Meaſure to reconcile us to Ptolomy's Tables; where Cantium (i. e. the κάντιον ἄκρον) was placed about 15 Minutes more to the Eaſt than Rutupiæ: And it is about ſo much more Eaſterly than Regulbium or Reculver, though in the ſame Latitude.

This Caſtle appears to have had Two Gates; a large one in the Middle of the Weſtern Wall; and a leſſer in the Northern: Which Dr. Batteley judges to have been the Porta Decumana: Thro' which, according to the Rules of Vitruvius (a), Egreſſus patet non rectus ſed obliquus. This Gate having within Memory the Figure of a Woman's Head over it in Stone, which was imagined by ſome to be that of Queen Bertha, was called the Maiden Gate.

(a) Archih. I. 5.

Within this Caſtle alſo was one of the Five Kentiſh Watch-Towers to ſpy out and to defend againſt the Approaches of the Saxon Pirates, as we learn from the Notitia Imperij occidentalis. And either in the City, or more probably within this Caſtle, the Romans had a Governor, which was called a Preſident; as we learn from Auſonius above-mentioned, who thus ſpeaks of Flavius Sanctius in his Parentalia, who was his Wife's Brother.

Tranquillos Manes, ſupremaq; mitia Sancti,
Ore pio & verbis advenerare bonis:
Militiam nullo, &c.

As is before obſerved.

The ſame Poet alſo mentions Clemens Maximus; and calls him Latronem Rutupinum.

Puniſti Auſonio Rutupinum marte Latronem (b).

(b) In claris Urbibus.

Whom Camden judges, and I think juſtly, to have been alſo a Preſident here, and to have had the Government of this Station: And perhaps he gives him this Name of Latro Rutupinus, from his being a Pirate, and bringing his Prizes into this Port. Unleſs, as Dr. Batteley ſuggeſts with Burton, he might aſſume the Purple, and get himſelf proclaimed Emperor by the Soldiers here, before he carried the Army over into Gaul, or to the Mouth of the River Rhine.

Elias Vinetus in his Notes on Auſonius ſaith, the word Rutupinum ſignifies the ſame as Britannicum.

But this Dr. Batteley mentions without giving any Credit to it, as he doth a Story or Tradition alſo, that he met with at Sandwich: That there was once in this City or Caſtle, a Temple dedicated to Æſculapius: And that the Figure of a Cock in Braſs was dug up here; which was ſuppoſed to be ſacred to that Deity. But however, certain it is, that very conſiderable Numbers, and a great Variety of Roman Coins, have been found here, as well as other Antiquities: Of which I have ſeen ſeveral; but hardly any ſo fair, as Two Gold Medals which are now in the Hands of Mr. Lovel, Miniſter of Wodenſburgh; and are of Arcadius and Honorius.

Some old Manuſcripts which I had the Favour of ſeeing at Sandwich, make this Caſtle to have been at firſt begun to be built by Veſpatian; and afterwards to have been finiſhed by Severus; who alſo, it ſaith, built the other Rutupium or Reculver Caſtle. But Kilburn ſaith, it was built by Arviragus King of Britain, who throwing off the Roman Yoke, oppoſed Veſpatian; and that Claudius ſent to reduce him at this Place.

We learn from the Notitia of the Weſtern Empire, that here either in the City or Caſtle lay the Legio ſecunda Victrix Auguſta, with its Prepoſitus or Commander under the Vir ſpectabilis Comes littoris Saxonici; and their Deſign was to defend the Harbour againſt the Invaſions of the Saxon Pirates.

Between Richborough and Sandwich, ſaith Philpot (from Leland) there is a great Dyke caſt up in a round Compaſs, containing within it about an Acre of Ground: They call it the little Borough; 'tis hollow within; and perhaps was raiſed not by the Danes, who, as I read in the Year 990, made themſelves Maſters of this Caſtle; but upon ſome much later Occaſion. For I take that Place where this Entrenchment now is, to have been then all under Water. And though I don't find reaſon to think that Richborough ever was in the Iſle of Thanet, as Leland and ſome others have imagined; yet I agree with Dr. Batteley, that it was once an Iſland it ſelf. The Reaſons for which Opinion are theſe: That the Valleys of Goſhall and Fleet on the Weſt, and all the other low Lands quite round the Hill, on which Richborough Caſtle ſtands, ſeem to be full as low, as thoſe through which the River now runs: And it appears to be pretty certain, that either the Sea, or ſome River running into it, did once ſurround this Hill; becauſe as Dr. Plott obſerves, whenever they cleanſe or ſcour the Ditches of theſe Valleys, they always find great great Numbers of Cockle and Perwinkle Shells at the Bottom; which could hardly come there any other Way; for they don't ſeem to be like thoſe which are called Foſſil Shells; becauſe dug up very plentifully at Land all over the World.

ROCHESTER Caſtle. Though this Place hath met with ſo many Diſaſters, as not now to have any Remains of great Antiquity about it; yet I don't at all doubt but that there was a Caſtle here in the Time of the Romans (a). But I queſtion whether there be ſufficient Ground for what Kilburn ſaith of it with much Aſſurance; viz. That Julius Cæſar cauſed it be built to awe the Britons, when Caſſibelanus was Governor of Britain. That Emperor ſtaid here ſo ſmall a while, in each Expedition, and was ſo employed by the Attempts of the Britons, that he had no Time to build Caſtles: And as for his Orders, if he made any, after his Departure, when he left no Body here to execute them, 'tis not likely they would be much regarded. But probable enough it is, that both the Britons themſelves, after his Invaſions, might build ſome Fort here to defend the Paſſage over the River: And that when the Roman Legions came here again in Claudius's Time, under the Command of A. Plautius, they might build a Fort or Caſtle at this Place: And ſuch an one no doubt there was here at the Time when Antoninus's Itinerary was made, ſince both Durobrovis or Rocheſter is there mentioned as a Roman Station; and the Roman Military (Watlingſtreet) Way certainly croſſed the River Medway hereabouts: As I have fully ſhew'd in the Chapter of Roman Ways in this County.

'Tis ſaid alſo, that Oeſc or Uſk, King of Kent, cauſed Hroff, one of his Councellors, and Lord of this Place, to build another Caſtle here on the Foundation of the Old Roman one, which was very much decayed and ruined: And that from hence this City took the Name of Hrofcheſter; as I have obſerved before under Rocheſter City.

Mr. Lambard in his Perambulation ſaith he dares affirm, That there was an old Caſtle here in A. D. 763. for then Ecgbert King of Kent, gave certain Lands, ſituate within the Walls of Rocheſter Caſtle, to the Priory of St. Andrews. Now tho' there were certainly a Caſtle here at that Time, yet this alone is not, I think, a ſufficient Proof of it; becauſe I believe the whole little City it ſelf was then called by the Name of the Caſtle of the Kentiſh Men, or the Caſtle on the Medway; as will appear from what follows.

This Grant mentioned by Lambard is dated in 765, and confirmed by one Heabert who was then King of a Part of Kent; as alſo by the Famous Offa King of Mercia: And 'tis extant in our Textus Roffenſis, fol. 127. And the Words on which Lambard grounds his Aſſertion are theſe:

Ego Ecgbertus Rex Cantiæ tibi Eardulfo Epiſcopo, &c. conſenſu venerandi Archiepiſcopi Genberti, &c. trado Terram intra Mœnia Caſtelli ſupra nominati; i. e. Hroficeſtri unum viculum cum duobus jugeribus, &c.

Surely this little Street, and theſe Two Jugera of Lands, were not within the Caſtle, but the City Wall.

In the ſame Manuſcript, Fol. 121, is a Charter of King Offa to Waermund Biſhop of Rocheſter, wherein he grants Six Plow-Lands in Trotteſclive, Ad Eccleſiam Beati Andreæ Apoſtoli, & ad Epiſcopium Caſtelli quod nominatur Hroſeſceſter.

Whence it plainly appears, that the City of Rocheſter was then called the Caſtle. As it is in another Grant of King Offa (dated 789.) of Land in Frinſbury to the Priory of Rocheſter: Where the Donation is to the ſame Biſhop Waermund, and to his Church; Quæ ſita eſt in Caſtro quod nominatur Hroſeſceſter. Text. Roffenſ. Fol. 132. b.

A. D. 859. Haſting the Daniſh Pirate beſieged and much damaged this Caſtle: And after this it lay a long while deſolate and neglected; till, as Kilburn ſaith, King William the Iſt cauſed it to be new built, and placed a Gariſon of 500 Soldiers in it; but his Authority for this he doth not produce.

However, I agree with Mr. Lambard, that Odo, Baſtard Brother to King William the Iſt, Biſhop of Bayeux in Normandy, Earl of Kent, and Lord Chief Juſticier of all England, was either the firſt Erector of, or the beſt Benefactor to that Caſtle of Rocheſter, which was built about the Time of the Conqueſt; and I believe he gave the Biſhop of Rocheſter that Land at Aylesford in Exchange for ſome here to build a Caſtle upon; for ſuch an Exchange I find there was; and it occaſioned a vulgar Tradition, that the Caſtle of Rocheſter ſtood in Aylesford Pariſh. I am apt to think alſo, that this was the uſual Place of Odo's Reſidence, when he came down into Kent from Court. Hither 'tis certain Odo betook himſelf as to a Place of Safety, A. D. 1088; when in King William the IId's Reign the Nobility roſe up in Arms againſt that King, and pretended to ſet up his Elder Brother Duke Robert, and to aſſert his Right to the Crown. Odo brought with him hither the Beſt both of the Engliſh and Norman Nobility; and his Friends raiſed ſo many Troops alſo in many other Places of England; that, as Robert Gemeticenſis judges, had Duke Robert haſtened over quickly into England, he might have diſpoſſeſſed his Uſurping Brother of the Crown. But King William did all he could to prevent his coming, by fitting out a Fleet to guard the Seas, and to ſuppreſs this Inſurrection, by marching in Perſon down to Rocheſter, and beſieging Odo and his Accomplices in this Caſtle. And in order to get together a ſufficient Force for this Purpoſe, Matthew Paris and William of Malmsbury tells us, that he ordered every Man to be proclaimed a Nithing, as the former, a Nidering as the latter Hiſtorian expreſſes it, who ſhould refuſe to come to the King's Aſſiſtance in this Action.

This Word of Reproach, Somner in his Gavelkind, p. 65. thinks to be derived from the Saxon Nithe, or rather Nith; Nequitia or Malitia: And he ſaith it was a Term of ſuch Infamy and Reproach, as to be faſtened on the moſt barbarous and deteſtable Villains; viz. Such as were guilty of robbing or rifling the dead; which in the 83. Chap. of King Henry the Iſt's Laws is called Weilreif; a Term, ſaith Somner, of the ſame Import as the Walaraupa in the Leges Baior, Tit. 18. cap. 3. and which the Textus Roffenſis thus illuſtrates, Walreaf is Nithings dæde. And this is what the old Gloſſary at the End of King Henry the Iſt's Laws, renders Refore; and is ſaid to be Opus Nithingi.

This odious Nick-Name, (ſo much did the Notion of Honour then prevail,) and King William's other Care and Diligence, got together a great Army; which beſieged Rocheſter very cloſely, and at laſt drove the Biſhop and his eminent Friends into the Caſtle, where many died by Sickneſs and Want; and were driven to ſuch Extremity, that he and his Aſſociates were forced ced to deliver up the Caſtle, to abjure the Realm, and to retire into Normandy. And this Action put an entire End to the Grandeur and Glory of this haughty Prelate in England; where all his Honours and Eſtate were forfeited to the Crown; and he forced much againſt his Will, to go and live upon his Biſhoprick. But at laſt Duke Robert to make him ſome amends, made him Governor of Normandy.

Not long after this, Gundulfus Biſhop of Rocheſter, built that White Tower in this Caſtle, which is now ſtanding; in return for the King's confirming a Grant of a Manor in Buckinghamſhire, which was given to his Convent by Archbiſhop Lanfranc: And ſince in the Account of this Affair there are ſeveral Things very remarkable, I ſhall give it you at large, as I find it in our Textus Roffenſis.

From Textus Roffenſis, Fol. 173.

Quomodo Willielmus Rex Filius Willielmi Regis, Rogatu Lanfranci Archiepiſcopi conceſſit & confirmavit Roſenſi Eccleſiæ St. Andreæ Apoſtoli, ad Victum Monachorum Manerium nomine Hedenham. (In Com. Bucks.) Quare Gundulfus Epiſcopus Caſtrum Roſenſe lapideum totum de ſuo Proprio, Regi conſtruxit.

ALIUD quoque beatæ memoriæ Gundulfus Epiſcopus non minus memorabile illis (ſc. Monachis) contulit Beneficium: Caſtrum etenim quod ſitum eſt in pulchriore parte Civitatis Hrovecestre, pro Regia Conceſſione illius Doni, quod ſepe-dictus Archiepiſcopus prædictæ Eccleſiæ ad Victum Monachorum diſpoſuerat dare Manerium; videlicet, quod ſitum eſt in Com. de Bucingham, nomine Hedenham.

Non enim aliter ut ratum permaneret ipſi Eccleſiæ illud abſque Regis Conceſſione potuit dare: Quia Pater Regis illud dederat Archiepiſcopo tantum ut ſullimatus fuit in Archiepiſcopio.

Unde Willielmo Filio ejus ipſum Patrem ſuccedente in Regno, ab Archiepiſcopo, & Epiſcopo de ejuſdem Manerij Conceſſione requiſitus, reſpondit Centum Libras Denariorum habere ſe velle pro ipſa conceſſione.

Quod poſtquam Archiepiſcopus & Epiſcopus ſimul audierunt, conſternati valde, pariter reſponderunt: Illam tantam pecuniam neque tunc in promptu ſeſe habere, nec etiam unde eam acquirere potuiſſent ſeſe ſcire.

Duobus autem Amicis utrique parti faventibus, Roberto, vid. Filio Hamonis, & Henrico Comite de Warwic, hinc Regium honorem & integram ejus obſervantibus voluntatem: Hinc vero Amicitiæ favorem & pro Dei amore Eccleſiæ prædictæ magnificum & perfuturum honorem, Regi conſuluerunt quatenus pro Pecunia quam pro conceſſione Manerij exigebat, Epiſcopus Gundulfus, quia in Opere Cementarij plurimum ſciens & efficax erat, Caſtrum ſibi Hroſenſe lapideum, de ſuo, conſtrueret. Quod ubi Archiepiſcopo & Epiſcopo innotuit, tunc proculdubio magis conſternati, dixerunt & Regiæ conceſſioni, ex toto, ſeſe abnuere; etiam & ipſum Manerium in profundo maris potius ſitum iri malle, quam prædictam Eccleſiam St. Andreæ futuris temporibus Regiis exactionibus mancipari debere. Nam quotienſcunque quilibet ex infortunio aliquo caſus in caſtro illo contingeret, aut infractione Muri aut fiſſura materei, id protinus ab Epiſcopo, vel Eccleſia exigeretur uſu reficiendum aſſiduo: Sicque Epiſcopus & Eccleſiæ futuri ſeculi temporibus omnibus ſumma diſtrictione Regiæ ſummiteretur exactioni. Iſto itaque metu perterritus uterque; abſit hoc a me, inquit Archiepiſcopus; abſit quoque a me, inquit & Epiſcopus.

Reſponſum hoc audiens comes Henricus quaſi modeſtæ ſtimulis Iræ commotus, honeſtatis dans concito fremitus, inquit: Hactenus mea eſtimatione ratus ſum Archiepiſcopum Lanfrancum unum ex viris univerſi orbis extitiſſe ſapientiſſimus; nunc autem nec inſipientem, quod abſit, eſſe dico; neque illa quidem quadudum ſapientia callebat inpreſentiarum vigere ullatenus aſſerere audeo. Quid enim gravedinis, inquit, in hoc eſt? Caſtrum ad ultimum maris pro xl. libris advoluntatem Regis facere; factum vero comiti vel vice-comiti Comitatus, ſeu aliis etiam quibus Regi placuit monſtrare; monſtratum & ex omni parte integrum liberare: Semel vero Liberato ſeſe penitus expedire nec unquam ulterius inde ſe intromittere, nec etiam eo reſpicere. Ad hoc, Regem adverſus Epiſcopum, vel Eccleſiam futuræ ſervitutis occaſionem nullatenus quærere; immo potius eos ab omni ſervirute liberare, atque ſicut Regem decebat, pro Dei amore, & ſeculi honore, in ſumma Libertate eos conſervare, velle.

His igitur & aliis nonnullis hujuſcemodi Rationibus tandem adquievit Archiepiſcopus. Igitur hoc Pacto coram Rege inito, fecit Gundulfus Caſtrum de ſuo ex integro totum coſtamine, ut reor, lx. Librarum.

From henceforth no doubt this Caſtle continued in the Crown; till King Henry the Firſt, by the Advice of his Barons, granted it to William Archbiſhop of Canterbury and his Succeſſors, with the Cuſtody and Conſtableſhip of the ſame, and free Liberty to build a Tower for himſelf, in any Part of it, at his Pleaſure. But whether he did or not, I can't find.

A. D. 1141. Robert Earl of Glouceſter, was a Priſoner here, under the Cuſtody of William de Ypre; for his Aſſiſting the Empreſs againſt King Stephen.

A. D. 1215. In the War between King John and his Barons, they got into Poſſeſſion of this Caſtle, committing the Charge of it to one William Dalbinet, whom the King ſoon after beſieged here, and compelled him, but till not Three Months end, to ſurrender the Place; which yet he would not probably have done, had it not been for the Cowardiſe of Robert Fitzwalter, who was ſent to raiſe the Siege. But that notable Commander, being made General of the Army, raiſed by the Barons, gallantly marched as far as Dartford in order to raiſe this Siege; but there meeting with a Gentleman of the Order of the Temple, he enquired in ſuch a Fright about the Number of the King's Forces, that the Man ſeeing his Fear, impoſed upon him, and told him the Royal Army was much greater than his; whereas in Reality it was ſcarce the one third Part of it. On this News, Robert fairly ran away, and left the Army to ſhift for its ſelf.

The next Year after this, Lewis the Dauphin of France, by the Aid of the Engliſh Nobility, laid Siege to this Place, and took it by Force from the King.

King Henry the IIId, in the Tenth Year of his Reign, commanded the Sheriff of Kent to repair or finiſh that great Tower above-mentioned, which was bulit by Biſhop Gundulf, but not quite perfected it ſeems out of his 60 l.

But in his 48th Year, Simon Montford Earl of Leiceſter, beſieging the City of Rocheſter very vigorouſly, and ſetting Fire to the then wooden Bridge over the River Medway, and to a Tower which was built on it for its Defence, began to attack the Caſtle, and deſigned to carry it by Storm; and indeed he did take the outward Gate, and did much Damage to the Church and the Abbey. But Earl Warren who was Governor, made a very gallant Defence: And when Montford ford underſtood that the King was coming in Perſon to raiſe the Siege, he decampt from hence, leaving ſome Troops to continue the Aſſault; who were moſt of them put to flight, or killed by the King's Forces.

King Henry the IIId gave this Caſtle to Guy of Rochford, one of his Poictovin Favourites; but he was afterwards baniſhed, and then it returned to the Crown again. And in the 48th Year of that Prince, William de St. Clere, (whoſe ancient Seat, before he married Aldham, and ſo removed to Ightham, was at Woodland in Kingſdown) was Caſtellan of this Caſtle, and died in his Office that Year.

Next Robert de Hougham had the Cuſtody of it; and died Conſtable in the 2d Year of King Edward the Iſt. (a) After him it was delivered to Robert de Septvans: From whom the Septvans or Harfleets of East Kent were deſcended: And in Courſe of Time, no doubt, it paſſed through ſeveral other Hands (b). For in the 1ſt Year of King Henry the Vth, William Crioll or Keriell was Governor of it: As was afterwards Thomas Lord Cobham, who died in Poſſeſſion of this Office, in the 11th Year of King Edward the IVth. And though that Prince did in ſome Meaſure rebuild this Caſtle, and alſo the old Walls of the City which were fallen down, yet by Degrees the Buildings began again to run to ruin; only the Caſtle continued among the Manors of the Crown, till King James the Iſt in his 7th Year granted it, with all the Services annexed, to Sir Anthony Weldon of Swanſcombe, in whoſe Deſcendant it ſtill continues.

There is much Land, ſaith Philpot, which is held of this Caſtle, whoſe Tenure is perfect Caſtle Guard: For on the Day fixed for the Quit-Rent, there is a Banner hung out, (anciently it was over the Caſtle-Wall): And if the Rents be not paid that Day, they are doubled every Time the Tide runs Southward, or againſt the Stream of the River, under Rocheſter-Bridge.

The Impreſſion of the Seal annexed, being that of the Conſtable or Governor of this Caſtle, was communicated to me by Robert Cony of Rocheſter. M. D.

I find by the Tower Records, that in the 21ſt Year of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, one William Skarlett was Conſtable of this Caſtle; and that he made a Diſtreſs upon one Simon de Sharſtede, for Caſtle-Guard due for Lands in Watringbury.

SALTWOOD Caſtle. The Learned Dr. Gale (c) judges this Caſtle to have been built in the Romans Time; and ſaith, he found in an old Manuſcript that the Town of Hithe did once belong to it: And perhaps it was built when Hithe firſt became a Port, for its Defence, and that of the adjoining Sea-Coaſt, againſt the Piratical Attempts of the Saxons. The Doctor ſaith alſo, that ſeveral Roman Antiquities have been found at Newington, an adjacent Village. And Dr. Plott in his Manuſcript about the Roman Ways in this County, obſerved a paved Way made after the Roman Manner, all the Way up the Hill, not only to the Caſtle, for that poſſibly, ſaith he, might be done by ſome of the Archbiſhops for their own Convenience, but a Mile further on, towards the Stone-ſtreet Way. And I think it probable enough, that after the Romans had by the Inundation of the Sea loſt their Port at Stutfall, Weſt Hithe, and Buttolph's Bridge; and did at laſt remove to the preſent Hithe, they made that Cauſey, to accommodate the Way to Durovernum or Canterbury. Dr. Plott ſaith alſo, that an Anchor was plowed up near Saltwood Caſtle, in the Valley; which ſeems to indicate that the Sea once cover'd that Place, and made a Harbour near this Caſtle.

Kilburn ſaith, this Caſtle was built by Oeſc or Uſk, Son of Hengiſt King of Kent. Which perhaps was only a Repair or an Enlargement of the old one built before by the Romans: As was alſo what was done to it by Henry of Eſſex, Baron Raleigh, and for a Time Lord Warden of the Ports; who held it of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in King Henry the IId's Time. But being accuſed of Treaſon by Robert de Montford, for cowardly deſerting the King's Standard at a Battel in Wales; and being vanquiſhed by him in the ſingle Combat, which he demanded in his own Vindication, and left for Dead upon the Spot; King Henry the IId ſeized on the Caſtle, and kept it in his Poſſeſſion all his Reign, as did King Richard the Iſt after him; But King John in his firſt Year reſtored it to the Archbiſhop, to whoſe See it had been given at firſt by Halden, A. D. 1036. a great Man in the Saxon Times. In King Henry the IId's Time it was accounted an Honour, and had ſeveral Places held of it; as appears from a Paſſage in Matt. Paris, and cited by Lambard, wherein he ſaith, King Henry the IId reſtored to Thomas Becket (on their Accommodation) all his Goods and Poſſeſſions, and ordered a meeting of the Knights and Eminent Men holding of the Honour of Saltwood, to enquire into the Archbiſhops Right's and Fees, in order to his being put into Poſſeſſion of them again.

Archbiſhop Courtney built very much here, beautifying and enlarging it, and either He, which is moſt probable, or ſome of his Predeceſſors encloſed a Park about it, and made it an uſual Place of Reſidence. And Lambard tells a pleaſant Story of the Pride and Loftineſs of this great Prelate, which was tranſacted here. Some Poor Men of his Mannor of Wingham, having carried him ſome Straw or Hay, not decently in Carts, as ought to be done to an Archbiſhop, but ſlovenly in Sacks on their Horſes Backs; he ſummoned them to this Caſtle of Saltwood, and after having rated them ſoundly with proper Efforts of Wrath, he bound them by Oath to obey him, and then enjoined them for Penance, that they ſhould all March in Proceſſion, bare Headed and bare Legged, with each one a Sack of Straw on his Back, ſo open at the Mouth, that the Straw might appear, to diſgrace them for their Diſreſpect.

It continued part of the Archiepiſcopal Revenue, till the 29th of King Henry the VIIIth; but then Thomas Cranmer exchanged it with that Prince for other Lands. And King Edward the VIth, in his 1ſt Year, granted it to John Earl of Warwick and Joan his Wife. But ſomehow coming to the Crown again, that King in his 4th Year granted it to Edward Lord Clinton; and in the laſt Year of his Reign, confirmed it to him, together with the Bailywcik of Hithe. But not long after, he ſold Saltwood to Mr. Thomas Broadnax, who parted with it the ſame way to Knatchbull: And he in the 18th of Queen Elizabeth, alienated it to Criſpe, who Sold it again to another Knatchbull: And Mr. Reginald Knatchbull, in the 31ſt of Queen Elizabeth, Sold it

(a) In the 5th Year of King Richard the IId, the Rebellious Commons of Kent beſieged this Place, and forcibly took a Priſoner out of it.

(b) A.D. 1304. Stephanus de Dene was Conſtable of this Caſtle: He was a mortal Enemy to the Monks; getting them to be taxed for their Cloſe, Prieſtfield, and other Places about the Convent, as was never done before. But they contended and tried the Thing in the Exchequer; caſt the Governor, and got him turned out.

(c) Antonin. Iter. IV. p. 85.

to William Gibbons, from whom in two Years Time it went the ſame Way to Sir Norton Knatchbull; and he in 4 Years after demiſed it to Robert Cranmer, Eſquire: By whoſe Daughter and Heir Anne Cranmer, it paſſed in Marriage to Sir Arthur Harris, of Crixey in Eſſex, and his Son Sir Cranmer Harris, alienated it to Sir William Boteler, Father to Sir Oliver Boteler, the Poſſeſſer, in Philpot's Time, and his Son Sir Philip Boteler, A. D. 1712. Sold it to Brook Bridges, Eſquire, Senior, together with the Grange Farm and ſeveral other Lands.

SANDOWN-Caſtle. This with Deal and the Adjacent one of Walmer, were erected by King Henry the VIIIth, in order to prevent a Foreign Invaſion hereabouts; which that Monarch was then apprehenſive of, after he had ſhaken off the Pope's Yoke, and provoked the Emperor, by the Divorce of Queen Katherine; and for the ſame Reaſon, he cauſed SANDGATE-Caſtle alſo to be built, at the Expence of above 5000 l. This lies in Folkſtone Pariſh towards Hithe, and takes its Name from its Sandy Situation. This Place had the Honour to Lodge Queen Elizabeth for one Night, when ſhe came down into Kent to viſit, and take care of the Defence of the Coaſt, in A. D. 1588.

SHOREHAM-Caſtle. I can find no Account of this Places having ever been deſigned for a Fortification: And as a Seat or an Eſtate, you will find it mentioned before in Shoreham Pariſh, in Part II of this Hiſtory.

STUTFALL-Caſtle. Of this venerable Piece of Roman Antiquity, I have particularly ſpoken before under Limne, and in the Chapter of Roman Ways, and thither muſt refer the Reader. Only let me add from Mr. Camden, that here, under the Count or Lieutenant of the Saxon Shore, lay the Band or Company of thoſe Roman Soldiers, which from Tornacum or Turnoy in France, were called Turnacenſes.

STOCKBURY-Caſtle, is only a Mannor Houſe ſo called. See Stockbury in Part II. which I take alſo to have been the Caſe of STONE-Caſtle. See Stone near Dartford, in Part II.

SUTTON VALENCE-Caſtle, appears to me alſo to have been only a Caſtellated Seat; See an Account of it under Sutton Valence.

TURNHAM-Caſtle. See Goddard's Caſtle before, and Turnham in Part II.

TONG-Caſtle, is ſituated in the Pariſh of Tong, by the Mill, about a Quarter of a Mile from the Church: and was built, as is ſuppoſed, by the two firſt Leaders of the Saxon Forces into Britain, Hengiſt and Horſa; who, as the Story goes, had beged of King Vortigern, as much Land as they could cover with a Bull's Hide: Which having cut out in Thongs, they faſtened together, and ſo compaſſed in the Ground, on which they built this Caſtle, in Imitation one would think of Queen Dydo's Building of Byrſa.

——— Dux Fœmina facti

Æn. Lib. I. v. 368.

And they tell us, that in Britiſh, the Caſtle was called Caerkerry, and in Saxon, Thwang Ceaſter; both from the Thongs of Leather. I omit the Account of Saxo-Grammaticus, who who makes this a Daniſh Building: And what ſome other Authors ſay, of the Scene of this Tranſactions having been at Doncaſter, as ſeeming to have no Foundation in Hiſtory, nor in the Reaſon of the Thing; for all the firſt Bargains and Agreements between the Britains and Saxons, were tranſacted here in Kent, where the latter firſt Landed.

And therefore it ſeems very probable, that it was here, at this Caſtle, that Hengiſt feaſted King Vertigern, when he fell in Love with Rowena, or as ſome call her Roxena, Hengiſts Daughter; and repudiating his former one, took her to be his Wife, if that Fact be true.

And that the Saxon Princes had a Seat or Station here, appears from what Matthew Weſtminſter ſaith of Aurelius Ambroſius, who would fain have provoked the Saxons to a Battle at Thong in Kent.

That once there was a Caſtle here, the Remains of the Fortifications near the Mill do plainly indicate; the Moat or Ditch of the Caſtle being ſo Wide and Deep in Philpot's Time, as to afford Water enough to drive a Mill: And Lambard ſaith, it was drained from the Ditch for that purpoſe.

This Caſtle, after the Conqueſt, was the Eſtate of the great and ancient Family of the Badeleſmers. Guncellin de Badeleſmer had Iſſue Bartholomew; and his Son Guncellin, by the Heireſs of Ralph Fitz-Bernard, Lord of Kingſdown, had Bartholomew de Badeleſmer, who got a Grant of a Fair for 3 Days at St. Giles Tide, to be held here at Thong. But in the 16th of King Edward the IId, he forfeited this and all his Eſtate to the Crown, and was put to Death at Canterbury, for being concerned with the Barons againſt his Prince. But this Eſtate was by King Edward the IIId reſtored, in the 2d Year of his Reign, to his Son Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmer, who died poſſeſs'd of it in the 12th of King Edward the IIId. and left it to his Brother Giles de Badeleſmer, who dying without Iſſue Male, it came to Edmond Mortimer, Earl of March and Ulſter; who had married Elizabeth, Widow of William Bohun, Earl of Northampton, and Siſter and Coheir of the ſaid Giles: And he in the 5th of King Richard the IId died poſſeſs'd of it in Right of his Wife; but his Grandſon Edmund, the laſt Earl of March, forfeited it to the Crown again, by being concerned with Henry Percy againſt King Henry the IVth; where it lay till King Henry the VIth, in his 22d Year, granted it to Sir Thomas Brown of Bechworth Caſtle, his Comptrollor and Treaſurer; and his Son Sir George Brown, in the 11th Year of King Edward the IVth, ſurrendred it back to the Crown, for the Uſe of Cicely, Counteſs Dowager of York, and Mother of the ſaid Prince: After whoſe Deceaſe it came again to the Crown; and in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the VIth was granted to Sir Ralph Vane, who not long after Sold it to Rowland Clerk; and he to Solomon Wilkins, in which Family it ſtaid till the End of Queen Elizabeth, and then was alienated to Mr. William Pordage of Rodmerſham, in which Name and Family it continued in Philpot's Time.

TUNBRIDGE-Caſtle. 'Tis probable, that there was a Caſtle where the preſent one now ſtands, even in the Conqueror's Time; for ſoon after, viz. A. D. 1088. Odo, Biſhop of Bayeux and Earl of Kent, who was in Arms for Duke Robert againſt William Rufus; and who probably did rebuild, but beyond Diſpute, fortify this Caſtle; Put in one Gilbert as Governor here; who was

beſieged by King William the IId, and taken Priſoner here, when the Caſtle ſurrendred. And the Riſe of that Name and Family here was thus. Jeffery Natural Son of Richard the firſt Duke of Normandy, had a Son called Giſlebert, and Sirnamed Criſpin: He was made Earl of Brien in Normandy. His Eldeſt Son Richard came over hither with King William the Iſt, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf ſo eminently in the Battel of Haſtings, that the Conqueror gave him great Poſſeſſions, and made him one of the Juſtices in England. He had 38 Manors in Surrey, 35 in Eſſex, 3 in Cambridgeſhire, 2 in Kent, one in Middleſex, Wiltſhire, and Dorſet, and 95 in Suffolk; whereof Clare being the Principal; he was often called Richard de Clare; But having purchaſed this Caſtle from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of whom it was anciently held, he was more uſually called Richard de Tonebrigge (a) He married Robeſe or Roſe, Daughter of Walter Gifford, Earl of Bucks, and was killed by the Welſh at Abergavenny, A. D. 1114.

His Son Gilbert de Tonbrigge lived here; he married Adeliza, Daughter of the Earl of Clermont. His Son and Heir was Richard de Tonebrigge, or de Clare; who had the Earldom of Hertford given him, as ſome ſay: He married the Siſter of Ranulph, Second Earl of Cheſter, and was killed by the Welſh.

Gilbert de Clare, his Son and Heir, was made Earl of Hertford by King Stephen, as in Right of his Father he was Earl of Clare, he was alſo Lord of Tunbridge, and died Childleſs, Anno Dom. 1151.

Roger his Younger Brother (called the Good) ſucceeded him in his Eſtate and Honours. And being ſummoned by Becket, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1163. to do Homage to him for this Caſtle, he refuſed it peremptorily, alledging, he held it only in Fee of the King, in which he was ſupported by the King (b).

King Henry the IIId. on the Death of another Gilbert Earl of Glouceſter, and Lord of Tunbridge, ſeized on the Wardſhip of his Heir, and committed the Cuſtody of this Caſtle to Hubert de Burgh. Indeed, Richard, Archbiſhop of Canterbury went to the King and put in his Claim; alledging, that the Earl died in his Homage. The King ſaid, the whole Earldom was holden of him, and ſo would not reſtore it: On this the Archbiſhop threatned him immediately with an Appeal to Rome; and actually went thither, and got a Judgment from the Pope on his Side, but had the ill luck to die (before he could have the Pleaſure of ſeeing it executed) in his return Home.

This King granted a Licenſe to Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter and Hertford, to Wall and Embattel (c) his Town of Tunbridge: It doth not appear, that he attempted to Wall the Town round; but 'tis very probable he might raiſe or finiſh that Building of the Caſtle which now remains, and appears to me to have a Face of no greater Antiquity. And it ſeems to have been the uſual Seat of that Family, becauſe the Counteſs of Gloceſter was taken Priſoner in it, when in this King's Reign, A. D. 1263. it was taken by the King's Troops from Simon de Mountford. The further Account following, is chiefly from a MS. communicated to me by Captain George Weller of Tunbridge Town.

Anno 47th of King Henry the IIId. I ſuppoſe Things were now accommodated between the King and the Archbiſhop; for now I find Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter and Hertford, holding this Caſtle of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Service of being his Cup-bearer; (and as others ſay, of being Seneſchal to him) on the Day of his Inthronization.

His Son and Heir was Gilbert, who held it from the Archbiſhop by the ſame Service, and died An. 35 King Edward the Iſt.

This Gentleman nobly feaſted King Edward the Iſt here, for many Days together in the 2d Year of his Reign, which was on his Acceſſion to the Crown, becauſe his Father died in the Holy Land.

An. 8. King Edward the IId. That Gilbert died poſſeſſed of this Caſtle and Manor; leaving 3 Siſters, Eleanora, Margaret, and Elizabeth, of whom Margaret marrying Hugo de Audeley, carried this Eſtate to him.

An. 11. King Edward IId. There was a Partition of the Eſtate of the late Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Glouceſter and Hertford; by which the Manor and Caſtle of Tunbridge, (often, formerly called an Honour) was aſſigned to Hugo de Audeley, and Margaret his Wife, one of the Siſters of the late Gilbert de Clare. But the Earldoms of Glouceſter and Hertford went into other Familes.

An. 21 King Edward the IIId. The Jurors gave in, that Hugo had this Caſtle and Manor in Right of his Wife; and that Margaret, his only Daughter, and Wife of Ralph de Stafford, the firſt Earl of Stafford, was his Heir.

An. 46 King Edward the IIId. The Jurors determined, that Ralph Earl of Stafford, who ſurvived his Wife, died poſſeſs'd of this Caſtle and Manor, with its Members, and held it of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. His Son and Heir was Hugo, born of the ſaid Margaret.

An. 10. King Richard the IId. The Jurors gave it, that Hugo Earl of Stafford held the Caſtle and Manor of Tunbridge, with its Members (d) of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Service of being his Seneſchal or Steward on the Day of his Inthronization.

An. 16 King Richard the IId. The Jurors found his Son and Heir, Thomas Earl of Stafford, holding this Manor and Caſtle and its Members, in Fee of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

An. 22 King Richard the IId. His Brother William Earl of Stafford was in Poſſeſſion of this Caſtle, with its Members of Dachebuſt and Hadloe, and held it the ſame Way.

An. 4 King Henry the V. Edward Earl of Stafford his Brother, was found to be in Poſſeſſion, and held as above.

An. 21 King Henry the VIth. Humphrey his Son, Earl of Stafford, and who was afterwards made Duke of Buckingham, was in Poſſeſſion as above. His Son and Heir Henry, was attainted by King Richard the IIId, but reſtored by King Henry the VIIth. Edward Duke of Bucks his Son and Heir, was in Poſſeſſion of this Place, as above. But being attainted of High-Treaſon and Beheaded in the 13th of King Henry the VIIIth, Tunbridge Caſtle, Manor, and its Members became forfeited to the Crown; and there it ſtaid till Queen Elizabeth gave the Caſtle by Grant to her Kinſman Henry Lord Hunſdown; Whoſe Son George Lord Hunſdown, about the beginning of King James the Iſt, ſettled it in Marriage, with his Daughter and Heir, on Thomas Ld. Berkley; he alienated it to Sir John Kenedie. And not long after he Sold it to Ferrers, Goſſon and Johnſon, who joined in a Conveyance of it to Sir Peter Vanlore. And he leaving only 3 Daughters, who were married to Sir Henry Zinzan, Sir Alexander Sterling, and Robert Crooke, Eſq; they divided it amongſt them.

In the 1ſt of King Edward the Iſt, ſaith Philpot, there was a Summons iſſued forth by Hugh de Bigod Earl of Norfolk, and Governor of the (d) Viz. Dachhurſt, or Hildenborough, Hadloe, Braſtede, &c. Rot. Eſch. 10. Richard the IId. N. 34.

Hundred of Hoo, to enjoin Richard de Clare to appear before him, and to anſwer to ſuch Accuſations as ſhould be charged upon him, principally with Relation to the War which he was engaged in with Simon de Montford, againſt King Henry the IIId. The Earl alledged, in his Defence, that he was not obliged to Anſwer but before the King's Juſtices of Eyre: And after his Deceaſe, in the Time of Gilbert Earl of Gloceſter, his Son and Succeſſor, a Commiſſion was iſſued out to Sir Stephen de Penchester, and John de Reygate, to hear and determine this Controverſy; they gave it for the Earl of Gloceſter, as having been pardoned by the Pacification of Kenelworth, in the 50th of King Henry the IIId.

And Philpot ſaith further, that he finds on a Survey or Inquiſition taken of the Privileges of the Earls of Gloceſter, as Lords of Tunbridge, it was concluded, that tho' they held the Manor and Caſtle of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; yet he had nothing to do within the Lowy of Tunbridge: And that the Earl had Return of Writs, Creation of certain Officers, and an eſpecial Seſſions in Eyre; but all theſe by Intermiſſion are now become entirely out of Uſe, and have been long ſince. See a farther Account of the Juriſdiction of the Lowy, before in Tunbridge Town; Book I. Part II. P. 319.

UPNOR-Caſtle, is ſituate in the Pariſh of Friensbury, almoſt over againſt the famous Dock in Chetham; it was built by Queen Elizabeth, in the Third Year of her Reign, for the Defence of the River Medway; where the greateſt Part of the Royal Navy uſually lye at their Moorings, and for the Security of the aforeſaid Dock.

In this Caſtle are about 37 Guns; and for the ſame End of ſecuring the Dock of Chatham, and the Ships in the River, againſt the Invaſion of an Enemy, there are ſeveral other Forts beſides Upnor Caſtle, built upon its Banks: as juſt below this Place is the Birdſneſt, or James Battery: A Platform of 18 Guns. And next below that is Cockhamwood-Fort: Where there are two Platforms of Guns one above another; and in the whole make 44 Pieces of Cannon. And further down yet, is the Hoo-neſs Fort of 27 Guns; which ſtands as all theſe do, on the Weſt ſide of the River. And on the Eaſt ſide of it to ſecure its Mouth, is the Fort of Gillingham of 54 Guns; and alſo Sheerneſs. Of which I ſhall ſpeak particularly, when I come to conſider it as a Dock for building and repairing of Ships.

The preſent Governor of Upnor Caſtle, is Major John Webb, now Mayor of the City of Rocheſter.

WALMER-Caſtle, is ſituated in the Pariſh of Walmer, a little to the Southward of Deal, towards Dover. It was built, as hath been before-mentioned, by King Henry the VIIIth, as Deal and Sandown Caſtles were, to ſecure the Coaſt againſt a Foreign Invaſion: And as they are, is under the Government of the Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, by Virtue of an Act of Parliament made in the 32d of King Henry the VIIIth, c. 48.

THE HISTORY OF KENT.

BOOK II.

The Civil Hiſtory of KENT.

THOUGH we have no very ſatisfactory Account of the Ancient State of Britain, before the Coming of the Romans hither, yet we may very fairly conclude, that no Part of it could be better known, nor more civilized (as indeed Cæſar ſaith in Fact it was) than this County of Kent. And as I have ſhewed at the Beginning of this Hiſtory, that Britain, probably, derived its firſt Inhabitants from the adjoining Continent of Gaul: So there can be no doubt but that Kent would receive the greateſt Share of that little Degree of Politure, which then was to be found among the Gauls: ſince it was not only the Place where all Foreigners, who came from Gaul, would Land, but it is alſo in Fact true, that the oppoſite Sea-Coaſts of both Gaul and Britain were, in Cæſar's Time, not only united by Commerce and Correſpondence, but even (a) under one and the ſame Prince or Governor, Divitiacus.

(a) C. Jul. Cæſaris de Bell. Gallico, Lib. 2.

And what we can gather from the dark Remains of Hiſtory, about the State of this County of Kent, before the Coming of the Romans, is only this; That like other Parts of Britain, it had little petty Princes or Rulers over ſeveral Parts of it. Cæſar, beſides Divitiacus, Prince or King of the Ædui juſt mentioned, names Four Kings (as he calls them) which governed in Kent, and were ordered by Caſſibelan to attack his Camp: Of which more below. That whereas in ſome of the Inland Parts of Britain, they lived on Fleſh, Milk, and Herbs, and neither Plowed nor Sowed; in Kent there was a great Quantity of Corn-Ground, into which Cæſar ſent his Soldiers to Forage, after his Landing here. That the Valour and Bravery of our Kentiſh Men was as formidable, as their Civility and Humanity was pleaſing and agreeable; and as we ſhall ſee by and by, Cæſar never met with more Difficulty, nor more vigorous Oppoſition any where in all his Wars, than he encountred at his first Landing in Kent. And as Bochart, and some other Learned Men, have shewn, that Britain, as well as Gaul, was very anciently well known to the Phœnicians and Greeks; from whom no doubt they had their Chariot Fight, which they were so very eminent for in Cæsar's Time: So we may very naturally and justly conclude, that Kent was so in a more eminent Degree than other Parts of this Island; and that it was from thence, in a good Measure, that the Supply of Soldiers was carried into Gaul, to assist their Neighbours on the Continent, against the Invasions and Conquests of the Romans: Which was done in so eminent a Degree, that Cæsar mentions it as the principal Inducement he had to visit Britain. Whither now let us attend him, and see how he was received by the Inhabitants of Kent, and what was done in this County by him, and other Roman Emperors and Generals, after him.

Romans in Kent.

C. Julius Cæsar was the first Roman General that ever made an Attempt upon Britain; which he saith he was induced to do, as was observed, Quod omnibus ferè Gallicis Bellis, hostibus nostris inde subministrata Auxilia intelligebat. For they had received Fugitives of the Bellovoci his Friends; and were particularly called over to defend the Cities of Armorica, against him. And also that he might see and understand the State and Condition of so eminent a Place; about which he could get but very little Intelligence; Britain being then known only to a few Merchants, and even those also he found were acquainted only with the Sea-Coasts, and the Parts opposite to Gaul.

Of Cæsar's first Descent upon Britain.

IN this Expedition of Cæsar hither, it will be proper to enquire as accurately as we can, into the Time of it, the Place where he made his Descent, and what Opposition he met withal from the Britons.

As to the Former of these, the Time of Cæsar's Landing in Britain; by the Help of what the Learned Dr. Halley hath published in Phil. Transf. N. 193. it may be determined with very great Exactness: As you will find by the following Account; in which also the Place of it will be considered.

After Cæsar had resolved upon the Expedition, and yet could get no very satisfactory Account from the Merchants of Gaul; he sent Caius Volusenus in a Gally, with Orders to get the best Intelligence he could, of the Harbours and Places of Landing on the British Coast, and to bring him an Account back: After Five Days he returned, and told Cæsar what he could learn, but did not dare to Land any where, nor venture himself on Shore. For the Britons were fully informed of Cæsar's Design, and were prepared in the best Manner they could to prevent his Landing. His Fleet consisted of about (a) 80 Ships of Burden (Naves Onerariæ), which carried over but only Two Legions of his Army, all Foot; and his Horse were embarked in 18 such Ships more, and ordered to come after him from another Port. Himself, with the Van of his Fleet came upon the British Coast, from Bullen, about the fourth Hour of the Day, i. e. between Nine and Ten in the Morning; but found the Cliffs all covered with armed Men; and by his Description of them they appear to have been those of Dover, or of St. Margaret's Bay, near adjoining to it; though I judge it was Dover; for he saith, Loci hæc erat natura, adeo montibus angustis mare continebatur, ut ex locis superioribus in Littus telum adjici posset. Not judging it therefore safe to Land here, he staid for the Rest of his Fleet to join him, till the Ninth Hour, or between Three and Four in the Afternoon: And then having called a Council of War, and communicated to them what Volusenus, had informed him of; he gave his last Orders about the Management of the Descent; and then weighing Anchor, sailed about Eight Miles farther, and there prepared and began to land his Troops in a plain and open Place. The exact Time of which may be thus determined:

'Tis certain, this Expedition was in the Year when Pompey and Crassus were Consuls; which was An. Urb. condit. 699; and 55 Years before the Birth of Christ. And what Time of the Year it was, Cæsar tells us in these Words, exigua parte Æstatis reliquâ. The Time of his weighing Anchor, and sailing from Dover, was about Three in the Afternoon; and he had Wind and Tide with him. After he had been Four Days on Shore, he tells you, was a full Moon, and that it appeared in the Night. By which Data, the Time will be determined to a Day. For by the Eclipse of the Moon, whereof Drusus made so good Use to quiet a Mutiny in the Pannonian Army, on the News of Augustus his Death; 'tis plain, saith Dr. Halley, that Augustus died A. D. 14, and An. Urb. cond. 767; and that this Descent was 68 Years before that, and in the 55th Year before Christ, current. In which Year the Full Moon of August the 1st, was in the Day-time; and so could not be that observed by Cæsar: And the next Full Moon before that, won't agree with his saying, that there was but a little Part of the Summer remaining; for that was but Ten Days after the Solstice.

But on August 30. after Midnight, or August 31. before Day, there was a Full Moon, which will very well agree with Cæsar's Account; because it was a Month before the Autumnal Equinox: And therefore the Consequence from the whole is; that Cæsar landed in Britain, and somewhere in Kent, August 26. in the Afternoon, 55 Years before our Saviour's Birth.

As to the Place where Cæsar landed, it may be also pretty nearly determined by his own Account. For allowing his first Place of Anchoring to be off of Dover, as is supposed above: Which will be confirmed from what he saith in his Fifth Book; viz. In Britanniam trajectum esse cognoverat circiter millia passuum triginta à Continente: For that Distance will agree with no other Place which answers the former Description. The next Enquiry will be whether he sailed from the Place of his first dropping Anchor, towards Sandwich or towards Hithe (a). Which will also be determined by his own Account, that the Tide was with him in his Course, for it being then Four Days before the Full Moon, at Three of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Tide would run or set towards Sandwich, and not the other Way towards Hithe. For since a South and by East Moon, makes a full Sea, or high Water, on that Coast; and that the Tide of Flood comes from the Southward; it would be high Water that Day about Eight in the Morning: And consequently low Water at Two: Wherefore about Three the Tide of Flood was up; and it setting to the Northward, determines that he sailed that Way. The open Shore therefore that he landed upon must lye to the Northward of Dover Cliffs; and by the Eight Miles Distance it muſt have been ſomewhere between Deale and the old Harbour of Sandwich. But as a judicious Writer (*) hath obſerved, 'tis highly probable Cæſar computed the Diſtance rather leſs than it really was, having both Wind and Tide with him: And we have no Reaſon to think they had in thoſe Days any accurate Way of eſtimating the Diſtance run by a Ship at Sea; nor that the Romans were the moſt Skilful that Way of any other Nations. And beſides, all Copies of the Commentaries do not agree exactly in this Number of Miles. I incline therefore to Dr. Batteley's Opinion, that the Place of Cæſar's Landing, was rather at the Eaſtern Mouth of the old Harbour of Richborough or Sandwich, than in the Downs, where the Learned Dr. Halley fixes it. Carolus a Fraximus de Portu Jecio, p. 100, ſaith expreſly, that Cæſar landed there: And Geofrey of Monmouth, and Nennius, aſſert the ſame in other Words; though perhaps their Way of Expreſſing will ſeem ſtrange and unaccountable; which is, that he landed at the Mouth of the Thames. And yet this will not appear ſo extravagant, when you hear how far the Londoners uſed to extend the Bounds of that River. Stow in his Survey of London ſaith, That the Bounds of the Thames went as far as Reculver. And the Author of the Poly-chronicon ſaith, That the Eaſtern Mouth of the Thames opened at Sandwich into the Sea. Malmsbury makes that River to keep its Name as far as, and to open into the Sea, at 70 Miles diſtance from London, and at Dover: And Dr. Batteley tells us, that he had it from the moſt skilful Navigators, that from Dover to London, the uſual Way that Ships now go, is 80 Miles: But as anciently the Courſe was through the Portus Rutupenſis, it would not be above 70, according to Malmsbury's Account. And this is another good Reaſon (by the by) why Sandwich, as I have elſewhere ſhewn, ſhould be called by the Saxons Lundenwic; becauſe it was not only the uſual Port into which Ships turned to make for London, through the Portus Rutupenſis, but the very Paſſage it ſelf bore the Name of the River of London or the Thames.

(a) Dion Cassius saith, he landed not where he first designed, but doubling a certain Cape, he made to the Shore, where he overcame those who fought against him at the Water's Edge, and then safely landed his Men.

(*) Dr. Batteley in his Antiq. Rutup.

Add to this, that as 'tis probable Bullen was the Geſſoriacum (a), and as ſome think, the Portus Itius (b), ſo the Diſtance between it and the Old Rutupiæ, will anſwer very well to what Cæſar makes it, (of 320 Stadia) or 40 of our Miles; and juſt ſo far it is from Bullen thither. And as Geſſoriacum, from its being the uſual Port of Men's Paſſage hither, was called Portus Morinorum Britannicus; ſo Rutupiæ was called Portus Britannorum, becauſe it was the moſt uſual Place of Landing in Britain. Hither came Claudius Cæſar from Geſſoriacum: Here landed Veſpaſian; and Lupucinus, afterwards ſent hither by Conſtantius and Theodoſius: And in a word, Dr. Batteley thinks Rutupiæ was the moſt uſual Port in the Romans Time, and perhaps before; and therefore, that 'tis highly probable, Cæſar himſelf landed here, or hereabouts. Dion Caſſius deſcribes the Nature of the Ground where Cæſar landed, to be τὰ τενάγη: And this his Latin Interpreters, as Xylander and Leunclavius, render by Paludes, and undoubtedly very juſtly; for τενατώδες is oppoſed by Ariſtotle to ἀμμώδες; and τένεσθαι is rendred by Scapula, Locus cœnoſus & paluſtris, &c. I think therefore that when Dr. Halley interprets τὰ τενάγη to ſignify Arenas, maris affluxu madefactas, it was rather to reconcile Dion's Account with the Place the Doctor had pitched upon, for Cæſar's Landing, than to give the true Meaning of his Words. But it appears by what Plutarch relates of the Bravery of Sceva in this Action; (of which more by and by) that he leaped on Shore, ἐν τόπῳ ἑλώδει καὶ μετὰ ὕδατος, in a ſtubby watry Place: Which doth not agree with the Ground of the Downs, which is an hard gravelly and ſtoney Beach; but doth very well with Cæſar's own Account of the Place; which he ſaith was ſuch, as that his Men could not firmiter inſiſtere (c). Highly probable therefore I take it to be, that the Landing-Place of Cæſar in this Deſcent, was ſomewhere near the Eaſtern Mouth of the Old Portus Rutupenſis; but to determine the exact Place where, will be an inſuperable Difficulty at this Diſtance of Time from thence, and when, no doubt, that Promontory which we call now Peperneſs, was not by any means like what it is now, but only a kind of a Corner or Point of Land where the River of Wantſume turned out into the Sea. Dr. Plott agrees with me in fixing Cæſar's Landing-Place hereabouts: And Dr. Batteley ſaith, he told him that he could trace ſome Remains of his Caſtra Navalia; which Darell alſo in his Manuſcripts in the Cotton Library, Veſp. A. 4. ſaith were here. But indeed Dr. Plott ſaith, they are not called Romes Work (d), as Camden ſaith they once were, but the Sand-Hills, or the Little Downs. Theſe Sand-Hills begin juſt after you paſs Sandown Caſtle from Deale towards Sandwich; and run along the Shore for about Four Miles together; and are very numerous; but they lye in ſo confuſed a Manner, that no one can judge they were Cæſar's Caſtra Navalia, or the Place where he encamped his Men, and drew up his Ships. But perhaps between the End of thoſe Sand-Hills, and the old Mouth of the Haven of Sandwich, Cæſar might land his Men, and encamp them along the Shore, from thence towards Sandown Caſtle. For this Shore, as Dr. Plott obſerves well, is low, ſoft, and open, without any Beach; where though his Men would land in Stub, and conſequently encounter their Enemies on that Account with great Difficulty, as he ſaith they did; yet his Ships would lye dock'd and ſafe as to their Bottoms, though they would be ſubject to be filled by the tumbling in of the Sea Water, as he ſaith they were, at the next Spring Tide.

Having ſaid this from as good Evidence as I can get, about the Time and Place of Cæſar's Landing in Kent: Let us now ſee what Reception he had here; and how our Countrey-Men ſhewed their uſual Bravery in oppoſing him. And here I ſhall keep chiefly to his own Account, which though perhaps it may not tell all the Truth, yet ſeems pretty fair and honeſt.

ASSOON as the Britons had, by means of their Merchants, learnt the Certainty of Cæſar's Deſign to invade them; many of their Cities, as he calls them; (that is, Separate States, or Bodies of Men, united under ſome Head) ſent Ambaſſadors over to him, offering to ſubmit to the Roman Power, and to give Hoſtages as a Security of it. Cæſar gave them good Words and large Promiſes, and ſent back along with them one Comius, a Perſon on whoſe Virtue and Conduct he judged he could rely; and whom he had lately made King of the Attrebatij (or the People about Arras in France) and who was of great Reputation and Authority among the Britons: His Inſtructions were, to perſuade the Britiſh Cities or States to ſubmit to the Roman Yoke. But it doth not appear, that he was ſucceſsful in it: For Cæſar at his approaching the Kentiſh

Shore,

Shore, found the Inhabitants ready prepared to diſpute his Landing. They had ſent their Horſe and Chariots before, to obſerve his Motion, as ſoon as they ſaw his Fleet hovering on their Coaſts: And when they found where he deſigned to Land, their Infantry followed, and both joining made a vigorous Oppoſition. Cæſar ſaith, that in this Affair he met with Summa Difficultas: And that his Soldiers were perterriti, atque hujus omnino generis pugnæ imperiti; and did not now ſhew the ſame Courage and Alacrity, as they uſed to do on other Occaſions. His great Ships could not come near the Shore; ſo that his Men had a hard Time of it to make to Land, through the Water, with their heavy Armour on, and their Hands encumbred with their Weapons; and to engage againſt Horſe and Chariots, who poured in their Darts or Javelins upon them from all Quarters, and ſtood on firm Ground to oppoſe their Coming on Shore. Cæſar ſeeing this, ordered the Gallies, a Kind of Ships which the Britons were not uſed to, to looſe from among the Onerary Ships, and to row to the Shore, and attack the Enemy with all their warlike Engines; which turned to good Account, frighted and put the Britons to a ſtand, and made them at laſt give way. But ſtill the Romans ſeemed to have enough of it, and did not charge them with any great Stomach; till Scæva above-mentioned, who was Standard-bearer of the Tenth Legion, devoting himſelf to the Gods, they leaped down into the Water, and advanced towards the Shore; this revived the Roman Spirit, and the Soldiers being aſhamed to deſert, or not to follow their Eagle, by common Conſent leaped aſhore, with Cæſar among them, as Julian tells us, and began a warm Engagement with the Britons; but not being able to keep any Order, nor to find firm Ground to ſtand on, nor to follow their Enſigns, they were ſtill very much embarraſed. (Magnopere perturbabuntur.) So that Cæſar was forced to have recourſe to another Expedient; which was to man all the Boats and ſmall Veſſels belonging to the Fleet, with Soldiers, and to ſend them as he ſaw Occaſion to ſuccour and ſupport thoſe that were fighting on the Shore: By which means the Romans did at laſt make good their Landing, and put the Britons to flight: But for want of Horſe they were not able to purſue them, nor make themſelves Maſters of the Iſland; which Cæſar complains of, as an Abatement of his former good Fortune.

Aſſoon as the Britons had recovered themſelves after this Battel, they ſent an Embaſſy to Cæſar, and Comius of Arras with it, whom at his coming over they had impriſoned, but had now releaſed, to deſire Peace; and offered Hoſtages for the Performance on their Side, and declared themſelves ready to do what Cæſar would require of them. Cæſar chid them for not ſtanding to what they had before promiſed, by their Ambaſſors ſent to him in Gaul, but demands their Hoſtages; Part of which they then gave; but ſome of them being to be fetched from remote Parts, they deſired a few Days Time to produce them. After this, their Princes came to Cæſar from all Parts round about, and deſired to recommend themſelves and their ſeveral States to his Favour. This Peace was made the 4th Day after his Landing. When alſo the 18 Ships, in which his Horſe were embarked, appeared ſo near as to be ſeen from his Camp: But a ſudden Tempeſt aroſe, and drove them all out to Sea again; which not being able to bear, they at length were forced to make for the Continent, and return to the Port from whence they came. The Night after this, the Moon was at Full; and by that means the Spring Tides coming on (of the Nature of which, the Romans were ignorant) both the Gallies which were halled on Shore, were filled with the Tide; and alſo the Ships of Burden, which lay at Anchor, were terribly ſhatter'd with the Storm: So that all of them were rendred uſeleſs. This was a terrible Shock to all the Army, who now began to fear they ſhould not be able to get back to Gaul that Summer; and yet no Proviſion was made for their Wintering in Kent. This Diſtreſs of theirs being well known to, and conſidered by the Britons, that they had neither Horſe nor Proviſions here, nor Ships to ſail away; and gueſſing they had but a few Men, by the Smallneſs of their Camp; they thought it the wiſeſt Courſe to break their Agreement with them, to prevent their getting Proviſions into their Camp, and to make them lye there all the Winter: And by this means they hoped to give ſuch a good Account of them at the End, that they ſhould make the Romans, as well as any other Foreign Powers, for hereafter, not ſo forward to come and invade their Countrey. Accordingly, being all agreed in this Deſign; the Hoſtages ſlipp'd by Degrees out of the Camp; and the Britons forſook the Fields, and got together in a Body in a proper Place. Cæſar ſuſpected this would be the Caſe, and therefore wiſely provided againſt any Accident that might happen: He repaired his Ships as well as he could here, with the Timber and Braſs, (Materia atque Ære), of ſuch as were quite diſabled; and ſent over to Gaul for ſuch Things as were neceſſary for that Purpoſe: And in the whole he loſt but 12 Ships, and the Ruins of thoſe help'd to make good the reſt. He got alſo Corn every Day into his Camp: But once, as the 7th Legion was ſent out to Forage; and Part of the Soldiers were buſy in reaping Corn, others in carrying it into the Camp, &c. thoſe Soldiers who were on Duty before the Gate of the Camp, informed Cæſar, that a greater Duſt than ordinary appeared that Way which the Legion went; on which Cæſar gueſſing at what was doing, took the Two Cohorts which kept Guard, along with him, and ordering the reſt to arm and follow him, marched that Way which the Duſt directed him; where he found the Legion crowded up in very cloſe Order, and the Britons aſſaulting them with their Darts and Javelins from every Quarter, and the Legion ſcarce able to ſuſtain it. For the Britons had fallen upon them unawares, killed ſome, broke the Order of the reſt, and had compaſſed them quite round with Horſe and their Chariots. I have already deſcribed their Way of Chariot-Fight, which was very extraordinary, at the Beginning of this Hiſtory, p. 6. and therefore muſt not repeat it here. But Cæſar owns that he came very opportunely to the Aſſiſtance of the Legion, which was in great Diſtreſs. And though, on his Advance, the Britons ſtood ſtill, apprehending, no doubt, the Coming of a ſtill greater Force againſt them, yet Cæſar did not think fit to provoke them any further, or to offer them any Battel, but very wiſely returned with the Legions, into the Camp. For many Days after this, he ſaith, there was continually tempeſtuous Weather, which kept the Romans cloſe in their Camp, and the Britons from attacking them there. However they had ſent to all their Confederates, to aſſure them what a poor State the ſmall Remains of the Roman Army was in, how great the Prey would be, and what an Aſſurance there was of perpetual Liberty, if they could now take the Roman Camp. On this, he ſaith, great Numbers were got together, both of Horſe and Foot, and march'd towards his Camp. And then, though he foreſaw, that if he could rout the Enemy's Army, they would moſt of them eſcape by Flight; yet he determined however to give them

Battel: Which he did, with good Succeſs, putting them entirely to flight, and purſuing them as far as his Foot could hold it; (for he had but 30 Horſe in all his Army, and thoſe Comius had lately had help'd him to) ſlaying many of them, and burning their Houſes all round about: But this could extend but a little way; for on the ſame Day, he got his Army back into his Camp; and had after that, Time to receive another Embaſſy from the Britons about a Treaty of Peace: He ordered them to double their Number of Hoſtages; and then made as much haſte as he could into Gaul: For the Autumnal Equinox being now approaching, he dreaded bad Weather at Sea, with a Fleet ſo weak as his was. Taking therefore the firſt favourable Opportunity, he got his Soldiers on Board, and juſt after Midnight, ſet Sail, and got all his Ships and Men ſafe into Gaul. And 'tis very likely that he had enough of this Expedition, and feared to tarry here any longer, leſt a greater Number of the Enemy appearing, he might have had an End put to his Glory, with his Life.

From all this Account, 'tis plain and apparent, that Cæſar never went out of Kent, in this Expedition. Nor indeed could he move, by his own Account, above 6 or 7 Miles from his Camp; which was pitched upon the Sea-Shore, very near the Place of his Landing.

It will not be eaſy to aſſign the very Place where the 7th Legion were Foraging, when the Britons fell upon them, as above: But 'tis highly probable it could not be above 3 or 4 Miles from the Camp, from the Circumſtances before obſerved, and indeed that is a great Way for Footmen to carry Burdens of Corn upon their Backs.

(a) MS. about the Roman Ways.

And therefore, Dr. Plot's Conjecture, (a) That the Scene of that Action was about Cay-coll-Hill, between Newington and Sittingbourn, muſt be groundleſs; For we can't ſuppoſe, that an Army conſiſting of Foot only, could be ſent to Forage in Parties, near 30 Miles from the Camp, much leſs that they could engage an Enemy and March home to their Camp, ſo early the ſame Day, that Cæſar ſhould have Time enough afterwards to receive Ambaſſadors. If therefore Cay-coll-Hill, were denominated from ſome Action of Cæſars, it muſt be in his Second Expedition hither, which I ſhall next proceed to give an Account of. But I muſt firſt obſerve, that notwithſtanding Cæſar's Command to the Britons to ſend their Hoſtages over to him unto the Continent, of all the Cites or States there were none ſent but from two of them. Which ſhews, that they were not much diſmayed at this Attempt of the Romans upon them: And tho' Cæſar obtained, by his Letters to the Senate, a Supplication of 20 Days to be granted him; That is, That the Temples of Rome ſhould be ſolemnly opened in his Name, and after a Proclamation ordered by the Magiſtrate, quod bene & feliciter Rempublicam adminiſtraſſet, the People ſhould all go in Proceſſion, cloathed in White Garments, and crowned with Garlands, and offer Sacrifices, Praiſes and Thankſgiving to the Gods; and for ſo long a Time as 20 Days together, to attend thoſe Solemnities; yet I ſay, notwithſtanding all this Pomp, many of the ancient Writers ſpeak very ſlightingly, both of this, and his other Expedition hither.

(d) de Orat. Dialog. c. 17.

Territæ quæſitis oſtendit terga Britanni.

Horace tells Auguſtus, That Britain was in a manner untouched by the Romans,

Intactus Britannus ut deſcenderet
Sacrâ catenatus viâ.

And much to the ſame Senſe Propertius expreſſes himſelf.

Te manet invictus Romano marte Britannus.

Dion Caſſius ſpeaks very ſlightingly alſo of Cæſar's Conqueſt here: So that the Britons had ſome Reaſon to pull down thoſe Tapiſtry Hangings at Rome, which Cæſar made to expreſs his boaſted Conqueſts; as Virgil ſaith they did.

Purpureaque intexti tollant Aulæa Britanni.

Of Cæſar's Seeond Expedition into Britain.

Lucius Domitius & Ap. Claudius, being Conſuls, Cæſar according to his uſual Cuſtom went to Italy in the Winter, and ordered his Officers during his Abſence, to repair his Navy by rebuilding new Ships, and refiting the old ones. He ordered them alſo to build them ſomething Lower and Broader than thoſe uſed in the Mediterranean, that they might the better bear the Sea: And alſo receive and carry the greater Quantity of Horſe; and he appointed that they ſhould all be made ſo, as that on Occaſion they might uſe Oars: And what was further neceſſary for their Rigging and Armament, he commanded ſhould be provided for them out of Spain. His Directions and Orders were ſo well followed and obeyed; that at his Return into Gaul he found 600 Sail of Ships of Burden ready fitted, and 28 Gallies; all which he ordered to lye in the Portus Iccius, or Itius, which he knew to be the beſt Port to Sail from to Britain, which was about 30 Miles from it.

This Portus Iccius, Somner makes to be Boloign, the ſame with Geſſoriacum before-mentioned; and conſequently was that from whence Cæſar ſailed hither in his former Expedition: and which anciently was, he ſaith, the uſual Port from whence Men ſailed into Britain, as afterwards Whitſand, and then Calais came to be. But Mr. Cambden thinks, that the Portus Itius, or Iccius, was rather Whitſand, or Vitſan; and fancies that it carries in it ſome Remains of the Name. Certain it is, that it was formerly, before Calais came into uſe, the moſt uſual Port: For we find, that there were certain Lands held in a Place called Copper-Land by Dover, by this Service, that the Poſſeſſor ſhould hold the King's Head, whenſoever he croſed the Sea, between Dover and Whitſand (e). Dr. Halley judges this Portus Iccius, was either Calais or Ambleteuſe, becauſe cauſe Ptolomy calls the Promontary of Calais Cliff, Ἴκιον ἄκρον; and this will beſt agree with Cæſar's Account of the Diſtance between the Continent and Britain, which he makes 30 Miles, if thoſe are the true Numbers: For Dr. Halley ſaith, that by an accurate Survey it hath been found, that the neareſt Diſtance between Land and Land, is 28 Miles and a half. But I incline to the Opinion of Somner, Cauſabon, Chiflet, and Batteley, that Geſſoriacum or Boloign, was Cæſar's Portus Iccius. Becauſe as the beſt Copies of Cæſar's Commentaries make the Diſtance 40 and not 30 Miles; and as Strabo makes it exactly ſo too; viz. 320 Stadia, or 40 of our Miles: So Dr. Batteley ſaith, upon a very ſtrict Enquiry among Navigators, he found that they eſteemed it juſt 40 Miles from Boloign, to the Mouth of Sandwich Haven; near which Cæſar Landed both times.

Of the latter of which I now proceed to ſpeak.

Cæſar having prepared all things ready for this Expedition, left Labienus with 3 Legions and 2000 Horſe upon the Continent, to defend the Port, get in Proviſion of Corn, and to keep the Gauls in Awe; and reſolving now to have Force enough to make a Conqueſt of Britain; embarked 5 Legions, with 2000 Horſe, and about Sun-ſet, weighed Anchor and ſailed for Britain: He had a gentle South-Weſt Wind, but it fell Calm about Midnight; ſo that he could not keep his Courſe, and was carried ſo by the Tide, that in the Morning he found Britain lying on his Left Hand: But waiting for the next Tide, he recovered that Part of the Iſland where he landed the Summer before, and arrived there about Noon: And he much commends his Soldiers Diligence and Activity, who rowed the Ships of Burden ſo briskly, that they kept Pace with the Gallies.

He found no Oppoſition in this Deſcent, nor did any Body of the Enemy appear upon the the Coaſt. For, the Britons, who had been there in great Multitudes, were ſo frighted at the Number and Bigneſs of his Ships, (which in all Cæſar ſaith were above 800, and if we may credit Athenæus, they were 1000) that as Cæſar learned from ſome Priſoners which he took, they had deſerted the Coaſt, and betaken themſelves to the Upland Parts. Cæſar, having landed his Men, and encamp'd them in a proper Place, as ſoon as he underſtood from his Priſoners whereabouts the Britiſh Troops were, marched after them with all his Force, except 10 Cohorts and 300 Horſe, which he left in the Camp to guard his Fleet, under the Command of Q. Atrius: which he thought the leſs in Danger, becauſe they lay at Anchor in a ſoft and open Shore; where the Enemy could neither well come at them, nor attack them covered.

This done, he marched towards the Enemy in the Night, and found them about 12 Miles from his Camp: As ſoon as they had Notice of Cæſar's approach, they ſent out their Horſe and Chariots, to diſpute the Paſs of the River which ran between them and the Romans, and no doubt was what is now called the Stoure: And imagining they could do it the better, becauſe they had the Advantage of the higher ground, they gave the Romans Battel. But Cæſar's Horſe, which were 1700, drove them back into the Woods; where they retired to a Place excellenty fortified both by Art and Nature; and which in their Civil Wars one with another, our Kentiſh Britains had formerly prepared for ſuch a Purpoſe. For all the Entrances into it were filled up by Trees felled for that end, and defended by armed Men. But the Roman Soldiers of the Seventh Legion making a Teſtudo with their Shields, and caſting up a Mount, by that means got in and took the Place, and drove the Britons all out of the Woods, with but little hurt to themſelves.

However, Cæſar gave Orders not to purſue them any farther then, both becauſe he was ignorant of the Nature of the Place, and alſo becauſe a great Part of the Day being ſpent, it was Time to think of forming to themſelves a Place to encamp in, and fortifying it as well as they could in ſo ſhort a Space of Time.

Where this Place of the Britons fortified both by Art and Nature was, and the Place of this Battel, 'tis difficult at this diſtance of Time to determine; and 'tis eaſier to determine where it was not. Camden thinks it to have been about Chilham; but as I have ſhewed, p. 76. that is too far from Cæſar's Landing-Place (being near 18) to be called 12 Miles; and there is no Remains of any ſuch Place of Strength thereabout, or of any Camp where the Roman Army could lye. But as Dr. Plott hath obſerved, (a) above Canterbury, between Tunford and Harbledown, there is a Hill above the Broom-down called Beaus Haven which is fortified by both Art and Nature, as may be plainly ſeen on Tunford ſide; tho' to the Eaſt it be indeed injured by the Plow and other Accidents. And in Iffins or Iveſwood, lying partly in Thannington, and part in Nackington, about 3 Miles South South Weſt from Canterbury, the Doctor ſaith, he met with a large Fortification, having a double Ditch and Vallum; which perhaps may have been the Place of Cæſar's Camp after the Battel at the River Stoure above-mentioned, from which it is not far diſtant: And as it ſeems probable, that Cæſar left his Army in this Camp, while he himſelf went to look after the Repair of his Ships, ſo they had Time enough in thoſe 10 Days to fortify it with a double Vallum, if it was thought fit ſo to do: And it was a conſtant Precaution of Cæſars, to encamp ſecurely.

Early the next Morning after the Battel of the Stoure, he divided his Army into 3 Parts, in order the more effectually to purſue the Britons; but before they had marched far upon that Deſign, an Expreſs came to him from Q. Atrius, to acquaint him; that the Night before, there had been ſuch a terrible Storm, that it had much ſhatter'd all his Navy, and driven ſome of them on Shore: That neither Cables nor Anchors could hold them, nor the Sailors bear the Violence of the Weather; and that many Ships were injured by being driven foul upon one another. On this bad News Cæſar recalled his Troops, and countermanded their Purſuit of the Britons: And as I conclude from his Words, ordered them to keep in their Camp, while he himſelf went to look after the Affair of his Fleet. He found Things as bad as they were related to him; about 40 of his Ships loſt, and the reſt ſo ſhattered and injured, as to require a very great Repair; in order to effect which he got all the Carpenters and Workmen he could from among the Legions, and ſent for other Shipwrights from the Continent, and wrote to Labienus to get him ready there as many Ships as he could. And tho' it were a Work of great Difficulty and Labour, yet he judged it ſafeſt and ſecureſt to hale all his Ships on Shore, up within the Fortifications or Intrenchments of his Camp: And this he actually did do, tho' at the Expence of 10 Days, and as many Nights, continual Labour. This mighty Work over, and his Camp compleatly fortified, leaving the ſame Number of Troops to guard it as before, he returned to the Army. But there he found a far greater Number of the Britons, were got together than before: And that by common Conſent, they had choſen Caſſibelan to be their General. This Prince's Government or City lay on the Northern ſide of the River Thames, which divided it from the Maritime Cities of Kent, and extended it ſelf in length 80 Miles from the Sea, up into the Land. Caſſibelan had formerly made continual War upon his Neighbouring States, and had got ſo good a Reputation of Conduct and Valour by it, it ſeems, that in this Emergency, the Britains (in theſe Southern Parts) thought him the moſt fitting Man to Command their Forces againſt the Romans.

Here Cæſar ſtops a while in his Relation, and makes a Digreſſion about the Inhabitants of Britain, their Manners, and Way of Life; which becauſe the principal Part relates to Kent, as being then the only Part known to him, for he had not yet been out of this County; I ſhall take notice of here.

The Maritime Parts of Britain, and conſequently Kent, he ſaith, were inhabited by ſuch as came over out of Belgium, either to make Incurſions for Prey, or Invaſions for Conqueſt; and theſe were denominated from the Names of thoſe Cities, they belonged to on the Continent: (Hence our Attrebatij, Belgæ, Cenimagni, Pariſij, &c.) and perhaps, our Cantiani from Cantia, a River in Gallia Belgica (a) as Dr. Batteley hath ſuggeſted) after they thought fit to ſtay and fix themſelves here. The People of Britain, Cæſar ſaith, were very numerous; as were alſo their Houſes, which were built after the manner of thoſe in Gaul. They had alſo great Herds of Cattle. Inſtead of Money, they uſed Pieces of Braſs, or Iron Rings of a certain Weight: Iron they had of their own, and Tin; but Braſs was imported from Abroad: They had all Trees uſually growing in Gaul, but Firr and Beech. They kept Hares, and Poultry, and Geeſe, but abſtained from eating of them on ſome Superſtitious Account. Kent was the uſual Place where all Ships arrived at from Gaul; and the Inhabitants of that part of Britain, were much more Civil and Courteous than any others, and the Cuſtoms and Manners here differed very little from thoſe of Gaul. All the Britons Painted or Tinged their Faces with a kind of Blue Colour, to render them more terrible to their Enemies. The Hair of their Head they wore long, but ſhaved all other parts of their Body, except their Upper Lip; Ten or 12 Families in a Neighbourhood uſually had their Wives in Common; eſpecially Brethren with Brethren, and Parents with Children; but whatever Children were produced among them, went to thoſe to whom the Mother was firſt Married when ſhe was a Virgin.

(a) Ægid. Bucherij Belgium Rom: 1. 5.

Cæſar having given this Account of our Anceſtors, goes thus on, with the Hiſtory of his Wars here.

The Britiſh Horſe and Chariots met the Roman Cavalry, as ſoon as ever they began their March, and attacked them vigorouſly; but being over-powered by the Romans, could not ſuſtain it, and were forced to retire to the Woods and Hills. When the Romans continued their Purſuit, they rallied and faced about (as the Britiſh Troops are famous for doing, even to this Day) and cut off ſeveral of the Enemies Van. And after ſome time, when Cæſar's Soldiers thought nothing of the Matter, but were buſy in fortifying their Camp, the Britons ruſhed out of the Woods again, and gave a very fierce Aſſault to thoſe Troops that guarded the Roman Camp; and while the principal Cohorts of two Legions, which were ordered to charge them, ſtood ſtill, pauſing and terrified at the Boldneſs and Novelty of the Britons way of fighting, their Troops charged back again clear thro' the Cohorts, with the utmoſt Bravery, and without the loſs of a Man. This Day Quintus Laberius Durus, a Tribune, was Slain by the Britons: This Commander, many Writers think lies buried under that Oblong Bank in Chilham Pariſh, vulgarly called Julabers Grave; but I I ſuppoſe I have ſhewn, p. 76. that this Conjecture is not ſufficiently ſupported.

After this, the Britons gave over the Aſſault. And Cæſar acknowledges, that the Roman Legionary Soldiers, being neither able, thro' the weight of their heavy Arms, to follow their Enemies, nor to move far from their Standard, were not equal to engage ſuch kind of nimble Enemies as the Britons were: And that even his Horſe fought with no leſs Diſadvantage: For the Britons would give Ground on purpoſe to draw them from the Legions; and then alighting from their Chariots, would attack them on Foot: And beſides, the Britons way was not to fight Thick and Cloſe together, but Thin, and at great Diſtances one from another; and yet had their proper Stations ſo diſpoſed, as that they could Succour and Support each other, to either relieve the diſabled, or to ſend in freſh Supplies.

And to make this Obſervation upon the whole Account: The prodigious Skill, Conduct, and Dexterity which our Country-Men ſhewed on all Occaſions, and eſpecially their wonderful Skill in their Chariot Fights, do really ſhew a little more Politure, than on other Occaſions, Cæſar ſeems willing to allow the Britons; and therefore (as (a) our Judicious Milton obſerves) he is ſcarcely conſiſtent with himſelf. But, I can excuſe him a little, by ſuppoſing him to mean that the Inland Parts of Britain, were inhabited by the Barbarians he deſcribes; but that our Kentiſh Coaſters, were much more Polite and Intelligent Men: as living near the Gauls, from whoſe Commerce and Converſation, they gained ſuch agreeable Qualifications. But Cæſar goes on;

(a) Hiſt. of England.

Next Day the Britons appeared far off upon the Hills, but ſhewed themſelves but ſparingly, and did not Skirmiſh with the Roman Horſe with the ſame Vigor and Spirit as before. But about Noon, when Cæſar had ſent out 3 Legions, and all his Horſe, under the Command of Trebonius, to Forage; the Britons from all Quarters furiouſly fell upon them, and charged them up to their very Legions and Standards. But the Romans at laſt repulſed them, and then vigorouſly purſuing them in their Flight, and giving them neither time to rally, nor to make a Stand with their Chariots, as they uſed to do, put them to a great Slaughter. After this Defeat, their diſtant Auxiliaries left our Kentiſh Britons to ſhift for themſelves; and conſequently, they were no longer able to make any head againſt the Roman Power. As ſoon as Cæſar had Intelligence of this, he marched his Army forward on towards the Thames, reſolving to croſs that River, and find out Caſſibelan, who had been the Commander in Chief of the Britiſh Forces againſt him. But the Scene of that Action being out of Kent, and the Place where he is ſuppoſed to have paſſed the River, being ſo too, my Deſign prohibits me to follow him; but only to wait his Return, and ſee him ſafe out of our County, for good and all.

Having then received the Submiſſions, of the Cenimagni, the Seguntiaci, the Ancalites, and the Bibrocaſſij, and ſaved the Trinobantes, he marched to Caſſibelan's City, and took it, with a great Slaughter of the Britons.

But while this was doing, Caſſibelan had ſent Expreſſes into Kent, where it ſeems there were then 4 petty Kings or Governors, viz. Cingetorix, Carvilius, Taximagulus, and Segonax; theſe Caſſibelan had influence enough over, notwithſtanding his Defeat, to perſuade them to attack the Romans firſt Camp by the Sea-ſide, and to attempt the burning of their Fleet; but the Deſign proved unſucceſsful: for the Troops which Cæſar left there repulſed them, ſlew many of them, and Cingetroix was taken Priſoner: whom ſome Copies of Cæſar's Commentaries call Lugotorix: And in this Action the Romans loſt none of their Men. This ſeems to be the laſt Effort that ever our Kentiſh Britons made againſt the Roman Army led hither by Cæſar: And after this, Caſſibelan himſelf, by the Intereſt of Comius of Arras, made his Peace with Cæſar: who now was reſolved to Winter upon the Continent, both for fear of ſome ſudden Commotion in Gaul; and, I doubt not, of new Confederacies being formed againſt him here, by the Britons, whom he found capable of coping with the Roman Soldiers upon the ſquare. Beſides, the Summer was almoſt ſpent; he had taken a large Number of Priſoners, and he did not care to be obliged to keep the Field all the Winter; Wherefore accepting the Hoſtages offered by Caſſibelan, and appointing an Annual Tribute to be paid by the Britons; he haſtened to his Camp by Sandwich, embarked his Men, ſet Sail, and arrived ſafe in Gaul with all his Ships. The next Winter, when he went to Rome, he offered to Venus, the Patroneſs of his Family, a Corſlet ſet with Britiſh Pearls, by way of Thankſgiving for his Conqueſt of Britain. It doth not appear, but rather the contrary, that Cæſar left any Gariſons here, or any Soldiers to awe the Britons, or Officers to collect the Tribute; and after his Death, Auguſtus, either, as Strabo ſaith, out of neglect; or rather, as others ſay, out of a wiſe Conſideration, that the Roman Empire was large enough already, never made any Attempt upon Britain. But I believe the true Reaſon was the Civil War at Home, and ſome other more preſſing Affairs. For 20 or 30 Years, therefore, and more, the Britons lived at their own Diſpoſal; and as Dion ſaith, were governed by their own Kings.

Auguſtus, indeed, once or twice made a ſhew of coming hither; on which Strabo ſaith, the Britiſh Princes courted his Friendſhip by Preſents, by Offerings in the Capitol, and other artful Addreſſes: And their going often to Rome, made the Iſland very well known in thoſe Days; but the Britons paid no Tribute to Auguſtus; and only ſome ſlight and ſmall Duties for their Commodities which they exported into Gaul.

Tiberius followed Auguſtus's Example, and troubled not himſelf about Britain; however to keep him in good Humour, and to prohibit him making them a Viſit, the Britons ſent back very Civilly the Soldiers of Germanicus, who by accident were Shipwrecked upon their Coaſts.

Caligula, his Succeſſor, a mad diſſolute Wretch, was excited to invade Britain by Adminius, who was Baniſhed by his Father Cunobeline, and had fled hence to Rome; but he made only a fooliſh ſhew of a Deſcent on this Iſland; went no further than to the Oceans ſide; and there behaving himſelf like one Frantick, ſent before him to the Senate vain-glorious Letters, implying that he had conquered all Britain, and ſoon followed them himſelf to Rome.

After this, one Bericus, of whoſe Quality we know nothing; ſeeing the Iſland all to Pieces in Civil War, went to Rome; and excited Claudius to Invade Britain: Who being now in his 3d Conſulſhip, and ambitious of doing ſomething to gain a Triumph; taking the Advantage of the Britons demanding Bericus, and other Fugitives, and threatning a Breach with the Romans, when denied it; makes Choice of Britain for his Province. And hither he ſends before him Aulius Plautius the Prætor, ordering him, if he found any great Difficulty in the Conqueſt of the Iſland to ſend him word. Plautius had much ado to perſuade the Legions to follow him hither; they called it, making War beyond the End of the World, and no doubt had heard what rough Welcome the Britons had given to Julius Cæſar: However, they were at laſt prevailed with to embark; and putting to Sea from Three different Ports, leſt their Landing ſhould be hindred if it were all at one Place, they made towards Britain, and landed without Oppoſition, Plautius, with his Squadron at Rutupium; and the other two, probably, at Dover, and the Portus Lemanis. For the Britons, who underſtood how unwilling the Soldiers were to come hither, concluded they would Mutiny, and Defeat the Deſign; and therefore had made no Preparation to Oppoſe them: but retiring to the Woods and Moraſſes, they thought to tire them out, with Delays and Skirmiſhes, as they had attempted to do by Cæſar before. Plautius, after much trouble, encountred firſt with Caractacus, and then with Togodumnus, the Sons of Cunobeline, and defeated them both: The Place of both which Battels I judge to have been in this County; and on the Eaſtern Side of the Medway: For that I take to be the River, which Dion ſaith, Plautius commanded the German Auxiliaries to paſs firſt, and to ſtrike chiefly at the Horſes of the Britains, in order to diſable their Chariots, wherein their principal Strength conſiſted: For the Britons not imagining the Romans could paſs the River without a Bridge, lay on the other Bank of it, as they thought, ſecure. But they found themſelves much miſtaken; for after the Germans had paſs'd, Plautius ſent over the River Flavius Veſpaſian, (who was afterwards Emperor,) and his Brother Sabinus, to ſecond them, who fell ſuddenly upon the Britons, and did great Execution among them. However, our gallant Countrymen were not diſmay'd at this; but forming themſelves the next Day into their uſual Order, they aſſailed the Romans with ſo much Bravery, that Victory hung a good while in Suſpenſe; and Caius Sidius Geta was very near being taken Priſoner; but he retrieved himſelf ſo valiantly, that his Behaviour turned the Scale on the ſide of the Romans, for which afterwards he had high Honours paid him at Rome. After this, Dion ſaith, the Britons retired towards the Mouth of the Thames; (i. e.) as I judge, along the Weſt ſide of the Medway towards the Iſle of Grean; and being well acquainted with the Places thereabouts, got over the Water, and the Romans following them, thro' dangerous Flats and Boggs, but had like to have loſt their Army by it. (For the Rivers then being not bounded by good Banks, as they are now; on the Tide of Flood, overflowed all the Low-Lands, and left them bare again upon the Ebb; and by this means they had no very deep Channels). In this the Romans were much help'd by the German Auxiliaries, who were uſed to ſuch Expeditions: For they finding ſome Place above where there was a Bridge, got over and fell upon the Britons with a great Slaughter; but they loſt as many of their own Men in the Boggs and Moraſſes, as they killed of the Britons.

On this Plautus fearing the worſt, and finding the Britons deſperately enraged at the Death of Togodumnus, who was killed in one of theſe Engagements, draws back his Forces; and ſends to Claudius to come to his Aſſiſtance. 'Tis plain by what Dion ſaith, That he waited for him on the South ſide of the Thames: and I can't find a more likely Place for him to lye encamp'd in, than that famous one on Keſton-Down, in this County. See Keſton, p. 168. Indeed deed I was leſs fix'd in this Opinion when I wrote that Part, than I am now; becauſe it is a little too far from the River, to anſwer Dion's Account of Hullus Plautius expecting the Emperor Claudius on the Banks of, or at the Thames. But ſince I can hear of the Footſteps of no other Camp hereabouts where he could lie; and ſince this Camp at Keſton is ſo very large and ſtrong, as hardly to bear a meaner Original; and not then being much above Seven or Eight Miles from the Thames: And ſince I think it alſo not unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that on Claudius's Approach, Plautius might decamp from hence, and reſign this Station to the Emperor; while he himſelf might lie expecting his Conjunction with him even on the very Edge of the Thames; I think it will not contradict Dion, nor be diſcordant with other Circumſtances to conclude this Camp upon Keſton-Down near Bromley in this County, to have been the very Place, where both Plautius, and the Emperor Claudius, and many other Parts of the Roman Armies might afterwards lie entrenched, on other Occaſions, and in their Marches to and from the Sea-Coaſt.

On this Intimation ſent to Claudius, he immediately marched through Gaul to the Britiſh Ocean, with a mighty Equipage, and a Train of Nobility attending him; and to ſtrike the more Terror into the Britons, or to make the more Pomp and Show, he brought ſome Elephants alſo along with him. Aſſoon as he got over the Water he marched directly with his numerous Army to join Plautius, took the ſole Command upon himſelf, paſſed the Thames, and gained a Victory over the Britons, who ſtill retained the Courage, but had loſt the Conduct of Caſſibelan; for they boldly and openly ventured to ſtand a Battel with this mighty Force, but were by no means equal to it, and conſequently were beaten; and Comolodunum, the Royal Seat of Cunobelin, was taken, and a large Number of Priſoners. Suetonius ſaith, Claudius ſtaid here but Sixteen Days, and then having remitted to the Britiſh Nobility the Confiſcation of their Goods, returned to Rome; from whence in the whole he was abſent but Six Months.

And here an End muſt be put, I believe, to all Hoſtile Actions between the Romans and Britons in this County: For, I ſuppoſe, now our Countreymen had come to Terms of Peace and Agreement with them, were very glad to get rid of their Company here; and that they were going to make the Inland Parts of this Iſland the Stage of their future Conqueſts. And I think we can ſay nothing more of them, than that for hereafter Kent continued to be, as it was at firſt, the Place where they landed in all their Expeditions into Britain: That in order to facilitate their Marches, they made Three Publick or Conſular Ways in this County, and fixed their uſual Stations and Manſions upon them: That they built, in Proceſs of Time, ſeveral Watch-Towers, Forts, and Caſtles on our Coaſts, to guard them againſt the Inſults of the Saxon Pirates: Of all which Articles I have already ſpoken under their proper Heads; and therefore ſhall now cloſe this Account of the Tranſactions of the Romans in Kent, with acquainting you, that after their Government was eſtabliſhed here, Kent was under the Juriſdiction of the Governor of Britannia prima: But our Sea-Coaſts, which, with thoſe of Eſſex and Suſſex, &c. were called Littus Saxonicum, had a peculiar Governor at, and after the Time of Dioclefian: Marcellinus calls him Comes Littoris, and the Notitia, Imperij Occidentalis, Comes Littoris Saxonici, the Count or Lieutenant of the Saxon Shore: For he himſelf was under the Command of the Illuſtrious the Maſter of the Foot, who was called Preſentalis, from his conſtant Preſence in the Army: And beſides the particular Gariſons for the Ports, this Officer had aſſigned to him ſeveral other Companies of Soldiers to be ready upon all Occaſions. In his Court he had theſe Officers, A Principal, out of the Generals of the Foot; Two Accomptants, a Jailor, a Judge Advocate, an Aſſiſtant, and under-Aſſiſtant, and a Regiſter; particular Receivers, &c. And no doubt it was in Imitation of the Power and Authority of this uſeful Officer, that our Saxon Anceſtors ſet over the ſame Coaſt a Portreve or Governor, who was called afterwards in the Norman Language, the Warden of the Cinque Ports; becauſe as the Count of the Saxon Shore preſided over Nine Ports, the Lord Warden did ſo over Five. But of the Cinque Ports I ſhall treat particularly in another Place.

Of the Tranſactions of the Saxons in KENT.

THE Romans after having continued here above 400 Years, being by their Civil Wars and foreign Invaſions in the Bowels of their Empire, forced to leave Britain; the Picts and Scots invaded the Northern Parts of it in great Numbers, making horrible Ravages and Devaſtations where-ever they came. The poor Britains in this ſad State in vain ſought Succour from the Romans; for their own Affairs were in ſuch a wretched Condition, that they were not able to ſend them any Aſſiſtance; wherefore by common Conſent they elected Vortigern for their King; others ſay, he made himſelf ſo by Uſurpation, about the Year 447: And being viſited both with Famine and Peſtilence, as well as by the barbarous Picts and Scots, were then in a very miſerable Condition.

This Prince called a Council to conſider what was to be done in this Extremity; wherein it was agreed to implore Aſſiſtance from the Saxons; an eminent and powerful People of Germany, too well known to the Britons, by their many and often repeated Pyracies upon their Coaſts. Who theſe Saxons were originally, and where placed, is a long Diſpute among our Antiquaries and Hiſtorians, and beſides my Purpoſe to enquire into: But ſuch as pleaſe to purſue this Matter further, may conſult Bede's Eccleſ. Hiſt. Lib. 1. c. 26. Uſher's Antiq. Brit. Eccleſ. c. 12. Stillingfl. Antiq. of the Britiſh Churches, c. 5. Camden in his Introduction to his Britannia. Ethelwerd's Chronicle, B. 1. Ubbo Emmius in his Rerum Friſiſ. Lib. 1. Cluverius his Ancient Germany, Veſtegan, c. 2. Sheringham, de Gentis Anglorum Origine, &c. And the careful Mr. Tyrrel's Hiſtory of England, Vol. I. B. 3, who hath largely ſummed up what moſt Writers have delivered on this Subject.

In Purſuance of the above-mentioned Determination of the great Council ſummon'd by Vortigern, the Britons ſent Ambaſſadors into Germany, repreſenting the Diſtreſs and Danger Britain was in, deſiring them to ſend Troops to their Aſſiſtance, and promiſing them very good Terms and Conditions.

The Saxons were very well pleaſed with this Meſſage and Offer; and being then over-ſtock'd with People, they gladly made all the Haſte they could on this Expedition. And under the Conduct of Two eminent Captains, Brothers, and deſcended from the ancient Woden, from whom almoſt all the Royal Families of the Saxons derived their Original, brought as many Soldiers as Three long Ships or Veſſels, in their Language called Ceoles or Chiules, could tranſport, and landed them at a Place called Ypwines Fleet, now called Ebbes-Fleet, in the Iſle of Thanet, in this County of Kent. They were welcomed with great Joy by both King and People; and the Iſland where they Landed was given them to live upon; and an Agreement and Conditions entred into with them, that for their Services in Fighting for, and defending Britain againſt the Invaſion of Foreign Enemies, they ſhould be well maintained and paid. This Landing of the Saxons, was, according to the Saxon Chronicle, A. D. 449. No Accounts either in our own or the Saxon Hiſtories give us the Number of theſe Men: But ſince they came over but in Three Veſſels, 'tis not likely they were above 1500, or Two Thouſand Men; which ſhews what a ſad Condition poor Britain was in at that Time, that they could not raiſe ſo ſmall a Number of ſufficient Troops, to beat off the Picts without the Aſſiſtance of Foreigners.

But theſe Saxons being thus landed, ſoon joined with what Forces the Britons could raiſe, and marching with them into the North, found the Picts and Scots had penetrated as far as Lincolnſhire; and there engaging about the Place now called Stamford, gave them a total Overthrow; and drove ſuch as ſurvived the Battel, to ſeek their Safety in Flight, while they remained Maſters of the Field, and Poſſeſſors of the Spoil of the Enemy.

Some Time after this, Hengiſt, who was a Man of great Subtilty as well as Bravery, obſerving the confuſed Condition of the Britiſh Affairs, and finding Vortigern to be a diſſolute careleſs Prince, ſuggeſted to him, that it would be of Uſe to ſend for more Troops from Saxony, not only to defend the Northern Frontiers of the Kingdom, againſt any future Attempts from the Picts and Scots, but alſo to ſecure himſelf in the Poſſeſſion of his Throne: Becauſe his Subjects being uneaſy under his Government, deſigned to ſet up Aurelius Ambroſius, Son to the late Emperor Conſtantine; and who was now in Armorica, preparing for ſuch an Enterprize. On this Vortigern conſents, and Hengiſt ſoon ſends Home, inviting his Countreymen to come and ſettle themſelves here. And over they came in 17 or 18 Ships more; and in ſuch conſiderable Numbers, that they compoſed a formidable Army, under the Conduct of Oeſc, or Eſk (as is ſuppoſed) Son to Hengiſt. This ſecond Coming of the Saxons was about A. 450. Along with theſe, as Nennius tells us, came over Ronixa, or as ſhe is moſt uſually called, Rowena, a moſt beautiful Virgin, Daughter alſo to Hengiſt. Her Hengiſt deſigned to play upon the old laſcivious King, whom he knew to be eaſily taken that Way. And this ſucceeded accordingly; for ſoon after he made an Entertainment for Vortigern; and when he was heated with Wine, brought in his Daughter, and made her wait upon the King with Wine; who immediately fell violently in Love with her, demanded her in Marriage of her Father, and offered him any Terms to obtain her, and even to repudiate his preſent Wife, and place Rowena in her ſtead.

Hengiſt after ſome Deliberation and Advice with his Friends, demands this County of Kent; which was preſently granted him by the doting King; one Guorongus, then Deputy-Governor of Kent under Vortigern, knowing nothing at all of the Matter: And he married Rowena, divorcing his Queen, who had born him ſeveral Sons, of great Appearance and Hopes.

Hengiſt, now being Lord of Kent, and the King's Father-in-Law, took upon him to adviſe him further; and told him, it would be a thorough Security to him, if he would let him ſend over into Germany for his Brother Octa (ſome call him his Son) and his Nephew Ebuſa; who being very gallant Men, would ſoon vanquiſh the Picts and Scots, if he would give them the Northern Countries lying near the Picts-Wall for their Reward: For then they would place themſelves ſo, as to be always ready to prevent their Incurſions into England. The eaſy King agrees to this Propoſition alſo: On which, the Saxons under the Leaders above-named, came with 40 Ships more, and ſailing againſt the Picts, ſpoiled the Iſlands of the Orcades, drove the Picts and Scots out of their Territories, and at laſt ſeated themſelves in Northumberland. After which he ſent perpetually for more Ships and Men; and almoſt entirely diſpeopled his own Countrey, and filled the County of Kent with Jutes; as he did afterwards the Iſle of Wight, and that Part of Hampſhire oppoſite to it, with the ſame.

And thus filling all Britain almoſt with Foreigners, they at laſt preſumed ſo far on their Numbers and Strength, (which they might very well do) as to find Occaſions for Differences and Quarrels; they demanded greater Allowances of Proviſions and Subſiſtence; and openly declared, that if they had them not, they would break the League, and waſte and ſpoil the Countrey.

The Britons refuſed to comply with theſe unreaſonable Demands, and deſired them to return Home again. On which the Saxons made a ſecret League with the Picts, turned their Arms upon the Britons, and waſted the Kingdom with Fire and Sword, from one End of it to the other, no one daring to withſtand or controul them: And this drove the miſerable Britons to ſeek for Shelter where they could from the barbarous Fury of the Saxons; ſome retired to the Mountains in Wales, and into Cornwall: Others got over into Armorica in France, where they found a kind Reception from ſome of their own Countreymen, who had been ſettled there before. (a)

Vortimer Eldeſt Son to King Vortigern, was all along very uneaſy at his Father's Friendſhip to the Saxons, and foreſaw the Ruin it would bring upon his Countrey; and therefore often perſuaded him to make a Peace with the Picts and Scots, and to drive them out of the Kingdom, as being now become as troubleſome and dangerous as thoſe whom they came to expel. But it was not till after the Saxons League with the Picts and Scots, and their Barbarities above-mentioned, that he could prevail with his Father to rouze up to any Spirit and Reſolution.

However at laſt he prevailed; and as Malmſbury ſaith (b), about Seven Years after their firſt coming hither, the Britons under his Command, began to make Head againſt the Saxons, and had ſeveral eminent Battels with them, beſides many Skirmiſhes; as both the Saxon and Britiſh Writers agree; though they differ widely about the Succeſs of thoſe Engagements (as well as the Time of them) according as they are affected. What ſeems moſt likely to be the Truth, and hath the Authority of Ethelward, the Saxon Annals, Malmsbury, and Florence of Worceſter to ſupport it, is as follows:

IN the Year of Chriſt 455, being the 7th after the Coming of the Saxons hither, an open War broke out between the Britons and their cruel and treacherous Inmates; and was carried on by Vortimer now taken in as a Partner with his Father Vortigern on one Side, and Hengiſt and Horſa, the two Saxon Generals, on the other: And the firſt Batrel between them was fought in Kent with a great Number of Forces, and almoſt equal Bravery: Though at laſt the Saxons had the worſt; and were put to ſo great a Rout and Slaughter, that the Britons called the Place of the Action Saſſenaighaibail, i. e. the Overthrow of the Saxons, as Lambard interprets it; and as Nennius tells us. He ſaith alſo that the Saxons called the Place of this Battel Episford: Florence of Worceſter names it Ægleſthrep; as doth alſo Aſſer Menevenſis, and Fabius Ethelward: The Saxon Chronicle comes nearer to the preſent Name of this Place, and writes it Ægleſford; which doubtleſs is now Aylesford in this County. Nennius and Geoffrey of Monmouth do mightily magnify the Succeſs of the Britons in this Battel, telling you, that the Saxons were driven quite into the Iſle of Thanet, and forced to ſail Home into their own Countrey; from whence they did not return in ſeveral Years. But this laſt muſt be a Miſtake; for this very Year, as appears by good Authors, Hengiſt began the Kingdom of Kent. Florence of Worceſter and Ranulfus Ceſtrenſis relate the Matter as much wrong the other Way, and tell you, that Hengiſt got the Victory. But William of Malmsbury ſeems to be moſt in the Right, who ſaith, that the Succeſs was nearly equal for a great while, tho' at laſt the Scale was turned for the Britons; who very probably remained Maſters of the Field of Battel. In this ſharp Engagement Horſa Brother to Hengiſt, and Catigern or Katigis Brother to Vortimer, fought one another Hand to Hand ſo eagerly, that they killed one another upon the Spot. And Bede ſaith, that (a) Horſa was buried in Eaſt Kent (i. e. on the Eaſtern Side of the Medway, near whoſe Bank the Battel was fought) and no doubt at the Place called Horſtede, near Rocheſter, which derives its Name from him; as Catigern was at the Place called Kits-Coty Houſe, where as the Tradition goes, a Monument was erected for him after the Manner of Stonehenge, which remains to this Day; and of which I have before given you a Draught under Aylesford, in B. I. p. 31. And indeed a very noble Monument of Antiquity it is. And all about this Hill where the Battel was, there are large Stones to be found, ſome ſtanding upright, others, through Time, lying down; which no doubt were there placed to perpetuate the Memory of ſome great Men, that fell in this memorable Encounter; though Diſtance of Time hath obliterated their Names. For thoſe Stones being all brought from the Quarry on the other Side of the River Medway, to ſuch great Heights up the Hill, can hardly be ſuppoſed to have had any other or leſs Reaſon for their being placed where they are now to be ſeen.

Two Years after this, according to Nennius, Hengiſt ſent into Saxony for more Troops; which came over in great Numbers, and were very brave and experienced Soldiers. And with theſe he and his Son Oeſe fought another great Battel againſt the Britons at Crayford in this County: The latter got a very conſiderable Army together; but were now neither equal in Strength, Arms, nor Numbers to the Saxons; and conſequently entirely loſt the Day, having their Four Eminent Generals or Leaders killed upon the Spot, with 4000 common Soldiers, as Huntingdon ſaith; and flying towards London, never afterwards dared come down into Kent to engage the Saxons. Nennius and Geofrey of Monmouth place this Battel before that of Aylesford; but in that Point, as well as many others, are certainly miſtaken; as appears by the Saxon Chronicles which are of much greater Credit. They call it indeed the Battel of the River Darent; which therefore ſome have made a diſtinct one from this of Crayford. But as the River Cray, near Crayford, joins with the Darent, and runs together with it into the Thames: So 'tis natural to conclude, that the Battel might be denominated from either of them; for at the Place of Action they are not much above a Mile aſunder.

After this fatal Battel, Hengiſt over-ran the Britiſh Kingdom; and as Gildas, Bede, and Huntingdon relate, committed horrible Murders and Maſſacres upon all Sorts of People; ſparing neither Age, Sex, Quality, nor Profeſſion; and deſtroying and burning their Churches and publick Edifices, as well as thoſe of private Men.

But the Scene where theſe Things were perpetrated, being without the Diſtrict I am confined to, I can but juſt mention them here: But I may be allowed to conſider ſome of them again, in the ſhort Hiſtory I deſign of the Kings of Kent, which the Order I have propoſed to my ſelf next obliges me to give you.

The Hiſtory of the Kings of KENT.

ALL the Kings of the Saxon Heptarchy (for in Proceſs of Time the Saxons ſet up Seven ſeveral diſtinct Kingdoms here) are derived from the famous Woden, or Odinus: And their Genealogies may be ſeen in Speed's Hiſtory of England, and at the End of Langham's Chronicon Rerum Anglicarum. The other Six, as being without my Province, I muſt omit: But the Deſcent of the Kings of Kent ſtands thus.

The Eldeſt Son of Odinus and Friga was Veldegius; his Son was Vecta, his Grandſon Vita, his Great Grandſon Vitigiſilus, the Father of Hengiſt, the firſt Saxon King of Kent.

Hengiſt had Two Brothers; Horſa who was killed by Prince Catigern at the Battel of Aylesford; and Otta, who had a Son called Ebuſa.

It doth not appear that Hengiſt had above Three Children; and thence the Genealogy will ſtand thus:

As to theſe Uſurping, or Contemporary Kings of Kent, they will be more fully mentioned in the following Hiſtory.

HEN-

HENGIST, the first King of Kent, of whom so much hath been already spoken, began to make the County of Kent a distinct Kingdom by it self, A. D. 455. and about the 7th Year after the Arrival of the Saxons here, under the Conduct of him and his Brother Horsa. Indeed there hath been much Dispute about the Time of the Saxons first coming hither: Some will have it to be A. D. 449, others 444, and some 441. And Camden following Nennius, places it so early as 428. and to this Selden agrees. However, I think the first Date of 449 is best supported by Authority; and with this agrees the Saxon Chronicle.

After the signal Victory obtained over the Britons, near Crayford in Kent, which I have before spoken of, I don't find any Thing in particular of the Actions of Hengist, till A. D. 465. But then the Saxon Chronicle saith, The Britons got together a very great Force, consisting of 12 Bodies of Troops, and those commanded by so many several Princes; and with this Army they encountred Hengist and his Son Æsc, at a place called Wippedsfleete. The Battel was fought long and vigorously, but at last the Victory fell to the Saxons, the Twelve British Leaders being Slain, their Standards taken, and their Men all routed. On Hengist's side many great Officers fell, and among the rest, one Wipped; from whom the Place of this Action took its Name of Wippedsfleete: And for a good while after, both sides were so broken by this Battel, neither the Saxons Invaded the British Territories; nor the latter, those of the Saxons. And this is the Third great Battel fought between the Britons and their Treacherous Auxiliaries.

But 'tis by no means certain where the Place of this Battel lay. Indeed, it seems highly probable, that this Third Battel of Hengist on the Sea Shore, or near some Estuary running into it, (for that the Saxon Word Flete or Fleot doth certainly imply,) was the same with that which Nennius, Geoffry of Monmouth, &c. mentions as the Third Battel of Vortimer against the Saxons: And which they say was fought near the Gallic Sea-side, in a Field where stood the Lapis Tituli. But where this Lapis Tituli was, is still the Question. Camden being led by the similitude of the Name, is for placing it at Stonar in this County, as I have observed there. And Daniel Langhorn, if it be supposed to be in Kent, would have it be at Stone near Gravesend (a). I think, I have given better Reasons for placing it at Folkstone in this County; which you may read, where I have treated about that Place. But after all, it may well be questioned, whether this Battel were fought in Kent or not. Mr. Camden thinks Wippedfleete to be Ebbsfleet, in the Isle of Thanet; but I can't see how those Names can be made to agree, tho' Ebbsfleet should be anciently called Hypwinesfleet, as some say it was. But what is still more than all this, the Saxon Chronicle intimates, and Huntingdon and Ralph of Chester plainly say, that after the Battel of Crayford, the Britons never dared venture into Kent any more, with a design to fight the Saxons there. The British Writers are inconsistent about this Engagement; they make the Britons Victorious, and to have driven the Saxons out of the Kingdom; but they say also, that in the Battel, the Saxons were driven into Thanet; and therefore Ebbesfleet in Thanet could not be the Seat of the Action. All Things are here so much in the dark, that there is no manner of certainty: However, I am persuaded the Lapis Tituli is in Kent, and at Folkstone; and therefore if this were that Battel which Nennius saith was fought there, the Scene of it must have been in Kent; but that indeed I cannot be clear about.

Anno Dom. 473. The Saxon Chronicle, and Florence of Worcester say, there was a Fourth Battel fought between the Britons and the Saxons, under the Command of Hengist, and his Son Æsc: In which the former were dreadfully routed. Some think this Engagement was transacted on Colchester-Heath; but I think we have not Circumstances enough given us to determine where it was; only we may be pretty well assured it was not in Kent, for the Reasons above given. About two Years after, this Vortimer is said to have died; and that then a Peace began to be treated of between Vortigern and Hengist: During which Negotiation, Hengist invited Vortigern and 300 Britains to an Entertainment, where plying them with Drink, and purposely throwing in hard Words and Matters of Contention, they at last provoked the Britons to an open Quarrel, and then, as was before designed, they murdered them all with their Seaxes, or short Swords, which they had purposely concealed under their Coats; as William of Malmsbury tells us: Only Vortigern was left Alive; but he was made a Prisoner, and forced to gain his Liberty, by a Concession of the 3 Counties of Essex, Middlesex, and Sussex, to the Saxons, which now began to be called by these Names; and to make a dishonourable Peace with Hengist: after which the Treacherous Saxons had, during his Confinement, overturn'd a great Part of his Dominions, and seiz'd upon Lincoln, London, and Winchester. And this was the poor Conclusion of a War of about 20 Years continuance, between the Britons and the Saxons. Hengist having gained this great Augmentation of his Kingdom, began to plant Essex and Middlesex, with the Anglo-Saxons, and sending over to Germany for still more of his Countrymen, peopled Sussex with them also. These came over, under the Command of Ella and his 3 Sons Cimen, Plenting, and Cissa. The Britons endeavoured to oppose their Landing, but unsuccessfully; and were beaten and driven by them into the great Wood of Andred, called by the Britons Coit-andred, by the Saxons Andredswald, and now the Weald or Wild of Sussex and Kent. Of which I have before treated. The same Advantages over the Britons were gained by Octa and Ebusa in the Northern Parts. So that in process of Time, Hengist, having pretty well settled his Affairs, sent a great Part of his Army, at their desire, back into Germany (b), as several Authors of good Credit relate.

(b) Gildas, Eginhardas.

Not long after which, A. D. 488. and 40 Years after his first coming hither, Hengist ended his Life; having reigned King of Kent, and some other Parts of England 32 say some, but as I think, 34 Years. Geoffry of Monmouth will have him killed by the Britons; but neither Bede, nor Nennius, nor any good Historian mention any such Thing.

Malmsbury observes very justly of this Prince; that tho' he were a very gallant Man, and a good Soldier, yet he owed his Successes in a good Measure to Fraud and Treachery, and was guilty of many Acts of Cruelty and Barbarity. He had and left, I believe 3 Children Andovachrius, who continued in Saxony; Esc, who succeeded him in this Kingdom of Kent; and Ronixa, or Rowena, married, as is before taken notice of, to King Vortigern. And he must have died in a good old Age, because all these Children were born to him before he came into Briton, and his Daughter was marriagable at that Time.

ESC, or as some write him Oesc, Son of King Hengist, began his Reign over the Kingdom of Kent, A. D. 488. And from him the Kings of Kent, were sometimes called Eskings: When his Father died, he was in the Northern Parts Parts of England, whither he had marched to the Aſſiſtance of Octa and Ebuſa; but ſoon got into Kent on the News of his Death, and took upon him the Government. Malmsbury ſaith, he rather defended than enlarged his Kingdom; but William of Huntington, on the contrary, tells us, that being poſſeſt of his Father's Valour, he gallantly maintained his Country againſt the Britons, and much enlarged his Dominions.

In the Third Year of his Reign, Ella, and his Sons above-mentioned, with a great Army of Saxons, laid Siege to the Ancient City of Anderida, or Andredſcheſter: Which becauſe I have placed at Newenden in this County, I muſt give a ſhort Account of here. (a) Henry Huntington ſaith, the Britons gathered together in great Multitudes, to raiſe the Siege; and harraſſed them ſo, that they were forced to break up from before the Town, and to drive them by Battel into the Woods; but the Britons returning again upon them, the Saxons divided their Army into two Parts, one of which kept off the Britons while the others carried on the Siege; at laſt they took the City: and were ſo enraged at their Loſſes and Fatigues, that they ſlew all the Inhabitants, burnt the City, and razed all the Walls and Places of Defence to the Ground. And hence the Date begins of the Kingdom of the Weſt Saxons here. Out of the Ruins of this old City was built, firſt a ſmall Houſe of Carmelite Friars, and afterwards the Town of Newenden; which probably was ſo called, becauſe it was erected out of the Ruins of the old.

Anno Dom. 512. died Eſc, ſome call him Oſric, from his Sirname Otricus, King of Kent, after a Reign of 24 Years, and was ſucceeded by his Son Octa. Of this Eſc, I can find nothing remarkable, either in the Saxon Chronicles, or any other Hiſtorian.

OCTA, The Third King of Kent. Some write his Name Otha, and others Oiſc; but no one relates any Thing of his Actions.

And 'tis probable, that he was an Idle Inactive Prince; becauſe in his Reign, Ercenovius the Son of Offa took upon him the Title of King of the Eaſt Saxons; which Country had been before governed by a Prefect or Deputy appointed by the King of Kent. Spelman gives him a Reign of Twenty Years, and others make it Twenty two. Which is all I can ſay of him.

Nor indeed is there much more to be found of his Son and Succeſſor, HERMINERIC, or Imeric. The 4th King of Kent: who began his Reign A. D. 534; and tho' he had a long Reign of 25 Years according to Stow, and 29 or 30 according to Savil's Tables; yet we hardly know any thing more about him, than that his Son was Ethelbert the 5th King of Kent, (whom in the Year 561, tho' a Boy, he made Partner with him in the Kingdom,) and his Daughter Rikell; who being married to Sledda 2d King of the Eaſt Saxons; had by him Iſſue Sebert and Segebald.

But now we ſhall come to a Prince of whom we have great deal more to ſay, viz.

ETHELBERT, Son of Imerick, or Herminerick, the 5th King of Kent: He began his Reign alone, on the Death of his Father, A. D. 564. with whom he had reigned near Three Years. The Young Prince, arrogating to himſelf, on the Account of his Family, the Superiority in the Heptarchy, occaſioned the firſt Civil War, which broke out among the Saxons, in their ſeveral Kingdoms here; and being attacked by Ceulin, King of the Weſt Saxons, he was routed at Wimbledon in Surry, his two Captains Oſlave and Cnebba were killed, and forced to retire back into Kent, by a haſty Flight: And indeed at the beginning of his Reign, this Young King, was but in a very contemptible State, was beaten in two or three Battels, and had much ado to defend his own Dominions. But as he increaſed in Years, he did ſo alſo in Conduct and Wiſdom, in Courage and in the Art of War: And was ſo ſucceſsful, that he brought under his Subjection all the Counties poſſeſſed by the Engliſh Saxons, except Northumberland, or as far as the Banks of the River Humber. And to ſtrengthen his Intereſt, he contracted an Alliance with Aribert King of the Franks, and married Birtha his Daughter (b), who was a Chriſtian; by which means he became well diſpoſed to embrace Chriſtianity, as he did afterwards by the preaching of Auſtin the Monk: For this Lady contracted with him to have the Free Exerciſe of her Religion; and that ſhe might carry over with her into Britain, a Biſhop, Ludhardus, or Lethardus, and other Prieſts for her Uſe. By her he had Iſſue Eadbald, Ethelburg, Edburgh; and he was wedded a Second Time, to one whom his Son Eadbuld afterwards married.

Speed ſaith, he was greatly aſſiſting to Sebert King of the Eaſt Saxons, and his Nephew, in building the Monaſteries of St. Peters Weſtminſter, as he himſelf had built one at St. Pauls in London; and made that City a Biſhop's See, and appointed Melitus to preſide there. (He built alſo the Cathedral Monaſtery at Rocheſter, dedicating it to St. Andrew, and making Juſtus Biſhop there.) They had both been formerly Idol Temples, and St. Paul's was appropriated to Diana, as the other had been to Apollo. It was about the Year 597 that King Ethelbert embraced the Chriſtian Faith, and was baptized by Auſtin the Monk, the firſt Biſhop of Canterbury; of which a full Account will be given under Auſtin's Life, in the next Book of this Hiſtory.

After the King's Converſion, which his Marriage with Bertha had prepared the Way for, great Numbers of his People took upon them alſo the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity; but Ethelbert would not compel any one to it, tho' he encouraged the new Converts by marks of his Favour. And ſo great a Reſpect he ſhewed to Auſtin and his Followers; that he left him his Royal Palace at Canterbury, and retiring to Reculver, there built him another, out of the Ruins of the old Roman Buildings there, which as I have before obſerved, when I ſpake of that Place, were very Magnificent. And it doth not appear, that the humble Auſtin made any Scruple of accepting the King's Offer; but he made him, I ſuppoſe, a ſufficient Amends afterwards, when contrary to Pope Gregory's Command, he honoured Ethelbert's Royal City of Canterbury, with being the Seat of the Archbiſhoprick, inſtead of London. A. D. 604. King Ethelbert and his Queen kept a great Chriſtmas at Canterbury, and endowed the Monaſtery of St. Auſtins there, erected by Archbiſhop Auſtin, with great Revenues and Privileges, and made Peter the firſt Abbot of it.

A. D. 616. King Ethelbert departed this Life, and was buried in the Porch of St. Martin, within the Church of St. Auſtin's Abbey, juſt by his Royal Conſort Queen Bertha, who died ſome Years before him.

Among the many good Acts of this Prince, His Laws, made with the Advice and Conſent of his Wiſe Men, deſerve to bear a Place here. Theſe Laws are extant in Saxon in our famous MS. called the Textus Roffenſis: As they are alſo

(b) Some ſay ſhe was Daughter to Chilperick King of France, but ſhe was his Niece.

EADBALD, or Edbald, and as ſome call him Ethelbald, the Son of Ethelbert, ſucceeded his Father, as the Sixth King of Kent, A. D. 616. This Man, as ſoon as his Father was dead, married his Mother-in Law, whom I do not find any of our Writers name; renounced his Baptiſm, and declared himſelf a Heathen. After this he proceeded to diſtreſs the Biſhops; and drove Mellitus and Juſtus into France, from their Sees of London and Rocheſter. And ſuch was his Hatred to, and ill Uſage of Lawrence, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who had reproved him for his inceſtuous Marriage, and other notorious Vices; that he alſo was preparing to follow the other Biſhops into foreign Parts: But the Night before his intended Flight, Bede ſaith, that St. Peter appeared to him, and chid and whip'd him ſeverely for his Cowardice. On which he went to the King, told him the Viſion, and ſhewed him the Marks of his Stripes: Which ſtruck ſuch a Terror into Eadbald, that he immediately put away his Father's Widow, reaſſumes the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, with more Zeal than ever; and recals the Baniſhed Biſhops to their Sees. Juſtus was gladly received at Rocheſter; but Mellitus could not get Admiſſion into London; ſo he lived a Private Life, till Lawrence's Death, and then ſucceeded him in the See of Canterbury. Some ſay, on his Reconverſion, Eadbald founded a Monaſtery at Folkſtone in this County, where Eanſwithe his Daughter died a Nun; though others make her the Foundreſs of that Nunnery. He built alſo a Chapel in the Monaſtery of St. Peter and Paul in Canterbury, after called St. Auſtin's, where he was buried near his Father. The Saxon Chronicle and Spelman ſay, he reigned 24 Years, others 25.

He left Two Sons, Ermenfride and Ercombert, and a Daughter named Eorcangotha, who was a Nun in the Abbey of Brigge in France. For in thoſe Days there being but few Monaſteries built in England, many of our Noblemens Children profeſſed themſelves Religious in thoſe of France.

His Siſter Ethelburga, called Tata, who had been married to Edwine, King of the Northumbri, and baptized by Paulinus, with great Numbers of People in thoſe Parts, on her Husband's Death, and a Perſecution thereupon ariſing againſt the Chriſtians, fled with Paulinus to Eadbald for Protection; who received them and their Children very kindly; and gave her ſome Land at Limyne or Liminge, in this County; where ſhe founded a Church; and there ſhe and St. Eadberga were buried. (a)

(a) Hicks's Diſſert. Epiſtol. p. 115.

Dr. Hicks in the Place laſt cited, p. 79. ſaith there is a Charter of this King Eadbald, dated Ann. 619. which indeed is Extant in the Textus Roffenſis; and which if genuine, as ſome think it is, is probably the firſt written Charter that ever was granted in England. But I think there is more Reaſon to believe it ſpurious; as I ſhall farther ſhew below in the Life of King Wightred.

The Catalogue of Saints buried in England, and preſerved by Dr. Hicks alſo, in his Diſſertatio Epiſtolaris, ſaith, That this King Eadbald married Emma, Daughter to the King of the Franks: If ſo, ſhe was probably his laſt Wife, after the Repudiation of his Father's Widow; or elſe one he had married before his Father's Death, and who died before King Ethelbert. But the former is more likely; and that by her he had the Children mentioned above.

Bede ſaith, that during the Time of his Apoſtacy from the Chriſtian Faith, he was lunatick and diſtracted.

ERCOMBERT, ſome call him Archenbrytus, the youngeſt of Eadbald's Two Sons, ſucceeded him in the Kingdom of Kent, A. D. 640. and as ſome ſay, by Craft and Treachery. His Elder Brother Ermenred, had Two Sons, Ethelred and Ethelbriht, who were afterwards murdered by Thunnor, at the Command, as ſome ſay, of King Ecbert: And Two Daughters, Ermenburga and Ermengitha, all the Children of his Wife Oſlava. Ermenburga was called alſo Domneva; and had Four Children who were all Sainted, as Mildred, Milbury, Milgith, and Mervious: Her Husband was Merwald, Son of Penda, King of Mercia.

This King Ercombert was a very zealous Chriſtian, and was the firſt that order'd Idols to be pulled down and deſtroyed throughout his Dominions, and their Temples and Shrines to be raſed to the Earth. He alſo firſt of all, by a Law, eſtabliſhed the 40 Days Faſt of Lent.

His Wife was Sexburga, the Daughter of Anna, King of the Eaſt-Saxons; by whom he had Two Sons, Ecbert and Lothair; and as many Daughters, Ermenild and Ermengotha: The latter of which was a Nun at Bruges in Flanders. He reigned 24 Years.

ECBERT, Son of Ercombert, began to reign in Kent about A. D. 665. During his Time, Theodorus a Grecian Monk, being made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Greek and Latin Tongues, with other Liberal Arts and Sciences, began firſt to make ſome Appearance in theſe Parts; which were much promoted and encouraged by Pope Adrian, who ſent Theodore hither. King Oſwius (or Oſuvius) alſo joining with Ecbert in this Deſign, Learning began to be propagated alſo beyond the Humber, in the Northern as well as in other Parts of England. He alſo very kindly received Wilfrid Abbot of Rippon, deſigned for Archbiſhop of York, and whoſe Landing the People of Suſſex had oppoſed; and the See of Canterbury being vacant, by the Death of Deuſdedit, he appointed him to ordain Miniſters, and to do other Epiſcopal Acts, in that Dioceſe.

But theſe good and generous Actions were too much ſullied by the Murder of his Two Nephews above-mentioned, Ethelbred and Ethelbert; whom at the Inſtigation of one Thanner, a flattering Sycophant, he conſented, at laſt, to have murder'd. And afterwards, to expiate the Guilt of it, according to the Notion of Commutation for Wickedneſs in thoſe Times, and which is ſtill too much encouraged in the Popiſh Countries, he gave to Domneva, the young Prince's Siſter, a ſufficient Quantity of Land, in the Iſland of Thanet, to build a Monaſtery upon: Of which I ſhall ſay more in another Place. He gave alſo A. D. 669. to one Baſſa, Reculver in Kent, (where ever ſince King Ethelbert's Time, had been the Palace of the Kings of Kent) to build another Monaſtery there; to make a yet further Attonement for the above-mentioned barbarous Act. He died according to the Saxon Chronicle, and other good Authorities, A. D. 673. and left Two Sons, Edric and Vidred; who were both put by, to make way for his Brother Lothair.

There is a Charter extant in the Textus Roffenſis, of this King Ecbert, which is dated A. D. 678. and whereby Land is given to the Church of Rocheſter, lying at Haling, in this County. Now Ecbert had not only been dead Five Years, at the pretended Date of this Charter, which is one Mark of its being counterfeited by the Monks; but there is alſo in it mention made of one Heathbert (which ſhould be Hearbert) as another Contemporary King of Kent, who in reality lity lived not till after King Lothair's Time. And yet in another ſpurious Charter in the ſame Textus, whereby King Offa is made to give Eſſingham to the ſame Church, and which is Dated Anno 664, before Ecbert's Acceſſion to to the Throne, this Heathbert is made alſo to give his Conſent; as well as one Siguredus, who writes himſelf King of half Kent, Rex dimidiæ partis Provinciæ Cantuariorum. But moſt certain it is, that theſe uſurping Kings were not in Being at this Time, when all Things were quiet here, and King Ecbert a very flouriſhing Prince. Nor indeed had they any Share in the Government, till about the Time of King Wightred.

LOTHAIR, Brother to King Ecbert, uſurped the Throne, but ſat not quiet in it. For firſt, Ethelred King of Mercia, being provoked (as ſome ſay) by a rude Anſwer of Lothair's, invaded Kent, and laid all the Country waſt, without reſpect to Churches, or Religious Houſes; and particularly, he waſted and plundered the City of Rocheſter in a very cruel manner, driving away Biſhop Putta from the See; and forcing him to wander about, and as ſome ſay, to teach to Sing for a Livelihood; and at laſt retiring to Sexwalf, Biſhop of Mercia, was by him made Miniſter of a certain Church, and there ended his Days; and he ſo terrified Lothair, that he kept out of the way, and durſt not look him in the Face.

Edrick alſo, the late King's Son, by the Advice of the South Saxons, endeavoured to recover the Kingdom of Kent, which involved the Country in dreadful Wars and Troubles, which held near Ten Years, and at laſt Lothair was killed in Battel. Some Authors relate, that Lothair had his Son Richard into a Partnerſhip with himſelf in the Government; in order, no doubt, to ſecure the Succeſſion to him: And this exaſperated Edrick to a great Degree, as well it might. On Lothair's Defeat, and Death, Richard is ſaid to have retired to Swedeland, and there to have been elected King.

Dr. Hicks, in his Diſſertatio Epiſtolaris, mentions a Charter of this King to the Abbey of Reculver in Kent, which is dated A. D. 679: But I fear it will be found to be ſpurious, like all the reſt, before King Wightred's Time; of which more below.

His Wife was the Daughter of Sigerus, King of the Eaſt Saxons, and Siſter to King Offa, who Reigned there after him.

Lothair Reigned between Eleven and Twelve Years.

EDRICK, Son of King Ecbert, began his Reign about A. D. 686, but was in continual Wars with his Subjects; and after about Two Years, was ſlain by them; and he left the Kingdom of Kent ſo weakened and embroiled, that it became a Prey to ſeveral Uſurpers; and occaſioned Cedwalla, King of the Weſt Saxons, to attempt its Conqueſt: And accordingly he and his Brother Mollo, entred Kent with an Army, and waſted the Country both by Fire and Sword; and finding none to oppoſe them, carried away with them alſo great Quantities of Prey. But weak and mean as theſe Two Kings, Lothair and Edrick were, the People got ſome good Laws out of them, which are publiſhed above, along with thoſe of King Ethelbert; becauſe 'tis uncertain to which of theſe Kings to refer the ſeveral Parts of them; and alſo becauſe I found them following one another in the Text. Roffenſis.

After his Death ſucceeded his Brother,

WIGHTRED, who in ſome Copies is called Murthred, obtained the Kingdom of Kent about the Year 686: Some ſay he had the Approbation of the People of Kent, and the Conſent of Ina, King of the Weſt Saxons; who after Cedwalla's Death, carried on the War in Kent with ſuch Vigor, that they were forced to buy a Peace with 30,000 Marks of Gold; but Cedwalla ſeems to have been Living after this.

When he came firſt to the Crown, he found it neceſſary to admit one Suabert, Swebheard, or Webheard, as Partner with him in the Kingdom; and alſo, for a Time, to connive at the Petty Government of ſome others, who had uſurped Part of Kent. So that Bede, for ſome Time after Edrick's Death, makes the Kingdom of Kent to have been as it were ſunk, while it was divided between theſe Uſurpers at Home, and the Invaſions of ſome Foreigners.

About this Time Mollo getting ſome Forces from his Brother Cedwalla, did again invade and ravage Kent, now weakened by Quarrels, and inteſtine Wars; and in this, as he met with little or no Oppoſition, ſo he had no manner of Moderation in his Depredations. But at laſt, ſaith Malmsbury, the Kentiſh Men aſſumed their wonted Courage, and uniting together in a conſiderable Body, put the Troops of Mollo to Flight; and drove him ſo hard, that being forced to take Shelter in a Houſe, with a few Soldiers with him, they burnt it to the Ground, and Mollo and his Followers in it. Malmsbury will have Cedwalla himſelf to have been in this Expedition; but the other Hiſtorians, and the Saxon Annals, more probably relate; that being enraged at this unhappy End of his Brother's Life and Glory, he invaded Kent again, and harraſſed it with dreadful Slaughters, Burnings, and Devaſtations; and not content with this, recommended ſtill further Revenge to his Succeſſor Ina. But it doth not appear that he purſued it; and therefore if our Countrymen bought a Peace at ſo great a Price, as is abovementioned, 'tis probable it was to prevent a War from King Ina; and it ſeems to have been ſome Time after this; of which by and by.

About the Year 691, Wightred and Suabert, having got rid of the other petty Kings of Kent, ſeem to have divided the Government between them, and to have reduced the Country to a State of Peace and Quietneſs.

A. D. 694, King Ina, according to Malmsbury, made great Preparations to invade Kent, in Revenge of his Kinſman Mollo's cruel Death, which ſtill ſat heavy upon his Mind: And having actually marched into that Kingdom, put the People into a terrible Conſternation; who after having tried all manner of ways to perſuade him to deſiſt from his Deſign, found Money at laſt the moſt prevailing Argument, and then gave him the 30,000 Marks of Gold above-mentioned, on which he returned Home.

Soon after this, Suabert dying, Wightred Reigned alone in Kent, and called the famous Council of Beccancelde, or Bapchild; of which more in another Place.

He was indeed a great Friend to the Clergy, exempting all his Churches from paying Tribute, prohibiting Laymen from having any Thing to do with Eccleſiaſtical Matters; and referring all Church Preferments to the Conſent, at leaſt, if not Donation of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Vid. Chron. Saxon in An. 694; where his Speech in the Council of Beccancelde is recorded. But though he was thus careful to get written Charters for the Church, he could not himſelf write his own Name: *And taking taking Care alſo to get the Lands of Monaſteries, &c. aſcertained to them by Charters, or written Muniments. Which Thing was very probably firſt done by this King, as appears by an ancient Manuſcript in the Church of Canterbury, and from other Authorities, more fully mentioned in another Place. So that all Saxon Charters dated before this, ſeem to be of ſuſpected Credit.

He died A. D. 725, and left behind him Three Sons, Ethelbert, Eadbert, and Aldrich: His Queens Names were Werburga and Kynygytha. The Catalogue of Saints buried in England, given us by Dr. Hicks, in his Diſſertatio Epiſtolaris, ſaith he was buried juſt by Auſtin the Monk, in the South Part of the Porch of St. Mary's Church or Chapel, which was built by King Eadbald. He Reigned according to the Saxon Chronicle, Thirty Three Years, or as ſome Account, Thirty Five. Malmsbury gives him this excellent Character; That he was a ſtrict Obſerver of the Chriſtian Religion, gentle at Home, and invincible in War.

The following Laws of this Prince, as well as thoſe I have before given you, are not only of great Antiquity, and therefore very well worthy of a Place here, but they ſerve alſo to give the Reader a Taſte of the Rudeneſs and Simplicity of thoſe Times, and how far the Clergy had raiſed their Eſteem and Authority with the Lay Part of the Government.

ETHELBERT the IId, the Son of Wightred, ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of Kent, about A. D. 726, taking into Partnerſhip with him, as ſome ſay, his Brother Eadbert. And Huntingdon ſaith, that Aldric, the Third Son of Wightred, Reigned alſo in Conſort with his Two Brethren. The Saxon Annals make Eadbert alone to have been Wightred's Succeſſor, and Ethelbert to have ſucceeded Eadbert, A. D. 748. But this Kingdom was now but of little Figure in the Heptarchy; and we find as little ſaid by our Hiſtorians, of the Actions of theſe Princes.

A. D. 748, died Eadbert, one of theſe Three joint Kings, after having Reigned about Twenty Three Years; leaving his Elder Brother Ethelbert Living, and in Poſſeſſion; whom therefore ſome Writers have miſtaken for his Succeſſor. After his Brother's Death, Ethelbert took in one Ardulf, who was probably either his Son, or his Nephew, a Sharer with him in the Government. And ſome friendly Letters are extant, which theſe Princes wrote to Bonifacius Moguntinus. It appears alſo from the Evidentiæ Eccleſ. Chriſti Cantuar. in Thorn, that Ardulfus gave ſome Land at Berghamſted, in this County to Eadbert, Abbot of Reculver.

A. D. 760. Ethelbert died, (a) after having ſurvived his Brother Eadbert about Eleven Years; he was buried, as ſome write, at Reculver, others ſay in the Monaſtery of St. Peter and Paul (after St. Auſtins) in Canterbury. (a) Chron. Sax.

The Eadbert above-mentioned, I take to be him that in ſeveral Charters of our Textus Roffenſis is called Heabert.

About this Time there was alſo one Sigerard, King of a Part of Kent, if any Authority be to be given to ſeveral Grants extant in the Textus Roffenſis; in one of which he ſtiles himſelf Rex dimidiæ partis Provinciæ Cantuariorum. And I take it to be highly probable, that the Kingdom of Kent had now for a good while, been thus ſubdivided into ſeveral Governments; and that I take to be the Reaſon why we hear nothing of their Actions in our Hiſtories, as being inconſiderable with regard to the much greater Deeds of ſome other Kings of the Heptarchy.

Some Writers take Notice of Two Comets that appeared in the Reign of theſe contemporary Kings.

ALRIC

ALRIC, Aldrick, Alwick, the Third Son of King Wightred, on the Death of his Brother Ethelbert ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Kent; and as he was the laſt of the Kings of Kent that were of a Lineal Deſcent from Hengiſt, ſo his Actions appear to have been inconſiderable, and his Character obſcure. And yet Spelman and others aſſign him a long Reign of Thirty Four Years.

The Saxon Chronicle, and Thorn's Evidences of the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, mention another Cotemporary King of Kent, by the Name of Ealhmund, or Almund, A. D. 784; but whether a Partner with him, or an Uſurper of ſome part of the Kingdom, doth not appear, nor indeed is it clear that there was any ſuch Perſon. However, Thorn's Evidences of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, make him to have given Twelve Plow-Lands to Eſtred, Abbot of Reculver; and perhaps he might be the Nephew of Aldrick, and Copartner with him in the Kingdom. The Saxon Chronicle ſaith, his Father's Name was Egbert, and his Grandfather's Athulf.

Before this pretended Prince's Reign, viz. A. D. 774, Offa, King of Mercia invaded Kent, and fought a famous Battel with Aldrick at Otford, in this County, where Offa got the Day, after a very great Slaughter on both Sides. This Engagement ſome confound with a former Battel at Otford, between the Saxons and the Britons; but Hoveden, and Florence of Worceſter, do plainly enough diſtinguiſh one from the other, and the Date makes it clear.

Stow in his Chronicle, makes Aldrick to have been one of the Nine Kings which were preſent in the Second Council of Calenith, A. D. 794; but Tyrrell denies that he was there, and gives this Reaſon for it; becauſe he would not approve of the Removal of the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury to Lichfield. In which Year he died, having Reigned about Thirty Four Years. Almund is ſaid to have died before him.

With this Prince ended the right Line of the Saxon Kings of Kent, from Hengiſt; and with him the Glory of the Kingdom, which had been ſinking a good while, was quite extinguiſhed. For after him, any one that had but Aſſurance and Ambition enough, aſpired to the Sovereignty of Kent. As in particular did, ETHELBERT III. Sirnamed Pren, (the Saxon Chronicle calls him Eadberht) taking an Advantage of the Invaſion of the Kingdom, by Kenulf King of Mercia, A. D. 794. uſurped the Crown. Indeed that Victorious Prince laid almoſt all Kent deſolate: And after he had reigned here about Two or Three Years, he took Pren Priſoner, carrying him into Mercia, digging out his Eyes, and cutting off his Hands (a): So that he paid a very dear Price for his ſhort-liv'd and uſurped Sovereignty, if this Fact be true, as ſome juſtly doubt of, whether it be or not. For indeed ſome ſay that after a while he releaſed him: But the People of Kent would not receive him for their King; ſo he went and lived a miſerable Life in a private Station; and Kenulf, at their Deſire, made one Cuthred or Cuthbert his Succeſſor.

(a) Sax. Chron.

In the Textus Roffenſis, f. 134. b. There is a Charter of this ſhort-lived King Ethelbert; which by the Circumſtances of it appears to be counterfeit; for there Ethelbert writes himſelf Rex Occidentalium Saxonum ſive Cantuariorum; a Style as wrong as the Date of it, which is 790, Four Years before he uſurped the Kingdom of Kent.

CUTHRED; this Man was made King of Kent by Kenulf, and reigned obſcurely about Eight Years. He began his Reign about A. D. 797, and ended it A. D. 805. by Death.

Two of his Coins are extant in Camden's Britannia, Pref. cxxxviij.

There is a Charter in our Textus Roffenſis, f. 135. wherein Kenulf and he join in giving Lands to the Church of Rocheſter.

BALDRED, A. D. 805. ſucceeded Cuthred in the Kingdom of Kent, who after an obſcure Reign of about 18 Years, was driven out of his Kingdom by the Victorious Egbert, King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the firſt ſole Monarch among the Saxons; who ſending Ethelwulf his Son, Biſhop Ealſtan, and his Prefect Wulfeard, with a great Army into Kent, reduced that Kingdom to his Obedience, and drove Baldred acroſs the Thames, into the Northern Parts; on which the South and Eaſt-Saxons, and the People of Surrey alſo, ſubmitted themſelves to his Government, and owned his Sovereignty.

And thus ended the Kingdom of Kent properly ſo called, after having continued 366 Years, according to Spelman.

For it began, A. D. 457.
And Ended, A. D. 823.
366.

But however, Kent was ſtill in ſome Meaſure a Diſtinct Kingdom; for Ethelwulf, King Egbert's Eldeſt Son and Succeſſor, A. D. 838. reſting ſatisfied with his Paternal Kingdom of the Weſt-Saxons, made over This of Kent, and That of the Eaſt and South-Saxons, which his Father had conquered, to his Brother, or as ſome will have it, to a Son of his named Athelſtan. And this Prince had theſe Dominions for ſeveral Years, behaving himſelf with great Bravery againſt the Invading Danes (of which more hereafter) beating them at Sandwich, A. D. 851. and taking 9 of their Ships. He left Four Sons, one of which, Ethelbert, had this Province, and reigned over Kent and the Eaſt and South-Saxons. Though in a pretended Charter of Liberties granted to the Church of Rocheſter by King Egbert, and dated A. D. 920, there are manifeſt Marks of its being ſpurious; for that King died, A. D. 838. yet it is there ſaid, that he made his Son Ethelwulf King in Kent: And in ſome other Charters which I have ſeen, Ethelwulf ſtiles himſelf King of the Weſt-Saxons, and of Kent; but gueſs that they are counterfeited too. And ſo no doubt is that in the Textus Roffenſis, f. 179. b. where one Ethered (inſtead of Ethelwulf) writes himſelf King of the Weſt-Saxons, and of Kent.

By a Deed alſo printed in the Appendix to Somner's Canterbury, N. LXXII. it appears, that about this Time one Oſwelf was Prince and Captain of the Eaſtern Province of Kent.

And this is all I can collect relating to the Government of Kent, while it was a ſeparate Kingdom by it ſelf, and before it became ſwallowed up, with the other Branches of the Saxon Heptarchy, in the general Kingdom of England.

DANES in KENT.

SCARCE was Kent free from the Miſeries which long Civil Wars and inteſtine Squabbles, and the Conſequence of theſe, its being expoſed as a Prey to the Inſults of its Neighbours, before a new Source of Evil broke out, which like a Torrent, or one of its own Eyſebourns, frequently overflowed ſome Part of its Dominions; as it had before done ſeveral other Parts of England; and ceaſed not till it had at laſt overflowed the whole Nation. This was the Invaſion of the Danes, an ancient and numerous People, whom the Saxon Chronicle makes the ſame with the Northmanni or Normans; and Crantzius ſaith, were mortal Enemies to the Saxons above a Thouſand Years before Chriſt. Theſe ſeem to have come originally from the Scandia of Ptolemy, and thence to have flocked into the Cimbrica Cherſoneſus, (b) which the Angles had deſerted: Or as Venuſinus, cited by Camden, will rather have it, from the Sinus Codonus, and Codononia, which P. Mela mentions, as ſituated in theſe Parts.

There is no mention made of theſe Danes before the Time of the Emperor Juſtinian, which was about A. D. 570. But then they began to make Invaſions upon France. The Latin Writers of the Hiſtory of England give them the Name of Wiccingi, from the Saxon Wiccinga, a Pirate: For Piracy indeed was their firſt and chief Employment. And about A. D. 800, ſaith Camden, they firſt began to diſturb our Coaſts. But (c) Milton. in his Hiſtory of England ſaith, That A. D. 789, Three Daniſh Ships, the firſt that ever had been ſeen here of that Nation, landed in the Weſt of England. Theſe the King's Cuſtom-Officers, taking for foreign Merchants, went to viſit; and ordered them to give an Account of their Lading, at the King's Cuſtom-Houſe at Dorcheſter: But inſtead of that, the Danes killed the Officers and their Aſſiſtance, as an Earneſt, ſaith our Author, of their future Rapines and Slaughters. But the Daniſh Hiſtory (d) places the firſt Arrival of the Daniſh Ships at the Mouth of the Humber; and that they marched up into and ſpoiled the Country. All agree however, That on this the People gathering together in Arms, ſoon beat them back to their Ships.

(d) Pontan. Lib. 3.

Of the firſt Reaſon for theſe Daniſh Invaſions, if there were any other beſides Deſire of Gain, and better Settlements than their own, you may conſult Verſtegan, p. 158. who from Polychronicon, gives you two very particular Accounts, rather probable, perhaps, than juſt. A. D. 792. The Daniſh Pirates landed in Loudiſfarne in the North, plunder'd the Monaſtery, and murder'd the Religious. But the Year following, coming on Shoar at the Mouth of the River Don, to ſpoil another Monaſtery, were beaten by the Engliſh, had their Captain killed, flying haſtily to their Ships, were Shipwrecked in a Storm; and thoſe of them that were driven on Shoar put to the Sword. But after this, the Kingdom of the Northumbers, breaking to pieces by Civil Wars and Rebellions, and for above Thirty Years together being without any King to govern it; the Danes took Advantage of theſe Diſtractions, and frequently haraſſed the Country with Invaſions, Piracies, and Devaſtations.

And to come at length to the Affairs of Kent, to which this hath hitherto been a ſhort Introduction,

A. D. 832. Theſe Danes in the 32d Year of King Egbert's Reign, (who now having enjoyed his Conqueſts for Seven Years peaceably and quietly, and being in the height of all his Glory, had disbanded his Army) came with a numerous Fleet and invaded Kent; and Landing in the Iſle of Sheppey, plunder'd and ravaged it, and then made the like Excurſions into all the Neighbouring Parts; meeting with no manner of Oppoſition.

I meet with no further Miſchief done by theſe Pagans and Heathen Men, as the Engliſh then called them, in this County, till the Years 838, 839. But then beginning firſt in Eſſex, they came into Kent, and made great Spoil and Slaughter in Canterbury and Rocheſter, and even in London it ſelf (e). After which they turned their Rage more Weſterly; and after that, Northerly; and then coming into the Southern Parts again, they were beaten at the Mouth of the River Parret in Somerſetſhire with a great Slaughter. This Victory made them quiet for about Six Years. And yet A. D. 851, hither they came again, and Landing in Devonſhire, received a great Overthrow, by the Valour and Conduct of Ceorl, who commanded the Forces of thoſe Parts.

(e) Saxon Chron.

This Year they came alſo into Kent; for being driven by Ceorl, they retired to the Iſland of Thanet (ſome ſay Sheppey) and there Wintred. But afterwards Æthelſtan, King, or at leaſt Deputy-Governor of Kent under Ethelwulf, with Ealcher his General, gave them Battel at Sandwich, both by Sea and Land; defeating their Army, and taking Nine of their Ships, and putting the reſt to Flight. (f)

(f) Sax. Chron.

Notwithſtanding which Loſs, we read that either the ſame or the next Year, the Saxon Chronicle ſaith they came into the Mouth of the Thames, with 350 Sail of Ships: And Landing in Kent, took and pillaged Lundenburgt (i. e. Sandwich (g)) and Canterbury; and after this, ſailed up the Thames, and landed in Surrey: But there they had a great Defeat given them by King Ethelwulf and his Son Ethelbald, at Aclea now Ockley in that County. And this with the greateſt Slaughter of them, which had ever yet been made here.

(g) See Sandwich.

A. D. 853. Notwithſtanding which, theſe indefatigable Invaders came this Year again into the Iſle of Thanet in Kent; and, as appears, with a conſiderable Force. For though Earl Ealcher, Aucher, or Ealhere, with the Kentiſh Men, joined by the Poſſe of Surrey, under the Command of Hudda, attacked them here with great Bravery, and at firſt ſeemed to have the better of it; yet the Fight was ſo obſtinate on both Sides, that both our Generals were killed, and vaſt Numbers of the People ſlain and drowned, both of Danes and Engliſh: So that 'tis hard to ſay, at the End, which Side got the Victory.

The next Year, the Danes wintered in the Iſle of Sheppey, which was, ſaith the Saxon Chronicle, the firſt Time of their doing ſo. And poor King Ethelwulf, in order to obtain the Divine Aſſiſtance againſt theſe dreadful Enemies, diſcharged the Tenth Part of his Land throughout all England, from all Taxes and Tribute, and devoted it to Religious Uſes. And this Grant of Tithes, was the firſt that was ever made in England by a general Law.

A. D. 860. Theſe Pagans having been pretty quiet, for about Five or Six Years in our Ports, now landed at Southampton, and marching with their Army up into the Country took Wincheſter; but were repulſed afterwards, and beaten by the Men of that County, and thoſe of Berkſhire, under the Command of the Earls Oſcric and Ethelwulf. So that we hear nothing of them in Kent again, till,

A. D. 865. And then they came and wintered in the Iſle of Thanet, and became ſo formidable to our Countrymen, that they thought it moſt adviſeable to come to Terms with them; and accordingly agreed with them for a Sum of Money, to redeem themſelves from being plunder'd. This was agreed to by the Danes, and a Place and Time of Payment appointed. On which the honeſt Kentiſh Men thinking themſelves ſecure, and keeping no Guard, the treacherous Danes, marched out of their Camp by Night, and ſurprized and ſpoiled all Eaſt-Kent: Becauſe, as Aſſer Menevenſis obſerves, there was more to be got by Plunder, than by Peace and Truth. But this barbarous Perfidiouſneſs, ſome ſay, the Kentiſh Men ſo reſented, that they aſſumed Courage, and got Strength enough to beat back the Danes to their Ships; though of this the Saxon Chronicle ſaith nothing. However, either their being beaten, or their pillaging the Country, ſo that no more was to be got, kept Kent quiet from their Incurſions after this for about Twenty Years: During which Time they exerciſed all manner of Cruelties, Barbarities, and Perfidies, in the Northern, and Weſtern, and Midland Parts of the Realm. But the Storm now drew this Way again. For,

A. D. 885. The Danes appeared in our Seas with a mighty Fleet, which they divided into Two Parts, or Squadrons. One went towards the Eaſt, and the other came up the Medway to Rocheſter (b), which City they ſtraitly beſieged, caſting up a Mount againſt it, (which perhaps was at Bully-Hill) in order to get over the Walls, and to deſtroy its Works. But the Citizens made a very brave Defence, and held out till King Alfred came and raiſed the Siege, and drove the Danes back to their Ships, and made them leave, for haſte, all their Horſes behind them. And after this, the King getting a Fleet ready in this County, fell upon Part of the Enemies Fleet, routed them, and took Sixteen Ships: But in their Return home with their Spoil, they had the Ill Luck to encounter with a large Squadron of Danes, and were worſted.

(b) Saxon Chron.

A. D. 893. A great Army of theſe Danes which had been ravaging in France, marched to Bullen, and there embarking both Horſe and Foot, ſailed with 250 Ships into the Mouth of the Limen, or the River Rother in this County (i), and going up about Four Miles from the Havens Mouth, they attacked and took a Fort ſituated in the Fen, though but half built, and only defended by a few Country People. And thence going up as far as Apuldre, they built a Fort there for their Defence: As another Squadron of Danes of Eighty Sail, under the Command of Hæſten or Haſting, entring the Mouth of the Thames, had erected one at Milton, by Graveſend, for the ſame Purpoſe.

(i) See Limne, Romney, and Apuldre, in Book I. Part II.

King Alfred having Intelligence of this, took Oaths and Hoſtages of ſome other Parties of Danes, whom he had been attacking in the North and in Eſſex, to prevent their joining with theſe Invaders. And the next Year, getting a good Army together, he came and encamped himſelf in Kent (as I ſuppoſe) ſo between the Two Armies of the Danes, as that he was ready to attack either of them, that ſhould firſt ſtir or decamp. And he ſent out continually alſo Parties of Horſe to engage the Enemies Foragers: And marching with Part of his Forces, ſometimes one Way, and then the other, he at laſt drew them to a Battel, at a Place called Farnham, not in Surrey, as our Hiſtorians do generally ſuppoſe, but at a Place of that Name in this County, and in the Pariſh of Aylesford; and gave them ſo noble a Defeat, that the Danes fled in the utmoſt Confuſion towards the Thames, which they were forced to try to paſs without Boat or Bridge, and ſo had Abundance of their Troops drowned; the Remainder having much ado to convey over their Captain, who was mortally wounded, to Coln, than an Iſland in Eſſex.

A. D. 894.

A. D. 902. There was a Sea Engagement, as Hoveden makes it, between a great Number of the Daniſh Pirates, and ſome of our Kentiſh Men; which happened to the Diſadvantage of the former. But I gueſs it rather to have been a Land Battel; and ſince the Saxon Chronicle ſaith it was at Holm, and makes no Mention of a Sea-Fight, I rather judge that ſome Daniſh Men having landed about the Mouth of the old Rother or Limen, were attacked by the Kentiſh Men at a Place near Lidd, which to this Day is called Holmſtone; it being a Part of the Sea-Beach on which many Holm-Trees are ſtill growing.

A. D. 905. The Kentiſh Men which compoſed Part of King Edward the Elder's Army, as it returned back from purſuing the Danes, ſtaying too far behind, the Danes got in between them and the King's Troops, and gave him Battel; which proved a very ſevere one on both Sides: The Danes loſing their King, and Ethelwulf the Author of the War; and King Edward loſt Duke Sigulf and Earl Sigelm, with many other Noblemen, who all fell in the Field.

A. D. 911. King Edward provided in Kent a Hundred Sail of Ships, to encounter the Danes at Sea; and was himſelf in this County, (at Sandwich no doubt) to ſee them fitted out.

A. D. 921. The Kentiſh Men, in Conſort with thoſe of Surrey and the Eaſt-Saxons, went and beſieged Colcheſter in Eſſex, which Town the Danes had got Poſſeſſion of: And with ſome Difficulty they at laſt took it, putting all the Danes in it to the Sword, except ſome few, who eſcaped by getting over the Walls.

A. D. 981. Simeon of Durham ſaith, the Danes waſted the Iſle of Thanet; as before they had deſtroyed Southampton.

A. D. 990. The Danes ſpoiled and then burnt the Pariſh of Stone, Lambard thinks, in the Iſle of Oxney, but I rather think, near Feverſham in this County. N. B. The Saxon Chronicle places this in 993.

A. D. 991. The Danes having ſpoiled ſome Parts of Kent, Eſſex, and Suffolk, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Siricus, thought it proper to buy a Peace with a Sum of Money; ſo they had 10000 l. given them, an immenſe Sum in thoſe Days. And yet afterwards, A. D. 1002. they had another Payment of 24000 l. And then a Peace and League was made with them: During which, this Year, the King iſſued out Letters for it, at the Advice of his General Hueda; and all the Danes in England were murder'd on St. Brice's Night, Nov. 13.

A. D. 993. Unlafe the Dane, and as ſome ſay, King Swain alſo himſelf, came with 93 Ships to Sandwich, and ſpoiled all the Coaſts: And the Year following, made an unſucceſsful Attempt upon London, coming up the Thames with 94 Ships: But they made it up by pillaging all the Neighbouring Places: And ſo grievous was it, that Proviſions and a Tribute was agreed upon by the King and his Wiſe Men to be paid to them to buy a Peace. But,

A. D. 999. The Danes having firſt ſailed up the Thames, returned and came up the Medway to Rocheſter; where the Kentiſh Men met them, and withſtood them for a good while with great Bravery; but at laſt being over-powered with Numbers, they were routed and put to flight, and then the Victorious Pagans got Horſes, and ſpoiled all Weſt-Kent. The King and Council reſolved to raiſe a Fleet, to drive them out of the River, or deſtroy them: But ſuch dreadful Delays were made in doing it, either through the Ignorance or Treachery of thoſe employed in it, that the Nation was put to a very great Expence, to no Manner of Purpoſe; the Fleet not appearing till the Danes were departed.

A. D. 1006. The Danes being provoked to the laſt Degree by the general Maſſacre of them here A. D. 1002, made for ſeveral Years after great Slaughters and Depredations in many Parts of England. And this Year their Fleet came to Sandwich, ſpoiling and burning all adjacent Places, and butchering all that came in their Way. The King aſſembled an Army to oppoſe them, but they ſlipp'd ſtill out of his Way, ſo that the Army could not give them Battel: And the Country was as much devoured by the numerous Forces of the King, who did nothing, as they would have been, almoſt by thoſe of the Enemy. And the Danes going on with their wonted Cruelties and Robberies, another Sum of Money was agreed to be paid them, to make them quiet. The Danes accepted it; And the next Year it was paid them, being 30000 l. (a). But theſe great Bribes ſerved only to give theſe barbarous People Hopes to expect yet more. Which the King ſeemed to ſuſpect; and accordingly ordered a great Navy to be built and to rendezvous at Sandwich: Which accordingly was done, and it was the greateſt Fleet which had yet ever been ſeen in England. But civil Diſſentions and Deſtructions ariſing among the Noblemen, and great Miſmanagement in the whole, this Preparation all came to nothing: Some Part of the Fleet was deſtroyed by Pirates, another loſt in a Tempeſt; and the reſt, as now thought inſufficient, carried up to London. Wherefore the Danes underſtanding this,

(a) Sax. Chron.

A. D. 1009. Came with a very numerous Fleet to the Iſle of Thanet and Sandwich, under the Command of Turkyll, Heming, and Ulaf; and landing their Men, they marched to Canterbury, which they beſieged, and had taken, but that the Inhabitants and the People of Eaſt-Kent bribed them to deſiſt with a Preſent of 3000 l. So they marched to their Ships, and ſailing for the Iſle of Wight exerciſed their uſual Rapine and Barbarity upon the Coaſts of Hampſhire and Suſſex. About the End of the Year, they came into Kent again; and notwithſtanding the Money they had received to ſpare Eaſt-Kent, they wintered in the Iſle of Thanet; and ſubſiſted their Army and Navy by the Spoils of what they could get on each Side the River Thames: And during this Time they made ſeveral Attempts upon the City of London, but with ill Succeſs. The Lent following, they refitted and victualled their Ships in Kent (b). And after various Excurſions into almoſt all Parts of England, they croſſed the Thames, A. D. 1010. and marching into the Marſhes of Kent, ſpoiled and burnt every Thing they could find, according to their uſual Way.

(b) Sax. Chron.

And now what could this miſerable Nation do under theſe dreadful Calamities, but to offer them a large Part of the Realm to obtain Peace? This was done and agreed to on both Sides. But the treacherous Danes ſoon broke the Treaty. And,

A. D. 1011. They marched and beſieged Canterbury; which after 20 Days, they took by the Treachery of one Elmar, whoſe Life Archbiſhop Elphege had ſaved but a while before. And here they took the good Archbiſhop Elphege, Elfward, the King's Prefect, Godwine Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Leofwine the Abbot, Priſoners; and all the Religious, both Men and Women: And lived in the City at their Pleaſure, and as long as they thought fit, and then returned to their Ships, carrying the Archbiſhop with them; whom afterwards they barbarouſly murder'd at Greenwich: As you will find more at large in the Life of that Prelate. Florence of Worceſter ſaith, They murder'd all the Monks and Laity, except every 10th Perſon; ſo that but Four Monks and about Eight Hundred Laymen eſcaped. And both he and R. Hoveden ſay, they put abundance of their Priſoners to death by moſt cruel Torments.

A. D. 1013. King Sweyn came in Perſon to Sandwich with a great Fleet, reſolving to make a Conqueſt of England: But here he ſtaid but a little while, and then ſailed Northwards, towards the Mouths of Humber and Trent. Turkyl lay with the Engliſh Fleet in the Thames, and demanded Contributions at Greenwich for the King of England's Forces; into whoſe Service he had entred himſelf.

A. D. 1014. King Sweyn being dead, and Cnute his Son choſen in his Room by the Daniſh Fleet and Army; he was beaten, and driven by King Ethelred to his Ships, with which he ſailed to Sandwich, and there in a moſt barbarous and unheard-of Manner, out of Vexation and Revenge, cut off the Hands and Noſes of ſuch Hoſtages as had been given to his Father Sweyn, and then turned them on Shoar; and after this, ſailed back to Denmark to recruit his Army. But the next Year,

A. D. 1015. Hither (i. e. to Sandwich) he came again with a large Fleet of Ships, but tarried not, ſailing immediately round Kent to the Weſtward, and there he defeated the Engliſh, and ſubdued thoſe Parts.

A. D. 1016. King Ethelred dying, the Nobles and Citizens of London choſe Edmund (ſirnamed Ironſide) to be King in his Room. But Simeon of Durham ſaith, That many Noblemen, Biſhops, and Abbots met alſo together at Southampton, and then elected Cnute for King of England: However, this Year Cnute came with his Fleet up the Thames to London, and digging a vaſt Trench on the South Side of the Bridge, let the Thames into it, and by that means got his Ships to the Weſt Side of the Bridge, blocking up London on that Side. But King Edmund coming with an Army, and diſlodging him, he went down the Thames again with his Fleet, and ſailed into the River Medway, in order to ſecure his Navy. But King Edmund paſſing the Thames with his Army at Brentford, marched after Cnute through Surrey into Kent, encounter'd the Danes at Otford in this County, routed their Cavalry, and drove them with a great Slaughter, into the Iſle of Sheppey. He purſued them as far as Ayleſford; but was perſuaded to ſtay there, by the treacherous Council of Eadrick the Alderman; or elſe he had probably, within the Compaſs of that Day, routed their whole Army. But following them afterwards over the Thames into Eſſex, and giving them Battel again, this Traytor Eadrick went off with a great Part of the Army to the Danes, by which means King Edmund loſt the Day, and with it the Kingdom of England: For afterwards a Peace being made, Cnute and he divided the Realm between them; and Edmund dying ſoon after, Cnute remained ſole Monarch of England.

I find nothing more of the particular Tranſactions of the Danes in this County, unleſs you will think it worth taking notice of, that,

A. D. 1039. King Hardicnute landed with 60 Sail of Ships at Sandwich, and with a great Army, in order to gain the Crown of England; which he received without any Oppoſition, by the joint Conſent of both Danes and Engliſh.

Indeed once after this, viz. 1046. the Danes, under the Command of Lothen and Yrling, came with 25 Ships, and landed at Sandwich, committed great Slaughter, and carried off great Booty: They attempted the like in the Iſle of Thanet, but were gallantly beaten off by the Inhabitants.

Of the EARLS of KENT.

AS to the Civil Government of Kent, in the Time of the Ancient Britons, we know but very little. As all the Iſland in Cæſar's Time, was divided into little petty States, Cities, or Governments, ſo likewiſe was Kent. For he mentions Four Governors in this County, whom to do the greater Honour to the Roman Conqueſts, he calls Kings; viz. Cingetorix, Carvilius, Taximagalus, and Segonax. Theſe at that Time of common Danger, when Caſſibelane was made Dictator-General, or Supreme Governor of Britain, were under his Command, and appointed by him to attack Cæsar's Camp in his Second Expedition hither; as I have before obſerved. But whether Kent were equally divided between theſe Four Reguli's, or in what Proportion their Shares of the Government were to one another, we know nothing. But 'tis very likely that theſe Kind of Reguli's had the Government of Provinces committed to their Charge by ſome higher Authority; and that to theſe ſucceeded the Earls or Ealdermen afterwards among the Saxons.

was

Thus we find one Guerong to have been a Regulus or Governor in this County, under King Vortigern, when Hengiſt led his Saxons hither. In Cantiâ (ſaith Malmsbury) omnis Juſtitia ſub cujuſdam Gorongi laborabat regimine, qui tamen ſicut omnes Reguli Inſulæ Vertigerni ſubſternebantur Monarchiæ. And when Kent was at firſt given to Hengiſt, he was deſigned to hold it under King Vortigern, as his Viceroy, or Deputy; or as Ethelward calls him, Primus Conſul.

But afterwards under the Saxons, the ſubordinate Titles of Honour were Etheling, Ealderman, and Thane or Thegen. Selden (a) ſaith, Etheling was ſometimes alſo called Eorle, or Earle, (as 'tis now written) which ſignified as much as Honourable, Puiſſant, or Mighty, as Cambden tells us; and came in hither with the Danes. But in Proceſs of Time, the Word Eolderman growing out of Uſe, that of Earle ſucceeded it, which came to paſs towards the Declination of the Saxon Government here. The Eorle or Alderman's Weregild, was equal to that of a Biſhop's; and therefore he may be accounted of the ſame Rank; and as Earle was a Title given theſe Governors of Provinces, to denote their Civil Dignity and Authority, ſo with Regard to their Military Power, they were ſometimes ſtiled by the Saxons, Heretogas, Duces, or Generals. And in this larger Acceptation of the Word Earl, we may very well account as Earls of the County of Kent, Officiatory, not Hereditary, as Cambden diſtinguiſhes them,

(a) Titles of Honour, p. 603.

1. Hengiſt, the Saxon General, as firſt made ſo by King Vortigern, though afterwards he raiſed Kent into a Kingdom, and gave himſelf the Title of King thereof; and as ſuch I have before conſidered him, in my Hiſtory of the Kings of Kent.

2. Oſwulf, who about the Year 840, in Archbiſhop Ceolnoth's Time, is ſtiled Prince and Duke of the Province of Eaſt Kent.

3. Ealhere, Ealcher, Aucher, was made Duke or Earl of Kent, by King Ethelwolph, the Father of Alfred; and is Eminent in Hiſtory for engaging the Danes, A. D. 853, in the Iſle of Thanet, ſome ſay Sheppey, in Conſort with Huda, or Hudda, who commanded the Poſſe Comitatus of Surrey, and that ſo warmly, that both he and his Brother General were ſlain in the Field. Though the Year before he was ſucceſsful againſt them, in another Battel fought near Sandwich, under the Command of Ethelſtan, King Ethelwulf's Son, where he took Nine of their Ships.

4. Ceolmund, or Kelmund, who by the Saxon Chronicle is ſaid to have been made Duke or Earl of Kent by King Alfred, in order to oppoſe the Incurſions of the Danes, and to have died A. D. 897.

5. Godwine. This Man ſome of our Hiſtorians, as Lambert, &c. repreſent to be of baſe Birth, as being the Son of a Cowherd; but that is as falſe as many other Things related of him. The Saxon Chronicle, in the Year 1008, mentions one Wulnoth, a South Saxon, and calls him the Father of Earl Godwine; who being accuſed by Brihtric to the King, fled, and was conſiderable enough to get together Twenty Sail of Ships, with which in a Piratical Manner, he infeſted the Southern Coaſts. Earl Godwine was a South Saxon, and I find no Mention of Two of that Name; and the Time agreeing very well, 'tis highly probable he was the Son of this Wulnoth: Which is alſo the more probable, becauſe Godwine had himſelf a Son of this Name, Wulnoth. Sir William Dugdale ſaith the ſame, that he was of moſt Noble Extraction: For that his Father Wulnoth was the Son of Egelrick, who was Brother to the great Edric Streona, who was Earl of Mercia in the Time of King Ethelred the Unready.

They ſay alſo, that he married fraudulently the Siſter or Daughter of King Cnute; which perhaps may be true; but he deſerved ſo well of that Prince, that he might juſtly have had his Conſent to the Match, as he ſeems to have had after it was conſummated. For A. D. 1019, when Cnute went Home into Denmark to ſuppreſs the Swedes, he took Godwine as one of his Generals; and many of the Engliſh with him; and as he was preparing all Things for a Battel, Earl Godwine ſtole out of the Camp the Night before, with his Engliſh Followers, and obtain'd a Signal Victory, before Cnute heard any Thing of it. This ſhews him to have been a valiant and daring Man, and a great Lover of Glory, and by it he gained what he had in View, the Favour of his Prince.

After this I find nothing of him, till A. D. 1036, when with his Weſt Saxons, over whom he was then Governor; he vigorouſly oppoſed Harold's being made King of England, and declared for Hardicnute. And therefore 'tis a little ſtrange, that in this very Year he ſhould venture ſo much to ſerve Harold, and that Harold ſhould truſt him ſo far, as to make him his vile Inſtrument in the Murder of Prince Alfred, Brother to King Edward. Tyrrel, in his General Hiſtory of Britain, Book VI. p. 62. owns that moſt of the Manuſcript Annals differ very much about the Story: and Malmsbury gives but little Credit to it, becauſe he ſaith it was only Rumoured, and not Chronicled in his Time. The Saxon Annals, Publiſhed by the preſent Biſhop of Lincoln, ſay nothing of it; and the Hiſtorians differ very much about the Place, as well as the Time where this Tragedy was plaid: For H. Huntingdon makes Alfred to be alive at Hardicnute's Death, to have been then ſent for hither, and then murdered by Godwine. But from Lambard's Authority, I have fixed it to this Time, and placed it at Gillingham in this County, where I have related the whole Matter at Large; which is ſo very barbarous, that I would fain hope it is not true of our Earl Godwine; and the more, becauſe Living, Biſhop of Worceſter, is ſuppoſed to have adviſed Harold to it; of which both he and Godwine were accuſed by Alfric, Archbiſhop of York, before King Hardicnute, as Simeon of Durham and Brompton tell us; though Jorvalenſis ſaith he fled into Denmark, and ſtaid there Four Years. They ſay alſo, that the Biſhop was deprived, and not long after, for a Sum of Money, reſtored to his Biſhoprick. And that Godwine made his Peace, by preſenting the King with a fine Ship, or Galley, fitted out compleatly, either for War or Pleaſure, with her Stern all curiouſly Carved and Gilt; and Manned ſhe was with Eighty choice Soldiers, every one of which carried a Bracelet of Gold weighing Sixteen Ounces, upon his Arm: Theſe Marines had alſo their Helmets, Corſlets, Corſlets, and the Hilts of their Swords all Gilt; and each one had a Daniſh Battle-Ax, adorned with Silver and Gold, hung on his left Shoulder, and in his left Hand he held a Shield, whoſe Boſſes and Nails were all gilded too; and in their Right Hands they had Launces, which the Engliſh Saxons then called Tegars. But notwithſtanding all this fine expenſive Preſent, which methinks appears a little Romantick, the King, they ſay, would not pardon him, till Godwine took a Solemn Oath, that he did not adviſe the Perpetration of the barbarous Fact, but only obeyed the Commands of the King his Maſter.

The next Year Godwine was ſent with others, to chaſtiſe the City of Worceſter, whoſe Inhabitants had riſen in Rebellion, and ſlain ſome of the King's Collectors of the Tax: This was executed according to the King's Orders, with great Severity, the City burnt, and great Plunder brought away.

On King Hardicnute's Death, who died ſuddenly at a Wedding-Feaſt, in Lambeth, the People of London univerſally agreed to make Edward Etheling, afterwards called the Confeſſor, their King; on Notice of which, Edward ſent for Earl Godwine, and ſubmitted himſelf entirely to his Advice and Direction; which one would think he would hardly have done to a Man that he believed Murdered his Brother, and intended to have ſerved him ſo. Godwine, well pleaſed at this Opportunity of raiſing himſelf, aſſured him of his utmoſt Friendſhip and Aſſiſtance; but agreed with him that he ſhould Marry his Daughter, and prefer his Sons; both which the King promiſed, and performed; and was for a long Time chiefly governed by his Councils. Indeed the King married not his Daughter till about Two Years after, and appears to have had no great Mind to have Married at all; elſe he would have been eager to have obtained a Lady of ſo much Beauty, Goodneſs, and Virtue, as Editha (or Edgitha) is repreſented to have been. And Ingulfus tells us, that ſhe was alſo very Learned withal; for ſhe uſed to oppoſe him when he was a Boy, in Latin Verſes, and to diſpute with him in Logick. And if what the Writers of that Age generally agree in be true, that King Edward never enjoyed her, ſhe was alſo an Inſtance of very ſignal Continence and Chaſtity. And ſhe was ſo very good, that it was thought ſtrange by the Earl's Enemies, that ſhe ſhould come from ſuch a Stock; and therefore they had a Saying about her, viz. As a Thorn produces a Roſe, ſo Godwine begot Edgitha.

A. D. 1046. King Edward being at Sandwich with a great Fleet, News was brought him, that a Fleet of Enemies had landed Men on the Coaſt of the Eaſt Angles; on which he ſent out our Earl Godwine with a Squadron to purſue them.

A. D. 1348. The Accident of Earl Euſtace of Boloign's Quarrel at Dover happened; and how far Earl Godwine was concerned in that Affair, I have already mentioned under Dover, p. 102.

This Year alſo, the Welſh affronting Earl Godwine's Son Sweyn, by building upon his Lands, &c. he and his Sons deſigned to complain of it to the King for Redreſs. But the Welſh were too quick for him, and inſinuated to the King, that he and his Sons deſigned to betray him; which Godwine underſtanding, dared not appear, but reſolved however to ſtand on his own Defence; but to prevent a Civil War, ſome wiſe Councels interpoſed, and quieted Matters for a while. But in September following, a Witena Gemot, or Great Council being Summoned at London, a great Army was raiſed by the King, Sweyn declared Outlawed, and Godwine, and another of his Sons, (Harold) were cited to make ſpeedy Appearance there. They came and demanded Pledges for their Security, whereby they might have Ingreſs and Regreſs to and from the Council. But their Enemies and Rivals had ſo prevailed at Court, that the King ordered them to be delivered up to him; but they not ſubmitting to that, had only Five Days Time allowed them to depart the Realm, which accordingly they did; Godwine going to Earl Baldwine, and Harold into Ireland. Soon after this, the King ſent away Godwine's Daughter, though ſhe had been Crowned Queen, and ſuffered all her Lands, Money and Goods to be taken from her, committing her to the Cuſtody of his Siſter, in the Nunnery of Werewell.

Perhaps here were Faults on both Sides; in the King for hearkning too eaſily to the Accuſations of the Normans, their Enemies; and in Earl Godwine and his Sons, for carrying themſelves too highly and imperiouſly, and diſcovering too much Hatred to Strangers. And 'tis a fatal Thing to oblige a Prince too much; Godwine had made him King, and therefore was feared to be great enough to Dethrone him. But nothing can excuſe the King's Treatment of the Queen.

About Four Years after this, Godwine got a Fleet, and hovered about on the Engliſh Coaſts, which put the Court into a great Conſternation. Some Ships were fitted out at Sandwich to oppoſe them, but the Expedition came to nothing. Godwine Landed firſt in the Iſle of Wight, and there got great Spoils, and afterwards did the ſame in Portland. Harold came with Nine Ships from Ireland, and with his Brother Ledſine, landed in Somerſetſhire, and then joined his Father at the Iſle of Wight; hence they Sailed Eaſtward, and carried off all the Veſſels which they found on the Kentiſh Coaſts; as at Romney, Hythe, and Folkſtone, at Dover, and at Sandwich, and at Northmuthe, that is, The Buoy in the Nore, as 'tis now called, at Shepey and Milton; which laſt Town they burnt to the Ground, becauſe it belonged to the King. At laſt they ſailed up the Thames to London, rowed Through-Bridge with their Gallies, and ſending to the King, deſired to be reſtored to their Eſtates, of which they had been unjuſtly deprived. After ſome Time, a great Council being appointed, the Earl appeared, juſtified and cleared himſelf of all Crimes laid to his Charge; and he and his Sons were reſtored to their Eſtates and Honours, and to the King's Favour; and King Edward reſtored her Eſtate alſo, and Goods, to his Queen; and baniſhed Archbiſhop Robert, and the other Frenchmen, who had put him upon all theſe hard Uſages of Earl Godwine, and his Family.

The Year after this, viz. 1053, died this great Man, but about the Manner of his Death there are very various Reports. The Saxon Annals ſay nothing of it; but the Norman Writers, who hated him and his Family, relate, That as King Edward was keeping his Eaſter at Wincheſter, or at Windſor, and Godwine ſitting at the Table with him, looking angry upon the Earl, on ſomebody's mentioning his Brother Alfred's Name, on which Godwine looked guilty, but endeavoured to vindicate himſelf; and in ſo doing he was ſuddenly choaked with a Morſel of Meat, at the Moment when he had prayed to God it might be ſo with him, if ever he had any Hand in Prince Alfred's Death. But this ſeems a ſcandalous Figment; for moſt of our Hiſtorians agree, that he was taken ſuddenly ill as he ſate at Dinner with the King; and being removed from the Table by his Sons, and got to Bed, Bed, never recovered himſelf, but died within Four Days after, and was buried in Wincheſter Church.

He had only one Son by King Cnute's Siſter, or Daughter, who was unfortunately Drowned by riding a Horſe into the Thames. But marrying another Wife afterwards, he had by her Six Sons, who were all greatly preferred by King Edward the Confeſſor. She was Named Gytha, and Siſter to Swane, King of Denmark.

Mr. Cambden tells Two Stories of this Earl from Walter Mapes, in his Book de Nugis Curialium; which but for his Authority were hardly worth relating; the one as ſilly as the other is wicked.

Godwine, he ſaith, having ſeen the Manor of Boſeham, near Chicheſter, and liking it very well, goes ſmiling to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to whoſe See it belonged, and merrily ſaid, Give me Boſeham. The Prelate, not knowing what he meant, but taking it for ſome Jeſt, cried, I do give you Boſeham. On which, Godwine taking his Followers for Witneſſes, falls down at the Archbiſhop's Feet, and kiſſed them with a world of Thanks; and then went very fairly and took Poſſeſſion of Boſeham, and kept it.

He ſaith alſo from the ſame Authority, That there being a Nunnery at a Place called Berkley, upon the River Severn, whoſe Revenue was about 500 l. per Annum, and the Abbeſs Beautiful and Noble; Godwine, after having ſeen it, fell in Love, not with the Abbeſs, but the Revenue: In order to obtain which, he leaves a young handſome Nephew of his in the Monaſtery, who was to feign himſelf Sick till his Uncle ſhould return back thither. And his further Inſtructions to him were, that he ſhould be ſure to get the Lady Abbeſs, and all the Nuns, with Child. What Godwine ſaw in their Countenances, or their Conduct, to make him judge this feaſible, I cannot tell; but the Story ſaith it took Effect; the Nuns were many of them got with Child, but whether the Abbeſs or not, Mapes doth not ſay. However, Godwine went to the King and told him ſo; and that both ſhe and all the Nuns, had proſtituted themſelves to all Comers. On this an Inquiſition being made, a great part of it was found true; ſo that the Abbeſs and Nuns were expelled, the Monaſtery diſſolved, and the Lands begged by the Earl, and ſettled on his Wife Gueda. I know not what the Reader will judge of this, but to me it looks as like a feigned Novel, as any in Scarron.

But they never thought they could repreſent this Earl bad enough; and tell even ſilly Stories of the Biſhops to blacken him; as that on a Quarrel between him and Ethelwald, Biſhop of Shireburn, the good Prelate curſed him, and ſwore it ſhould go hard with the Earl: And ſo they ſay it did; for that Godwine had the Griping of the Guts after this as long as he lived. This is H. Knighton's choice Story.

But they went further than all this; for they made the Judgments of Heaven light even upon what was thought to have been his Eſtate in Kent; which they will have to have been all ſwallowed up by, or ſunk down into the Sea, and thereby to have formed that dangerous Shelf, or Shoal, lying off of Deal, in the Downs, and which from him hath been called the Godwin-Sands. (a) Some ſay it was once an Iſland and called Lomea, and that it was very fertile, and abounded with Paſtures, and that it was overwhelmed A. D. 1097, by an unuſual Rage and Inundation of the Sea. But notwithſtanding that Lambard alſo falls in with this Notion (b); yet Mr. Somner, in his Treatiſe of the R. Forts in Kent, denies that it was ever part of Earl Godwine's Eſtate, or any Thing elſe than what it is at preſent, a Shoal, or Shelf in the Sea. For in that accurate Survey of Kent, which is recorded in Doomſday-Book, there is no manner of Mention of any ſuch Iſland as Lomea; but he thinks it had the Name of Goodwin by Corruption from the Britiſh Gwyen, which ſignifies a ſoft and pliable, and yet tenacious Sand; and if Lomea were ever the Name of it, he thinks that came alſo from the like Original; viz. Lam in the Saxon, (whence our Lome) a Slimy or Muddy Place: And that theſe Sands were ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from many others hereabouts, as the Brakes, the White-Ditch, the Four Foots, &c. becauſe theſe conſiſt of a more Spongy, and conſequently voracious Matter than the others, which perhaps are more hard and Rocky. And Mr. Somner thinks further, that inſtead of the Goodwin-Sands being produced by an Undation of the Sea, it was rather occaſioned by the Seas leaving it; when in that terrible Inundation in King William the IId, or King Henry the Iſt's Reign, it drowned ſo great a Part of Flanders, and the Low-Countries: And as this might begin to leſſen the Depth of the Water over it, and it may be to leave it quite bare upon the Ebb; ſo the Shoalneſs of the Water might increaſe there afterwards by ſome ſubſequent Inundations into the ſame Parts; and eſpecially by that upon Zeland; which of Old conſiſting of Fifteen Iſlands, had Eight of them quite ſwallowed up by the Sea (c). And this, though indeed no more, ſeems a much more probable Account, than that of its having ever been Earl Godwine's Land, and ſwallowed up by the Sea; which is ſupported by no manner of Authority.

His Poſſeſſions in Kent, as they ſtand recorded in Domeſday-Survey, were theſe.

Leleburne, Fereburne, Seleſburne, Boltone, Herbretreton, Brunſelle, Coteham, Hore, Hancheſt, Fulcheſtane, Romenal, Eſtfort, Oſtrechame, and Boltune.

And his Son Leofwyne had in Kent the Manors of Eſſedene, Meletune, Ledeſdune, Borebam, Pecheham, Fredeneſte, Eſtedes, Sudtone, and Colinge.

6. Harold, Second Son to Earl Godwine, did very probably ſucceed him in his Government, or Earldom of Kent, as well as in many other of his great Places. And Milton in his Hiſtory expreſly ſaith he was Earl of Kent. For it appears, that when he was driven accidentally into France by a Tempeſt, as he was Fiſhing at Sea, off of his Manor of Boſeham in Suſſex; and being at firſt taken Priſoner by the Earl of Ponthica, was afterwards releaſed, and kindly treated by William Duke of Normandy. I ſay, it then appears by our Hiſtorians, that he was Governor, or Earl of Kent; for Dover Caſtle was then under his Command, which he promiſed to deliver up upon King Edward's Death, to Duke William, and thereby help to put him into the Poſſeſſion of this Kingdom, and the Crown, which he engaged by Oath to ſet upon Duke William's Head. On which Agreement, the Duke eſpouſed his Daughter to him, then too young for a compleat Marriage, and ſent him home to England with very rich Preſents.

But on King Edward's Death he was pleaſed to forget all this; and whether by King Edward's Will, or Declaration, or by the Election of all the Nobles, and Great Men, for all the Biſhops were for him, I cannot determine; but the Crown of England he got for himſelf, and held it till Duke William afterwards deprived him of it, together with his Life, in the Battel of Haſtings, and was buried in Waltham-Abbey.

He was a Prince of a Noble Preſence, and of a Great and Generous Mind; and hath not any Blot upon him, but that of breaking his Faith with Duke William; which indeed nothing can excuſe, unleſs you will ſuppoſe it extorted from him by his falling, as above, accidentally into the Power of the Duke.

He had Two Wives, the former of which died long before he was King. The other was Algi, the Widow of Griffith ap Llhewelyn, Prince of North Wales, and Siſter to Edwi and Merchar, Earls of Yorkſhire and Cheſter. He had Three Sons by his firſt Lady, who were Men grown at the Battel of Haſtings; and a Son and Two Daughters by Algythe.

When he was made King of England, 'tis highly probable that he made his Eldeſt Son,

7. Godwine II. Earl of Kent; but of this indeed there is nothing certain, becauſe there is no Mention of it in our Hiſtorians. Soon after the deciſive Battle of Haſtings, by which Duke William obtained the Crown of England; a Paper, Printed at the End of Silas Taylor's Gavelkind, relates, that Matilda, Wife to Duke William, furniſhing him with a Ship for that Expedition which was called Mora, he granted to her the County of Kent. But as this is no where elſe mentioned, we muſt take the common Account, and judge that,

8. Odo, Biſhop of Bayeux in Normandy, and Brother to King William, by the Mother's Side, was made the next Earl of Kent. He had come over with him, and aſſiſted him in his Claim to the Crown; and as the Author of the Geſta Willielmi Ducis relates, had a very excellent Character in Normandy, for his Juſtice, Wiſdom, Eloquence and Liberality. But it ſeems not to have increaſed much after he came over hither. Indeed among his Virtues, they do not reckon Chaſtity. And Ord. Vitalis owns that he was a little given to the Fleſh; he had a Baſtard named John, who was afterwards a Man of ſome Figure in the Court of King Henry the Iſt.

His Brother committed to him the Cuſtody of Dover Caſtle, then reckoned Clavis & Repagalum Regni; and in Conſort with William Fitz-Oſborn, he had the joint Command of all the Forces in England.

He was alſo a Count Palatine, and gave Laws as a King; having a Power over all other Earls and great Men in the Kingdom.

He was alſo made, and the firſt that was ſo, Juſtitiarius totius Angliæ, i. e. the chief Perſon to Adminiſter Juſtice all over England. And this Great Office, after this, continued in Being till the latter End of King Henry the IIId.

In Lent, after the King's Coronation, and on his going into Normandy, Odo, in Conſort with Fitz-Oſborn, was left Regent, or Governor of the Kingdom; and had Directions to build Caſtles in all ſuch Places as he found proper.

And now Seating himſelf in Kent, (I gueſs at Rocheſter, becauſe I find a Piece of Land by the Dean's Houſe, called Odo's Orchard) and no one daring to oppoſe him, he ſeized on divers Lordſhips belonging to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and took them into his own Poſſeſſion. On which Lanfranc complaining to the King, Judgment was given againſt the Earl, in a very ſolemn Manner, as I have already related, on the Placitum apud Pinenden, in Boxley. See Book I. Part II. Page 50. But for this he ever after mortally hated Archbiſhop Lanfranc.

And he did not only injure the Archbiſhop, but oppreſſed many other Perſons in Kent, and elſewhere; inſomuch that ſome of the Kentiſh Men ſent over to Euſtace Earl of Bullen; and aſſured him, that if he would come and beſiege Dover Caſtle, they would aſſiſt him. On this the Earl came by Night, and had nearly ſurprized the Caſtle; but the Gariſon ſallying out made a vigorous Defence, and beat Euſtace and his Men back.

A. D. 1074. He, with another Biſhop, viz. Geoffery of Conſtance, marched with an Army againſt the Earls of Norfolk and Hereford, who had then raiſed Forces againſt King William. And ſome Time after, he was ſent on the like Errand into Northumberland, where he was very cruel; and robb'd the Church of Durham of many of their rich Ornaments.

And about this Time, being encouraged by the flattering Predictions of ſome idle Soothſayers, and prompted by his own Ambition, he aimed at obtaining the Papacy: And in order to it, he ſent to Rome, and purchaſed a large and magnificent Palace there, which he furniſhed finely, and bribed the Senators into his Intereſt by great Gifts and Preſents: And was preparing to go thither, accompanied by Hugh Earl of Cheſter, and great Numbers of Soldiers.

But when King William heard of this, and conſidered how hurtful it might prove to the Nation, he haſtened out of Normandy, and meeting with Odo in the Iſle of Wight, he order'd his Guards to ſeize him: Which they ſcrupling to do, becauſe he was a Biſhop, the King laid hold of him with his own Hands, and ſaid, That he ſeized him not as a Biſhop, but as his own Earl: And accordingly he ſent him Priſoner to the Caſtle of Roan in Normandy, and there kept him confined, during all the reſt of his Reign. And thus was a glorious Deſign of buying Infallibility, and the Supreme Government of the Church, blaſted in an Inſtant!

On the Acceſſion of William Rufus to the Throne, our Earl was enlarged, and reſtored to his Government of Kent: But finding he was not Prime Miniſter, and the main Diſpoſer of all Things, he grew diſatisfied, ungratefully rebelled againſt him, and eſpouſed the Claim and Intereſt of Duke Robert. And in order to place him upon the Throne, he raiſed the People of Kent, which he could command, up in Arms, making Plunder, and burning many Towns belonging to the King, and Archbiſhop Lanfranc; the Spoil of which he carried to Rocheſter. But however not long after, he moved from thence to his Caſtle of Pevenſey, or Pemſey in Suſſex, whither he was ſoon followed by the King, after having firſt taken Tunbridge-Caſtle in his Way, which the Earl had fortified againſt him; this Caſtle he ordered to be demoliſhed; and thence marched to Pemſey-Caſtle, and beſieged Odo there ſo cloſely, that at Six Weeks End he was forced to Surrender, and to take an Oath to quit the Realm, and never to return during that Reign: As alſo to deliver Rocheſter-Caſtle to the King before his Departure. Accordingly he went to Rocheſter, accompanied by thoſe Troops of the King, to whom he was to deliver the Caſtle: But when they came there, the Gariſon, no doubt by his own Direction, ſhut them and him up all Priſoners in the Caſtle.

As ſoon as the King heard of this Trick, he immediately marched with an Army and beſieged Rocheſter, and in a ſhort Time forced both it and the Caſtle to Surrender: So that this Epiſcopal Earl was obliged once more to abjure the Kingdom, and to quit it alſo actually, and and in good Earneſt, and to retire into Normandy to Duke Robert. And here he got into ſuch great Eſteem, that Robert made him his principal Counſellor, and committed to his Charge the Government of Normandy.

After this, I don't find any Thing of him extraordinary, till the Year 1096. and then taking a Journey to Rome, and other Parts of Italy; or as ſome ſay, to accompany his Nephew Robert into the Holy Land, he died at Palermo in Sicily, and was buried in our Lady's Church there.

Some give for his Arms, Gules a Lion Rampant Argent, and over it a Croſier Or.

Before his coveting the Papacy which occaſioned his Fall, he had vaſt Poſſeſſions in many Parts of England; in this County he had 184 Lordſhips, beſides 255 others, in other Counties: As they are ſeverally reckoned up by Dugdale in his Baronage of England.

The Rocheſter Monks uſed to celebrate his Anniverſary; but in a way which ſhew'd no great Reſpect for his Memory; for they had Maſs only at the Leſſer Altar; and only Three Flags diſplayed upon the Leſſer Tower. Cuſt. Roſſenſ.

After his Death, William, Couſin to King Henry the Iſt, and Earl of Mortaign in Normandy, laid claim to this Earldom, as Heir to his Uncle Odo; but he was denied it by the King; and in Revenge thereof cauſed great Troubles in Normandy. But at length, A. D. 1106, he was taken Priſoner in Normandy, with Duke Robert, and with him alſo kept in cloſe Confinement in England. And I don't find that the King made any one Earl of Kent during his whole Reign. Nor do I read of any other Earl of this County till,

9. William de Ipre, whom King Stephen made ſo, A. D. 1141. Some make this Gentleman to have been baſe Son to Philip Earl of Ipre in Flanders; but others ſay, he was Son to Robert, Marquis of ſome Part of Picardy. A. D. 1137, he having before given great Proofs of his Valour Abroad, took the Part of King Stephen, againſt Maud the Empreſs in Normandy; and did the King ſeveral Pieces of Service afterwards in England. When that Prince was worſted, and taken Priſoner at Lincoln, the Earl, who was in the Battel with him, ſaved himſelf and his Men, by a ſeaſonable Retreat; but what he did afterwards I don't find. He was rough and cruel in his way as a Soldier: For the Abbey of Wherwelle in Hampſhire, once harbouring and protecting ſome of the Empreſs's Followers, he burnt it down to the Ground.

But he made the Church amends again afterward, by founding of Boxley Abbey in this County.

On King Stephen's Death he was forced to leave the Kingdom, as were all the Flemiſh Strangers, of which he was the Principal; ſo he retired from the World, grew blind before his Death, and died a Monk in the Abbey of Loan in Flanders, A. D. 1162. They give him for Arms, Gyrony of 10 Or and Argent, an Eſcocheon Gules, over all a Battone Siniſter.

Camden ſaith, That he fortified the Town of Rye in Suſſex, and obtained for it the Immunities and Privileges of the Ports. And there was a Tower built by him there, which preſerved his Memory, and was called Ipres Tower. But Fitz-Stephen ſaith, He was a grievous Burden to Kent. And indeed the King heaped ſo many Favours on him, and gave him ſo much Power, as very much diſguſted the Engliſh Nobility.

Henry, Son of King Henry the IId, after he was crowned King with his Father, and deſigning to raiſe, ungratefully, a Rebellion againſt him, gave the Title of Earl of Kent to,

Philip, Earl of Flanders; but it was only by way of Promiſe, and never actually performed: He was promiſed alſo along with it the Government of Dover Caſtle, and that of Rocheſter; and a Revenue of 1000 l. per Ann. The next Earl of Kent therefore was,

10. Hubert de Burgh, he was Son to the Brother of William Fitz-Aldelme, who was Steward to King Henry II. and Governor of Wexford in Ireland. He was Servant to King Richard the Iſt, as alſo to King John: And in the firſt Year of his Reign, that Prince ſent him into Portugal, to treat about a Match with the King of that Place's Daughter.

Two Years after, King John made him Chamberlain of his Houſhold, and Warden of the Marches of Wales, and Governor of Dover Caſtle. In his 4th Year he ſent him Ambaſſador to Philip King of France. In the 16th Year of King John he was made Seneſchal of Poictou; and Juſticiary of England. The ſame Year he was Sheriff of Kent and Surrey, and Governor of Canterbury Caſtle; and made alſo Conſtable of Dover Caſtle: He was alſo Sheriff of Hereford. The ſame Year he had alſo a Grant of the Lordſhip and Hundred of Hou in Kent, (which was Part of the Eſtate of Robert Bardolf, whoſe Widow he had married.)

In the 18th Year of King John he bravely defended Dover Caſtle againſt Lewis the Dauphin of France; though he had in it but a Hundred and Forty Soldiers, beſides his own Servants; and made the French draw off.

And as he ſtood firm to his Maſter King John in all his Diſtreſſes, ſo he did alſo to his Son King Henry the IIId, though but of tender Age. And when Lewis again beſieged Dover Caſtle, and would have bribed and perſuaded him to give it up, he ſtood out bravely againſt all Perſuaſion and Force, which made Lewis quit the Siege.

And ſoon after this, when Euſtace le Moyen, with Ten more Lords, came with a great Fleet to Lewis's Aid, Hubert went out with but Eight Ships, fought, beat him, took him Priſoner, and Beheaded him.

In the 4th Year of King Henry the IIId, the Earl of Pembroke dying, who was Governor of the King and Kingdom, Hubert ſucceeded in his Place. And the next Year married Margaret, the King of Scots Siſter. And having ſuppreſſed a dangerous Riot in London, was made Governor of the Caſtles of Arundel and Rocheſter. But now he began to contract the Envy and Hatred of the Barons; which the King increaſed the next Year, by creating him Earl of Kent, giving him a Grant of the Manor of Eaſtbridge in this County; as alſo of Oſpringe, in the ſame; and many others in other Places. He had after this a Grant to be Juſticiary of England for Life, and of the Revenues of the Caſtle (and Port) of Dover; and of thoſe of Canterbury and Rocheſter for the ſame Term.

In the 13th Year of King Henry the IIId, he had a Grant of 50 l. per Ann. in Lieu of his Third Penny, as Earl of Kent, to be paid by the Sheriff; and many more Grants of Lordſhips and Manors were daily made to him.

But before the End of this Year, the King aſſembling a very great Army at Portſmouth, to recover the Loſſes his Father had incurred; and when they were ready to be tranſported, not finding Veſſels enough for that Service, he attributed all the Fault to Hubert, called him old Traytor, telling him, he was bribed by France; and drawing his Sword, would have killed him, had not the Earl of Cheſter, and ſome others in-terpoſed. So precarious and uncertain are the Favours of young Princes! No doubt in this the King was ſet on by the Barons; for he immediately diſplaced him from his Office of Juſticiary.

Hubert wiſely retired, till the King ſhould be better pacified; as he appears to have been the next Year: For then he took Hubert's Advice, about an Expedition into Gaſcoign, which ſucceeded very well. And now he went on in obtaining new Grants from the King, as not knowing wiſely enough where to ſtop, nor how to moderate his Deſire of Riches and Power: For not long after this, he obtained alſo a Grant to be Juſtice of Ireland for Life; and in Caſe of Illneſs, or Abſence Abroad, to ſupply and diſcharge all his Offices by Deputies of his own appointing, with the King's Approbation.

Now he had alſo the Cuſtody of the Tower of London, of Windſor, and Odiham Caſtles; and the Wardenſhip of the Foreſt of Windſor. But in the 15th Year of King Henry the IIId, the King's Favour began to decline towards him again, and by the Advice of Stephen, Biſhop of Wincheſter, who now began to be the great Favourite at Court, he was not only diſplaced from all his great Offices, but required to give an Account of the King's Treaſure now, and in the laſt Reign: As alſo of the Crown Lands, Foreſts, Warrens, &c. and many other Things were alledged againſt him; as are eaſily found to charge a ſinking Stateſman with. They laid alſo many other terrible Things to his Charge; as you may find in Matt. Paris; and at laſt, got him made cloſe Priſoner. In this ſad and ſudden Change of the Circumſtances of this very great Man, no one had Honeſty or Courage to eſpouſe him, but the Biſhop of Dublin; who moved with Tears for him, but all in vain. For now they were grown extravagant, and even ridiculous in their Allegations againſt him. They charged him with having poiſoned the Earls of Salisbury and Pembroke, Fulcatius de Brent, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and that he got the King's Favour by Magick and Sorcery; and leſt this ſhould not be enough, the King invited every one, by a Proclamation, to come in and charge him with what they could. On this he fled to Merton Priory in Surrey, and there took Sanctuary. Whence the King ſent to fetch him, Dead or Alive, with a Rabble of near 20,000 Men: But by the Earl of Cheſter's and the Biſhop of Chicheſter's Advice, that Order was countermanded; and ſo the Mob loſt their Pleaſure of inſulting a diſcarded Favourite.

—— Calcare Cæſaris hoſtem
Dum jacet in Ripâ ——

The Archbiſhop of Dublin alſo got Leave for him to go to St. Edmund's Bury, to ſee his Lady; but the King hearing that he was lodged in a Manor-Houſe of the Biſhop of Norwich in Eſſex, was ſo angry, that he ſent Sir Godfrey Cracumb with 300 Soldiers, to fetch him thence, and bring him to the Tower; which the Wretch executed with all the Cruelty and Indignity he could; tying his Legs under a Horſe's Belly, and ſo made him ride to London.

The Biſhop of which Place hearing how they had dragged him out of the Chapel in Eſſex, where he had again taken Sanctuary, made ſad Complaints to the King, of the Violation of the Peace of his Church; and prevailed upon him to ſend him back thither again. But he ordered the Sheriff of Eſſex to let him have no Food there, and to prevent his Eſcape. The good Biſhop of Dublin goes again to the King, and moves in his Behalf; and obtained theſe Alternatives for him; That either Hubert ſhould ſubmit to perpetual Impriſonment, or abjure the Realm for ever; or elſe openly own himſelf a Traytor: But he would not comply with any of them; only he offered to quit the Kingdom for a Time, but would not ſwear never to return.

While Things were in this Flutter, the King hearing that Hubert had depoſited great Treaſures in the New Temple at London, ſent to demand it; but the Templers refuſing to deliver it, he ſent to Hubert to give Order for its Delivery: Which he did; and ſo the King had the Money. And this mollified him ſo, that he order'd Hubert to have all his Lands reſtored to him, which he held either by Grant from King John or himſelf. But ſoon after this, he was ſent Priſoner to the Caſtle of the Devizes, and all Perſons prohibited acceſs to him.

However, ſo uncertain was this King in his Humours, that in his 18th Year he releaſed him again, pardoned his Outlawry, and allowed his Heirs to enjoy his Eſtate or Lands after him.

But ſoon after this, the King began to diſtreſs him again: And the good Biſhop of Winton, thirſting after his Blood, ſollicited the King to make him Governor of the Caſtle of the Devizes, that he might have a fit Opportunity to murder him, as Matt. Paris ſaith. But after ſeveral Difficulties, he eſcaped out of Priſon, and got into Wales, among the King's Enemies. And afterwards, on a Peace made with the Welſh, he had a good Reception from the King; and was again reſtored to Favour: But long it was not, before the King quarrelled with him again; and then a long and new Roll of Crimes were alledged againſt him; which he was forced to get rid of, by delivering up Four of his Sinful Caſtles: So that appeaſed the King's Wrath for a while. And Ann. 24 King Henry the IIId, Five more delinquent Caſtles ſubmmitted themſelves to the King's Poſſeſſion, and then he was pleaſed, in his great and wonderful Goodneſs, to let him quietly enjoy the reſt of his Eſtate. And at laſt this very great Man died quietly at Banſtede in Surrey, in the 27th Year of King Henry the IIId.

He left Two Sons, John and Hubert; but John ſucceeded him not in this Earldom, as I can find.

Camden ſaith of this great Man, That he deſerved ſingularly well of this Kingdom; was an entire Lover of his Countrey, and amidſt the very Storms of Adverſity, diſcharged all thoſe Duties that it could demand from the beſt of Subjects. But he died diveſted of Honour. And this Title of Earl of Kent ſlept till the Reign of King Edward the IId; and that Prince beſtowed it upon his Younger Brother.

One Thing more of him I ſhould have mentioned above: Which was, That Fiennes being a Foreigner, was removed from Dover Caſtle, to make way for Hubert: And he not thinking it proper to have (as formerly) new Wardens of the Guard there every Month, got the Conſtitution altered by the King's Leave; and appointed a very good conſtant Guard there, of both Horſe and Foot; and allowed them Salaries of 10 l. per Month.

11. Edmund Plantagenet of Woodſtock, whom therefore we muſt account as the Eleventh Earl of Kent. He was Son to King Edward the Iſt, by Margaret his Second Wife, Eldeſt Daughter of Philip the Hardy, King of France: He was born at Woodſtock, A. D. 1301. and created Earl of Kent, 1321.

A. D. 1323. Charles the Vth, King of France ſeized the Dutchy of Gaſcoigne, under a Pretence, that Homage was not paid to him for it.

On

On which King Edward the IId, ſends this Earl of Kent into France, to compoſe and reconcile Matters. But this, together with the Queen and Prince Edward her Son their going over likewiſe, proved the Ruin of King Edward.

He was Tutor to Prince Edward his Nephew, (afterwards King Edward the IIId,) and had the Misfortune to fall very undeſervedly under the Laſh of Envy, and was afterwards Beheaded by the Malice of the Queen and her Minion Mortimer, for no other Crime, but openly profeſſing his Affection to his Brother King Edward the IId, who was depoſed: And that after he was murdered, (though then indeed Edmund knew nothing of it) he endeavoured to reſcue him out of Priſon. The Sentence againſt him ſome ſay, was the Reſult of a Parliament at Wincheſter: And he was executed there in 1329. And ſo well was he beloved and pitied, that he ſtood from One-a-Clock till Five on the Scaffold, becauſe they could not find any one that would be the Executioner; but at laſt they did procure a ſilly Wretch of the Marſhalſea, to cut off his Head.

King Edward the IIId, in his firſt Year, wrote a Letter to the Pope, to juſtify his putting this Earl to Death; and in it charges him with very grievous Crimes; alledging alſo, that he was condemned to die by the concurrent Sentence of both Lords and Commons. Rymer's Fœdera, Tom. 4. p. 422.

But Judge Hale in his Hiſtory of the Common Law of England ſhews, p. 40, that this could not be true: For after the Earl was taken at Pomfret, the King and divers Lords proceeded to give Sentence againſt him, as in a kind of Court Military. And Two Years after, the Judgment was reverſed in Parliament.

He married Margaret, Daughter of John Lord Wake, by whom he had Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Kent after him; and John, who after his Brother's Death, ſucceeded him in the ſame Honour.

12. Edmund Plantagenet, Son of the late Earl, was reſtored to this Dignity of his Father by Parliament, in the 5th Year of King Edward the IIId, and died the Year after without Iſſue.

13. John, Son of Edmund Plantagenet, ſucceeded his Brother in this Earldom, and died without Iſſue, A. D. 1335.

His Siſter and Heir Joan, was called for her great Beauty, the Fair Maid of Kent; and was married firſt to William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury; next to Sir Thomas Holland, and laſtly to Edward the Black Prince.

14. Sir Thomas Holland, was in Right of his Lady called the Fair Maid of Kent, created Earl of Kent by King Edward the IIId. He was one of the firſt Knights of the Garter, and Founders of the Order; he died in the Year 1360.

His Widow was after married to Edward Prince of Wales.

15. Thomas Holland, Eldeſt Son to the laſt Earl, ſucceeded his Father in the Earldom of Kent.

A. D. 1380. He was made Marſhal of England; and afterwards Conſtable of the Tower of London: And by King Richard the IId was made Duke of Surrey. He was one of thoſe that appealed Thomas of Woodſtock, Duke of Glouceſter, of High Treaſon: For which in the Firſt Year of King Henry the IVth, he was diveſted in Parliament of all his Honours and Dignities; which made him conſpire againſt that Prince, and contrive to re-eſtabliſh King Richard the IId, who was then Living. But he was worſted at Cirencester, and Beheaded by the Commons, A. D. 1400. By which means his Eſtate became forfeited to the Crown; but on the Petition of his Lady, who was Joan, Daughter to the Earl of Stafford, in the 5th Year of Henry the IVth, ſhe got her Jointure, and 300 Marks over and above: And then ſhe releaſed to her Brother Edmund Earl of Kent all her Dower.

16. Edmund his Brother ſucceeded him in this Honour; and was beſides made Lord High Admiral by King Henry the IVth. He was alſo Knight of the Garter; but was unfortunately killed by a Stone at the Siege of Briens, a ſmall Town in Little-Britain in France, whither he purſued ſome Pirates, who had long infeſted the Coaſts of England.

A. D. 1408, He married Lucy ſecond Daughter of Barnabas, Viſcount Millan, and had with her 100,000 Ducats, a great Fortune in thoſe Days; but had no Iſſue by her.

So this Title lay in the Crown till,

17. William Nevil was, Ann. 1461, created Earl of Kent. He was alſo Knight of the Garter, and High-Admiral: He married Joan, Daughter of Thomas Lord Falconbridge; but had no Iſſue-Male by her. So that this Dignity died with him.

He commanded the Van in the Seventh Battel between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter, fought near Caxton in Yorkſhire, and being a valiant and experienced Officer, carried the Fortune of the Day, by his Valour and Conduct, againſt poor King Henry the VIth. For which Service he was thus promoted by King Edward the IVth.

18. Edmund Grey, Son of John Grey of Barwell in Leiceſterſhire, and Grandſon of Reginald, was Lord Grey of Ruthyn; and taking Part with King Edward the IVth againſt King Henry the VIth, was by him made (in 3. E. 4.) Lord Treaſurer, and within Two Years after Earl of Kent.

He married Katherine Daughter of Henry Piercy, Earl of Northumberland, and by her had Four Sons and Two Daughters. The Eldeſt Son Anthony died unmarried in the Life of his Father. But,

19. George the next Brother, was one of the principal Men in their Army, which was ſent into France to aſſiſt Maximilian the Emperor in the 7th Year of Henry the VIIth. In the 12th of that King's Reign he was the Chief among thoſe Engliſh Noblemen, who appeared againſt the Corniſh Rebels; and it was owing in a great meaſure to his Conduct and Valour, that they were routed on Blackheath in Kent.

20. His Son Richard died without Iſſue. Whence the Title of Earl of Kent deſcended to his Brother,

21. Sir Henry Grey of Wreſt; but he declined to take the Title upon him, becauſe he had but a ſmall Eſtate; as did alſo his Son,

22. Henry Grey, who left Three Sons. The Eldeſt of which,

23. Reginald, A. D. 1571, re-aſſumed the Title of Earl of Kent, having recovered and ſaved a good Eſtate by his Frugality. He married Catherine, Dutcheſs Dowager of Suffolk, and Daughter to Richard Bartu, Eſq; but died without Iſſue. Wherefore,

24. Sir

24. Sir Henry Grey his Brother ſucceeded him. He was one of thoſe Peers, that ſat in Judgment upon Mary Queen of Scots. He married Mary, Daughter of Sir George Cotton of Cheſhire; but died without any Iſſue. Wherefore he was ſucceeded by,

25. Charles his Brother, who married Suſanna Daughter to Sir Richard Cotton of Hantſhire. He died in 1625.

26. Henry, Son and Heir to Charles, ſucceeded him in the Honour; and married Elizabeth, Daughter of Gilbert Lord Talbot of Shrewsbury. But died without Iſſue. Wherefore,

27. Anthony Grey, Rector of Burbache in Leiceſterſhire, A. D. 1639. ſucceeded to the Earldom of Kent, as being Son of George, and Grandſon of Anthony Grey of Branſpeth, Third Son of George Earl of Kent. He married Magdalen, Daughter of Sir William Purefoy of Warwickſhire, and by her had Five Sons and Five Daughters. The Eldeſt of which Sons,

28. Henry, Succeeded his Father in this Earldom, and married Mary Daughter of Sir William Courteene: And was ſucceeded in the Honour by his Second Son,

29. Anthony, who married Mary, only Daughter and Heir of John Lord Lucas of Crudwell in Wiltſhire: She was created a Baroneſs. The Son and Heir of whom is,

30. Henry, now Duke of Kent, he was created Marquis of Kent, A. D. 1706. and Duke of Kent in 1710. and made Knight of the Garter in 1712.

SHERIFFS of KENT.

THE word Sheriff comes from the Saxon Sciregereſa; and by Contraction, as in the Laws of King Edward, greve.

(a) Titles of Honour.

The Office was probably as ancient as King Alfred; and might take its Riſe from his dividing England into Shires. And therefore Polydore Virgil is much miſtaken in making it to have begun ſince the Conqueſt. For Selden ſhews, (a) by the Subſcriptions to King Edred's Charter to the Abbey of Crowland, where is found this Expreſſion, Ego Aſer Vicecomes, &c. That this Name and Office was in uſe in the Saxons Time.

By Ethelwerd the Sheriff is called Exactor Regis, the King's Receiver: And by ſome others, Quæſtor Provinciæ; and often the King's Farmer; becauſe he received all Rents, Payments, Fines, Forfeitures, &c. due to the King in his County. Indeed from the Conqueſt to King Henry the Iſt's Time, there was but little Coin in Specie: And therefore the King's Rents were uſually paid in Proviſions: But then they began to be paid in Money; as alſo in Horſes, Hounds, and Hawks, &c. or their Values in Money.

(b) Forteſcue, c. 24. f. 53.

Before King Alfred made the Diviſion and new Regulation above-mentioned, This Officer, as ſome ſay (b), was choſen by the People in their County Courts: Others, that he was appointed by the Earldorman, and therefore was called Vice-Comes, and ſometimes Vice-Dominus: And under the Earl he ſate as Judge, in the County-Court or Sheriffs Turn.

The Sheriffs anciently, not only here, but in other Counties, held the Office ſometimes for Life, and frequently for many Years together; and they were often alſo Sheriffs of more Counties than one about the ſame Time.

And in this County, the Cornhills had once the Office of Sheriff ſo conſtantly and continually, that they were uſually called Le Sheriff, or Le Viſcount. Nay, a Widow of Reginald de Cornhill, is called Vice-Comitiſſa Cantij (c), in a Charter of Donation of Land to the Chapel of Lukedale in Littleburn; and a Manor ſituated in the Pariſh of Minſter, in the Iſle of Thanet, and belonging to the Cornhills, was on this Account called Sheriffs-Court. But afterwards a Statute was made, confining the Office of Sheriff to be held but for one Year at a Time, and not for Two or more together.

Though 'tis very probable, that there were other Sheriffs of this County before, yet the firſt whom I can find dignified with this Office, was,

1. Oſward, in the Time of King Edward the Confeſſor. He was a Saxon, and had great Poſſeſſions in this County: He had Lands at Herſt, Norton, Chart, Tunſtall, Tong, and Delce by Rocheſter. K. Will. 1.

2. Hamo. This Gentleman's Sirname no doubt was Crevequer, the firſt of that great Family who came over hither with, and was made Sheriff of this County, by King William the Conqueror. And he was by that Prince rewarded with the Lordſhips of Meroud, Blen, Lavington, Braſted, Nettleſted, Ditton, &c. in this County; as appears by Domeſday Survey. He continued Sheriff during his Life, which held till about the Middle of King Henry the Iſt's Reign; as appears by the Records (ſaith Philpot) of the Abbey of St. Auſtin; for A. D. 1110. Hugh Abbot of that Place, grants to Hamo, Sheriff of Kent, ſome Lands at Bodeſham and Smeth, that he might be a Friend to the Convent, and defend it in the King's Court againſt the Power of any Potent Baron, &c. And being made Dapifer or Steward of the Houſhold to that King, he did, about the ſame Time, reſtore the Town of Fordwich to that Abbey, which ſome-how or other he had before taken from it, and ſolemnly gave it to them for ever.

It was Robert, this Gentleman's Son, who founded the Priory of Leeds in this County, where I ſhall ſay ſomething more of this Family of the Crevequers, or de Crepito Corde, as they are often written; and whoſe Arms I have often ſeen on old Seals; on a Heart a plain Croſs, ſometimes couped, and ſometimes voided. K. Hen. 1.

3. William de Aynsford, ſucceeded Hamo de Crevequer, and continued Sheriff all King Henry the Iſt's Reign. The Name continued in Kent till about King Edward the Iſt's Time. One of this Family was Sheriff of London. K. Steph.

4. Norman Fitz-Dering was Sheriff under King Stephen: A Writ from Queen Maud being directed to him as ſuch, extant in Philpot's Villare Cantianum; whereby ſhe grants Land to Feverſham Abbey. And he and his Brother Godred Fitz-Dering are Witneſſes to a Deed of their Brother Osbert de Morinis, (who was ſo called becauſe he was a Flemming; though this Family came in with the Conqueror, and are the Original of the Preſent Derings in this County), wherein he gives Six Acres of Land in Thanet to St. Auſtin's Abbey. This Norman Fitz-Dering had Land at Aſhford, Eaſt-Farleigh, Loſe, Birckholt, and Bedeſham in Kent. Arms, Or, a Saltier Sable.

(c) And there have been ſeveral Inſtances, formerly, of Womens executing the Office of Sheriff. And Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſticks, have alſo ſometimes been Sheriffs of Counties.

5. Ruallo

K. Hen. 2. 5. Ruallo de Valoigns, (now Valence) was Sheriff of Kent, as appears by the Rolls of the Pipe-Office, which Philpot ſaith he did exactly follow, in the Firſt of King Henry the IId; as Mr. Madox ſhews in his Hiſtory of the Exchequer, he had been in Part of King Stephen's Reign. For that Prince ſet the County of Kent to him at 260*l. ad Penſam*, and 76*l.* 20*d. de Numero*; which Terms Mr. Lownds, in his Eſſay upon the Coin, Page 4. thus explains:

Ad Penſam, ſignifies the Ancient way of paying a Pound of Money into the Exchequer, according to the full Weight of Twelve Ounces Troy to the Pound: Whereas paying in a Pound de Numero, was only 20*s.* But in order to make this laſt way of Payment good, there was another introduced, which was called Solutio ad Scalam, and implied an Addition of Sixpence to every Pound de numero, that the King might not loſe his Weight.

This Sheriff lived ſometimes at his Seat at Repton, in Aſhford Pariſh, and ſometimes at Tremworth; he had alſo another Seat at Swerdling, in Weſt Peckham, where he ſometimes reſided. Arms, Barrey of 10 Pieces, with 7 Marlets, 3, 3, 1. But the Derings MSS. make the Arms of Valence, Or, 3 Pales nebule Gules.

K. Hen. 2. 6. Ralf Picot, was Sheriff from part of the 2d, to part of the 7th Year of King Henry the IId. part of which laſt Year was ſupplied by K. Hen. 2. 7. Adam Picot, whom ſome Catalogues do quite omit.

8. Hugh de Dover, Son of Fulbert de Dover, Lord of Chilham, was Sheriff from the 8th to the 15th Year (Dugdale (a) ſaith, from the 7th to the 13th Year) he was deſcended from that Fulbert de Dover, (whoſe Original Name was Lucy, but changed it becauſe of his Employment) to whom King William the Iſt, committed the Care of Dover Caſtle: And in order to his better providing for its Defence, as I have elſewhere ſhewed; he gave him Chilham Caſtle, the Manor of Kingſtone, &c. and this Gentleman reſided ſometimes at Chilham Caſtle, and ſometimes at Kington. Arms of Lucy, 3 Pikes (Piſces Lucij) Erect.

(a) Baronage of England.

9. Gervas de Cornhill, was Sheriff from the Fifteenth to the Twenty Firſt of King Henry the IId; his Seat was Lukedale, in Littlebourn, ſaith Philpot, Page 19. which ſhews that the Family of Cornhill were here ſooner than he makes them to have been, when he ſpeaks of this Place under Littlebourn. See Philpot, Page 225. and Page 187 of this Hiſtory. (b) With this Gentleman was joined,

10. Robert Fitz-Bernard, in the 21ſt of King Henry the IId, and he exerciſed the Office by himſelf afterward, till the 30th of this King's Reign.

His Seat was at Kingſdown, near Farningham, in Weſt Kent, where the Family flouriſhed under the Title of Barons: See Page 169. Some Accounts now bring in one

11. Arnoldus, who Philpot ſaith was Sheriff in the 22d of King Henry the IId, but then he muſt either be ſo in Conjunction with Fitz-Bernard; or which is more likely, his Deputy, or Under-Sheriff.

(b) This Man ſaid he would have cut off Becket's Head, if he could have caught him; as the Writers of his Life tell us.

12. William Fitz-Neal, according to Philpot's Liſt, was Sheriff in the 30th of King Henry the IId, and William Fitz-Philip was joined with him; but where the Reſidence of either was, I can't find.

But in Kilburn's Liſt, William, Son of Nigel of Monville, is ſaid to be Sheriff this Year. Perhaps 'tis a Miſtake in Copying for William Fitz, or Son of Neal.

13. Allan de Valoigns, was Sheriff from the 30th to the End of King Henry the IId; his Reſidence, according to that of his Anceſtors, was ſometimes at Repton in Aſhford, and at others at Swerdling in Petham.

14. Henry de Cornhill, Son of Gervas the Ninth Sheriff, held this Office in the Firſt, Second, and Third Years of King Richard the Iſt, he reſided at Lukedale in Littleburn, as his Father did. K. Rich. 1

15. Reginald de Cornhil. This Gentleman was Sheriff from the Third, to the End of King Richard the Iſt's Reign, and all that of King John; ſaith Philpot. But Kilburn's Liſt mentions one William of St. Mardul to be Sheriff the 6th, and Walter, Son of Derman, in the 7th Year of King Richard the Iſt. I judge theſe to have been either joined with him, or rather Aſſiſtants or Under-Sheriffs to him in thoſe Years; as was John, Son of Unam, of Selling, mentioned alſo in Kilburn's Liſt, to be Sheriff in the 12th of King John; and he continued ſo all the Remainder of King John's Reign. For this Reginald was certainly Sheriff ſo long, that his Seat in Minſter in Thanet, was called, as I have before obſerved, Sheriffs-Court. K. John.

This Gentleman ventured to raiſe his Poſſe Comitatûs againſt the Monks of St. Auſtins, who had made forcible Entry into Feverſham Church, and there kept the like Poſſeſſion, againſt a Clerk perſecuted by King John; but our brave Sheriff at laſt pulled them out by the Head and Shoulders, though not without wounding and hurting ſeveral of them.

Mr. Lambard makes Matt. de Clere, who was Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, A. D. 1191, to have been then alſo Sheriff of Kent, and conſequently to have given his Aſſiſtance as ſuch to Longchamp, Biſhop of Ely, (whoſe Siſter he had married) in ſurprizing Godfrey, Archbiſhop of York, at Dover, as I have before related, Page 102. But as I don't find his Name in any Liſt, ſo 'tis probable Lambard only judged him ſuch, by the Help he afforded Longchamp in his wicked Deſign.

16. Hubert de Burgh, of whom I have ſpoken ſo largely already, as Earl of Kent, was alſo Sheriff of this County, from the End of the laſt Year of King John, to the End of the 17th Year of King Richard the IIId. From the 1ſt to the 7th Year of his Shrievalty, one Hugh de Windſor, who had an Eſtate about Wereborne in this County, was his Under-Sheriff; as was Roger Gimeſtone, from the 7th to the 11th Year; and afterwards William Brito was his Aſſiſtant till the End of his Office. K. Hen. 3.

Arms Azure, Three Flower de Lis Argent.

This very great Man was Sheriff alſo of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Lincolnſhire, at the ſame Time that he was ſo of Kent; which, as we have taken Notice of before, was then no unuſual Thing.

17. Bertram de Criol, Lord of Weſtenhanger, was Sheriff from the 16th to the 24th Year of King Henry the IIId. K. Hen. 3.

18. Hum-

18. Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Eſſex, from the 24th to the 26th of King Henry the IIId, exerciſed the Office of Sheriff of Kent. He was then Lord of the Manor of Bilſington.

19. Peter de Sabaudia, and Earl of Savoy, was Sheriff of Kent in the 26th of King Henry the IIId. He was Uncle by the Mother's Side to Queen Eleanor, Wife of King Henry the IIId. He was alſo Lord Warden of the Ports, and lived at the Savoy Houſe in the Strand, London.

Bertram de Criol was, as ſome ſay, joined with him, but rather acted as his Deputy, in the Execution of the Office.

Though Criol himſelf, was a Perſon of great Note and Eſtate, he married Eleanor, one of the Daughters and Coheirs of Hamon de Crevequer, Lord of Leeds-Caſtle; and by his Wife Matilda, who was Daughter of William de Averanches, (or Everings) as the Name was written afterwards, who was Lord of Folkſtone. By this Lady he had a vaſt Eſtate, and was called The Great Lord of Kent. This Gentleman,

20. Bertram de Criol, was again Sheriff, according to Philpot's and Kilburn's Liſts, in the 27th Year of Henry the IIId. and held it to the End of the 32d Year. The Firſt Year of his Office, ſome make John de Cobeham his Partner. But Dugdale in his Baronage ſaith, Criol was Sheriff from the latter half of the 16th, to the End of the 32d Year of this King; and he takes no Notice of either Bohan, Savoy, or Cobham.

Arms; Or, Two Chevrons, and a Canton gules.

21. Reginald de Cobham, Son of Henry, was Sheriff from the beginning of the 33d, to the End of the 40th Year of this King, alone: And the next Year Walter de Berſtede was joined with him. Arms, Argent, a Chevron between 3 Ravens Sable.

The Hiſtory of this Rebellion of Cade's, being begun and principally carried on in this County, will very properly come in here.

CADE's Rebellion.

A. D. 1450. THE Favourers of the Intereſt of the Duke of York, raiſed a Commotion in Kent, by ſetting up a bold Fellow of this County, one Jack Cade, to perſonate Sir John Mortimer, Couſin to the Duke of York. This Fellow, (who ſome ſay was originally an Iriſhman) had formerly been a Servant to one Dagre of Suſſex: And had the Luck to hold it a little longer than one Thomas Thany a Fuller about Canterbury; who, in the very Year got a Rabble together in thoſe Parts, in order to raiſe a Rebellion; but the Council hearing of it, before they attempted any Thing, order'd this their Leader, whom the Mob called Captain Blewbeard, to be ſeized and hanged: On which his Followers all diſperſed.

But Cade made himſelf much more conſiderable, and eſcaped the Gallows at laſt. The Author of King Henry the VIth's Life, in the compleat Hiſtory of England, printed in Three Vol. Fol. ſaith he was a Fellow of a Princely Stature and Mien, of a Pregnant Wit, and undaunted Boldneſs; and conſequently was a very proper Engine to work the Deſigns of the Duke of York, who on the Duke of Suffolk's Death was aſpiring after the Crown; and no doubt under-hand ſet this Fellow up to aſſume the Name of Sir John Mortimer, Brother to the Earl of March, who was beheaded in the former Reign.

His Pretence was, to reform the Abuſes of the Government, and the Publick Grievances; the uſual Baits that lure People into Rebellion. By theſe ſpecious Pretences he got great Multitudes to follow him, whom he led to Blackheath, and there encamped Jun. 1. pillaging all the Countrey round about for near a Month; and yet he aſſumed to himſelf the fine Title of Captain Mend-all. While he lay here, he ſummoned the City of London to ſend him Arms, Money, and Proviſions, threatning to kill all he could come at, if he were not obeyed. And ſo inſolent was this Pageant, that he ſent Paſſports in this Form:

By this our Writing enſealed, we grant, and will permit truly, That the Archbiſhop of London C. ſhall come in good Surety and Safeguard to our Preſence, without any Hurt of his Perſon; and ſo avoid from us again at his Pleaſure, with all other Perſons aſſigned at his Dominination with him coming in likewiſe. The Commandment of the Captain of Kent ſent unto the Archbiſhop abovesaid for your Inſtruction: Firſt, Ye ſhall charge all Lombards and Strangers be- ing Merchants, Genoese, Venetians, Florentines, and others, this Day to draw them together; and to ordain for us the Captain, 12 Harnesses compleat of the best Fashion, 24 Brigandines, 12 Battel-Axes, 12 Glaves, 6 Horses with Saddles and Bridles compleatly harnessed, and a 1000 Marks of ready Money. And if this our Commandment be not observed and done, we shall have the Heads of as many as we can get of them.

Within this Time the King and Council sent a Message to them, to know their Reasons why they assembled after such a tumultuous Manner: To which Captain Jack took upon him to return at present this short Answer: That their Coming was for no Harm to the King or his Friends, but only to amend and reform Grievances, which the Kingdom groaned under; to chastise such of his Counsellors as oppressed the People; and who, though Flatterers of his Person, yet were Enemies to his Honour; and in fine, their Aim was to amend whatever was amiss, and to make the poor Commons happy. But as they promised then a longer Account; so they sent soon after Two Papers; one, A Complaint in the Name of the Commons of Kent, as the first Paper was entituled: Wherein they said, It was reported, that Kent was to be destroyed, and made a Forest, in Revenge of the Duke of Suffolk's Death, in which they had no Hand: That instead of the Nobles of the Blood Royal, meaner Persons were about the King, and in chief Favour with him. That Debts from the Crown were owing to the People: That their Goods were seized under Pretence of Treason, but nothing proved. That the Collectors of the 15th Penny in Kent, were oppressed by the Expence of suing out Writs from the Exchequer, called Quorum Nomina, for the Allowance of the Barons of the Ports: And 'tis now desired, that instead of the Collectors, the Barons themselves may do it at their own Cost. That great Extortion ariseth from the Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs farming their Offices: That the said Sheriffs, &c. oppress the Poor, under Pretence of their Hunting: That they return in Names of Inquests into divers Courts, though the Persons were neither summoned nor warned. That the Officers of the Court of Dover oppress the People, beyond the Bounds of Castle-yard, all over the County. That Kent hath not free Elections in chusing Knights of the Shire; Letters have been sent from great Men to Influence their Votes. That the Knights of the Shire took Bribes to chuse the King's Collectors. And lastly, That the poor People are put to great Labour and Cost to attend the Sessions of the Peace all over the County: Therefore they desire it may be alter'd otherwise; and that Kent may be divided into Two Parts to make all Attendance easy.

The other Paper was called, forsooth, The Requests of the great Assembly in Kent: Wherein it was desired; That the King would take in all his Demesnes, and live like a King Royal. That he would remove from him all the Progeny of Suffolk: And take in the Duke of York, Exeter, Buckingham, and Norfolk, and all the Earls and Barons of the Land: That such may be punished as Traitors, who compassed the Duke of Gloucester's Death, because by their Means we lost the Duke of Exeter, the Cardinal of Winchester, the Duke of Warwick, &c. That the Green Wax, King's Bench, and other Extortions used among the Commons, may be laid down: The way of taking Wheat and other Provisions regulated; the Statute of Labourers repealed, and the Extortioners and false Traitors, Slug, Cromer, Isley, and Robert Est, brought to Justice.

These Demands the Council rejected as insolent; and advised the King to raise a Force to subdue the Rebels: On which he would have sent some Forces against them; but the Soldiers declared they would not fight against the Men of Kent, who were for amending the Commonwealth.

The Rebels also complaining much against the Lord Chamberlain Say, the King sent him to the Tower. About Two Days after, the King went in Person against them, with about 15000 good Troops; but they had Notice of their March, and retired into the Woods about Sevenoke the Night before. On which the King returned with his Forces to London, and by the Queen's Advice, sent Sir Humphrey Stafford and his Brother William after the Rebels. These Gentlemen obeyed the Orders with more Bravery than Caution; for they attacked them with great Bravery, yet they were over-powered by Numbers, and both the Staffords, and several other gallant Gentlemen were killed, and their whole little Army routed. This Victory made Cade so insolent, that he put on Sir Humphrey Stafford's Armour and marched towards London, and by the Way of Blackheath was joined with another Party of Rebels from Sussex and Surrey; where they all encamped and entrenched themselves; which the King's Army permitted them quietly to do. And now the King sent to them John Stafford Archbishop of Canterbury, and Humphrey Duke of Buckingham, to expostulate and treat with them, and to persuade them to lay down their Arms: Cade answered them calmly and cooly, but assured them with his usual Pride, that he would not disperse his Forces unless the King would personally come to him, and grant him his Demands. This frighted the poor King so, that with his Queen, he retired to Killingworth Castle in Warwickshire, leaving no other Forces in London, but just a Guard for the Tower, under the Command of the Lord Scales, and Sir Matthew Gough, a very eminent Soldier. This encouraged Cade to march immediately into Southwark, where he lodged at the White Hart Inn; Prohibiting his Forces all Murder, Rapes, and Robberies; and thereby much endearing himself to the People. The City in the mean Time were in great Consternation, and a difficult Debate was, how they should behave themselves towards him: One Alderman Horn a Fishmonger, advised raising a Force and opposing him; but the Generality being for admitting him into London, the Lord-Mayor was forced to comply with them, at the Rebels Order, to send Horn to Newgate (for they had heard of his Advice) and to open the City Gates to receive them. Whither on July the 2d, Cade marched with his Followers, and as he passed by London-Stone, he struck it with his Sword and said, Now is Mortimer Lord of London. At his first Coming into the City, he strictly ordered his Men, to abstain from all manner of Rapine and Violence; and speaking a fair Speech to the Lord-Mayor, marched back again into Southwark at Night. But the next Day he came again to the City, sent for Sir James Fiennes Lord Say, to Guildhall, and there ordered him to be arraigned before the Lord-Mayor, and several of the King's Judges: Say demanded to be tried by his Peers; but Cade thought that would take up too much Time; and therefore without more Delay, took him by Force out of the Court, carried him to the Standard in Cheapside, and there barbarously cut off his Head, and putting it on a Pole, made it be carried before him through the Streets: The Body he order'd to be drawn naked through the Town into Southwark, and there to be quarter'd. Next he took Sir James Cromer, then Sheriff of Kent, and who had married Lord Say's Daughter, out of the Fleet Prison, carrying him to Mile-End, to his Consorts, the Essex Rebels, Beheaded him there, and stuck his Head on another Pole: And as he carried these Two Heads through the Streets, he ordered those that bare them, to make them kiss one another, at the Corners and Eminent Places.

And

And having begun with Blood, he went on with Rapine and Plundring in the City; and executed ſeveral Perſons in Southwark, out of meer Whimſey, without any apparent Reaſons. Alderman Horn got his Life and Liberty for a Bribe of 500 Marks; and many others were forced to compound with Cade the ſame way; which now made them wiſh they had at firſt taken Horn's Advice; and contrive to follow it ſtill: And accordingly, when Cade was marched into Southwark, the next Night, they took Meaſures with Lord Scales and Sir Matthew Gough, to debar his Return into the City; which they executed ſo well, that they ſecured the Bridge againſt all the Efforts of the Rebels, who attacked it with great Bravery, killing a great many of the Citizens, and among the reſt the Gallant Sir Matthew Gough, and firing it in ſeveral Places: And in order to get the more Men, Cade had let looſe all the Priſoners out of the King's-Bench and Marſhalſea Priſons. But the next Day, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Biſhop of Winton, wiſely got a Pardon under the Great Seal, for as many as would lay down their Arms and go Home; and carrying it into Southwark it had ſo good an Effect, that moſt of Cade's Followers left him, and ſlunk away to their own Homes. This ſo diſpirited him, that ſending his Goods and Plunder down the River to Rocheſter, he marched back into Kent by Land; and attempted nothing but to have ſeized Queenborough Caſtle; in which miſſing his Aim, he ran away in Diſguiſe into the Woods in Suſſex. But 1000 Marks being put upon his Head, he did not hold it long there; for a Kentiſh Gentleman, one Mr. Alexander Iden, ſeeing him at Hothfield in Suſſex, attempted to take him; and on his Reſiſtance, ſlew him, and brought his Carcaſe up to London in a Cart. And thus ended this bold Impoſtor; who no doubt had, at firſt, ſome ſecret Support and Aſſiſtance, as ſeveral of his Demands to the King do plainly imply.

Soon after this, the King went down into Kent, and with great Lenity, only executed a few of the Ringleaders, and pardoned all the reſt, who were concerned in this odd Rebellion.

Sheriffs of Kent under Queen Mary.

253. Sir Robert Southwell, of Merworth, was Sheriff of Kent in the 1ſt Year of Queen Mary, and behaved himſelf very handſomely againſt Sir Thomas Wiat, and ſuch as roſe up in Rebellion with him. The Occaſion and Story of which, here follows. Q. Mary.

Sir Thomas Wyat's Rebellion in the Firſt of Queen Mary.

THE Queen's Propoſal of a Match with Philip, was very diſtaſteful to many of the Nobility, and ſo odious to the Commons, that ſome of them reſolved to oppoſe it by Arms, and confederated accordingly. Sir Peter Carew undertook to raiſe the Corniſh Men; but on the Diſcovery of the Deſign fled for France. The Duke of Suffolk undertook to raiſe the Midland Counties. Of this Conſpiracy was Sir Thomas Wiat of Kent, who hearing in that County, that a certain Lady, very dear to him, was committed to the Fleet by the Council, preſently imagined all their Plot was diſcovered, and ſo thought it beſt to notify to his Correſpondents, that he immediately deſigned to take Arms. And accordingly on Jan. 25. 1553. he, and Mr. Thomas Iſley, with others, roſe at Maidſtone, declared publickly againſt the Queen's Marriage, and ſummoned all true Engliſhmen to join with them againſt it. Next they marched to Rocheſter, where Sir George Harper joined him: They broke up the Bridge, and fortified the Eaſt-Part of the Town, and there lay expecting more to join them. They permitted all Paſſengers to paſs freely to and fro, only diſarming ſuch as they did not like, but plundered none. In the mean Time Sir Anthony Iſley, Anthony Knevet, Eſq; and his Brother, William Knevet, were raiſing Forces in Weſt Kent, which put forth the like Declarations at Aſhford, and at Milton, and in ſome other Places. Chriſtopher Roper, Eſq; and Tuck and Darell, Juſtices of the Peace, for oppoſing theſe Proceedings, were ſeized by the Rebels, and brought to Rocheſter to Wiat, where they were detained Priſoners.

Wiat wrote to Sir Robert Southwell, Sheriff of Kent then, to engage the Lord Bergavenny in his Intereſt; but both that Noble Lord, Sir Robert, and one George Clerk, aſſembled a Force againſt him; and marching to Malling, there publiſhed a Declaration againſt him, and his Cauſe. On the other Hand, Iſley, and the Knevets, proclaimed at Tunbridge the Sheriff, the Peer, and Clerk, all Traitors to the Government. In the mean Time the Queen ſent a Trumpet to Wiat, who not being ſuffered to paſs the Bridge at Rocheſter, delivered his Meſſage at the Bridge-End; which was, that all ſhould have Pardon, who would lay down their Arms in Twenty Four Hours, and depart Home.

The Lord Bergavenny, and the Sheriff, having Notice that Iſley, the Knevets, and Five Hundred Men out of the Wild, lay at Sevenoke, and deſigned next Morning to march to Wiat's Aid againſt the Duke of Norfolk, who was got to Graveſend with Five Hundred White-Coats; they marched early with about Five Hundred Gentlemen and Yeomen to Wrotham-Heath; where hearing the Enemies Drums, they purſued them to Barrow-Green, but could not get Sight of them, becauſe they left the uſual Road. But at length they came up with them, in a Place call'd Blackſole-Field, in Wrotham-Pariſh, and routed them entirely. So that Sir Henry Iſley fled to Hantſhire, and Sir George Harper with much ado got to Rocheſter to Wiat; about Sixty were taken Priſoners, and many killed; for they purſued them near Four Miles, as far as Hartley-Wood. The next Day Harper left Wiat, and went in to the Duke of Norfolk; who on Monday, January the 29th, march'd to Stroud, preparing his Canon to attack the Bridge. But juſt then he had Notice that Brett, and Five other Captains, who commanded the White-Coats, and who had dropt ſhort on the Hill, had declared for Wiat, on which the Duke and his Companies of Guards manfully march'd off and ſhifted for themſelves. Sir Thomas Wiat marched out to meet his new Friends, and there found the faithful Sir Thomas Harper amongſt them, who had only gone into the Duke to betray him, and to make the Londoners Revolt.

Soon after this, the Duke of Suffolk retires from Sbene into Leiceſterſhire, and there raiſes Forces for the Cauſe eſpouſed by Wiat; but attempting to ſeize on Coventry, was taken.

January 30. Wiat marches with Six Pieces of Canon to Beſiege Couling Caſtle, belonging to the Lord Cobham, which he did not ſtay to take; but after breaking down the Wall, and the Gate, and having ſome Diſcourſe with the Lord Cobham, marched that Night to Graveſend. The next Day he went to Dartford with his Troops, where he had a long Conference with Sir Edward Haſtings, and Sir Thomas Cornwallis, both Privy-Counſellors, who acquainted the Queen with their Pretences and Demands. Her Majeſty, alarmed at their approaching ſo near London, made a Speech to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens, in the Guild-Hall, in which ſhe excuſes her intended Marriage, and charges Wiat with other Deſigns, as of ſeizing her Perſon, coming to Rob, Plunder, &c. After this ſhe raiſes Forces immediately to oppoſe the Rebels under the Command of the Earl of Pembroke.

Wiat, with Fourteen Enſigns, comes on to Deptford-Bridge, and there ſtaid a whole Day. On Saturday following, being Four Thouſand Strong, he march'd very early to Southwark, and would have paſſed the Bridge, but found the Gate ſhut againſt him; on which he began to Entrench at the Bridge-Foot, and Planted Two Pieces of Cannon to batter the Gate. Within, the Lord Admiral Howard, with the Lord-Mayor, Sir Thomas White, cut down the Draw-Bridge, and let it fall into the Thames, and raiſed Forts with Cannon againſt the Enemy: All which Wiat having ſeen himſelf, from the Leads of a Houſe, he told his Aſſociates there was now no getting into the City that way.

By this Time the Lord Warden was got to Rocheſter with a good Force both of Horſe and Foot, and leaving the Lord Bergavenny with them, he rode to the Queen for her Commands.

In the mean while, good Guard was kept on the Bridge, ſo that Wiat could not force his way into the City, and he was diſpirited to find he had not Friends enow to invite and find him a Way in: The Troops at Rocheſter were on his Back, and he knew not well which way to turn himſelf: But February 6. in the Morning, he march'd from Southwark towards Kingſton Bridge, where he arrived about Four in the Afternoon, and found about Thirty Foot of the Bridge cut away; but he hired a Barge and got over his Men; and while they refreſhed themſelves in the Town, he got the Bridge ſo mended, that by Eleven at Night he paſſed his Ordnance and Carriages over it, and marched directly for London; where 'tis thought he hoped to have arrived before Day, to have ſurprized the Court. But ſtaying by the way for one of his great Guns, which was Diſmounted by the breaking of the Carriage, his Coming was diſcovered, and the Earl of Pembroke, with a good Force, was ready to receive him in St. James's-Fields, beſide Weſtminſter.

His Horſe were commanded by the Lord Clinton. As ſoon as Wiat's little Army came in Sight, being now not above Five Hundred, they were Canonaded by that of the Queen, but without much Damage. But however, Wiat not being able to advance in the direct Road, without manifeſt Diſadvantage, when he came to the Park-Corner, part of his Troops began to take the lower Way, which being perceived by the Queen's Horſe, they immediately charged them, cut them off from the main Body, and drove many of them towards Brandford. Some paſſed on, on the Back-Side of St. James's, towards Weſtminſter, and thence to White-Hall, but finding the Court Gates ſhut, they ſhot into the Windows, Gardens, &c. and then went forward to follow Wiat, who had made his way directly for London; but they were diſperſed at Charing-Croſs by ſome Troops which the General had ordered there to defend the Court. Wiat, as was ſaid, got by the General's Troops, and marched into London as far as the Bell-Savage-Inn on Ludgate-Hill; but finding there, much contrary to his Expectation and Hopes, the Gates ſhut, and ſtrongly guarded againſt him, he retired towards Temple-Bar, with not above Two Hundred People with him, the reſt having deſerted him, when they ſaw that none of the Citizens came in to aſſiſt him.

Here he ſtood ſtaring and muſing, till one Sir Maurice Berkley (a) riding by, perſuaded him to go to Court and yield himſelf to the Queen; which Advice he followed, and getting up behind Sir Maurice, rode to White-Hall, and offered himſelf a Priſoner. He was ſoon ſent to the Tower, and Proclamation iſſued out, forbidding any one on Pain of Death, to harbour any of Wiat's Aſſiſtants; and Twenty Pair of Gallows were ſet up in ſeveral Places of the City, (becauſe the White-Coat-Citizens had Revolted to him) on which were hanged above Fifty of the Rebels. And April the 11th following, Sir Thomas Wiat was Beheaded on Tower-Hill.

Wiat, out of hopes of a Pardon, had accuſed the Princeſs Elizabeth of being in his Conſpiracy; but he denied it ſolemnly at the Place of Execution.

Conſervators of the Peace formerly in KENT.

Theſe, Philpot ſaith, were firſt inſtituted by King Edward the IIId, and had a large Power and Authority: The Deſign of their Office was to repreſs all Inſurrections, Riots, and Breaches of the Peace, to correct and reſtrain Vagrants, to ſuppreſs Thieves and Out-Laws, &c.

Bartholomew de Burgherſt, Johannes de Iſield, 1 King E. 3.

Bartholomew de Burgherſt, John de Cobham, and John de Iſield, 3 King E. 3.

John de Cobham, and John de Iſield, 5 King E. 3.

William de Clinton, John de Cobham, John de Segrave, and Thomas de Feverſham, 6 King E. 3.

William de Clinton, John de Cobham, Galfred de Say, John de Segrave, Otho de Grandiſon, and Thomas de Feverſham, 7 King E. 3.

John de Cobham, Thomas de Aldon, John de Segrave, John de Hampton, and William de Reiculvar, 8 King E. 3.

John de Cobham, Thomas de Aldon, Thomas de Brockhall, and William de Orlanſton, 12. King E. 3.

John de Cobham, Thomas de Brockhall, Otho de Grandiſon, and William de Morant, 18 King E. 3. In which Year a Statute was made appointing Two or Three Wardens of the Peace in every County.

Galfrid de Say, William de Thorp, Otho de Grandiſon, Arnold de Savage, Stephen de Valoigns, and William de Norton, 29 King E. 3.

Galfrid de Say, William de Norton, William de Thorpe, and Thomas de Ludelow, 31 King E. 3.

Roger de Mortuomare, Earl of March, Lord Warden and Conſtable of Dover Caſtle; William de Thorpe a Judge, Radulphus de Spigurnell, William de Norton, a Judge, Stephen de Valoigns, Thomas de Lodelow, and Willielmus Warner, 32. King E. 3.

About Two Years after, a Statute was made, appointing in every County one Lord, and with him Three or Four of the moſt principal Men of the Shire, and Three or Four Perſons Learned in the Law, to act as Juſtices of the Peace: And in the Firſt Commiſſion purſuant to this Act, theſe Perſons were appointed for this Office in the County of Kent:

Sir Robert Herle, Lord-Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, John de Cobham, Roger de Northwood, Ralph de Fremingham, Thomas de Lodelow, Robert Vinter of Vinters in Boxley; John Barrey of Sevington; Thomas Hartredge, of Hartredge in Cranebrook.

In King Richard the IId's Reign the Numbers became enlarged: For in his Firſt Year all theſe were named in Commiſſion:

Edmund

Edmund Earl of Cambridge, Conſtable of Dover Caſtle; John de Cobham, Robert Belknap, a Judge; Stephen de Valoigns, William Horne, Thomas de Shardelowe, a Judge; Henry de Aſtrie or Aſtie, a Judge; William Topcliff, Nicholas Herring, Thomas Garwenton de Well, William Tiltombe, William Makenade, John Francis, Thomas Hartedge, John de Bird de Smethe.

Theſe were for the Laths of St. Auſtin, Sheringhope, Shipway, and the Seven Hundreds.

Edmund Earl of Cambridge, John Cobham, Robert Belknap, Thomas Colepeper, Henry Aſtie, John Fremingham, Jacobus de Peckham, Thomas de Shardelow, William Topclive, Nicholas Herring, and William Makenade.

Theſe were for the Laths of Aylesford, Sutton-at-Hone, and for the Lowy of Tunbridge.

After this, in the 12th and 14th Years of Richard the IId, it was prohibited by Act of Parliament, that there ſhould be above Six Juſtices of the Peace in any Commiſſion, beſides the Two Juſtices of Aſſize, and certain Lords, who were aſſigned in the Parliament it ſelf. But in Proceſs of Time the Numbers grew very great; a Liſt of which as they ſtood in the Year 1710, in Imitation of Mr. Lambard, I have here annexed, which I wiſh I could have got more perfect, as well as ſeveral others of theſe Liſts; but 'tis as exact as I could obtain it.

Of Gavelkind, its Original, Name, and Nature.

See Silas Taylor's Hiſtory of Gavelkind, Chap. 1, 2. &c.

THIS celebrated Cuſtom ſeems to have had a very early Riſe and Original; perhaps as early, all the World over, as the firſt Poſſeſſions in Lands: For as, before their Numbers obliged them to make Settlements in particular Places, the ancient Inhabitants of the Earth, were perpetually moving to and fro, to find good Paſtures for their Cattle, and Accommodations for themſelves; and as their Wealth then conſiſted in the Numbers of their Cattle and Servants; which when they found it proper, they divided and proportioned out among their Children or Relations; ſo no doubt, that was formerly the Caſe of thoſe Lands too, which, as their Numbers increaſed, they were obliged to appropriate to themſelves. For as before, in their Romadick and Rambling way, when there was Land enough to rove about on, it was uſeleſs to them without Stocks of Cattle; ſo afterwards would their Stocks be of no Benefit to them, without Partitions and Diviſions of Land to feed them upon: And therefore to prevent Rapine and Invaſion of one another, they aſcertained to each Deſcendant or Relation, his proper and proportionate Part of Land, as well as Stock.

Noah's Three Sons parted (as well as peopled) the Earth among them, and by what appears, by equal Shares; the Eldeſt Son claiming nothing on the Account of his Primogeniture. See Selden's Mare Clauſum, Lib. 1. c. 4, 8.

Indeed that this was every where a Proportion of Equality, doth not appear: And by what we find in the Law of Moſes, Deut. 21. 15, 16, and 17. there were, very early, other Proportions uſual (as a Double, &c.) for the firſt Born. But 'tis probable enough that it was generally ſo. Sir H. Spelman in his Gloſſary (and Mr. Somner) ventures to conclude ſo of the Diviſions of Land among the Sons of the ancient Germans, from theſe Words of Tacitus (a): Heredes ſucceſſoreſque ſui cuique Liberi, & nullum Teſtamentum: Si Liberi non ſunt proximus Gradus in poſſeſſione, Fratres, Patrui, Avunculi. Mr. Somner in his Treatiſe of Gavelkind, hath ſhewed it was the ancient Cuſtom in France, where 'tis called the Roturier: And therefore very probably came into Britain with thoſe ancient Gauls, who firſt Peopled it from the Continent. And the Welſh Hiſtorians make Brute to have divided Britain between his Three Sons, Lhoeger, Camber, and Albanact. The ſame Cuſtom prevailing alſo in the Lower Germany, and in Flanders, as well as in the Iſle of Jerſey and Ireland. In which laſt Countrey 'tis called Rhin-ta-loon; and is like, ſaith Taylor, to the Flemmiſh Partition, where the Daughters ſhare, as well as the Sons: And the ſame Kind of Partition, he ſhews, to have been Cuſtomary at Wareham in Dorſetſhire. And Silas Taylor in his Treatiſe of Gavelkind, ſhews from the Deſcription of Italy, written by William Thomas, and printed A. D. 1549, that this Cuſtom prevailed in that Countrey too; which no doubt was brought among them, by a Colony of the Gauls. Mr. Taylor thinks it alſo concludable, that the Cuſtom of Gavelkind Partition was in Uſe among the Ancient Britons, as long ago as Julius Cæſar's Time; becauſe he makes it Part of the Judicature of the Druids to determine, ubi de Hereditate, aut de Finibus eſt Controverſia; for he thinks there could ordinarily have been no Diſputes about the Inheritance or Boundary of Eſtates, if the Eldeſt Son had poſſeſſed all the Land. And indeed 'tis likely that this was the Caſe alſo in Britain, even as to the Regal Inheritance; elſe how come they to have ſo many Reguli, or Petty Kings among them? Of which this County of Kent had Four, when Cæſar landed in it; and he fairly attributes the Conqueſts he made here, to that Partition of our Iſland among ſo many petty Princes; for dum ſinguli pugnabant (ſaith he) univerſi ſunt victi. And 'tis plain from Dr. Powell's Additions to the Cambrian Hiſtory, about the Years 808, 810, that this Cuſtom of Partition continued among the ancient Britons or Welch, even to their Deſtruction; for by dividing their Families and Eſtates, it produced Strife and Debate, and that ended in Confuſion and Poverty. And he makes Gavel to be a Britiſh Word; of which more below. And when Roderick, called the Great, Prince of all Wales, divided his Territories amongſt his Three Sons, it is ſaid to be done according to the Cuſtom of Wales. Which Cuſtom in ſome Places, as appears by Lancarvan's Hiſtory, and by the Laws of Howel Dha, extended even to the Diviſion of Lands among Baſtards and Foſter Children. And Sir Edward Coke ſays, that the Gavelkind Partition ſo frequent in Ireland, is one Mark of the Ancient Britons. For probable enough it is, that the Romans in the Conqueſt of Britain, did not entirely alter and change the Ancient Laws and Uſages of the People: No Author aſſerts that they did. And Camden cites Dion Caſſius aſſerting, That for many Years after Cæſar's coming hither, the Britons had both their own Kings and their own Laws. Nor was it their Cuſtom to do it in other Places, as is plain in the Caſe of the Jews, to whom they allowed the Uſe of their Laws and Religious Rites; as they did alſo to ſeveral of the Grecian Commonwealths, which they brought under their Subjection; deſiring only of them to ſubmit quietly to the Roman Power, and to receive and maintain Gariſons to ſecure that Submiſſion.

In thoſe Speeches, which Tacitus, and others have given us, as made by the Britiſh Generals to their Armies, to encourage them to ſhake off the Roman Yoke, and oppoſe their Conqueſts; they don't complain of the Romans changing their Laws and Cuſtoms, but of their Arbitrary breaking in upon their Liberties and Properties; and making them, their Wives and Daughters, become Slaves to their Cruelty and Luſt.

The ſame Thing is true of the next Conquerors of the Britiſh Nation, the Saxons, Danes, and Normans; that they retained the old Laws and Uſages of the Britons to a very great Degree; though they intermingled indeed ſome of their own with them (a). But this, as to the Caſe before us, will not contradict the Notion I am advancing, of the great Antiquity of Gavelkind Partition; ſince 'tis certainly true, that that Cuſtom was in Uſe among themſelves before they came hither; and conſequently many Writers among us have ſuppoſed that they introduced it; ſome attributing it to the Saxons, and ſome to the Normans. But I think I have fairly ſhewed that it had, in the general, a much higher Riſe, and more early Original.

As to the Name of Gavelkind, there hath been great Diſpute among our Antiquaries.

Dr. Powel, as I hinted juſt now, calls it the Cuſtom and Tenure of Wales; and ſaith that Gavel is a Britiſh Term, ſignifying a Hold; and therefore the Tenure was called Gavelkind, becauſe every Son did hold ſome Portion of his Father's Lands, as his lawful Heir and Succeſſor: And Mr. Llhyd in his Archeologia Britannica gives us alſo the Word Gavaely in the Infinitive Mood in Welch for Tenere, to Hold. And therefore I think this may be very well taken as the true Original of the Name of the Cuſtom, as it ſignifies a Tenure by the Partition of the Lands of the Father among the Sons. And 'tis not at all unnatural, nor forced, to ſuppoſe, that the Saxons, when they came hither, might retain the Word, though they might in ſome Reſpects, and in Proceſs of Time, alter or enlarge its Signification (b).

Verſtegan, Camden, Lambard, Spelman, Doddridge, Cook, and Cowel, all give a Saxon Etymology of the Word, expreſſing much the ſame Senſe, as Dr. Powell's, viz. gife-eal-cyn, give to all Sons or Kinſmen alike; and therefore they think Gavelkind expreſſes the Nature of the Land in Point of Deſcent. And probably this was the primary Signification.

But Somner in his Hiſtory of Gavelkind, judges it not right; becauſe he finds many Inſtances of Donations of Land in Gavelkind to Monaſteries and Hoſpitals: Of its being deviſable by Will, and capable of being conveyed away from the Heirs, &c. And therefore he takes Gafol, Gaful, or Gavel, to have had, in the Saxon Language, much the ſame Senſe or Signification, as Gablum in Domeſday Book; or Gabella in Foreign Countries; viz. Vectigal, Portorium, Tributum, Exactio, or Cenſus in Latin; or in Engliſh, Tribute, Tax, Cuſtom, Duty, or Rent. So that ponere Terram ad Gablum, is to hire or let out Land to Farm, or for Rent: And Terra ad Gablum poſita, was Land ſo hired, rented, or to farm letten. Landgavel therefore, or by Tranſpoſition Gavelland, was, according to Somner, the Cenſus (a), Rent, or Service paid by the Farmer for his Lord's Land: And theſe Rents and Services were very various; and conſequently gave the Word Gavel, under this Signification, a very large Extent; of which I have found in Books, particularly in Somner's, and in old Cuſtumals and Charters, the following Inſtances; which I here annex, becauſe they will ſerve to explain alſo ſeveral other Things, in our ancient Laws and Hiſtories.

1. Gavel-Corn, which was a Rent reſerved to be paid in Corn: As is Cuſtomary to this Day, in many of our Church and College Leaſes.

2. Gavel-Erth, or Herth, was a Kind of Tillage Service, by which a Tenant held his Lands, by the Service of Plowing, Harrowing, &c. his Lord's Land, or ſuch a Number of Acres. Of this we have numerous Inſtances in our MS. called Cuſtumale Roffenſe, written about the Year 1320. ſome of which I have given you under Southfleet, and ſome other Places. This Service was in Latin called Arura, and was ſomething like the Poictovins Biaus; but differed from what Lambard calls Benerth; becauſe that came from the Saxon Bene, (whence our Boon) a Requeſt: But this was ex Gablo or Debito, a Service due; and not as the other, a Precaria, or to be done at the Prayer or Requeſt of the Lord. This Service was often, as well as moſt of the reſt were, in Proceſs of Time, compounded for in Money. This Service, at the Requeſt of the Lord, is often called Preces and Precariæ; and the Plows that did it, Rogatæ Carucæ: And here the Tenants had always a Corredy; which was not claimable when the Service was ex Debito.

3. Gavel-Rip, Meſſura in Bracton, was a Service of Reaping ſo much of the Lord's Corn; and when compounded for was called Rip-Silver: If ex prece, 'twas called Bedrip, and Benerip.

4. Gavel-Med, a Service of Mowing ſo much Graſs.

5. Gavel-Ote, ſo much Rent paid in Oats.

6. Gavel-Dung, a Service of carrying the Lord's Dung out upon his Land.

7. Gavel-Rod, the Service of making one, or ſo many Rods of Fence about the Lord's Ground. This was ſometimes called Burghard.

8. Gavel-Timber, Refter, and Board, were Services to be paid in Timber, to repair the Lord's Houſes: And were uſually chargeable on Tenants in the Weald.

(a) For in many places of the Saxon Hiſtories, is Mention made of a Domboc, or Liber Judicialis; which probably is that which Ethelbert King of Kent formed; who is ſaid by Bede, and others, to have brought the Laws of the Country into the Saxon Language: So that the Britiſh Cuſtoms and Laws only put on a new Language, with perhaps ſome few Additions; but were in Subſtance the ſame.

(b) Silas Taylor, in his Hiſtory of Gavelkind, Page 96, ſhews alſo; That Gavel was uſed in Wales, to ſignify a Tenure, containing Four Rhandirs, and each Rhandir had under it Four Tenements; according to the Ancient Diſtribution of Howel-Dha, A. D. 942.

(a) But if Gavelkind were of Saxon Original, 'tis much the preſent Germans ſhould have quite loſt the Word, as they have; calling their Partibility of Land by Name of Land-Skiftan, or Land-Schentan; i. e. Land to be Shifted, or rather Parted among the young Shoots, or Surculi, the Branches of a Family. And indeed in King Cnute's 68th Law about Partition of Lands, the Saxon Word is Geſcyftan, and no Mention of Gavel.

9. Gavel-

9. Gavel-Swine; in the Weald of Kent and Suſſex, and no doubt in other Places, was a Rent paid in Swine, for the Benefit of Pannage or Maſtage in the Lord's Woods: If redeemed by Money, it was called Swine-Penny. The uſual Time of Payment of this Rent, was at Paroc Time, as they called it; i. e. when the Lord by his Bailiff held his Paroc or Swine-Mote, to take an Account of his Tenants in the Weald.

Somner thinks the Word Paddock for a ſmall Park, is a Corruption from Paroc; and probably Park it ſelf is ſo by Contraction.

10. Gavel-Wood or Wood-Lode, and Wald-Lode, was the Service of carrying Home the Lord's Wood for him.

11. Gavel-Seſter, was a certain Quantity of Rent-Ale; this was ſometimes called Toll-Seſter: And when compounded for in Money, Toll-Seſter-Penny. Somner thinks this to be the ſame with what in King Henry I. Laws is called Oat-Gavel: But ſure that was rather the Gavel-Ote above-mentioned, in Num. 5.

12. Gavel-Werk, Werk-Gavel, Werk-gabalum, Rent-Work, was a Service of ſo much Work charged upon the Tenant; which if perſonal, was called Manuopera; but if it were only by his Carts and Carriages, then Carronera: Villains ſubject to ſuch Services, were called Gaigneurs.

13. Gavel-Noht, or Gavel-fother, was a Rent of ſo much Fodder for the Lord's Cattle: The Feudiſts call it Fodrum.

14. Malt-Gavel, 15. Hunni-Gavel, Rents paid in Malt or Honey: And whenever any of theſe or other Gavels were to be paid in Money, they were called,

16. Penny Gavels.

17. For-Gavel, Foris-Gabulum, was a Rent payable not to the Superior, but to ſome Meſne Lord, by way of a Vail, de Forgabulo.

18. Les-Gavel, Les-geld, Les-yeld, if not the ſame with the next below, ſeems to have been ſome leſſer Rent or Service to be paid or done at ſome certain Times; and ſo was diſtinguiſhed from the greater Rents, which were paid Annually, &c. But I rather think 'tis a falſe Spelling for,

19. Leaf-Gavel, Lef-Silver, Lef-geld, Lef-yeld. Which was an Acknowledgment in Money paid to the Lord, that the Tenant might have leave to plow his Land Tempore Peſſonæ; and was an uſual Rent in the Weald of Kent.

20. Bere-Gavel, perhaps Rent in Beer or Barley; or as ſometimes 'tis taken, Drinclean, Potura, Scott-Ale, was a Contribution of the Tenants for Ale, to entertain the Lord or his Bailiff, when he came to keep Courts, &c. Sometimes this is called Filt-Ale, and Fild-Ale; which ſeems a Corruption from Gild-Ale: For Gild Gavel and Scott, are often Synonimous Terms.

21. Gavil-Bred, probably the ſame with Averbred; was a Proportion of Food allowed to the baſer ſort of Tenants, ſuch as the Cuſtumarij, Cottarij, Villani, the Gaigneurs above-mentioned, towards their Corredy, when they were at work for their Lord.

22. Gavel-Whitell, mentioned in the Laws of King Ina, was a Whittel, or Courſe Garment, given by the Lord to his Villain, when he work'd for him at home.

23. Were-Gavel, was a Rent paid to have Leave to ſet up Weres or Keddles to catch Fiſh withal.

24. Twy-Gavel, Twiskett, or Duplum; ſome Gavel or Rent which was doubled.

25. Met-Gavel, Gablum Cibi; is mentioned at the End of King Henry the Iſt's Laws; its Name ſhews its Meaning.

26. Pride-Gavel, a Rent for the Liberty of Fiſhing in the Severn for Lampreys.

27. Sand-Gavel, a Rent for Liberty to dig Sand.

28. Gavelet, or Gavelate, is a Rent or Service withheld, or denied, ſo as to bring a Forfeiture upon the Land; from Gavel, and Let, which from the Saxon Lætan, ſignifies a Let or Impediment.

29. Gavelman, Gafelgylda, Gavelikendeyes; Tenants in Gavelkind, who were obliged to ſuch Rents or Services as are above-mentioned. This Word occurs often in the Cuſtumale Roffenſe in this Senſe.

30. Gablum & Malum: (a) Where a Tenant is ſaid to hold his Land, as he often is in the Reddendum of old Deeds, per Gablum & Malum: It ſignifies by Services, and by Rent: Gablum, or Gavel, being there oppoſed to Malum, or Mail, (which is an old Britiſh Word, ſignifying Lucrum, Emolumentum, or Quæſtus) and is to be taken ſtrictly for a Rent, and not a Service. And if this Rent were paid in Money, then it was called White-Mail, or White Rent, becauſe the common Money was only Pennies or Silver: But if in Cattle, Corn, or any kind of Proviſions, then it was called Black-Mail.

From theſe, and ſuch like Senſes of the Word Gavel, Mr. Somner concludes, that Gavelkind-Land implies ſuch as pays ſome kind of Rent, or elſe Service in Work to the Lord; and ſo is Terra Cenſualis, becauſe let out, as the Feudiſts ſay, contractu cenſuali, on a Condition or Covenant to pay Rent or Service. And hereby 'tis diſtinguiſhed from other Lands held in Allodio, in Frank-Fee, Frank-Almoign, Knights-Service; or in Mortmaine, as they call it abroad, i. e. becauſe being in a dead Hand, it yields the Lord no Profit; All which Kinds of Land pay no manner of Rent at all to any Lord. So that Gavelkind-Land is ſuch, as is of that Kind, (b) or Nature, as that it muſt yield ſome Rent or baſe Service to the Lord, and conſequently was a kind of Soccage Tenure. And Lambard ſaith, (Page 587, of his Perambulation,) that all Lands in Kent which were of Ancient Socage Tenure, are of the Nature of Gavelkind, with regard to their Partibility; as thoſe which An-

(a) Silas Taylor thinks Gablum is to be diſtinguiſhed from a Rent payable by Bargain or Contract, and implies rather one impoſed at the Will of the Lord, over and above the other Rent; as in the Caſe of For-Gavell, &c. and that the Word Gablum, or Gavel, doth not by any Means neceſſarily regard the Tenure of Partition, or any other particular one, but only implies that Rent is to be paid.

And he ſaith, that in Urchenfeild in Wales, there are Lands of the Nature of Gavelkind, which pay no manner of Rent. Hiſtory of Gavelkind, Page 123, 124.

ciently held by Knights Service are deſcendible, according to the Cuſtom of the Common Law. (a)

But Mr. Somner won't allow, that the Partition of Lands of this Nature is owing to Gavelkind only; for Partition, he ſaith, neither ariſes from the Common-Law, nor from Preſcription, but from Cuſtom, and the Nature of Gavelkind together: For Gavelkind-Land is capable of Partition by Cuſtom, being in Socage Tenure, which no Land in Knight's Service is; ſo that what in other Countries is called Socage Tenure, whether Free or Baſe, is in this Country called Gavelkind, the Term ſerving here to diſtinguiſh it from Lands held in Knight's Service. And into all Land of this Kind, by a general Cuſtom of the whole County of Kent, hath this Property of Partition been introduced; inſomuch, ſaith he, as what Land was granted out in Gavelkind by ſuch as before held it in Demeſne, or the like; as, for want of Time, and Uſage, is no particular Cuſtom introductive of that Property of Partition, ſo neither did it want it, the Generality of the Cuſtom extended it ſelf to all Cenſual Land, or ſuch as was let out for Rent, and ſufficing to render it profitable though but newly demiſed. But he thinks it neceſſary, that ſome Expreſſion implying its being Cenſual, muſt be either in the Habendum, or other part of the Grant, to make it capable of this and other Properties incident to Gavelkind; though there is not an equal Neceſſity of uſing the very Term of Gavelkind; any other of an equivalent Signification, ſuch as Reddendo ſuch a Sum de Gablo, or de Cenſu, being ſufficient. And theſe, and ſuch like, were the moſt Ancient ways of Expreſſion; that of Tenendum de Gavelkind, not being to be met with before King Henry the IId's Time; but henceforward it continued till the 18th of King Edward the Iſt, and then the Statute Quia Emptores, &c. forbidding any Man to let Land, as holden of himſelf, &c. as it cut off all new Tenures, ſo put an end to all ſuch Grants in Gavelkind for the future. But that ſome ſuch kind of Expreſſion, as Tenendum in, or ad Gavelkind, or the like, was neceſſary to render the granted Land Partible, without the help of Preſcription requiſite in other partible Land lying out of Kent; he ſhews by a Determination of the Juſtices in Eyre, A. D. 1241, at Canterbury. However, he thinks, that what at firſt in Kent was only partible becauſe of the Tenure in Gavelkind, was afterwards partible, and communicated with Gavelkind Land in that Property, by being Socage-Land, though not expreſly holden in Gavelkind: It ſufficing at length to ſhew the Cuſtom at large, as Mr. Lambard ſaith; and to ſay, That the Land lies in Kent, where all Lands are of the Nature of Gavelkind.

By what means indeed this came about, or by what Degrees our Socage Land arrived at this Univerſality of Partition, is not, ſaith Somner, Page 52, ſo eaſily diſcovered. Lambard thinks, that the Benefits and Advantages of this Cuſtom made many get into it, on the Troubles that followed King Richard the IId's Deprivation. But Somner ſaith there were no Gavelkind Tenures ſo late as that, as being all cut off by the Statute Quia Emptores Terrarum, in the 18th of Edward the Iſt, as I before obſerved; and he cites a Statute in the 18th of Henry the IId; which ſhews, that there were not in Kent at that Time above Forty Perſons, having Lands of Twenty Pounds Value, but what held in Gavelkind; almoſt the whole County being then within this Tenure.

The general and uſual Tradition is, that the Privileges and Advantages of Gavelkind came to Kent, by the gallant Stand which our Countrymen made againſt William the Conqueror at Swanſcombe; when Stigand, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Egelſine, Abbot of St. Auſtins, are ſuppoſed to have terrified that Prince into a Grant of their Ancient Laws and Liberties: This is thus celebrated by Hawke, in his Poem on the Law.

Cuſtom in Kent encouraging the Brave,
Diſtinguiſh'd well the Brother from the Slave;
And to each Son an equal Fortune gave.

With juſt Regard, —ſince the ſame amorous Fire,
Caus'd the laſt Birth, that did the firſt inſpire.
The generous Youth, pleas'd with ſuch equal Laws,
Fought for their Honour, and their Country's Cauſe,
With ſuch Reſiſtance, that the French Brigade
Which conquer'd Harold, durſt not Kent invade;
But Solemn Peace with Oaken Squadron made;
Granted thoſe Laws for which the Patriots ſtrove,
And Kiſs'd the Goſpel to the moving Grove.

I have already ſhewed (under Swanſcombe) the very ſuſpicious Credit of this Story of Thomas Spotts, on the Account of its being mentioned by no other Hiſtorian before him; and of its Inconſiſtence with the March and Behaviour of King William the Iſt, juſt after the Battel of Haſtings; and I ſhall now do ſo, with regard to the Conſequences of it; which are ſaid to be the freeing Kent from That Villainage, which the Normans brought into other Parts of England, and giving or ſecuring to them the Advantages and Privileges of Gavelkind. But Mr. Somner hath plainly ſhewed, (a) that there were not only Villains in Kent, and in other Parts of England, (b) before the Normans came hither; but that Villenage continued alſo in Kent long after this imaginary March of the Kentiſh Boughmen, and that even in the Gavelkind Tenure it ſelf; which latter Part, were it neceſſary, or any new Diſcovery, I could ſhew by numerous Inſtances out of the Textus Roffenſis, and the Cuſtumale Roffenſe.

Spelman, Verſtegan, Archbiſhop Parker, and Lambard, &c. think that all our Lands in Enggland were Partible before the Normans Advent, by a Cuſtom brought in by the Saxons, (as they judge, but I think I have ſhewed it above, to be of much greater Antiquity) and Confirmed and Incorporated into our Laws by King Cnute: But Somner argues, that although there might be, and no doubt was, this Land-Shifting, or Partition of Land before the Conqueſt; yet it doth not appear, that it was into equal Shares or Portions, but rather according to the Pleaſure of the Teſtator, the ſeveral Merits of the Children, &c.

So that every one had what was judged a due and proper Share, by a kind of reaſonable Right lodged in the Breaſt of the Diſpoſer; and alſo that it was not a National or General Cuſtom, prevailing univerſally, ſince there are Inſtances to the contrary, (i. e.) of eldeſt Sons having been Heirs, &c.

Yet, I ſay, notwithſtanding this, he is willing to allow that Provincially, and particularly in Kent, there was ſuch a Cuſtom both before and at the Conqueſt, and that alſo it was pretty current in all other Parts of the Iſland. For as there is no particular Account of it in any Hiſtorian, ſo there is no Probability in Lambard's Opinion, that Biſhop Odo, Earl of Kent, brought it firſt with him out of Normandy, and eſtabliſhed it in Kent.

that

This is both inconſiſtent with the latter Part of the Cuſtumale, which from Lambard himſelf, I ſhall give you below: And 'tis alſo unlikely, that if it had never been in England before, it would not have been eſtabliſhed in other Places by the Conqueror's Power, as well as in Kent.

Mr. Somner thinks alſo, (Page 82.) that King William the Iſt conſented to the Continuance of this Cuſtom of Partition of Lands in all Caſes, but where they were held by Knights Service; but there he appointed the Eldeſt Son alone to inherit. He takes Notice alſo, that before the Conqueſt, Lands might be (with the Lord's Leave in all Caſes) deviſeable by Will; eſpecially Boc-Land, which therefore was called Terra (a) Hæreditaria, Terra Libera, and Teſtamentalis; unleſs where the Lands were tied up by ſome expreſs Covenant to the contrary. But after the Conqueſt, the Cuſtom of deviſing of Land by Will ceaſed; as did alſo the Diviſion of Land equally among the Sons by degrees, except in ſuch Places where Men were more tenacious of it; (of which London ſeems to have been one,) (b) and by ſpecial Privilege were allowed to retain it. Where therefore this Partible Deſcent cannot uphold it ſelf by Ancient Cuſtom and long immemorial Preſcription, it muſt fall to the Ground: As Glanvil and Bracton ſay.

(a) See Bihtric's Saxon Will in Mepham. And Law 37. of King Alured.

(a) See Stow's Survey, p. 535.

And as the Citizens and Traders of London, ſo the Commons and Yeomanry of Kent, being more tenacious perhaps than others, of their old Cuſtoms, and more careful, (as Somner expreſſes it) to maintain their Iſſue for the preſent, than their Houſes for the future, did more induſtriouſly continue this Cuſtom than other Parts of the Kingdom; and did at laſt get it ſo eſtabliſhed in this County, and ſpread and diffuſed all over it, that whatever Land in it held not by Knight Service, but was of Socage Tenure, became (as Mr. Lambard expreſſes it) Apparelled with the Name, and qualified with the Nature and Properties of Gavelkind.

And there appear to me Two probable Reaſons why the Cuſtoms of Gavelkind ſhould be permitted to continue in Kent, rather than elſewhere.

1. That King William the Iſt was pleaſed with their early Submiſſion to him; and was glad of the Opportunity of beginning with an Act of Clemency, and to invite other Parts of England to follow their Example, by ſhewing that he would not break in upon their old Laws, Uſages and Cuſtoms. And that our People did thus ſubmit to, and not oppoſe Duke William, will farther appear from what Somner ſays about the Threnges which Anciently were in Kent, which he takes to be the ſame with Thegnes, or Allodiarij; and probably theſe are the ſame with Sir H. Spelman's Drenches; whom from an old Record in his Gloſſary, he ſhews to have been ſuch, qui nec ante nec poſt Conqueſtum fuerunt contra Regem, aut Conſilio, aut Auxilio, ſed tenuerunt ſe in Pace; ergo Rex precepit ut omnes illi rehaberent Terras & Dominationes integre & in Pace & vocarenter Drenges. i. e. Thegnes, or Thanes, Freemen holding their Lands in Allodio; and not by Military Service, as he made others to do.

2. That though afterwards he might begin to break in upon the Ancient Cuſtoms and Uſages of other Parts of the Kingdom; yet in Kent they might be continued by the Power and Influence of his Brother Odo, whom he made Earl of Kent, and enriched with a very great Eſtate in the County; and often reſided here; and who had actually ſuch an Intereſt in Kent, that he could influence the Inhabitants to make an Inſurrection in his Behalf, againſt King William the IId, as I have before obſerved in Odo's Life. And when you add to this, the Eſteem that the Conqueror had for Archbiſhop Lanfranc, and for Guadulf, Biſhop of Rocheſter, both his Countrymen, and both preferred in this County; 'tis very natural to ſuppoſe, that by the Intereſt which theſe Three Great Men had at Court, the Kentiſhmen might more eaſily and inviolably preſerve their Ancient Privileges, Cuſtoms and Uſages, than any other Part of Great Britain.

3. It was the Policy alſo of King William the Iſt, where he found Perſons who oppoſed his Conqueſt at firſt, or afterwards rebelled againſt him, to give their Lands to his Normans, or ſuch whom he afterwards pardoned, to be held under the Tenure of Knights Service; by which the Heir was obliged to be in Ward till Twenty One Years, and could be married by the Power of his Lord before Fourteen, which was expreſly mentioned in the Patents. And by this means he kept all great Families in a perpetual Dependance on the Crown. But in Kent little or no Knights Service was introduced, but that County was left to enjoy its old Cuſtoms and Tenures; becauſe it lay ſo directly in the way between the firſt Norman Kings, and their own Native Country, that an Inſurrection there might be very dangerous. And therefore we likewiſe find a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Cinque-Ports, granted in the beginning of King William the Iſt's Reign, (viz. Anno Sexto) on the Account of their lying moſt of them in Kent, and all of them over againſt the Norman Shore; as appears by the old Book of Entries, Fol. 82. b.

But though Lands were Anciently Partible, and are ſtill in ſome other Places beſides Kent; yet Mr. Somner doth not think that enough to denominate them Gavelkind-Lands: (a) Becauſe the Cuſtom of Gavelkind contains in it many other Properties beſides this; ſuch as Dower of the Moiety, not to forfeit Lands for Felony, &c. and 'tis alſo neceſſary that the Tenure of Gavelkind be mentioned in the Grant, or ſuch Words as are equivalent thereunto.

And he finds fault with Mr. Lambard, and others Diſtinctions, between Free and Baſe Soccage, and their Determination thereon; viz. That Lands in Free Soccage, deſcend to the Eldeſt Son only; and thoſe in Baſe Soccage, to him in common with his Brethren: Shewing, that Free Soccage is miſtaken for Liberum Feodum, which ſometimes ſignifies Knights Service Tenure, but more properly Frank Fee; or Land for which no manner of Service was paid. For as the Land in England, the Law-Books ſay is either Ancient Demeſne, or Frank Fee; ſo none can be accounted Ancient Demeſne, but what is held in Soccage; and therefore Frank Fee being oppoſed to Ancient Demeſne, which is Soccage, can't be Soccage it ſelf.

He ſhews it to be a Miſtake alſo, in thoſe who have ſuppoſed Gavelkind-Land not to be Subject to Works; and to the Inſtances which he gives out of ſome old Cuſtumals in Kent, I could ſupply him with numerous ones out of

our Cuſtumale Roffenſe; by which 'tis plain, that not only the Words Gablum and Opera, do often occur in Gavelkind Tenures; but that ſuch Lands alſo were ſubject to all Kinds of Servile Works, both Manopera and Carropera. True indeed it is, that ſince King Richard the IId's Time, theſe Services have been bought off by Degrees, and changed into Rents in Money, as in Proceſs of Time they were all: And ſometimes alſo they were compounded for by a Gerſuma, or kind of Fine in Money, always mentioned in the Grant.

Next Mr. Somner proceeds to enquire whether Gavelkind be a Tenure or a Cuſtom: Mr. Lambard comes into the latter Notion, and takes it to be a Cuſtom accompanying the Land where it prevails, rather than a Tenure whereby the Land is holden, p. 591, 592, &c. But that it is a Tenure, he ſhews from thoſe Words in the Tenendum of Deeds being uſually inſerted in the Grants of Land of this Nature, Tenendum ad or de Gavelkind. And from the Statute of 18. H. 6. c. 3. where 'tis expreſly called a Tenure. And alſo, that ſince the Statute Quia Emptores Terrarum, in the 18th Year of Edward the Iſt, prohibits the Subject to let Land to be holden of himſelf, as there are not to be found any more Grants of Lands pro Homagio aut Servitio, ſo neither in Gavelkind. Gavelkind therefore, ſaith Somner, if you conſider it generally in Groſs, is a Tenure; but when you conſider it particularly, with regard to the Lands held by it, their being Partible; then it may be taken as a Cuſtom (among others) of the Land of that Tenure.

But Taylor ſays, that Partition exvi Termini, doth not owe it ſelf to Gavelkind, but rather this to that: And that the Gavelkind was a Word made uſe of to expreſs the Cuſtom of Partition, before generally in uſe; and that after this Term of Gavelkind was received and ſettled, then it did infer Partition, not only in Kent, but every where elſe, (where uſed) as a common Law.

After this, Mr. Somner propoſes this Queſtion: Whether this Cuſtom of Partition in Gavelkind-Law be ſo inherent in the Land, and inſeperable from it, that though the Tenure ſhould be altered, yet the Land ſhall retain the Property? Which he ſeems to anſwer in the Negative: But this being a Matter within the proper Cognizance of the Learned Gentlemen of the Long Robe, I ſhall not preſume to meddle farther with it, any more than to give you his next Queſtion, whoſe Solution concludes his Book, viz. Whether before the Statute of Wills (32, and 34. of King Henry 8.) Gavelkind-Land in Kent were deviſable or not? Which he alſo holds in the Negative (a). And beſides the Arguments of the Council in the Caſe of Mr. Hall, (which he there largely recites) he gives theſe Two of his own:

I. That ſuch a Deviſe is againſt the Nature of the Lands, being held in Fee; Fees being by the Feudal Law indiſpoſable by Will; and as Gavelkind Tenure came to us from the Germans; there, ſaith Tacitus, in a Place before cited, Heredes Succeſſoreſq; ſui cuique Liberi; & nullum Teſtamentum.

II. Becauſe by many Wills now extant in the Regiſters of the Churches of Canterbury and Rocheſter, it appears, That the Teſtators gave Legacies and Conſiderations to their other Children, in order to obtain their Conſent, and to ratify a Diſpoſition made by Will to ſome of them. Theſe Wills are dated between the Statute of Uſes, in the 27th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, and the other of Wills, in the 32d of that King.

And hence it appears, that at that Time they did not think Gavelkind-Land deviſeable by Will; ſince they ſuppoſe the Will can only be good, where the Children accept of ſuch Legacies.

But in the City of Canterbury (he ſaith) by a particular Cuſtom, Lands have been deviſeable by Will. So far Mr. Lambard.

And this is all I think proper for an Hiſtorian to ſay of this Cuſtom of Gavelkind. And being no Lawyer, I ſhall omit what Mr. Lambard ſaith further, P. 606. of the Third Edition of his Perambulation of Kent, about the Quality of the Rents, Remainders, Conditions, Vouchers, Actions, Gavellette, &c. Concluding this Subject with the Ancient Old French Roll of theſe Cuſtoms, which Lambard hath given us in the ſaid Book, p. 631. and ſtands thus.

Here Somner, from an old Copy of the Cuſtumal of Kent, written in a Book belonging to St. Auſtin's Abbey, and which was in Sir Roger Twiſden's Cuſtody, adds this Clauſe:

And again, in the 5th Year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, there was another Act paſſed whereby the Eſtates of Sir Thomas Browne of Weſt-Becheworth in Surrey, and of George Brown, Eſq; were diſgavelled.

And no doubt very many Eſtates in Kent have been ſince brought into the ſame Circumſtances.

The Hiſtory of the Cinque-Ports: Their Original, Deſign, Services, Laws, Courts, Cuſtoms, Charters, and Privileges.

AFTER the Roman Government was well ſettled in Britain, this Iſland was together with Spain, under the Superintendency of the Prefectus Prætorio Galliarum. This Prefect had under him Three Vicarij or Lieutenants, one for Gaul, another for Spain, and a third for Britain. The Vicarius Britanniarum had for his Enſigns the Draught of the Five Parts that Britain was then divided into; viz. Britannia prima, Britannia ſecunda, Flavia Cæſarienſis, maxima Cæſarienſis, and Valentia; and they were expreſſed by ſeveral Forms of Buildings, with their Names to them, in a kind of Plane encompaſſed round with the Sea; and at the Top in the Dexter Corner, was the Figure of his Book of Inſtructions.

See Panciroll. Not. Occid. Camd. Britan. Selden's Titles of Honour, &c.

Under

Under this Lieutenant of Britain, there were two Conſulares; viz. one for Maxima Cæſarienſis, and one for Valentia: and Three Preſides, one for Britannia prima, another for Britannia ſecunda, and the third for Flavia Cæſarienſis. The Title of the Preſides was Perfectiſſimi.

Kent was then under the Government of the Preſes Britanniæ primæ; but the Sea Coaſt, which was called Littus Saxonicum, (as alſo the oppoſite French Coaſt) had in the Time of Dioclesian a peculiar Governor, who by Marcellinus is called, the Count of the Sea Coaſt; and by the Notitia, the Honourable the Count of the Saxon Shore in Britain. His Buſineſs was to fix Gariſons upon the Sea-Coaſts in proper Places, to prevent the Incurſions and Plunderings of the Barbarians; eſpecially the Saxon, who heavily infeſted Britain. And to this End, he had under his Command, as ſome ſay, 2200 Foot, and 200 Horſe. He himſelf was under the Command of the Illuſtrious the Maſter of the Foot, whom the Romans called Preſentalis, becauſe he was to be conſtantly preſent in the Army; and who, beſides the particular Gariſons for the Ports, aſſigned him the Victores Juniores Britannici, the Primani Juniores, and the Secundani Juniores, (which were their Names for ſo many Companies) to have ready upon all Occaſions.

His Office or Court he held in this Manner: He had there, Principem ex Officio Magiſtri preſentalium à parte peditum; Numerarios duos, Commentatienſem, Cornicularium, Adjutorem, Subadjuvam, Regendarium, Exceptores ſingulares, &c. That is, as the Learned Tranſlator of Camden renders them; A Principal or Maſter out of the Generals of the Foot, Two Accountants, a Jaylor, a Judge-Advocate, Aſſiſtant and Under-Aſſiſtant, a Regiſter, the particular Receivers, &c.

And there can be no doubt at all (as Mr. Camden obſerves) but that it was in Imitation of this careful Method of the Romans, that our Anceſtors ſet over this Coaſt a Governor or Portreve; who in the Norman's Time came to be called the Guardian or Warden of the Ports: Becauſe as the Comes Littoris Saxonici, or the Count of the Saxon Shore, preſided over Nine Ports; ſo he had the Guardianſhip of Five. For the Count of the Saxon Shore, had under his Government, Othona, Dubris, Lemani, Branoduno, Garianno, Regulbi, Retupis, Anderidos, and Portus Adurni. Which were all in this Order, placed in his Enſign in the Form of Forts, and in the Dexter Quarter, was the Picture of his Book of Inſtructions. The whole in a Plane, encompaſſed round by the Sea.

As to the Names of theſe Nine Places, there can be no doubt but that Dubris, is Dover; Lemanni, Limne or the old Portus Lemanis; Regulbi, Reculver; Rutupis, Richborough; and Anderidos, the old Anderida; which I think I have ſhewn to be Newenden in this County. See Newenden. Mr. Camden, and ſome others, I believe rightly, judge Othona to have been the old City of Ithanceſter, which he places in Dengy Hundred in Eſſex, on the Sea Shore, by or at St. Peter's in the Wall. And perhaps this may receive ſome Confirmation from there being to this Day a Place called Brightlingſey, not far from it, which is under the Juriſdiction of the Ports, and is one of the Members of Sandwich. Branodunum ſeems to have been Brancaſter in Norfolk; and Gariana, Yarmouth in the ſame County, as will appear plainly from what will be ſaid below. And the Portus Adurni was certainly either at Eddrington, or ſomewhat near Shoreham in Suſſex, as Camden hath obſerved.

The Reſidence of this Comes Littoris Saxonici, was uſually in Kent, but always in ſome Place on the South Coaſt of Britain.

After the Romans departure from hence, we find nothing certain about this Officer, or any one that ſupplied his Place; and perhaps it was from the want of ſuch an one, that the Britiſh Coaſts were ſo infeſted by Pyrates from Abroad, as they were inſulted another way by the Incurſions of the Picts at Home. But it ſeems to me not improbable that Guorongus or the Vice-Roy, as Camden calls him, whom King Vortigern had placed in Kent, had a Government ſomething of this Nature; and perhaps on his being diſplaced, Hengiſt might at firſt ſucceed him in ſuch a Truſt, before he uſurped the Kingdom of Kent.

During the Time of the Heptarchy we find no mention of any Officer who had Care of the Ports, or Towns upon the Sea Coaſt; becauſe theſe Saxons themſelves, who uſed to infeſt the Coaſts with Piracies, were now become Maſters of the Kingdom, and had divided it amongſt them: And Three of their Kingdoms likewiſe being placed along the South Eaſtern, Southern, and South Weſtern Parts, of what was formerly called the Saxon Shore, each King took Care of his own Coaſt, and no one Perſon could be appointed to govern the whole. And though one might have expected that ſuch an Officer as the Comes Littoris Saxonici ſhould have been received and eſtabliſhed in King Ecbert's Time, to have guarded againſt the Invaſions of the Danes and Norwegians, and other Northern People (Northmanni) which then began to haraſs the Engliſh Coaſts, yet I don't find that any ſuch Perſon was appointed, or any particular Care taken of the Sea Coaſts, any more than there was afterwards in the Reign of King Alfred, though he made many other good Regulations in the Kingdom. Nay, even in King Edgar's Time, who enjoyed a long Peace, and had a mighty Fleet, with which he ſail'd almoſt round his Kingdom every Year, our Hiſtorians mention nothing of any particular Guardian of the Ports: That Office being then, probably, part of the Admiral's Duty. And though indeed Domeſday Book doth mention ſome Privileges of the Ports, as early as the Reign of King Edward the Confeſſor, as will be hereafter ſhewn, yet I don't find then any one particular Perſon, mentioned by our Hiſtorians, under the Title of Warden of the Ports, though in ſome Catalogues indeed of the Lord Wardens, Earl Godwin is named in that Capacity.

What we find of this Matter is, as is above obſerved, partly from the Domeſday Books, where it appears that Dover, Sandwich, and Romney, were in the Time of King Edward the Confeſſor, diſcharged of almoſt all manner of Impoſitions and Burdens born by other Towns, on the Account of the Services done to the King upon the Seas; and from the laſt Charter to the Ports, granted in the 20th Year of King Charles the IId, wherein 'tis ſaid, They ſhall enjoy the Privileges and Exemptions which their Predeceſſors had in the Time of King Edward the Confeſſor, and of King William the Iſt. But as Mr. Lambard hath obſerved in the Charter of King Edward the Iſt. wherein is a Recital of the Grants of ſundry Kings to the Ports, they extend no higher than the Reigns of William the Conqueror; and therefore all before it is little better than Conjecture: Since the Ports, perhaps thought it better to abide by his Confirmation, than any previous Grants of Privileges.

According to Mr. Lambard's Method I ſhall firſt ſhew you what Towns were, at the beginning, taken into this Title of Ports; and what others have ſince been reputed of the ſame Denomination.

Secondly, What kind of Services they did anciently pay to the Crown.

Thirdly, What Privileges and Immunities they did upon that Account enjoy.

Fourthly, By what Officers and Persons they have been governed and regulated.

And, Fifthly, The Reasons of their Decay and present mean Condition.

1. As to the Number and Names of them, there is an old common silly Latin Verse, which expresses them thus:

Dovor, Sandwicus, Ry, Rumney, Frigmare Ventus.

Which in its rude way sallily implies the Five Ports to have been Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Romney, and Winchelsea. The Roll which recites the Ports that send Members to Parliament, adds to these Five, Hastings and Hythe. But our famous Bracton, who was a Learned Lawyer, and of good Authority, and lived in the Time of King Henry the IIId, in his third Book of the Crown, where he speaks of what Articles were proper to be enquired of by the Justices in Eyre, or the Justices Itinerants, sets forth a special Form of Writs to be directed severally to the Bailiffs of Hasting, Hythe, Rumney, Dover, and Sandwich; commanding them to send 24 of their Barons, (for that was the ancient Word, and is still, for their Burgesses or Townsmen) to appear before the King's Justices at Shipway in this County, as they used to do, there to enquire of such Points as should be given in Charge: And he further adds, that since there had been oftentimes great Contention between the Cinque-Ports and the Towns of Yarmouth in Norfolk, and Donwich in Suffolk, there should be several Writs directed to them also, returnable before the Justices at the same Day and Place, reciting, That where the King had by his former Writs summoned the Pleas of the Five Ports to be holden at Shipway, if any of those Towns had cause to complain against any Member of the Cinque-Ports, he should be at Shipway to propound it, and there to receive according to Law and Justice.

Now from hence it appears, that Hasting, Hithe, Dover, Romney, and Sandwich, were then the Cinque or Five Ports: And also that Shipway was so long ago, the Place of Assembly for Pleas of those Ports; which were endowed with peculiar Privileges, ratified by the great Charter of England.

'Tis not improbable indeed, but that soon after this, Winchelsea and Rye might be added to the Number: For Lambard saith, he found in an old Record, that King Henry the IIId took into his Hands, for the better Defence of the Realm, the Towns of Winchelsea and Rye; which before belonged to the Monastry of Fischampe in Normandy; giving in Exchange for them the Manor of Chiltham in Glouceſterſhire, and several other Lands in Lincolnshire. This he did, partly to hinder the Priors Aliens from being let into the Intelligence of our National Affairs; and partly, as some say, on the account of some Rudeness and Excess, committed by the Inhabitants of Winchelsea against his Son Prince Edward; though, as our Author observes, 'tis not probable that he made them Partakers of the Privileges of the Ports; especially Winchelsea; for that would have been a Preferment instead of a Punishment. But 'tis probable that his Son King Edward the Ist, by whose Encouragement the old Town of Winchelsea was abandoned (perhaps in Revenge of his Affront) and the new Town built; endowed both that and Rye with the Privileges of the Five Ports, and added them to the Number, under the Title which they now bear of the Two Ancient Towns. Old Winchelsea therefore and Rye, though taken from the Priors Aliens by King Henry the IIId, yet seems not to have been endowed by him with the Privileges of the Ports. It stood at the then Mouth of the old River Limen or Rother (a); and probably was much damaged by the breaking in of the Sea upon it, about this Time, which occasioned many People to leave it, and settle in the new Town. By a Manuscript Book, fairly written by John Norden, and with good Drawings in it, and called a Topographical Description of Cornwal, and dedicated to King James the Ist, it appears, that the old Town of Winchelsea was once a Place of great Trade and Figure; but as Stow saith, in A. D. 1250; Matthew Paris in 1280; or as a French Chronicle in Sir Simon D'Ewes Library relates it in A. D. 1286. by a terrible and sudden Inundation of the Sea, this old Town was quite destroyed; above 300 Houses perishing at once, besides the Churches, and the small Hutts or Houses of the Fishermen (b): So that the remaining Part of the Inhabitants were now all forced from the Old Town, and betook themselves to the Hill, seated in the Manor of Higham; and which King Edward the Ist had bought of one William de Grandison, in order to build a New Town; which he began A. D. 1277. and where several of the Inhabitants of the Old Town had before begun to build Houses. This Place was therefore called New Winchelsea; and a fine Town no doubt it was at first, before it suffered as much by the Sea's leaving it; as Old Winchelsea did by its violent Access to it: For this present Town was once a very large Place, the Streets being built all at Right-Angles one to another, so as to form in the whole Thirty two Squares; Three Churches it had once, and as many Gates, and the like Number of Religious Houses; the Ruins of which do still remain: The present Church, now in use, being, though a large and spacious Building, only the Chancel of the Ancient great One, which was dedicated to St. Thomas. All over the Town appear noble large arched Vaults or Cellars; of which I had Two belonging to my House, when I lived there (for I was Rector of the Parish above 12 Years), very spacious, lofty, and dry, and fit to contain a very large Quantity of Merchants Goods. But the Sea, as I believe, left it soon after, or rather before the Town was throughly built and inhabited; and being now gone from it the Distance of Two Miles, and so depriving it of the Benefit of all Trade, 'tis become as poor and obscure as it was once rich and eminent.

New Winchelsea seems to have been endowed with the Privileges of the Ports very early in King Edward the Ist's Reign; because in our ancient Records I have met with this Note.

Barones & Ballivi de Winchelse r. c. (that is) reddebant, computum de xliij. de Firmâ villæ de Winchelse quam Rex eis dedit & concessit cum omnibus Pertinentiis & Libertatibus suis tenendum per talem Firmam quamdiu Regi placuerit. Ita quod idem Ba-

Plain therefore it is, that the firſt Cinque-Ports were Haſting, Dover, Hithe, Romney, and Sandwich; and ſo they are ſtill, and have ever ſince been accounted. But this was not always the Order of naming them, as you will ſee hereafter. Winchelſea and Rye were very ſoon, you ſee, added to them, as the Two Ancient Towns, and incorporated with them in a Participation of all their Privileges; as were afterwards many other Places, which therefore were called Members, or Limbs of the Ports; and the Names of which I ſhall give you below, in the Extract of the Charters of the Ports.

2. The next Thing to be conſidered, is the Services that theſe Cinque-Ports, the Two Ancient Towns, and their Members, were to yield to the Crown; of which Mr. Lambard gives Two Accounts, ſomething different one from another.

Domeſday-Book charges Dover with Twenty Ships, or Veſſels, each to be manned with Twenty One Hands, for Fifteen Days together; and ſaith alſo, that Romney and Sandwich anſwered the Like Service. But whether by Like Service we are to underſtand the ſame Number of Ships, &c. or only a Service like to that of Dover in Kind, but according to the Proportion of their Ability, doth not from this alone clearly appear. He ſaith he hath ſeen Two ſeveral Accounts of theſe Services of the Ports, both bearing the Countenance of Records.

The Former was in French, and ſaid to have been drawn up in the 22d of King Edward the Iſt, by Sir Stephen Penchester, then Conſtable of Dover Caſtle; according to which the Services ſtood thus.

The Port of Haſtings was to find	3 Ships.
Lowy of Pevenſey,	1 Ship.
Bulverhithe, and Petit-John,	1 Ship.
Bekesbourn in Kent,	7 Ships.
Greneb at Gillingham in Kent,	7 Ships.
And Two Men in Armour, with the Ships of Haſtings.
Town of Rye,	5 Ships.
Town of Winchelſea,	10 Ships.
Port of Romney,	4 Ships.
Lydde,	7 Ships.
Port of Hythe,	5 Ships.
Port of Dover,	19 Ships.
Town of Folkſtone,	7 Ships.
Town of Feverſham,	7 Ships.
Port of Sandwich, with Stonar, Fordwich, Deale, &c.	5 Ships.

Theſe Ships, on Forty Days Summons, were to be all fitted out at the Charge of the Ports, each to have a Maſter and Twenty Men; and they were to be maintained Five Days at their own Coſts; each Maſter to have 6 d. and each Conſtable 6 d. per Day, and every Mariner 3 d. but after theſe Five Days were ended, the King was to bear the Charge.

The other Paper was the Latin Cuſtumal of the Town of Hythe, (for each Port had its peculiar Cuſtumal) which though not of ſo great Antiquity, yet he thinks of as good Credit and Authority as the other. Its Title is;

Theſe be the Five Ports of our Sovereign Lord the King, having Liberties which other Ports have not. Haſting, Romenal, Hythe, Dover, Sandwich, the Chief Towns.

The Services due by the ſame.

1. Haſting ſhall find Twenty One Ships, in each Twenty One Men, and a Garcion, or Boy, which is called a Gromet. To it pertain, as the Members of one Town, the Sea-ſhore in Seford, Pevenſhey, Hodeney, Winchelſey, Rye, Iham, Bekesborne, Grenge, Northil, Bulverbithe.

2. Romenal Five Ships, in each Twenty One Men and a Garcion. To it pertain as Members, Promehill, Lede, Eſtwelſtone, Dengemarys, and Old Romney.

3. Hythe Five Ships, as Romenal before. To it pertaineth the Weſt Hythe.

4. Dover Twenty One Ships, as Haſting before. To it pertain Folkſtone, Feverſham, and St. Margarets, not concerning the Land, but for the Goods and Chattels.

5. Sandwich Five Ships, as Romenal and Hythe before. To it pertain Fordwich, Reculver, Serre and Dele; not for the Soil, but for the Goods.

Sum of the Ships	57
of the Men	1187
of the Garcions	57

This Service the Barons of the Five Ports do acknowledge to owe to the King upon Summons Yearly, if it happen by the Space of Fifteen Days together, at their own Coſts and Charges: Accounting thes for the Firſt Day of the Fifteen, in which they ſhall ſpread their Sails to go towards thoſe Parts that the King intendeth. And to ſerve ſo long after the Fifteen Days as the King will, at his own Pay and Wages.

Thus much ſaith Lambard, out of theſe Two Ancient Notes. In both which there are ſeveral Miſtakes, as will appear by comparing them together, and with the Charter, and what follows below.

King Edward the Iſt ordained, that the Sea-Port Towns ſhould provide for his Service their certain Number of Ships at their own Charge; & cum Duplici Rikippamento; which, perhaps, was a double Number of Hands, or Two Suits of Sails, Rigging, &c.

The Reverend Mr. Euſter, Miniſter of Crundale, in this County, gave me ſome Extracts out of a Manuſcript, now in the Hands of one Mr. Elwick, which is older than King Henry the VIIIth's Time, and ſeems to have belonged to ſome Collector of the Crown Fee-Farm Rents. In it is Mr. Lambard's Note in French; only with this Difference, that Elwyck's Manuſcript charges Bekesbourn, Lydd, Folkſtone, and Feverſham, with but one Ship each; which makes the Number of the whole exactly 57, as it ought to be. Here alſo is no Mention of any ſuch Officer as a Conſtable in the Ships. In it is the uſual Miſtake of Meſſs, for the old French Word Neffs, Seamen. And it hath the Error alſo, taken Notice of by Mr. Lambard, of Cinque-ſours, inſtead of Quinze. In the Number of Men for each, and their Wages, it agrees with Lambard's; as alſo in the Order and Placing of the Ports, and their Members:

But this I think is better Authoriſed by their Charter; of which below.

In a Manuſcript kindly lent me by Sir Baſil Dixwell, is this Note.

The Cinque-Ports, as appears by the Book of Entries, Sunt & a tempore quo non extat memoria fuerint Regis Angliæ Portus pro Ordinatione Proviſione & Salvatione Navigij ejuſdem ſpecialiſſimè deputati. And indeed their Navy was Anciently called the King's Navy; for he had no other, properly ſpeaking, for many Hundreds of Years together. And though their firſt Deſign, Lambard, and ſome others make to have been, for the Honourable Tranſportation, and ſafe Conduct of the King's own Perſon, or his Army, over the Narrow Seas: Yet the Ports have not only moſt diligently performed that Service, but they have moſt valiantly behaved themſelves againſt the Enemies of their Country from Time to Time, as Occaſion offered it ſelf, or the Neceſſity of the Realm required. As for Inſtance.

A. D. 1217. After the Death of King John, (who as H. Knighton ſaith, Chron. Fol. 2424.) fuit Primus qui unquam dotavit quinque Portus Angliæ.) Hugo de Burgo being Admiral of the Ports Navy, did with Forty Sail of them, follow and engage, take, ſink, and diſable Eighty Sail of French Ships, who were coming into England with an Army to aſſiſt Lewis the Dolphin, who had before come over hither to aſſiſt Stephen Langton, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Nobility, againſt King John.

The Ports Navy was alſo very ſerviceable to King Henry the IIId, in ſeveral of his Expeditions, after he came to Years of Maturity.

And King Edward the Iſt in his Charter, makes the good Services of the Ports, and particularly their Efforts lately ſhewn againſt the Welch, A. D. 1270, to be the principal Motive and Inducement to him to grant them ſuch Immunities and Privileges.

In the 13th of King Edward the IIId, the Commons declared, that the Cinque-Ports, who are diſcharged of all other Contributions, ſhould guard and defend the Sea Coaſts. Cotton's Tower Records, p. 18. And in his 20th Year, the Mariners of the Ports promiſed to fit out Twenty One Ships of their own, and Nine out of the Thames: Theſe the Earl of Huntington was ordered to command, and they were to ride at Winchelſea, p. 20. So that the Sea then came up to the bottom of the Hill on which New Winchelſea ſtands, but it left it again in that very Reign, as I have ſeen in the Records of that Town.

A. D. 1293, about the middle of King Edward the Iſt's Reign, One Hundred Sail of the Ports Navy, beat, ſunk, took and deſtroyed, a Navy of Two Hundred Sail of French Ships, notwithſtanding the Odds; and ſo few of either Sea-men, or Ships eſcaped, that France was for a long while after deſtitute of both.

A. D. 1406. The Navy of the Cinque-Ports, under the Command of one Henry Page, ſurprized One Hundred and Twenty Sail of French Ships, all well laden with Salt, Oil, Iron, and other good Merchandiſe.

In King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, they were very ſerviceable to him in Tranſporting his Army to Bulloign.

And afterwards in Queen Mary's Reign, their Fleet carried King Philip over the Seas.

A. D. 1587. The Inhabitants of the Ports were at very great Charges in making Fortifications and Trenches againſt the coming of the Spaniards. And the next Year,

A. D. 1588. They furniſhed out at their own Charge, Six Ships of One Hundred and Sixty Tuns (at leaſt) apiece, every one of which had a Pinnace of Thirty Tun to attend her; that whole Charge amounting to Forty Three Thouſand Pounds; and they performed very good Service againſt the Spaniſh Armada; a Ship of Dover, and the Mariners of that Town, being well acquainted with the Flats and Banks there, decoyed the great Galleaſs of Spain, and put her on Ground on the Coaſt near Calais; and afterwards the Ports made the Materials and the Machines by which ſhe was burnt.

And I find it repreſented in Favour of the Ports, in a Manuſcript communicated to me by Sir Baſil Dixwell, that they had theſe further Charges and Services formerly upon them.

They were greatly charged with Lodging, Victualling and Tranſporting of Soldiers in the Expedition to Portugal, under General Norris, and Sir Francis Drake; and into France, under the Command of Lord Willoughby, and afterwards under the Earl of Eſſex; and alſo at the Siege of Calais.

They were charged with great Store of Armour, Shot, Powder, and other Ammunition, in a far greater Proportion than any other Parts of the Realm.

They were alſo charged with keeping of Watches in the Night throughout the Year; and ſometimes in great Numbers; ſometimes no leſs than Twelve in a Night at each Port.

They were alſo much charged in relieving poor Soldiers, and diſtreſſed Sailors, daily reſorting to their Towns, of which many have been Shipwrack'd.

They were charged with Two Hundred Thouſand Pounds towards ſetting forth Seven Ships, to ſuppreſs the Pirates of Argiers and Tunis.

They annually met at Romney, and choſe Two Bailiffs, whom they ſent to Yarmouth, with other Officers and Attendants, who remain there during the Free-Fair, to ſee that the Fiſhermen of the Weſt and North be well uſed; and that all the King's Subjects may freely buy Herrings for their Uſe or Merchandiſe; and without this Care the Herring Trade would be engroſſed by Yarmouth.

After this the Manuſcript goes on and repreſents the Damages the Ports have ſuſtained from Time to Time, by the Danes, French, and other Foreign Enemies, and by the Inundations of the Sea. But of this more when I come to ſpeak of the Reaſons of their Decay. For I muſt now,

3. Mention the Privileges and Immunities which they did, upon the Account of theſe Services, poſſeſs and enjoy. And this I think can't be better done, than by giving you an Abſtract of their Charters, and making ſome Remarks upon them. Some Privileges were certainly conferred upon the Ports by King Edward the Confeſſor, as hath been before hinted by King William the IId, King Henry the IId, King Richard the Iſt, and King Henry the IIId; as appears by the Book of Entries, Fol. 72. b. but I think there is now Extant, no Written Charter by Patent before this which follows of King Edward the Iſt.

Extract

Extract of King Charles the IId's Charter to the Cinque-Ports in the 23d Year of his Reign.

1. IT recites the Letters Patents of Queen Elizabeth, Queen Mary, (and who by the by is in thoſe Charters ſtiled Supremum Caput Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ) King Edward the VIth, King Henry the VIIIth, King Henry the VIIth, King Edward the Vth, King Richard the IId, King Edward the IIId, King Edward the IId, and King Edward the Iſt. In the laſt of which is expreſſed, That for the faithful Service of the Cinque-Ports done to his Predeceſſors, and in particular to him, when his Army went into Wales; he grants to the Ports all their Liberties and Privileges, and that they ſhall be free from all Theolonium & de omni Conſuetudine, viz.

Ab omni Laſtagio, Tallagio, Paſſagio, Carriagio, Rivagio, Aponſagio, & omni wrec. & de totâ venditione, Achato & Recheto ſuo, per totam Terram, & poteſtatem noſtrum cum Sacâ & Socâ, Thol & Them; & quod habeant Infantheff, & quod ſint wrec. Free, Laſtage Free, & Lovecope Free; & quod habeant Penn & Strond apud Magnum Yernemouth.

Et quod Quieti ſint de Shieres & Hundredis ita quod Siquis Verſus Illos placitare voluerit. Ipſi non reſpondeant neque Placitent aliter quam placitare ſolebant tempore Domini Henrici Regis Proavi noſtri.

Et quod habeant Inventiones Suas in Mari & Terrâ, & quod quieti ſint de omnibus Rebus ſuis & toto Mercatu ſuo ſicut noſtri Liberi Homines. Et quod habeant Honores Suos in noſtrâ Curiâ & Libertates ſuos per totam terram noſtram quocunque venerunt.

Then it goes on and ſaith, They ſhall have quiet Poſſeſſion and Enjoyment of all that they held in the 44th Year of King Henry the IIId, and ſhall be exempt from the Juriſdiction of the Juſtices Itinerant. Nor ſhall they be obliged to plead in any Court, but their own uſual one of Shipway.

N. B. This Privilege held till King James the Iſt's, or King Charles the Iſt's Reign.

And that they ſhall enjoy all the Privileges any of their Predeceſſors had in the Reigns of King Edward the Confeſſor, and King William the Iſt and IId; of King Henry the Iſt, King Richard the Iſt, King John, and of King Henry the IIId, according to the Charters granted to them by thoſe Princes.

N. B. I believe no Charter before this extant in Writing.

And Perſons are prohibited to diſturb or moleſt them, or their Trade or Merchandize, under the Penalty of Ten Pounds.

But if there be any Defeat among their own Barons, as to the Exaction of Juſtice, then the Lord Warden may interpoſe, and ſet Things to Rights.

For theſe Privileges, they were to ſerve the King with Fifty Seven Ships for Fifteen Days, whenever he or his Succeſſors ſhould give them Notice that he wanted their Help; and this they were to do as their Annual and Plenary Service.

To them alſo is granted the Privilege of Ut fang theef, throughout all the Lands within their Liberties, as fully as ever it was granted to any Biſhops, Abbots, &c. in this County of Kent, not to be forced to attend the Aſſizes, Juries or Recognizances in the Foreign

Not to pay the uſual Cuſtom, or Certa Priſa, to the King, of one Hogſhead of Wine before, and another behind the Maſt, of Wines of their own.

To be free from Wardſhip, and Maritagium, or the Marriage of their Heirs, on account of the Tenure of their Lands, &c.

The Witneſſes to this Charter were.

Robert Portuenſis, Biſhop and Cardinal.
William de South, Prior Provincial of the Friers Preachers in England.
William de Valence, our Uncle.
Roger Mortimer.
Roger Clifford.
Walter Staniel, Dean of Sarum.
Robert de Scardeburgh, Archdeacon of East-Riding.
Robert de Sexton, Barthol. de Southley.
Thomas de Wayland, Walter de Hepton.
Thomas de Normannel, Stephen de Pencheſter.
Francis de Bonena, John de Lovetote.
John de Metingham, and others.

Given at Weſtminſter, in the 6th Year of our Reign.

But here is a Salvo of the Pleas of the Crown, relating to Life and Limb. Vid. Tower Records, 6. E. 1. M. 3.

Then another Charter of the ſame Prince is recited, in which, in Conſideration of the good Services of the Cinque-Ports, they are acquitted, De omnibus Tallagijs & Auxilijs de Corporibus Propriorum Navium ſuarum & earum auxilio preſtandum.

Et quod de legalibus Rebus & Mercimonijs quæ Ipſos infra Terram veſtram Hiberniæ debito modo emere contigerit, nullus ſit eorum particeps, againſt their Conſents.

And that all born within the Five Ports, though they have Lands and Tenements without them, ſhall be free from Wardſhip, and the Maritagium.

Dated at St. Albans, in the 26th Year of his Reign. Patent 26.

Then another Charter of the ſame Prince is recited:

Expreſſing that the Navy of the Ports being raiſed and maintained at a great Charge and Expence; for the future it appoints, that all Places and Perſons claiming the Privilege of the Ports, ſhall contribute towards it, according to their Ability.

This alſo is Dated from St. Albans, the ſame Year.

After this 'tis expreſſed, that their neglecting to uſe their Privileges at any Time paſt, ſhall not hinder or vacate their Right and Benefit of enjoying them for the Future; nor the Neglect of the Anceſtor, hinder or injure the Succeſſor.

Alſo Perſons living without the Ports, if they claim the Privilege, &c. ſhall contribute to the Charge of the Navy, and may be taxed thereto by the Ports, even for their Lands lying without. And becauſe ſome Words in ſome of the old Charters were ambiguous, all the cuſtomary Privileges that they ever did enjoy, are again

again confirmed to them, in as full Freedom as they ever were enjoy'd in Edward the Confeſſor, or King William the Iſt's Reign.

Nay, though abuſed by ſome Perſons, yet ſhall not be loſt to their Succeſſors.

And they may be amended by ſubſequent Mayors, Jurats, &c. whoſe new Ordinances ſhall oblige Poſterity.

Five Ports Charters.

See an Exemplification of all their Liberties, Privileges, Immunities, &c. in the Tower-Records. Pat. 33. E. 3. p. 3.

THEN in the Firſt Year of King Edward the IVth, was a new Charter granted to the Ports of ſeveral Privileges.

As that the Ports, and all their Members or Places annexed or united to them, and bearing any Contribution towards the Charge of the Navy, ſhall be free from all Panage, Pontage, Murage, Paſſage, Laſtage, Stallage, Tallage, Carriage, Priſage, Picage, Landage, Scot, and Gylde, Hidage, and Scutage, and Suit of Courts, and Hundred, and of Leyths of Hundred, Views of Frank-Pledge, and of all Rent to the Crown; and of Fines for Murder, and of common Amerciaments, whenever they ſhall happen; and before or by whatſoever Officers or Miniſters they ſhall be laid or taxed.

And to have all Waif, and Stray, and all Treaſure Trove, and Goods and Chatels called Maynor, or Man Opera.

Alſo all Goods of Felons, and all Fines thereon; and the Goods and Chatels of Exigents for Treaſon, or Felony, and of all Out-Laws, and Confiſcations.

And all Wreck of the Sea near their Ports.

And Power given them to ſeize Weiffs, and Strays, Goods of Manors, Felons, Exigents, or Outlaws, &c.

And to have all manner of Fines for Treſpaſſes, Offences, Concealments, Miſpriſions, Oppreſſions, Extortions, Negligence, Ignorance, Conſpirations, Regrators, Foreſtallers, Mayntenures, Ambidexters, Champtors, Faleit, Defect, Contempt, &c.

As alſo Fines for Licence to Accord.

And all Amerciaments, Redemptions, Iſſues, and Payments forfeited, and to be forfeited: And the Year and Day, Waſt and Strep.

To have alſo Thew, Stocks, Pillory, and Tumbrell, for the Puniſhment of Evil Doers.

To have alſo Leyzthe, and Leets, Lawdays, and all Profits thereunto belonging.

To have alſo all loſt Things found within their Liberties.

May ſet up Gallows, and execute Felons, and have Infangtheff, and Outfangtheff, according to the Cuſtom of the Ports.

Without Let or Impediment from the Lord Warden, or Conſtable of Dover Caſtle.

May hold all manner of Pleas, Actions, Real, Perſonal and Mixt; and to Attach and Impriſon, For Offences both on Sea and Land.

The Conſtable of Dover, Warden of the Ports, the Admiral, or any Lieutenants, or Deputies of any of them, not to intermeddle, unleſs in Default of Juſtice in the Mayor, Bailiff, or other proper Officers of any Port.

And the Warden only, may enter the Port, to do Juſtice on a Complaint or Petition.

The Ports to have all Pleas of the Crown, except Treaſon.

And in thoſe Caſes, the Warden ſhall call to him the Mayors, Bailiffs, &c. of the ſame Port, according to the Cuſtom of the ſaid Port uſed at Shipway, and there hear and determine the Matter.

None of their Barons, or Inhabitants, to be compelled to ſerve the King any where elſe, but in the Service of the Ports-Navy.

All Perſons in the Ports, or within their Liberties, contributing to the Charge of the Navy, to be free from all Aids, Subſidies, Tallages and Scots, payable to the Crown.

And from any Tenth, or Fifteenth, or ſuch like Tax, laid on Goods and Moveables, &c. And this (I think) held as long as the 3d of King Charles the Iſt; but how much longer I am not certain.

Not to ſerve on Juries, Attaints, Aſſiſes, or other Inquiſitions, without their Liberties.

Nor to be Taxors, or Aſſeſſors for the Fifteenth, or any ſuch Taxes, nor to ſerve any Office in the Foreign, as Conſtable, &c.

Nor ſhall they be compelled to go out of their Port.

In the 6th of King Henry the 7th, the Ports at a Getling, or Brothergield (as 'tis there called) now a Brotherhood, appointed Two Attorneys to give Security to the Crown, of One Thouſand Pounds, that they would never demand or claim above Five Hundred Pounds, as a Deduction from the Crown, towards their being charged for a whole Fifteenth, or Tenth, from which they had been formerly exempted by Charters.

This Bond was given, and the Crown agreed to it.

And Queen Elizabeth confirms it, in Conſideration of the great Charge the Ports were at, and the good Services they did againſt the Spaniards with their Navy, in the Years 1588, and 1596.

Then follows a large Confirmation of all their Privileges, &c.

Except the Grant of King Henry the VIth, under the Great-Seal, in the 25th Year of his Reign, to the Town of Feverſham, or of any Privilege therein-mentioned: For that Charter recites, that the Lord Warden had unduly exacted under the Name of Exemina, (New-Years-Gifts) divers Sums, ſome Years more, ſome leſs; ſometimes Two Thouſand Ales, (I ſuppoſe 'tis meant for Haleces) Herrings; ſometimes One Hundred Salt-Fiſh, called Greylings; ſometimes Ten Marks, at others Twelve; from all which that Town was exempted for the future by that King, and diſcharged. And at this Day they pay Forty Shillings per Annum for Contribution Money (as they call it, tho' for what, they know not) to Dover: Which as I gueſs, is in Lieu of theſe old Payments, or Perquiſites, to the Lord Warden.

Every Mayor, Bailiff, Recorder, Coroner, Common Clerk, Conſtable, and all Officers and Miniſters any where in the Liberties of the Ports, and all Juſtices of the Peace, muſt take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

Dated the 23d of December, in the 20th of King Charles the IId.

The Fine Twenty Pounds.

Privileges of the Ports.

THEY have, Time out of Mind, held a Court of Admiralty, and a Court of Chancery, in the Church of St. James's in Dover.

The Former of theſe being held for Matters of Juriſdiction, and for Maritime Cauſes done upon the Sea.

The latter for Cauſes of Equity, and Reformation of Erroneous Proceedings, and Default of Juſtice.

Theſe are either held by the Lord Warden in Perſon, by his Lieutenant, or by his Steward.

It appears by ſome Articles of Agreement between the Lord Warden and the Ports, in the 15th of Queen Elizabeth, That the Barons of the Ports had complained of, and oppoſed theſe Courts at Dover, as Illegal and Oppreſſive, and contrary to their Charters, Liberties and Cuſtoms, or at leaſt have been increaſed by Uſurpation, &c.

But then, by the Advice of Council on both Sides, for the Lord Warden, and for the Ports, they came to ſuch Articles of Agreement as are above-mentioned; whereby it was agreed,

1. That on every Third Thurſday, the ſaid Court of Chancery, and Admiralty, ſhall be held in St. James's Church in Dover, or where elſe the Lord Warden ſhall appoint; by either himſelf, or his Steward, or his Deputy; and that at each of theſe Courts every Year, the ſaid Learned Steward ſhall be in Perſon; and that theſe Courts be never kept by any Clerk, or Deputy, unleſs the Lord Warden appoint him.

Three Attornies, and no more, ſhall attend there, to be from Time to Time nominated by the Lord Warden only; ſworn to do right Things, and ſhall live within the Ports, or within Fourteen Miles of Dover.

2. That if any Suits, Actions, &c. ſhall be depending within any of the Five Ports, or their Members, by Plaint in any of their ordinary Courts; or Indictments, or Suits in Hundreds, or in any of their ſpecial Courts of Piepouldres, or by Letters of Proceſs for Withernam; to the Intent that the ordinary Proceſs of Certiorari, Corpus cum Cauſâ, Injunction, &c. ſhall not be removed or ſtaid upon any untrue Surmiſe, light or frivolous Cauſe, into the Chancery and Admiralty Courts aforeſaid, It is agreed,

(1.) That the Bill of Complaint of the Party grieved, ſhall be engroſſed in Parchment; containing ſuch ſufficient Matter, as by the Lord Warden, his Deputy, Steward, &c. ſhall be allowed; and alſo Endorſed, as ſufficient to give the Court Juriſdiction in that Cauſe; and expreſſing ſuch material Points as are contained in the ſaid Bill to be proved; whereupon ſuch Writs, and Proceſs of Certiorari, Corpus cum cauſa, Injunction, or other Proceſs, directed for removing of any ſuch Suit, by the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, or Learned Steward, or his Deputy, ſhall be Indorſed with their, or one of their Hands and Name, before the ſame Proceſs ſhall be Sealed; and the Party that exhibited the ſaid Bill of Complaint, ſhall alſo put in ſufficient Bonds, or Sureties, in the Office of the ſaid Court, to the Uſe of the Party againſt whom ſuch Proceſs ſhall be directed in the ſame; of the Value that is in Suit to be forfeited, if the ſaid Material by the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, or Learned Steward, or Deputy, or by one of them appointed to be proved, ſhall not be only proved in the Office of the ſaid Court within Fifteen Days next after the Teſt of ſuch Writ or Proceſs deliver'd; with which Writ, a Copy of the Bill of Complaint is to be ſent to the Head Officers in the ſaid Ports; for Default of which Obſervances, the ſame Suit to be diſmiſſed out of the ſaid Court clearly with a Procedendo, and that Suit to be no more removed or ſtayed.

And ſuch Writ, or Proceſs too, ſhall be made Returnable at the next Court after the Teſt of the ſame, for Stay of the ſaid Suit; and if the ſaid Points and Circumſtances in theſe Articles ſhall be obſerved, then the ſaid Suit in the Port or Member to ſtay, and the Record to be Certified, and the Writ and Proceſs to be obeyed, according to the Tenor of the ſaid Writ, or Proceſs, upon pain of Contempt; but if any of the ſaid Points or Circumſtances ſhall not duly be obſerved, then a Procedendo to be awarded, to proceed in the Court of the Port or Member, in and to which ſuch Proceſs ſhall be made, without any further Stay.

Item, It is agreed, That the like Order and Circumſtances be obſerved in any Proceſs to be granted for removing any Perſon committed to Ward within any of the Five Ports, or their Members; and for any particular Action, or Suit of any Perſon there, but for a Miſdemeanor, or Contempt of any Perſon done within the ſaid Ports, or Members, againſt any of the Magiſtrates of the ſaid Ports, or Member, or againſt any Commiſſioner of the ſame; which Perſon ſo committed, by his Bill of Complaint, if he affirmeth himſelf to be injuriouſly handled, then upon his Bill of Complaint Ingroſſed, Subſcribed, and the material Points Indorſed, as before is limited, before any Proceſs to remove the Body of any ſuch Perſon, there ſhall be ſent a Copy of the ſame Complaint, and of the Indorſement of the ſame, and delivered to the Head Officer of the Port, or Member, where the Impriſoned Perſon ſhall remain, incloſed in a Letter Sealed from the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant or Deputy; or his Learned Steward, or his Deputy; and if within Eight Days next after the Delivery of the ſaid Letter, or Copy, being verified by Affidavit in the ſaid Office, ſuch an Anſwer be not ſent and deliveted to the Lord Warden, Lieutenant, Deputy, or Learned Steward, or his Deputy, whereby he or they ſhall be ſatisfied, and underſtand that the Cauſe and Circumſtance of the Impriſonment is lawful and requiſite; that then, if Proceſs ſhall be after ſent, and by the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, Deputy, or the Learned Steward or his Deputy, or by one of them Indorſed, and with ſufficient Bond or Sureties put in, and all other due Circumſtances aforeſaid obſerved, the ſame is to be obeyed upon pain of Contempt, and Default of Juſtice; but until ſuch Copies and Letters be ſent and delivered, and the right Day after expired, upon Affidavit made, as aforeſaid; no incurring of any Contempt, or Default of Juſtice ſhall be, for detaining any ſuch Perſon in Ward.

Item, It is agreed, that if any Suit in the ſaid Court of Chancery, for Matter of Equity, ſhall be commenced, before any Plaint or Suit of that Cauſe ſhall be depending in the Port or Member, that in ſuch Cauſes ſufficient Bond ſhall be put in by the Party in the ſaid Office, in the Behalf of the Complainant, to yield ſuch Damages and Coſts, as by the ſaid Court of Chancery ſhall be anſwered, upon the hearing and demiſing of the ſame Cauſe, if it ſo ſhall be.

Item, It is agreed, if that Letters of Attendance ſhall come from the Court, or Office of the Caſtle of Dover, by way of Mandat, for executing or ſerving of any Proceſs out of any of the Courts of Weſtminſter, or Admiralty at London, or out of any other Foreign Courts, unleſs it be for the Sovereign, King or Queen, their own Cauſe, as a Party; or elſe upon Judgment of Outlawry, or elſe upon a Bond by Statute, or Recogniſance, Knowledge by the Party, or elſe upon Judgment of one of the Courts of Record of Weſtminſter, after the Party has anſwered in Perſon, or by Attournage in the Cauſe, or elſe ſuch other Writs, as by the Laws of this Realm are to be executed within the Ports; if any ſuch Cauſes be in the ſaid Proceſs, or Letter of Attendance, then the ſame is to be allowed and executed, or elſe to incur Pain and Contempt for default of Juſtice, and otherwiſe not.

Item, It is agreed, for any Offence done upon the Lands, or within any Haven, or Place within the Liberties of any of the ſaid Ports; that is not any Cauſe of Admiralty; but for ſuch Offences as be done in the main Sea, or out of the Havens or Peeres of any Liberties of the ſaid Ports, and after the Perſons came within the Liberties of the ſaid Ports, theſe are Marine Cauſes, and Cauſes of Admiralty.

Item, It is agreed, that in ſuch Cauſes of Admiralty, (virtute officij) if any Jury ſhall be Charged to enquire, it ſhall be within the Precinct of the Port, or Members Corporate, where the Thing was found or done, and not elſewhere; and by the Inhabitants of the ſame Port or Member Corporate, ſworn in Preſence of the Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, or the Learned Steward, his Deputy, or one of them, and of the Mayor, or Head Officer of the ſame Port, or Member Corporate, ſitting in the ſame Court.

Item, It is agreed, that if in any Admiralty Cauſe, any private Party ſhall preſent any Proceſs or Action from the ſaid Office of the Caſtle of Dover, firſt depending by Action in any of the Five Ports, or their Members corporate, that the like Bill of Complaint Subſcribed, and the ſame Bill, and the Proceſs alſo, ſhall be Indorſed, and Bond or Sureties ſhall be put in, in the Offices there, as in the Cauſe of Suits removing before is Articled; and that Order being obſerved, the ſame then to be appeared unto, and anſwered, as appertaineth: Under Contempt to be incurred, or elſe not.

Item, It is agreed, that in ſuch Cauſes of Admiralty of private Suits, the Defendant upon his Appearance, ſhall put in ſufficient Bond or Surety to the Uſe of the Party; Plaintiff, to ſatisfy the Demand of the Complaint, if it be adjudged againſt him.

Item, It is agreed, that if any Contempt or Default of Juſtice, according to the Tenor of theſe Articles, ſhall be found in any of the Head Officers of the ſame Ports or Members; that then upon Copies of Subpœna or Injunction, directed to the Officer, delivered to the known Meſſengers, appointed from the Caſtle of Dover, if the ſaid Officer ſhall not at the next Court holden at St. James's Church, perſonally appear, and refuſe to be bound to abide the Order of the ſaid Port: That then ſuch Fine ſhall be ſet upon the ſaid Head Officer, as by the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, or his Learned Steward or his Deputy ſhall be thought meet. But any Mayor, Bailiff, or Jurat, or other Head Officers, not to be committed to the Marſhal's Ward to be kept in Priſon, unleſs it be for ſome Contempt or Miſdemeanor done in the preſence of the ſaid Court, at St. James's Church, or Admiralty Court, or for not performing ſome Decree or Judgment made againſt him, in the Preſence of the Lord Warden, or his Lieutenant, or Learned Steward, or his Deputy.

Item, It is agreed concerning any of the ſaid Suits, which ſhall happen in any of the ſaid Courts of Chancery, or Admiralty; if any Suit for the ſame Cauſe ſhall be attempted for, or depending in the Chancery Court of Weſtminſter for Depredations in ſuch wiſe that the Defendant at St. James's Church, ſhall be compelled to appear and anſwer in any of the ſaid Courts at Weſtminſter or London, and ſhall not upon his Appearance in the ſame Suit be there diſcharged by means of the ſaid Lord Warden, his Lieutenant, or Learned Steward, or his Deputy; or of his own Counſel for them, from and after ſuch foreign Appearance to compel, or try the Defendant in the ſaid Cauſe and Suit in the ſaid Courts, or either of them, he ſhall be (ipſo facto) properly diſmiſſed and diſcharged, ſo that for one Counſel there ſhall not be double Depredation in Two Courts.

Item, As concerning Wrecks of the Sea, happening within the Liberties of the ſaid Ports, and finding Goods in the Sea, brought within the Liberties of the ſaid Ports, in Right belonging to the ſaid Barons of the ſaid Five Ports, it is by Conſent ordered, That ſo much as is of the Goods of any Inhabitants in the ſaid Ports wrecked or found, ſhall remain wholly in themſelves: But if the ſame be the Goods of any other, then, by like Conſent, the Lord Warden to have the one Moiety, and the Finders or Savers of the ſaid Wreck or Findall, to have the other Moiety. The ſame to be enquired and ſearched for, by one Officer appointed by the Lord Warden, and another appointed by the Mayor or Head Officer of the Port or Member corporate, where the ſaid Goods ſhall be brought; and if upon Search or Examination it ſhall be found, that any Thing is concealed, that the Party ſo concealing, ſhall loſe ſuch Part or Share, as to him ſhall belong; and alſo ſhall forfeit and pay the Value of the Things ſo concealed.

And that the Goods ſo wrecked and found, and to be divided, ſhall not be carried out of the Port, or Member Corporate, where the ſame is brought, but there to be divided in the Preſence of the ſaid Officers, appointed by the ſaid Lord Warden, and of the Head Officer of the ſaid Port or Member Corporate.

And that no Perſon inhabiting within the ſaid Port, ſhall be impriſoned for and concerning any ſuch Wreck or Findall Goods, till for his Miſdemeanor in that behalf, he ſhall be judged by Inquiſition; or elſe that the Miſdemeanor ſhall be adjudged worthy of Impriſonment, by the Declaration and Order of the ſaid Lord Warden, or his appointed Officer, and of the ſaid Head Officer of the ſaid Port or Member Corporate; or till upon Action or Suit againſt ſuch Party, there ſhall be a Sentence or Judgment given, or had againſt the ſaid Party.

Item, Concerning ſuch Shipwrecks and other Goods, which by Tempeſt or other Misfortune of the Sea, ſhall be brought to ſpoil, but ſome Perſons ſaved, ſo that it is no lawful Wreck, then if the ſame Misfortune happen without the Haven or Peer of any of the ſaid Ports or Members, and be not the Goods of any Inhabitants of the ſaid Port or their Members, the ſafe keeping and order for the Reſtitution of the ſame to the Owners, ſhall be to the Lord Warden, or his known Officers appointed; ſaving to the Finders there, reaſonable Shares, or other Satisfaction, ſo as the Towns of every of the ſaid Ports, and Members and every Perſon of the ſame not meddling therewith, be diſcharged by the ſaid Lord Warden.

Item, That the Fees of every Writ of Proceſs of Certiorari, or Corpus cum Cauſa, or Subpœna, or the Fee of the Attorney, before theſe joins, be Three Shillings and Two-Pence; and that at every Court beſides, that the ſame Cauſe ſhall here depend on Injunction, to the Clerk there ſhall be Two Shillings and Six-Pence, and no more; and the Clerk for the Copy Twelve-Pence, and no more; to have Four-Pence for every Sheet, and the Town Clerks for Copies of Record, removed upon Proceſs of Certiorari, Four-Pence a Sheet, beſides the Fee of Five Shillings for allowing the ſame written Proceſs. And all other Fees touching the ſaid Courts or Officers there to be as are and have been uſed; that is to ſay, to the Marſhal for Five of his Irons, Thirteen Shillings and Four-Pence; and for the Party's Diet for every Week, if he be of Countenance or Hability, Ten Shillings; and to the Clerk of the Caſtle, Two Shillings and Five-Pence; and to the Porter, at the Entry of ſuch Perſons committed, Two Shillings and Six-Pence.

Item, It is further agreed, That after Judgment ſhall be had in any Actions or Suits, in any of the Five ſaid Ports, or their Members, that the ſame Record, not to removed by any Proceſs, nor any Perſon in Execution, to be removed out of Execution.

Item, As concerning Returns of Exchequer Proceſs, which being wholly directed to the Lord Warden, and at the Caſtle of Dover delivered, and from the ſaid Caſtle ſent down to the ſeveral Ports, where they are to be ſerved, and from the ſame ſeveral Ports being removed up to the Caſtle, according to the Quality of the Cauſe, the ſame Proceſs be from the ſaid Caſtle of Dover returned up to the Exchequer: And thereupon many Fines are oftentimes ſet in the Exchequer, or upon the Lord Warden; Sometimes for Inſufficiency of Returns, ſometimes for Untruth, and for not performing of the ſaid Returns; the Defaults whereof are by the ſaid Barons of the Ports imputed to the Clerk of the Office of the Caſtle of Dover, appointed by the ſaid Lord Warden, and his appointed Clerks, the Default thereof is imputed to the Barons of the Five Ports, for the Returns of the Execution of the ſame Perſons: For Remedy whereof it is agreed, that upon Returns of the ſame Writs to the Caſtle of Dover, the Copies of the ſame Returns ſhall be alſo in Paper ſent to the Caſtle of Dover, and upon the ſame Copies examined, the ſaid Clerk of the Caſtle to ſubſcribe his Name, and deliver it to remain with the Ports or Members from whence the Returns come: And if an Amercement ſhall after be ſent in the Exchequer, for any ſuch Returns, which upon Examination ſhall appear to be truly made in Subſtance, according as it came from the Port, the Port then to bear the Amercement, if any ſuch Cauſe ſhall be ſet; but if any Variance be in Subſtance, from the Returns made by the Ports, or Member, then the ſaid Lord Warden, or his appointed Clerk, to bear the ſame Amercement.

Item, It is agreed, that all such Decrees and Ordinances as have been made at the Assembly, or Brothergilde House of Romney, within Four Years last past, touching or concerning any Office or Jurisdiction of the Lord Warden, or any Persons, or Appearance concerning the same Court at St. James's in Dover, or Dover Castle, or Servants of the said Lord Warden, in respect next Brothergilde to be holden at Romney aforesaid.

Item, It is finally agreed, That if any further or other Question or Controversy hereafter shall be moved, between the said Lord Warden, concerning his Office or Jurisdiction, and the Barons of the Ports for the Time being, concerning their Charters, Customs, and Abilities; or if any Doubt or Question shall arise or grow for any Articles or Things in these Ports beforementioned, or touching or concerning the same; or that any Thing shall be thought meet to be increased or withdrawn, as Experience by Proof shall give Occasion, that then the same to be ordered by the Lord Warden, and Two of every of the Seven Towns of the Ports to attend on his Lordship, or the most Part of the same Fourteen Persons.

Provided always, That after the Death of the now Lord Warden, or during the Time that he shall not remain Lord Warden, all and every the said Articles and Agreements to be void.

Provided also, That nothing herein contain'd to be any President, or to make any Conclusion to any the said Barons, or their Successors, for them to be bound to allow or to give a Pretence to any Jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancerie or Admiralty, more then hath been used or of Right ought to be, and more than is by his Absence, during the Lord Warden's Life that now is, now allowed, accorded, or agreed on.

Provided also, That Pirates Goods shall remain to the said Lord Warden, until by Law the same be found to belong to the said Barons; and that then, and afterwards, the one Moiety to the said Barons.

Provided also, That for Injustice done by the Lieutenant, or the Learned Steward, or the Deputy aforesaid, in the said Court, or either of them, remedied and redressed, may be followed by Suit to the Lord Warden or otherwise, as by Learned Counsel shall be thought good.

In Witness whereof, and for the full Corroboration of all and singular the Articles, Orders, and Resolutions and Agreements indented, contain'd, and here specified, as well the said Lord Warden, to either part indented hereof has caused his Seal of Arms to be affixed; as also the said Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, and other the Barons of the said Five Ports, Two ancient Towns and their Members, to either Part; likewise hereof the common Seal of every the said Five Ports, and Two Ancient Towns, have procured to be set the Day and Year first above written.

From an Old Manuscript Charge given by the Steward of the Court of Shipway, and communicated to me by Sir Basil Dixwell, I find these Heads of Enquiry and Punishments for Offences within the Ports.

1. IF any one within the Liberty of the Ports, on the Sea or Sea-Bank, hath robb'd, slain, or taken any Liege Man of the King, or any other with whom he hath taken Liege or Truce, or granted safe Conduct or Protection; he shall be fined at the King's Pleasure, or suffer Death after the Discretion of the Lord Admiral of the Ports, according as the Offence requires.

2. If any one rob or steal Ship, Boat, Net, Rope, Cord, Anchor, Buoy, or any other Goods, to the Value of 20 d. he shall be hang'd.

3. If any one hath succoured any Enemy of the King with Arms, Victuals, &c. he shall be hang'd.

4. If any Jurat sworn to enquire into the Admiralty Quest, have disclosed the King's Council, his Fellows, and his own, he shall be had to the next Port, where his Offence is to be proclaimed; and next unto the Sea there, where it Ebbs and Flows; and there to be bound Hand and Foot to a Post or Stake, his Throat to be cut, and his Tongue drawn thro' that Hole out of his Head.

5. If any one hath found any Flotson or Jetson Goods, or any Goods which are found sunk down to the Bottom of the Sea, which are called Bagayn, of which the proper Owner cannot be found; and the Lord Admiral is not satisfied of the Moiety, he shall lose his own Part in the Goods, and be fined for the Value of the other Moiety, at the Discretion of the Admiral.

6. If any one hath found the Body of a dead Man on the Sea or Shore, and hath not delivered whatsoever Jewels, Money, or Goods were found about him, unto the Lord Admiral; which hath the Priminers in Disposition of the said Goods, for the Soul of the dead Body; he shall be fined to the Value of the Goods, and also punished in Prison for the same.

7. If any one be arrested to do the King's Service, and he disobey or break the Rest, he shall be committed to Prison, and there kept in Irons, till he pay a Fine set him at the Pleasure of the Admiral.

8. If any Man carry Merchandize of the Staple to any Place beyond the Sea, not customed, or any to the Staple, without the King's special License, he shall be fined to the Value of the Goods.

9. If any Man resist the Authority of the Lord Warden or Admiral, in the Execution of Justice, he shall be punished as for Rebellion.

10. If any Man hath carried any Wool, Woolfels, Lead, Tin, Copper, or any other Merchandize of the Staple, to any Place beyond the Sea, though it be customed then only to the Staple, without the King's special License, he shall be fined to the Value of the Goods.

11. If any Man foresta or regrate any Victuals, Corn, &c. coming to any Port to make sale, he shall be imprisoned for half a Year, and fined to the Value of the Victuals, Corn, &c. so brought.

12. If any one implead another, any where but only in the Court of the Lord Warden or Admiral, in Causes and Matters belonging to this Court; he shall withdraw the Suit at his own Cost, satisfy the Party aggrieved, and have a great Fine set on him besides.

13. If any one receive knowingly, any Felons or Outlaws on Board his Ship, or any Goods Goods belonging to them, with a Deſign to carry them beyond Sea, he ſhall forfeit his Ship to the Lord Warden, and pay a Fine to the Value of the Goods.

14. If any one cut off the Buoy of any Anchor, and the Ship or Boat thereby be ſunk, wrecked or loſt, he ſhall be hanged.

15. If any Man hire a Foreign Ship, when he might have an Engliſh one, he ſhall be fined at the Pleaſure of the Lord Warden and Admiral.

16. If any Shipwright exact more than the lawful and uſual Wages, he ſhall be fined at the Pleaſure of the Lord Warden.

17. If a Ship be loſt by the Fault of any Boatman, he ſhall make Satisfaction to the Party injured, and then have his Head ſtruck off on Board a Ship.

18. If any Man raiſe a Fray, ſo that Blood-ſhed be there committed, he ſhall forfeit 15 Shillings, which ſhall be levied on his Goods.

19. If any Man uſe unlawful or falſe Weights or Meaſures, he ſhall be grievouſly amerc'd; and thoſe Weights and Meaſures burnt.

20. If a Man find any Ship or Boat driving on the Sea, without any living Creature in it, and don't in a Day and a half's time deliver it to the Lord Warden, ſo that he may have his Share, which is the moſt Part, he ſhall pay the whole Value of the Thing found, and be fined beſides at the Diſcretion of the Lord Warden.

21. If any Man receive, keep, or conceal any Goods belonging to the Lord Warden and Admiral, he forfeits the Value of them, and ſhall be fined beſides, at the Diſcretion of the Lord Warden.

22. If any Man ſteal any Thing under the Value of 21 d. for the firſt Time, he is to be impriſoned 40 Days; for the ſecond, 6 Months; and for the third, to be hanged.

23. If any Man in a Fray hath hurt or maimed another, he ſhall make the injured Perſon Recompence, and pay a Fine of 5 l. to the Lord Warden; or elſe ſuffer ſuch other Puniſhment as he ſhall appoint.

24. If any Man take more than he ought for anchorage of any Ship, he ſhall pay a grievous Fine, at the Pleaſure of the Lord Warden.

25. If any Officer or Ruler within the Ports, do proclaim any Ordinance, not beneficial to the ſaid Ports, he ſhall be impriſoned for Six Months.

26. If any Man throw Ballaſt, &c. out of his Boat or Ship, to the Damage of any Haven or Channel in the Ports, he ſhall be fined at the Will of the Lord Warden.

27. If any Man lay Claim to any Goods wreck'd on the Sea, and can't make out his Title by the King's Charter or Preſcription, he ſhall be fined to the double of the Goods.

28. If any one ſet up a Mill on any Stream or flat Water, to the Prejudice of any Haven, Road, &c. he ſhall pull the Mill down, and be fined at the Will of the Lord Warden.

29. If any Man take Oyſters or Muſcles between May 1. and September 14. or if he take young Fry of Fiſh with Nets, which have their Holes or Mokes too ſtrait or narrow, he ſhall pay a grievous Fine at the Will of the Lord Warden.

30. If any one fiſh for Plaice or Soals with Nets, whoſe Maſhes or Mokes are leſs than five Inches, all ſuch Nets ſhall be forfeited, and be fined at the Diſcretion of the Lord Warden.

31. If any one hath drawn or fiſhed for Soals or Plaice, before March 15. or after November 1. he ſhall forfeit 40 s. for every Offence.

32. Or if he fiſh after Sun-ſetting, or before Sun-riſing, and won't ſuffer the Fiſh quietly to enjoy their Night's Feed.

33. If any Man fiſh in the Sea with any Tuck-Nets, Marvel-Nets, or Shot-Nets, whoſe Maſhes or Mokes are leſs than Three lawful Inches.

34. If any Man take any Royal large Fiſhes, as Whales, Thourls, Pole, Porpeſs, &c. and don't give half to the Lord Warden, he ſhall forfeit the Value of the whole, and be fined beſides at the Diſcretion of the Lord Warden.

From the Manuſcripts above-mentioned, communicated to me by Sir Baſil Dixwell, It appears alſo,

BY a Letter from the Earl of Northampton, Lord Warden of the Five Ports, dated July 18. 1601. and directed to John Packnam, Clerk of Dover Caſtle, in order to be ſent to the Gueſtling at Romney, That ſome Members of the Ports had ſued others in the Courts above at Weſtminſter; which he ſaith is a calling in Queſtion the Validity of their Charter and Privileges; whereby they are and have been, Time out of Mind, exempted from appearing in any of the Courts at Weſtminſter (againſt their Wills) except when eſpecially called out by the Lord Warden's Warrant. He orders his Officers to impriſon all Perſons Inhabitants of the Ports and commencing ſuch Suits, in the Caſtle of Dover, till they ſhall pay 10 l. for every ſuch Offence, or be particularly diſcharged by Warrant from the Lord Warden.

Which Forfeiture of 10 l. had been appointed by a Gueſtling held at Romney July 22d and 42. of Queen Elizabeth. And one half of it was to go to the Uſe of the Five Ports; the other to the Party aggrieved.

It was ordered alſo, That if any ſuch Perſon proceed on in the Suit, he ſhall forfeit another 10 l. And any Mayor or Bailiff that ſhall refuſe or neglect to levy the ſaid Fines or Forfeitures, ſhall pay 20 l. to be levied on him by Proceſs of Withernam, as ſuch like Penalties have been uſually levied.

SUCH as living out of the Ports had yet the Privilege of Freemen there, and who contributed to all Charges of the Ports, formerly were called Advocants; but the Ports complained a good while ago, that theſe were continually diminiſhing.

The Ports uſed, till hindred and oppoſed by the Merchants of London, to trade into all Parts beyond the Seas; ſo that the Cuſtoms of Sandwich alone have amounted to 16000 or 17000 l. per Ann. And 'tis likely that great Cuſtoms were then then paid at Dover: For in Queen Elizabeth's Time the Cuſtoms of Dover uſually amounted to between 2 and 3000 l. per Ann.

In King Edward the IVth's Reign, there were 1500 Mariners living in Sandwich.

In the 1ſt Year of King James the Iſt, Sandwich paid 2926 l. 8 s. 4 d.

In the Militia Act of King Charles the IId there is a Proviſion made, that the Inhabitants of the Five Ports, &c. ſhall be charged to find Arms there, for the whole Eſtate they have in any other Part of the County; which no doubt was deſigned as an Encouragement for Men to live in the Ports, and alſo to ſtrengthen the Militia upon the Sea Coaſts.

In the laſt of the Three Acts of Parliament in King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, which provided for the Rebuilding of Houſes fallen down or gone to decay in Ancient Towns and Cities, the Five Ports and their Members were inſerted: And in this Act, which was in the 33d Year of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, it was enacted, That if the Owner of the Ground did not rebuild in ſuch a ſet Time, the Lord of the Manor might enter, poſſeſs, and build on it as his own: And in caſe of his Neglect, after a Time allotted, the Corporation might rebuild the Houſes, and enjoy them and the Land for ever: But then the Land allotted to each Houſe, was not to exceed one Acre. And if the Corporation drop the Time allowed them, then the Owner and his Heirs might re-enter and poſſeſs, as before any ſuch Forfeitures.

An Explication of ſuch of the Old Terms as have any Difficulty in them, which occur in the Charters of the Cinque Ports, in the Order as they are mentioned there.

1. Thelonium is the Toll paid in any Market for Goods Bought or Sold; from which Duty in any City or Market, the Ports were acquitted: And if Toll were claimed of them, a Writ lies, called Breve eſſendi quieti de Thelonio.

2. Conſuetudo: They were free from all Conſuetudines, viz. Laſtage, Tallage, &c. This Word therefore here ſignifies Cuſtom, Import, or Duty, in general.

3. Laſtagium: This ſome will have to be a Cuſtom paid for Wares ſold by the Laſt; which is a Burden or Bundle, but very various in Weight and Meaſure, as a Laſt of Hides or Skins is Twelve Dozen; of Herrings Twenty Cades, or Ten Thouſand.

But Laſtage alſo is a Cuſtom in ſome Fairs and Markets, paid to carry Things where one will; and in which Senſe I rather underſtand it here; elſewhere in the Charter the Ports are made Laſtage-free.

4. Tallagium: This ſignifies any kind of Tax, which the Saxons called Tallys: And thence the barbarous Latin Word Talliare, to Tax. Talligier in our Chaucer, is a Tax-gatherer, or Collector of Toll.

5. Paſſagium, was a Tribute or Toll paid by Paſſengers for the Repair of ſome Road or Paſſage, like our Turnpike-Money.

6. Carriagium: This I take to have been a Tribute or Toll to be paid (in particular) for Carts and Carriages, as Paſſage in general was for Men, and Horſes.

7. Rivagium was a Toll or Duty paid on Rivers for the Paſſage of Boats or Veſſels.

8. Apontagium: This Word I gueſs to be wrong written; and that in the Charter it was deſigned, that they ſhould be quieti à Pontagio; that is, free from Pontage. Pontagium being a Toll or Duty paid by Paſſengers going over a Bridge. Some call this Freedom à Pontagio Pontem Liberum.

9. Wrec: The Words are ab Omni Wrec; and afterwards they are made Wrec-free. That is, they are exempt from the Forfeiture of Shipwracked Goods and Veſſels to the King.

10. Et de tota Venditione Achato & Rechato. I put theſe together, becauſe I fancy they will ſerve to explain one another, and ſignify in general, all manner of Buying and Selling. Achat in the French Language, is any manner of Emption, or Bargain bought; and therefore Rechat may well enough be ſuppoſed to mean a Sale of ſuch a Bargain bought, to another. And then the Meaning of the whole will be, that they were made perfectly free Buyers and Sellers of any Goods and Merchandiſes any where within the King's Dominions.

11. Sacca. Sac, is a Privilege to take Cogniſance of Cauſes either Criminal or Civil within their own Courts, or within the Soca, or Juriſdiction; and to ſet Mulcts, receive Forfeitures, &c.

12. Sococ, Soc, Soke, is a Power to compel Men living within their Soke, or Liberty, to plead in their Courts. And therefore Men ſo living within a certain Liberty or Juriſdiction, were called the Socmanna of that Liberty.

13. Toll, or Tholl; this now differs from the Thelonium above-mentioned; for by that Expreſſion they were acquitted from paying Toll in other Markets, but hereby they are empowered to demand it in their own.

14. Them, Tem, Theam, and Teme: The Privilege, or Royalty of having, reſtraining and judging Bondmen, Neifs, Villains, &c. with their Children, Goods and Chatels; and alſo the having both a Civil and Coercive Power over all ſuch as are within their Liberty.

15. Infangthef: The Privilege to judge any Thief taken within their Liberty; as, Outfangthef, was the Privilege of trying any one dwelling within the Liberty, for Theft committed without the Bounds of it.

16. Leve-Copefree: So 'tis written, but I think it ſhould be rather Lot-Copefree.

Cope, as Mr. Manlove, in his Treatiſe of the Laws and Liberties of Mints, (ſignifies a Hill, hence our Word Coped) was a Cuſtom or Duty paid to the King in ſome Parts of Devonſhire, out of the Lead Mines; his Words are theſe,

Egreſs and Regreſs to the King's Highway,
The Miners have, and Lot and Cope they pay.

But the Ports were made Lot-Copefree; and therefore if ſuch a Mine had been diſcovered within their Liberty, would have paid no Cope-Money.

17. Penn

17. Penn and Strond at Great-Yarmouth. Theſe Words I take to imply a Liberty of going into the Penn or Harbour of Yarmouth with their Veſſels, and lying quietly there on the Strand, when the Tide was out. For when Water is kept or pent up in a Mill-pond, or Fiſh-pond, by a Dam, or Bank; that part of the Sluice uſually made there to ſue it, or let it out, is called the Pen-Stock.

All theſe Words are in their firſt Charter of the 6th of King Edward the Iſt. Twenty Years after they had another reciting the ſame; but adding the Word,

18. Maritagium, by which they were freed from à Maritagio, or from the King's diſpoſing of their Heireſſes in Marriage; and ſometimes 'tis expreſſed by habere Maritagium; that is, to have the Privilege of marrying their Heireſſes, without asking the King's Conſent.

In the 1ſt of King Edward the IVth, a new Charter was granted, with ſome new Terms in it: As,

19. Pannage, ſome write it Pawnage, and Paſnage, Patnage, Pathnage, and Pennage; it ſignifies the Maſt which Swine feed on in the Woods; and here no doubt, was the being free from any Duty to be paid to the King for Pennage, or feeding their Swine in his Royal Wood the Weald, or Wild.

20. Murage; here a Freedom from being taxed towards the Repair of any Publick Walls. But it alſo ſometimes ſignifies a Liberty granted to a Town, to collect Money to build or repair its own Walls.

21. Stallage, a Duty paid for pitching of Stalls in any Fair or Market; as,

22. Piccage is Money paid for breaking up the Ground to faſten the Poles of the Booth, or Stall.

23. Priſage, is the Cuſtom due to the King out of Prizes taken at Sea.

24. Landage, I take to be a Duty paid for Landing or Unlanding of Goods upon a Key, or ſome ſuch proper Place.

25. Scott in general, ſignifies each Perſons proper Part or Portion of any Cuſtomary Payment. But I believe here it ſignifies that certain Cuſtom or Tallage which was paid to the Sheriff, or his Bailiffs, from which the Ports Men were freed.

26. Gylde, Gild, or Geld, from the Saxon Geld, here ſignifies a Tribute or Tax; and probably was that kind of Preſtation, which Crompton in his Juriſdictions, Fol. 191, ſhews anciently to have been within the Foreſts; which was wont to be made for gathering of Sheaves of Corn, of Lamb and of Wool, to the Uſe of the Foreſters.

The Ports had alſo the Privilege of being a Gild, or as it was afterwards written, a Guild; that is, a Fraternity, Society, or Community of Men, who gelded or paid all common Charges out of a common Stock; and had beſides, all the Franchiſes of a Court-Leet, and Court-Baron. The Members of ſuch a Gild, or Company, are often in our old Books called Gildones, and Congildones; and they uſed to hold their Gilden, or publick Feaſt, in ſome great Room or Hall, which hence was called the Guild-Hall; or as the Citizens of London now pronounce it, by an uſual Change of the Saxon g into ȳ, the Yeild-Hall.

27. Hidage, was a Tax of ſo much Money on every Hide of Land, on an extraordinary Occaſion.

28. Scutage, was a Tax of the like Nature, and on ſuch Occaſions impoſed on every Scutum Militare, or Knights Fee; whence the Name Scutage.

29. Waifs, Weyſes, Wavia, are Goods which a Thief drops, or throws away in his Flight, upon a Purſuit.

30. Strays, I ſuppoſe are Cattel, which having ſtraid away from their proper Place, have been Impounded their proper Time, and not claimed by any Right Owner; theſe and the Waifs above-mentioned, their Charter gives to the Ports.

31. Treaſure-Trove, is Treaſure found hidden in the Earth; which according to the Law of England, belongs to the King, and is here granted to the Ports, if found within their Liberties.

32. Maynors, or Manopera; Goods taken upon a Thief when he is apprehended; which likewiſe by their Charter the Ports had, if the Thieves were taken within their Liberties.

And among the ſeveral Fines which were granted to them, and allowed them to take for Offences, Treſpaſſes, &c. theſe Words occur, of leſs known Signification.

33. Regrators; Theſe are Ranked with Foreſtallers of Markets in the Charter; and anciently were ſuch as buy Wares, eſpecially Victuals, with a Deſign to enhaunce the Price. But now they are thoſe who buy Wares, and ſell them again in the ſame Market, or Fair, or within Five Miles thereof; in the 5th of Edward the Iſt, Cap. 14. and 5th of Elizabeth the 12th, and 13th of Elizabeth the 25th. The Fines which were paid for ſuch Offences, were given to the Ports by their Charter.

34. Ambidextors: They had alſo the Fines which were paid by ſuch Jurors, or Embraſors, as took Money of both Parties for the giving of their Verdicts: The Forfeiture was Decies Tantum; Ten times as much as they took.

35. Champtors, or rather Champertors: i. e. Such as are guilty of Champerty; or of maintaining any Suit for the Reward or Benefit of having a Part in what is recovered. The Fine for which Offence they had alſo.

Next to this follows the Word,

36. Faleit; which is followed by Defect, Contempt, &c. what the particular Meaning of it is, I can't determine; but it ſeems to ſignify ſome Cheat, or falſe Dealing, which was Puniſhable and Fineable.

They had granted them alſo,

37. Year and Day, Waſt and Strep; which is the Profits of their Lands for a Year and a Day, who have been attainted of Petty Treaſon, or Felony;

Felony; the Two laſt Words are added, to ſhew that in the end the King, or to whomſoever he ſhall grant this Privilege, may waſt the Tenements, deſtroy the Houſes, ſtrip the Woods of their Timber Trees, root up the Under-woods, ſpoil the Gardens, plow up the Meadows, &c. See Stamford's Prorogat. Cap. 16. Fol. 44.

They were allowed alſo to ſet up theſe Inſtruments of Puniſhment.

38. Thewe, which is a Cucking-Stool for Scolds. And it ſeems as if,

39. Tumbrell were a Puniſhment of the like Nature as the Cucking-Stool, only perhaps it was more ſevere; and it was uſed for cheating Brewers and Bakers, who were in ſuch a Stool let down into a Jakes, or ſome naſty ſtinking Water, and there daubed over Head and Ears.

40. Leyzthe: This I gueſs to ſignify Law-Days, by the Company 'tis in.

41. Mundriche, was a Privilege granted them to raiſe Banks and Mounds upon any Perſons Lands whatſoever, in order to Fence againſt the Inundations of the Sea.

42. They had alſo a Grant of Flotſom, Jetſom, and Witſom.

Flotſom, or rather Flotſon, is Shipwrack'd Goods found actually floating on the Sea.

Jetſon, are Goods caſt out of a Ship when ſhe is in danger of being wrecked; and being carried to Shore by the Waves, are actually found lying there.

Witſom, Philpot ſaith, are Goods driven on Shore, though there had been no viſible Wreck in a good while before; whence they were ſtiled Goods of God's Mercy; and they are now called God's Goods.

But I doubt he is wrong in his Etimology, to derive it from Wite; I'm ſure he is in the Signification of that Word, which in the Saxon is Puniſhment, and not Mercy. And indeed it was another Privilege of the Ports to be,

Witefree; that is, free from Fines and Amercements.

Before I proceed to the Reaſons of the Decay of the Trade, and Riches of the Ports, it will be proper for me to ſay a Word or Two here, about their Court of Shipway, though I have already mentioned it before under that Word; and of an Article or Two more relating to the Privileges of the Cinque-Ports.

The Portmote, or Parliament of the Ports, was anciently held at Shipway, where they puniſhed the Infringers of their Liberties; and amerced ſuch Inhabitants of the Ports, or of their Members, who commenced Suits in other Courts. Here alſo they had Authority by Royal Conceſſion, to make By-Laws and Ordinances, for the common Good and Benefit of the Ports, and for the better regulating the Herring Fiſhery at Yarmouth. And to this Court of Shipway, Appeals lay from all the ſubordinate Courts within the Liberties of the Cinque Ports.

Here alſo, anciently, the Lord Warden took his Oath. And Lambard ſaith, that there were Five Principal Points, concerning the Ports, which were determinable at Shipway only; viz. Treaſon againſt the King, falſifying the Coin, Services withdrawn, falſe Judgment given, and Treaſure Trove. But after Cauſes began to be withdrawn from hence to Dover, this Place ſoon fell into Decay and Obſcurity.

The Ports did anciently ſend Seven of of their Barons (or Inhabitants) as Bailiffs to Yarmouth in Norfolk. But in ſome time the Number was reduced to Four; Two of which were ſent to ſee Juſtice and Right done among the Portſmen in their Fiſhery upon the Coaſts; then they ſometimes ſtaid there Forty Days. But at laſt the Number was but Two Bailiffs, and their Time of Stay but Twenty Days.

On the Vigil of St. Michael, the Bailiffs of the Barons of the Ports, with their general Banner, or Enſign diſplayed before them, ride on Horſeback into Yarmouth, to the Houſe provided for them, where they are received by the Magiſtrate of the Place; and they have attending upon them theſe Officers, a Regiſter, and Three Serjeants; one of the Banner, another of the Horn, and the Third of the Mace. The Second is called Serjeant of the Horn, becauſe very anciently their Moots and Publick Aſſemblies were ſummoned by Sound of a Horn; on which Account ſome have ſaid their Tenure was by Cornage.

The Barons, or Inhabitants of the Ports, claim alſo by Cuſtom and Preſcription, Vid. Old Book of Entries, Fol. 72. b. to ſupport the Four Staves of the Canopy, which at a Coronation is carried over the Sovereign's Head, and after that to Dine at the uppermoſt Table in the Hall, at the King's Right Hand. When the Coronation Day is fixed, Thirty Two Barons of the Ports are ſummon'd by Writ, at Twenty Days Warning, to provide themſelves Scarlet Robes, or of Purple in Grain at their own Coſt. But the Charge of their Journey to London, and of their Subſiſtence there is born by the Ports. And the Canopy, its Staves, Bells, &c. is their Fee.

At King James the Iſt's Coronation, the Thirty Two Barons were Summoned, but the King found the Scarlet for their Robes, which I ſuppoſe hath been done ever ſince. And they now uſually depute their Members of Parliament, or ſome Perſons of Eminence in the Ports for this honourable Service, who gladly take off all Charges from the Ports for their own Attendance in London.

The ſeveral Ports, Two Ancient Towns, &c. have ſeveral different Cuſtumals of their own; though it hath been ſaid that there is a General one for all of them, but I could never meet with any ſuch Thing. And I have been informed, that by the Advice of the Judges, and Learned in the Law, ſeveral Meetings were held about reducing all their Cuſtumals into one reformed and uniform. But that at a Brotherhood, every Port refuſed it; each liking its own Cuſtumal beſt, and ſo the Deſign came to nothing.

This Brotherhood, or Gueſtling, as they call it from the Saxon Geſt, is held Annually and uſually at Romney, on the Tueſday after St. Margaret's-Day, and to it come authorized under the Common Seal, Five or Six Men from each Town of the Ports, to conſult about ſuch Matters as tend to the common Good of the Ports.

A Manuſcript I met with at Sandwich, dates their making Rules or By-Laws in theſe Brotherhoods, for the Benefit of all the Ports, to have no earlier a Date than King Henry the VIIth's Reign: And ſaith, That before that Time their Gueſtlings only were held to ſettle the the Affair of the Yarmouth Fiſhery; and perhaps ſome Matters touching their General Charter. The Charge of renewing which, is to be born, one Part by Haſtings and Rye, and Winchelſea; another by Dover and Romney; and the Third by Sandwich and Hithe.

At a Gueſtling held July the 22d, in the 14th of Queen Elizabeth, at Romney, it was ordered, That none ſhould be choſen Member of Parliament for any of the Ports, unleſs he were a Freeman, Reſident, and an Inhabitant of ſome one of the Ports.

And at another held July the 8th, in the 1ſt of King James the Iſt, the ſame was decreed, under the Penalty of Twenty Pounds, to be paid by the offending Town. And after this, at another Brotherhood, the Penalty was made Forty Pounds, and Ten Pounds Penalty on him that either gives or makes a Vote for any Perſon not ſo qualified as above.

4. As to the Cauſes of the Decay of the Trade, and Riches of the Ports, they have been very various. Their near Neighbour the Sea, hath been a very miſchievous one to them all manner of ways. Sometimes by overflowing, and drowning their Towns; as was the Caſe of Old Winchelſea, Bromehill, Romney, Hithe, and Folkſtone; and of Dover, by breaking down their Peer, and ſpoiling their Harbour. Sometimes by almoſt deſerting them, and by that means incapacitating Ships and Trading Veſſels to come to them: As is the Caſe of Sandwich, of the preſent New Winchelſea, and of Rye Harbour in a great Meaſure.

The Sea hath alſo been paſſively inſtrumental to their Decay, by affording a way to their Enemies to Sack, Plunder, and deſtroy their Towns; of which in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, I have given many Inſtances.

They were doubtleſs much injured alſo by the ſetting up of another Royal Navy, inſtead of thoſe Ships which they were obliged to furniſh the Crown withal upon Occaſion; and which, when kept in Commiſſion, Pay, and good Order, were both a good Defence to them, and a great Inſtrument of their Trade.

But in King Henry the VIIIth's, and eſpecially in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, (as I ſhall ſhew below, under the Hiſtory of the Royal Navy) the Navy of the Ports came to be entirely neglected, and unemploy'd by the Crown, and by that means every Day leſſened, as did the Trade of the Ports, which that helped to maintain.

Again in the 15th of King James the Iſt, a Charter was granted to the Merchant Adventurers in London, which contained a Prohibition to all Merchants, and others, to Trade into Germany, and the Low-Countries; which as it was expreſly contradictory to the Charter of the Ports, ſo it deprived them of a mighty Advantage, which their Ships brought them by their Trading to thoſe Parts. And by ſome Manuſcripts which I have ſeen, expreſſing a Complaint of this Matter, it appears that the Ports had before this, a ſettled Uſage between them and the Low-Countries, &c. for the Diſcharge of Debts between them and the Low-Countrymen, by Letters of Withernam, as is between one Cinque Port, or its Member, with another. And 'tis aſſerted there, that in Fact ſuch Letters of Withernam have been granted to Cane in Normandy, to Newport, Fluſhing, Dunkirk, Calais, Oſtend, Sluice, Dorthinght, and to Antwerp; and in 15th Year of Queen Elizabeth to Hamborough. And that this Courſe was ratified upon a Reference from the Council Table Four Years after, viz. A. D. 1577.

The Diſcovery of the Compaſs alſo might help to deſtroy their Coaſting Trade.

Another Grievance complained of as an Injury to the Ports, and a Cauſe of their Poverty and Decay, is, That in the 27th Year of Queen Elizabeth, the Citizens of London denied them the Freedom they have by their Charters of Buying and Selling in London: And they ſeized the Goods of one Thomas Howell of Sandwich; who thereupon complained to the Council: The Matter was referred to the Queen's Learned Council in the Law; who certified upon Examination of the Records of London (and the City Council own it), That the Ports-men had ſuch a Right by their Charter; and they, for a while, continued to enjoy it: But afterwards it was denied them again, and the Keeper of Blackwel-Hall ſeized ſome Cloath, which was bought by one Samuel Wilcocks a Ports-man; and by Degrees they came to be quite debarr'd of that Privilege of Buying and Selling in London.

This Prohibition of their Trade into foreign Parts, and of their Buying and Selling freely in London, occaſioned the trading Ships to leave the Ports and to ſettle at London; and the Mariners and Sailors to follow them; and that all Merchants and Men of Worth left living in the Ports; expoſing the poor remaining Inhabitants to become ſtill more impoveriſhed by the Charge of keeping up their Watches, and finding Ammunition, &c.

And theſe are the Misfortunes which have reduced the Ports to their preſent low Condition.

5. As to the Officers by which the Ports have been governed: The Principal hath been the Lord Warden, who is generally alſo ſtiled Conſtable of Dover Caſtle; which in many Patents is the leading Title, and preceeds that of Warden, and thoſe of Chancellor and Admiral of the Ports, which are uſually inſerted in his Patent.

This great Officer was anciently ſworn at Shipway: And it appears by Philpot, p. 9. of his Villare Cant. That the Lord Warden was ſworn at Shipway ſo late as in his Time; viz. about the Year 1650.

As he was alſo when Brome publiſhed Somner's Book of the Roman Ports and Forts in Kent, which was A. D. 1693. Or elſe he would, no doubt, have corrected, or made ſome Remarks upon what Somner ſaith in pag. 103. That the Limenarcha or Lord Warden took his Oath at Shipway. For this Editor, who was Chaplain to the Ports, could not have been ignorant of the Change of the Place, had it then been moved to the Hill where the Solemnity is now performed; viz. on a high Mountain on the Weſt of, and oppoſite to that, on which Dover Caſtle ſtands: Where, at a Place called Bredenſtone, the Lord Wardens have been ſworn ever ſince the Revolution; and here the Ancient Court of Shipway is now kept, and moſt of the general Buſineſs of the Ports is tranſacted.

Darell in his Manuſcript Hiſtory of Dover Caſtle, calls this Stone, Cæſaris Ara: Some Ruins ſtill do indeed remain of an old Stone Building, which I judge to have been formerly a Pharos or Watch Tower; where Lights were made to direct Ships in the Night: For ſuch another there was built at Bullen by the Romans: And John Twine of Canterbury tells us, he ſaw (when he was young) this Breden-Stone Building almoſt entire; and he gives it the ſame Uſe that I do, to have been an ancient Light-Houſe.

I have now by me a Copy of an Ancient Record, taken A. D. 1692. out of Dover Caſtle, by the late Thomas Turner of Ileden, Eſq; who kindly communicated it to me: The Title of it is, Nota de Regula quomodo Curia de Shipwtia ordinetur & observetur. There is no Date to it in the Copy which I have; but from the Invitation which the Lord Warden makes of the Company, to take a Repaſt with him at his Caſtle of Saltwood, I think its Age may be carried up at leaſt to the Reign of Richard the IId, and probably it is as old as that of King Henry the IId.

For then Henry de Eſſex, Baron of Raleigh, was Warden of the Ports, and in Poſſeſſion of Saltwood Caſtle, which he held of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but ſoon after forfeited it to the Crown; as I have mentioned before, when I ſpake of Saltwood Caſtle.

This Valuable Record I would have given you here entire, (and perhaps if my Friends deſire it, may do ſo yet in the Appendix) but that its great Length makes it improper in this Place. I have before mentioned ſeveral Things out of it in my Account of the Court of Shipway; under that word Shipway: And now from the ſame good Authority add what follows.

Aſſoon as the King pleaſes, by his Letters-Patents under his Great Seal, to make, ordain, or conſtitute any Lord or Knight, to be Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, and Warden of his Five Ports: The ſaid Warden, at his Pleaſure, and Time convenient for him, ſhall ſend his Precept under the Seal of his Office from the ſaid Caſtle of Dover, unto every Port, Town, and Ville of the ſaid Five Ports, and the Members of every of them, ſuch as be corporate, commanding every Mayor and Bailiff of the ſame to give good Summons and lawful Notice and Warning of 40 Days, unto 6, 5, or 4 Jurats of the beſt and moſt diſcreet of every of the ſaid Towns and Villes; that the ſaid Mayor, and ſuch Number of Jurats, and the ſaid Bailiff and ſuch Number of Jurats, do appear in their proper Perſons before the ſaid Warden, at the Court of Shipway, at the Place accuſtomed there, at ſuch Day and Time as may be expreſſed to them, by the ſaid Precepts.

In Purſuance of this Rule, the newly conſtituted Lord Wardens do accordingly ſend their Precepts: An Inſtance of which, and of the Form and Manner of his being Sworn, I ſhall give you in Henry Viſcount Sidney, the firſt Lord Warden ſince the late happy and glorious Revolution; and I believe the firſt that ever was ſworn on Bredenſtone-Hill.

The Precept, or Letter of Attendance.

" HEnry Viſcount Sidney, Maſter-General " of their Majeſty's moſt Honourable " Privy-Council, Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, " (a) and Lord Warden, Chancellor, and Ad- " miral of the Cinque-Ports, Two Ancient " Towns, and their Members, &c. To all and " Singular the Mayors, Bayliffs, and Jurats " of the Cinque-Ports, Two Ancient Towns, " and their Members, and to every of them, " Greeting.

" For certain good Cauſes and Conſidera- " tions me thereunto eſpecially moving, I " have thought it neceſſary to ſignify unto you " by theſe preſents, that I Purpoſe, and am " reſolved by God's Grace, to be at Bredenſtone-Hill, within the Liberty of the Town and " Port of Dover, one of the Cinque-Ports, upon " the Firſt Day of June next, by Eight of the " Clock in the Forenoon; then and there to " make ſolemn Serement and Promiſe to up- " hold and maintain the Liberties and Privi- " leges of the ſaid Cinque-Ports, Towns and " Members, to the beſt of my Power, accord- " ing to the Ancient Uſages and Cuſtoms of " the ſaid Cinque-Ports, &c. Therefore by Vir- " tue and Authority of my ſaid Office, theſe " are in their Majeſty's Name, ſtraitly to " Charge and Command you, and every of " you, to give good Summons, and lawful " Warning unto Three of your moſt diſcreet " Combarons of every the ſaid Ports, Towns, " and Members Corporal, Perſonally to appear " before me at the Place and Time aforeſaid. " And that alſo you the ſaid Mayors, Bailiffs, " or your reſpective Deputies, be likewiſe then " and there Perſonally preſent, to do as to you " hath been accuſtomed and belongeth. And " that you do then and there certify to me, " under your Hands and Seals of Incorporation, " what you ſhall have done in Accompliſh- " ment of the Premiſes, with the Names of the " Perſons you ſhall have ſo Summoned and " Warned, and returning back to me then and " there this Mandate, whereof you may not " fail. Dated at St. James's, under the Seal of " my Office, the Nineteenth Day of April, in " the Sixth Year of their now Majeſty's Reign, " Anno Dom. 1694.

SYDNEY.

To the Mayors and Jurats of the Towns and Ports of Haſting, New-Romney, Sandwich, Dover, and Hythe, the Ancient Towns of Rye and Winchelſea, the Towns of Fordwich, Feverſham, Folkeſtown, and Tenterden; and to the Bailiffs and Jurats of Seaford, Pevenſea and Lyde, theſe Preſent.

Received the ſame Day from Mr. Norwood, and by that Nights Poſt,

J. S.

Sent the Original under the Caſtle-Seal, to Mr. Robert Baryrane, April the 19th, 1694, per Poſt, with Orders to him to Regiſter it at the Office, and then immediately, by Saturday at fartheſt, to deliver it to Mr. Mayor, the Speaker of the Ports, to ſend round to all the reſt.

THOMAS TURNER.

This Precept being executed according to its Intent; on June 1. 1694, in the Morning Early,

The Lord Warden, with ſuch Perſons as were proper to attend him on the Occaſion of his being Sworn, went up from Captain Jacob's Houſe, where he lay at Dover, into the Caſtle; where the Company was formed into the following Proceſſion, and all on Horſeback.

1. Marched Captain St. Leger, Commander of the Out-Guardmen belonging to Dover Caſtle, whoſe Company followed him with their Swords drawn, Two-a-Breaſt.

2. The

(a) N. B. I find in the Old Charters, the Office of Conſtable of Dover, generally placed before the Warden of the Ports.

2. The Governors and Deputy-Governors of the ſeveral Forts and Caſtles within the Ports, with their Swords drawn, Two by Two.

3. The Mayors of the Cinque-Ports, with their Jurats and returned Men, Two by Two, in their Gowns.

4. The Marſhal of Dover Caſtle with his Truncheon.

5. The Serjeant at Arms with his Mace, and the Serjeant of the Admiralty with his Silver Oar, bareheaded.

6. The Proctors in their Gowns, Two by Two.

7. The Regiſter of the Ports in his Gown.

8. The Councel of the Ports in their Gowns.

9. The Judges of the Chancery and Admiralty Courts in Dover, in their Robes, Two a-Breaſt.

10. The Lord Warden's Secretary alone.

11. The Lieutenant, or Deputy-Lieutenant of Dover Caſtle.

12. The Gentlemen of the Horſe to the Lord Warden.

13. The Hautboys, Trumpets, &c.

14. The Lord Warden alone.

15. The Gentlemen that came to attend the Lord Warden, with ſuch of the Barons of the Cinque-Ports as were there, Two by Two.

16. The Lower Officers, Servants, &c. Two by Two.

In this Order they Solemnly marched down from the Caſtle, and up to Bredenſtone-Hill, where a Tent being prepared for the Lord Warden, he went into it till the Court of Shipway was Sitting, the Place cleared, and every Thing in Order. The Manner and Order of the ſeveral Mayors and Bailiffs ſitting there, I have before ſhewn you, from the Record abovementioned, under Shipway.

As ſoon as the Lord Warden hath taken his Place in the Court, where he muſt be in Perſon, the Record directs this Solemn Proclamation to be made:

All Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats of the Five Ports, and their Members, that be Summoned and Warned to appear here in their proper Perſons before the Lord Warden, at this the King's Majeſty's Court of Shipway, here to be holden this Day, draw ye near and attend to the Court, upon Peril that ſhall fall of it.

The Precedence then was thus; Firſt, The Bailiff and Jurats of Haſting were to be called; to put in the aforeſaid Precept, and the Names of ſuch Jurats as are to be ſummoned of the ſaid Town, to appear, &c. Next the Mayors and Jurats of the Ports of Dover and Sandwich, or which the Court pleaſe to call firſt; for they be both of one Strength. Then the Mayor and Jurats of Rye and Winchelſea, or likewiſe which the Court will call firſt.

N. B. This ſhews the Date of this Record to be after King Edward the Iſt began his Reign, when Rye and Winchelſea were firſt endowed with the Privileges of the Ports. Then the Jurats of Hythe and Feverſham, Fordwich and Folkſtone, or which the Court will call firſt of them; and then the Bailiffs and Jurats of Lidd, Pevenſey, Seaford, and Tenterden, and every of them, muſt bring into the ſaid Court his ſaid Precept, and the Names of ſuch Jurats as he warned to appear.

And after that the ſaid Precepts be laid in the ſaid Court, and the ſaid Perſons called have anſwered to appear upon the ſame. That the Warden ſhall cauſe his Commiſſion, that is to ſay his ſaid Patent, to be openly read then and there, with a Letter of Attendance under his Seal of Office annexed unto the ſame; and after theſe have been read,

Then one of the Mayors of the Five Principal Towns of the ſaid Five Ports, ſhall give the Charge unto the Lord Warden, in Manner and Form here following: That is to ſay,

You ſhall keep and maintain the Franchiſes, Liberties, Cuſtoms and Uſages of the Five Ports, in all that you may do, by the Allegiance that you owe to the King of England, and by your Knighthood.

And the ſaid Lord Warden ſhall hold up his Right Hand Breaſt-High and no more; and ſhall ſay, Yea, if God will, I ſhall to my Power: And then the Record ſaith;

The ſaid Lord Warden ſhall not need to be Sworn upon a Book when he ſhall take his Charge, otherwiſe than is aboveſaid: Nor he ſhall not need to ſay the Words aboveexpreſſed, after him that giveth the Charge, but only hold up his Hand and affirm it, and ſay Yea, &c.

And when the ſaid Lord Warden hath ſo taken his ſaid Charge, in Manner and Form as is ſo foreſaid, then all the ſaid Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, ſhall honourably receive him, and do unto him then and there once Reverence: And after that they have uſed to give unto him a Worſhipful Gift incontinent in the ſame Place.

And after that nothing more ſhall be done in that Court that Day, neither Writ, Return, Complaint, nor other Things; except only that there be any notable Mandamus of our Lord the King; which if any be, ſhall be openly Read and Publiſhed there; and ſo Proclamation ſhall be made to Diſſolve the ſaid Court in this wiſe here following: That is to ſay,

All Mayors, Bailiffs, Jurats, and all other that have had to do at this Court of Shipway before my Lord Warden this Day, ye ſhall depart, and take your Eaſe, until a new Warning; and God ſave the King, my Lord Warden, and all the Court.

And then immediately there muſt be made another Solemn O Yes; and after the ſaid O Yes, the Proclaimant ſhall ſay, My Lord Warden deſireth and prayeth all Mayors, Bailiffs, Jurats, and other, whatſoever they be, now here preſent, to go with him to the Caſtle of Saltwood, and there to take ſuch Repaſt as is ordained, and ye ſhall be welcome. Finis hujus Diei.

When the Lord Sydney, above-mentioned was Sworn at Bredenſtone, the Chancellor of the Ports made him a Congratulatory Speech, expreſſing the great Satisfaction the Ports had in having him for their Warden, &c. opening to him the Rights and Privileges of the ſaid Ports, and concluded with a Recommendation of them to his Lordſhip's Care and Protection. The Ports Council alſo made a Speech much to the ſame Effect, only they added an Account of ſome Grievances of the Ports; which were alſo delivered to the Lord Warden in Writing, engroſſed in Parchment. Then the Court being adjourned, the Lord Warden invited the Company to Dine with him at Dover; and ſo they marched back again into the Town in the ſame Solemn Manner that they came from the Caſtle.

A Catalogue of the Lord Wardens of the Cinque-Ports.

1. Godwine, Earl of Kent, in the Time of King Edward the Confeſſor, he is mentioned by Thynne, and in the Catalogue at the End of Somner's Roads, Ports, &c. but omitted by Lambard and Philpot; as is alſo his Son,

2. Harold.

3. Bertram Aſhburnham is mentioned alſo by Thynne and Somner, but by neither Lambard nor Philpot: And in the ſame State is,

4. Odo Earl of Kent: But I rather account theſe as Conſtables, or Governors of Dover Caſtle, than Wardens of the Ports.

5. John de Fiennes, Kinſman to the Conqueror, was made Warden of the Ports by King William the Iſt, and Conſtable of Dover Caſtle by Inheritance, as I have already told you, when I treated of that Place. Arms, Azure, Three Lions Rampant, Or.

6. James Fiennes, his Son, he died at Folkſtone.

7. John de Fiennes, Son of James; ſome make him his Brother, but he was removed by King Stephen, for taking Part with Maud the Empreſs.

8. Walkeline de Magninot, (ſome write him Mamignot) not mentioned by Lambard in his Catalogue, and yet he ſaith that he delivered up Dover Caſtle to King Stephen, Page 159. Camden ſaith he held it out againſt him; which may be both true, for he might hold it out for a Time, and at laſt give it up. But the latter is moſt probable; though ſome ſay on King Stephen's Death he left this Poſt, and fled into Normandy.

He left an only Daughter, who carried a large Eſtate, called the Honour of Magminot, into the Family of the Sayes; part of which was Say's Court in Deptford.

9. Richard Earl of Ewe in Normandy, had the whole Rape and Honour of Haſtings given to his Father by King William the Iſt, and who was probably put in by King Stephen, when he drove Magninot out: He is neither mentioned by Lambard nor Philpot, but by Thynne and Somner: King Stephen gave him alſo the Town of Tickhill, near Doncaſter in Yorkſhire.

10. Euſtace Earl of Boloign, only Son to King Stephen, is mentioned by Thynne and Somner, as Lord Warden, and Conſtable of Dover Caſtle; he was buried at Feverſham in Kent.

11. Allen de Fiennes, in this Gentleman all the Catalogues agree; and that he was made Warden by King Henry the IId. Lambard ſaith he was reſtor'd; by which, I ſuppoſe, he means that the Office was now come again into his Family; for he doth not mention him as Warden before.

12. James de Fiennes, his eldeſt Son.

13. Henry (in ſome Catalogues Hugh) de Eſſex, was Baron of Raleigh in that County; He was alſo the King's Standard Bearer, and at a ſlight Skirmiſh againſt the Welſh, run away, left his Standard, and the King's Perſon expoſed to Danger; for which he was ſome Years after accuſed of Treaſon by Robert de Monford, vanquiſh'd in Combat on that Account, and left for Dead on the Spot. But the Monks of Reading took him up, and recovered him to an Ignominious Life, which the King gave him, but deprived him of this Office, and of all his Honours and Eſtate.

14. Matthew de Clere is placed next among the Wardens, and 'tis very likely that he was ſo; but Conſtable of Dover Caſtle he certainly was, and did there Impriſon Godfrey, Archbiſhop of York, and Brother to King Richard the Iſt, at the wicked Inſtigation of William Longchamp, Biſhop of Ely, and Chancellor of England, whoſe Siſter he had Married: And the Pious Ground was, that Ely having ſeized upon the Revenues of the See of York, and appropriated them to his own Uſe, was afraid Godfrey would call him to an Account.

15. William Longeſpee, Baſe Son to King Henry the IId, by the famous Beauty, Roſamond Clifford, was Warden of the Ports in the Beginning of King John's Reign; and much perſuaded him againſt that ſcandalous Surrender of his Crown to Pandulphus, the Pope's Nuntio; for which 'tis probable he was diſplaced. He married Ela de Evereux, Daughter and Heir of William de Evereux, Earl of Sarum, and in her Right had that Earldom. Though his Name is in neither Lambard's, Philpot's, nor Somner's Catalogues.

16. William de Wrotteham, in all the Catalogues, is mentioned as Warden in King John's Time; but the exact Time is not certain.

17. Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, under which Title I have before given you a large Account of him. Arms Az. Three Flowers-de-Lis Argent; but when he was Earl of Kent, he bore the Arms of Earl Godwine. He began the Palace of White-Hall in Scotland-Yard. His Son, John de Burgh, left the Manor of Elmore to Anſelm Gyſe, of Glouceſterſhire, whence the Family of the Gyſe came to bear thoſe Arms.

Dr. Plott, in his Manuſcript Treatiſe of the Roman Ways in Kent, ſaith he was buried in Dover Caſtle, in the Chancel of the Church.

18. Peter de Rivallis, omitted by Lambard and Philpot, but in the Catalogue of Thynne and Broom, at the End of Somner's R. Forts, &c.

19. Richard le Greie, mentioned by Thynne, Lambard, and Somner. He was appointed by the Barons, and was afterwards deprived by Hugh Bigot, becauſe he let in the Pope's Legate, againſt the Will of the Barons, though with the King's Licenſe.

20. After this Hugo de Bigot executed the Office himſelf for a while, as he did that alſo of Juſticiary.

21. Richard de Lucy: This Gentleman Spelman in Voce Admirallus, ſaith had put under his Charge, Maritimam Angliæ, in the 8th of Henry the IIId, and therefore ſeems to have been Warden of the Ports.

22. Bertram de Criol: Some make this Gentleman to have ſucceeded Greie, others bring him in on the diſplacing of Hubert de Burgh; but I judge he ought rather to come in here.

23. Henry de Braybrook had Lands at Eaſt-Sutton. His Grandſon, Reginald de Braybrook, by marrying Joanna, Daughter of John Lord Cobham, brought that Title and Eſtate into this Family.

24. Edward then Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward the Iſt, he made Henry de Cobham, his Deputy, and his Son and Heir, John Lord Cobham, was the Founder of Cobham College, in the 36th of King Edward the IIId, ſaith Lambard. This Prince ſent Cobham, his Deputy, to demoliſh demoliſh the Caſtle of Leeds, becauſe one of the Crevequers then in Poſſeſſion of it, was among thoſe Noblemen who ſided with the Barons.

25. Henry de Montemort, omitted by Thynne, but mentioned by Lambard and Somner.

26. Peter Earl of Savoy, Uncle to Queen Eleanor, was, ſaith Philpot, Lord Warden of the Ports, when he was Sheriff of Kent; viz. in the 26th of King Henry the IIId, but no one elſe mentions him.

27. Roger de Leybourn, according to Lambard, was Lord Warden in King Henry the IIId's Reign; Somner places him in King Edward the Iſt's Time. Dugdale expreſly in the 48th of King Henry the IIId, which I judge to be right. He was a Gentleman of great Note in thoſe Times. In the 17th of King John he adhered to the Barons Cauſe, and was taken Priſoner in Rocheſter Caſtle. In the 36th of King Henry the IIId, at a Tournament at Walden in Eſſex, he ran his Lance into the Throat of a Valiant Knight, one Ernauld de Monteney, ſo that he died immediately. The Year after he attended King Henry in his Expedition into Gaſcoigny; and was made Governor of Briſtol Caſtle: But Two Years after this, ſiding with the Barons, he was Excommunicated by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. However by Money, and other Rewards, the King got him away from the Barons, and truſted him ſo far, as to make him Lord Warden about Ten Years after. In the 49th of that Prince he was dangerouſly wounded, at an Aſſault made by the Barons againſt Rocheſter Caſtle; But got well enough again to be with the King at the Battel of Lewes in Suſſex: Where the King loſing the Day, he fled into the Marſhes of Wales, and there oppoſed Prince Llhuellyn, a Friend to the Barons Cauſe. The next Year, after the King's good Succeſs at Eveſham, he was made Warden of all the Foreſts beyond Trent, and Sheriff of Cumberland and Kent; and in the 50th of King Henry the IIId, had the Guardianſhip of the Coaſt of Kent, againſt the Inhabitants of the Cinque-Ports, who then took Part with the Barons againſt the King, and the Sheriffs of Kent was ordered to reimburſe him what Money he laid out in that Service. In the 54th of King Henry the IIId, he was ſolemnly Signed with the Croſs, in order to go to the Holy-Land, but died at Home Two Years after, without accompliſhing his Vow.

28. Thomas de Moleton; whether this Gentleman were not Warden of the Ports, or in an Office equivalent thereunto, the following Commiſſion which I have met with, granted to him by King Henry the IIId, in his 48th Year, muſt determine.

Rex omnibus Baronibus & Ballivis 5 Portuum, & omnibus aliis de partibus maritimis Salutem. Sciatis quod aſſignavimus Dilectum & fidelem noſtrum Tho. de Moletonum Capitaneum & Cuſtodem Maris & Portuum Maritimorum, & ad Naves Noſtras vino victualibus & aliis neceſſariis muniendas, contra Hoſtilem adventum aliegenarum in Regnum noſtrum prout magis viderit expedire. Et ideo vobis mandamus, Quod eidem Thomæ tanquam Capitaneo & Cuſtodi intendentes fitis & auxiliantes.

29. Stephen de Pencheſter: There is a Buſt of this Gentleman in White Marble, which they ſhew you in Penſhurſt, which hath a Face of Antiquity enough to be Genuine. He married Margaret, Daughter of Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, and was the laſt Male of this Name, who had an Eſtate at Penſhurſt, and other Parts of Kent: For he left only Two Daughters; one of which, Joan, married Henry Lord Cobham, of Roundale in Shorne; and the other, Alice, was the Wife of John Columbers. He was a very Learned Man; and ordered all the Muniments, Grants, &c. relating to Dover Caſtle, to be written in a fair Book, which he called Caſtelli Feodarium. This Darel ſaw, and compoſed his Hiſtory of Dover Caſtle out of it; which is now in the Library belonging to the College of Arms in London.

30. Sir Robert Aſhton; he was buried in the Church within Dover Caſtle, under a Marble Stone, with a Braſs Inſcription on it, 1384. He was alſo Admiral from the Mouth of the Thames Weſtward, Juſticiary of Ireland, and Treaſurer.

31. Simon de Crey; he was with King Edward the Iſt in his Expedition into Scotland, and Knighted there.

32. Robert de Burgherſt; Dugdale ſaith was Lord Warden in the 27th of King Edward the Iſt.

33. Robert de Shurland, Philpot ſaith was Lord Warden in King Edward the Iſt's Reign, went along with him into Scotland and was Knighted at the Siege of Calaverock there. And he ſaith alſo that the King granted him, (beſides Charter of Free-Warren, &c.) to have Wreck of the Sea on his Lands in the Manor of Shurland, in the Iſle of Sheppey, extending as far on a Low Ebb, as a Man can ride into the Water, and touch any Thing with the Point of his Launce; which probably occaſioned the idle Story which you will find told of him in Shurland, of his riding Two Miles into the Sea, and Swimming his Horſe forward and backward, &c.

34. Henry Cobham, Sirnamed Le Uncle, who married Stephen de Pencheſter's Eldeſt Daughter: He was beſides Juſticiary of England, Conſtable of Dover, and of Rocheſter, and Tunbridge Caſtles.

35. Robert de Kendall; I find him mentioned as Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, in a Commiſſion of Sewers, in the 9th of King Edward the IId.

36. Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere; he was Grandſon of Robert de Burgherſt, and in the 20th of King Edward the IId, was Conſtable and Warden. He had before, by taking Part with thoſe who oppoſed the Spenſers, been taken Priſoner at Leeds Caſtle, and ſent to the Tower; but now he got into the King's Favour, as above; and in the 1ſt of King Edward the IIId, had his Commiſſion renewed. He was alſo made Lord Warden a Third Time, in the 17th of King Edward the IIId, and Six Years after Lord Chamberlain, and after that Conſtable of the Tower. He was alſo for ſome Time Admiral of the Weſt, and one of the Cuſtodes Angliæ. He is often miſtaken for his Son, Sir Bartholomew, who was one of the firſt Founders of the Garter.

37. Edmund de Woodſtock, Earl of Kent: See an Account of him under the Earls.

38. Hugh le Spencer, what Year he was in this Office, is uncertain. Lambard places him juſt after Simon de Crey.

39. Simon de Sandwich, was Lord Warden ſometime in King Henry the IId's Reign; and was buried in St. Peter's Church in Sandwich: According to ſome Manuſcript which I ſaw there, he was a great Benefactor to that Town. The ſame Manuſcript mentions alſo,

40. Henry de Sandwich, as both Lord Warden and Conſtable, and who was a great Benefactor to the Hoſpital of St. Bartholomew.

41. William Clinton, Earl of Huntington; he married Juliana, only Daughter and Heir of Roger de Leybourn, but ſhe had no Iſſue by him, any more than by her former Husband, and ſo the Eſtate Eſcheated to the Crown; and King Richard the IId gave a good deal of it to Simon de Burleigh.

42. Sir

42. Sir John de Peché, was Lord Warden and Conſtable of Dover, and called to Sit in Parliament as a Baron, in the 4th of King Edward the IIId. His Son bought Lullingſtone in Kent, of John de Rokeſley.

43. Ralph Baſſet was Lord Warden and Conſtable in the 19th of King Edward the IIId, and had 300 l. per Annum allowed him towards his Charges, as appears by the Tower Records. Fines, Membrum 11.

44. William Latimer, of Corbie; Philpot ſaith was Lord Warden in the 20th of King Edward the IIId; he had an Eſtate in Aſh by Sandwich, and got a Market and Fair for that Place.

45. Reginald de Cobham; is here placed as being Warden, in the 21ſt of King Edward the IIId by all the Liſts. As alſo the next Year,

46. Bartholomew Lord Burgherſt, or Burghwaſh, who was one of the firſt Companions of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter.

He lived at the Mote by Maidſtone, in the 29th of King Edward the IIId, and had that Eſtate. His Son left an only Daughter, who married into the Family of Le Deſpenſer.

But this was not the Date of his coming into his Office, for he was certainly Lord Warden before in the 17th of this King, as appears by the Tower Records, when he had a Patent of it, and the Conſtableſhip of Dover for Life. And I fear there are many ſuch Miſtakes as to Time, in all our Liſts.

48. Roger de Mortimer, Earl of March, was, as I find by a Record, Conſtable and Warden in the 30th, and 31ſt of King Edward the IIId, and by his Command all the Ports and their Members gave in their ſeveral Cuſtumals, to be kept and Recorded in the Caſtle of Dover; but there is no ſuch Thing to be found there now. He was alſo at that Time one of the Conſervators of the Peace for the County of Kent.

49. Sir John Beauchamp, Son of Guy, and Brother of Thomas Earl of Warwick; he was alſo Knight of the Garter: He died Anno Dom. 1358, and was buried in St. Paul's, London, in the Body of the Church. And the wiſe Mob of London, for a great while would miſtake his Tomb for that of Duke Humphrey, called the Good Duke of Glouceſter, though this Peer was buried at St. Albans. But many idle People uſed to meet at Beauchamp's Tomb on St. Andrew's Day in the Morning, and there pretend to go without a Dinner, (i.e. to Dine with Duke Humphrey) and have Places under the Duke, &c. and on May-Day they adorned his Tomb with Flowers, &c.

50. Sir Robert Herle in the 35th Year of King Edward the IIId. He was alſo one of the Conſervators of the Peace for this County, and firſt named in the Commiſſion.

51. Sir Ralph Spigurnell, in the 44th Year of King Edward the IIId. I find him named by the Title of Conſtable of Dover Caſtle in a Commiſſion of Sewers in the 39th Year of King Edward the IIId: So that he muſt have had this Office ſooner than Lambard makes him to have been Warden.

52. Richard de Penbrigg. Of this Gentleman I find nothing but his Name in Thynne's and Somner's Catalogues.

53. William Lord Latimer of Corbie, in the 48th Year of King Edward the IIId.

54. Thomas Reynes. This Gentleman was Deputy to Corbie, Dugdale ſaith, and was Lord Warden himſelf the Year after; and was probably made ſo on Latimer's deceaſe. Hiſtory of Inbanking and Draining, p. 45.

55. Edmund Plantagenet.

56. Edmund Earl of Cambridge, ſome write him Robert, and ſome John. But in the Tower Records 'tis Ed. and ſo may be Edward or Edmund, but can be neither of the other Names. In the firſt Year of King Richard the IId.

57. Sir Robert Aſhton. He was alſo Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland for ſome Time, Lord Treaſurer, and Executor of the Will of King Edward the IIId. Vid. 374.

58. Simon de Burleigh: Some Catalogues write Simon de Crey. To him King Richard the IId, in his 9th Year, granted Overland, and ſold Stanton in Aſh by Sandwich, and a great Part of the Eſtate of Juliana de Leybourn, Counteſs of Huntingdon, called the Infanta of Kent. All her vaſt Eſtate eſcheated to the Crown for want of Heirs. While he was Warden, the French landed A. D. 1383, with 18 Gallies at Stenar in the Iſle of Thanet, and utterly deſtroy'd and burnt the Town.

For when he could not get the Riches of Thomas Becket's Shrine; and thoſe of the Church of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, to be removed as he deſired, to Dover Caſtle, that they might be kept there, as he pretended, with the greater Security; he grew very remiſs and negligent in the Defence of the Coaſts. And when the Abbot of St. Auſtin's had raiſed Forces to defend Stenar, and other Places in Thanet, Burleigh would not let him go in by Sandwich, but forced him to go round about by Fordwich and Sturrey. However, after he got into the Iſland, he drove the French back to their Gallies, and hindred them from getting any Footing in Thanet, or doing any further Miſchief than their burning of Stenar. And though Burleigh got a Mandate under the Great Seal, commanding all Perſons who had Lands thereabouts to repair to him to Sandwich; and though he ſent in the King's Name to the Abbot, to come thither with his Forces, he refuſed it; for his Convent having a good Stake in Thanet, he ſtaid there, defended their Terra firma very bravely.

In the Year 1388 Burleigh was accuſed of having deſign'd to deliver up Dover Caſtle to the French; and though it was not very well proved upon him, yet Thomas of Woodſtock Duke of Glouceſter, ordered him to be beheaded, though the Earl of Darby and others did all they could to ſave his Life.

59. Henry de Cobham Son of Reginald. Some call him Reginald.

60. Sir John le Euroſſe; in ſome Copies Le Roſſe, in others Devereux: Lambard writes him Enroſs, which I take to be falſe printed for Euroſs. He was third Husband to Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of John de Vere Earl of Oxford; was alſo Knight of the Garter, and Lord Steward of the Houſhold in the 11th Year of King Richard the IId. In the 16th Year of that unhappy Prince he had Licenſe to fortify Penſhurſt: His Daughter and Heir married Walter Lord Fitzwater, from whom deſcended the Earls of Suſſex: And from his Brother Sir Walter Devereux, the Earls of Eſſex are derived. How ſoon he had the Office I don't know, but he was in Poſſeſſion of it in the 21ſt Year of King Richard the IId, as I find by Dugdale's Inbanking, p. 86.

61. Sir Thomas Beaumont. Some write him John de Beaumont.

62. Edward Edmund, Duke of Aumerle and York; removed by Henry the IVth, who ſubſtituted in his Room, for a while, Sir Thomas Erpington; and after that, Prince Henry his Son.

63. Sir Thomas Erpingham, Knight of the Garter, and Lord Warden: He is ſaid to have built the Black Friers Church in Norwich, and lies buried in Norwich Cathedral. Arms, An Escocheon within an Orle of Martlets. In Commissions of Sewers; mentioned by Dugdale in his History of Inbanking, p. 87. he is stiled only Constable of Dover Castle: Perhaps about this Time, those Titles were always united in one Man; but that of Constable seems to be the most usual and humble one.

64. Prince Henry, afterwards King Henry the Vth.

65. John Beaufort.

66. Thomas Earl of Arundel.

67. Humphrey Duke of Glouceſter. Put in by King Henry the Vth.

Sir James Fiennes Lord Say, whom Jack Cade Beheaded.

In the 25th Year of King Henry the VIth, he had a Grant in Tail Special to his Heirs Males, of Caſtleward Service of 200 l. per Ann. out of the Customs; all Forfeitures, and Wreck of the Sea, from the East-End of the Isle of Thanet to Beaucliffs in Sussex: And the Office of Admiral within the Ports and their Members. Pat. 1. in An. 25. H. 6.

69. Edmund Duke of Somerset.

70. Humphrey Stamford Duke of Buckingham.

He had much such a Grant as Lord Say's in Tail Special of this Office, and that of Constable of Dover Castle. Pat. 2. in 29. H. 6.

71. Simon Monfort, under King Henry the VIth.

In the 38th Year of King Henry the VIth, a Grant in Tail Special, as above, to his Heirs Male of the Offices of Warden and Constable of Dover Castle. Pat. 2. 28. K. H. 6.

72. Richard Nevil Earl of Warwick.

Sir John Scott was made, during Pleasure, Lieutenant of Dover Castle, and Warden of the Ports. Pat. in 10. K. E. 4.

73. William Earl of Arundel.

74. Richard Duke of Glouceſter, afterwards King Richard the IIId.

75. Henry Stafford Duke of Buckingham.

76. Sir William Scott, Son of Sir John Scott, who was Comptroller of the Houshold to King Henry the VIIth, a Privy-Counsellor and Deputy Governor of Calais.

77. Sir James Fiennes Lord Say. Lambard makes him to come after Prince Henry; was Lord Warden in the 25th Year of King Henry the VIIth, Constable also of Dover, and Lord Chamberlain; Beheaded by Jack Cade. Dugdale (in his Baronage) saith, that Sir William Say, Son of this Gentleman, granted the Constableship of Dover, and Wardenship of the Ports to Humphrey Duke of Bucks, and his Heirs Male.

78. Prince Henry, afterwards King Henry the VIIIth.

79. Arthur Plantagenet Viscount Liſle, natural Son of Edward the IVth.

80. Sir Edward Poynings, was made Lord Warden, in the 1st Year of King Henry the VIIIth, Knight of the Garter, and Comptroller of the Houshold.

81. Henry the Young Earl of Richmond.

82. Sir Edward Guldeford.

83. Sir Thomas Bullen, in the 26th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, was Lord Warden and Constable. Some say it was George Boleyn Viscount Rochfort; and perhaps they might both have the Office.

84. Sir Thomas Cheyney, Son of Sir William, was Lord Warden in the 31st Year of King Henry the VIIIth, and Constable in the 1st Year of King Edward the VIth. He had the Estate of Sir Thomas More, and was of the Privy Council to King Edward the VIth. His Son was made Henry Lord Cheyney.

In the 1st Year of Queen Mary he was also Lord Warden a Second Time.

85. Sir William Brook Lord Cobham, Knight of the Garter, and Lord Chamberlain of her Majesty's Houshold, was Warden of the Ports at Queen Mary's Death; and again also in the 39th Year of Queen Elizabeth.

86. Henry Brook Lord Cobham, his Son was Lord Warden in the 43d Year of Queen Elizabeth. He dipt himself in the Affair of Sir Walter Rawleigh, and so was attainted of High Treason; and though not executed, forfeited his Estate to the Crown, in the Reign of King James the Ist.

87. Henry Howard Earl of Northampton. Buried in the Church within Dover Castle.

In the Charter of King James the Ist, to the Port of Dover, he is stiled Constable of Dover Castle, and Chancellor and Admiral of the Cinque-Ports, other Members, and in other Places Lord Warden. In the Reign of King James the Ist.

88. Edward Zouch, Lord Haringworth, in the Reign of King James the Ist.

89. George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, in the Reign of King James the Ist.

90. Theophilus Howard Earl of Suffolk, in the Reign of King Charles the Ist.

91. James Duke of Lenox and Richmond, in the Reign of King Charles the 1st.

The Council of State executed the Office of Lord Warden under the Parliament.

92. John Lord Desbrowe made Warden by the Protector, and was in the Office in 1658.

93. James Duke of York, afterwards King James the IId.

94. Henry Lord Sidney, Lord Romney and Viscount Sheppey.

95. Prince George of Denmark.

96. Lionel Cranfield Earl of Dorset and Middlesex.

97. James late Duke of Ormond.

98. Lionel Cranfield Earl of Dorset and Middlesex.

BOOK II. PART II.

The Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of KENT.

AS I enter on this Subject, it may be proper to premiſe ſomething about the firſt Planting of Chriſtianity in this Kingdom: Becauſe our County of Kent, will here, on good Grounds, put in its Claim to be the firſt Part of Britain which was converted to the Chriſtian Faith.

About the Time, indeed, when this was done there hath been ſome Diſpute; many of our Later Writers being of the Opinion, that Chriſtianity came into Britain towards the End of Tiberius's Reign. But this the Learned Biſhop Stillingfleet hath effectually refuted (a), and rectified a Paſſage in Gildas, which ſome have wreſted to bear ſuch a Senſe. And highly probable indeed it is, that the Goſpel might be preached in Britain, between the Time of A. Plautius's coming hither in the Time of Claudius, and the famous Battel between Queen Boadicea, and Suetonius Paulinus. For after Claudius's Triumph for his Conqueſt of Britain, the Romans planted Colonies, built Cities of Trade and Commerce, (of which doubtleſs London was the Principal, and which, as it is not mentioned by Julius Cæſar, I take to have then had its firſt Beginning) and to ſet up Magiſtrates and Civil Juriſdictions here. And one wou'd think, as the Biſhop obſerves, that Trade muſt be advanced to a great Height here in Nero's Time, if Mr. Camden's Account from Dion be true, of Seneca; that he had at One Time in Britain, no leſs than Three Hundred Thouſand Pounds Sterling lent out at Intereſt.

As to the known Story of Joſeph of Arimathæa, which the Monks of Glaſtenbury ſeem to have invented to gain Credit to their Convent; the Biſhop ſhews that it hath no good Authority to ſupport it; neither Gildas, Nonnius, nor Bede, Aſſerius, nor Marianus Scotus, nor any of the Ancient Annals, mentioning any Thing of the Matter, nor is his Name in any of the Old Charters: And as for the Old Legend which was found at Glaſtenbury about this Affair, Leland ſaw it, and was by no Means convinced of its Authority; and even Capgrave himſelf, that ſwallows a Thouſand ridiculous Stories, was aſhamed to Print ſome Parts of it, and ſupplies them by an &c. And indeed the great Biſhop Uſher (b) plainly proves, that it was written by an Engliſh Monk: And after all, there is nothing of Joſeph of Arimathæa's Planting the Goſpel in Britain, mentioned in it. But perhaps the Charter of St. Patrick, Printed in the Monaſticon, (c) will be thought a full Confirmation of this Glaſtenbury Story; for as it ſaith, Twelve Diſciples of the Apoſtles, Philip and Jacob, built the Old Church of Glaſtenbury, by the Appointment of the Angel Gabriel, and that Chriſt himſelf Dedicated it to the Honour of his Mother: So it will do ſomething towards proving the Ancient Tradition, though Joſeph of Arimathæa be not here expreſly mentioned. And ſo it would, but that it hath the Misfortune to be apparently Counterfeit and Spurious; for in it is Mention made of the Date of our Lord's Birth, Anno Dom. 425; whereas every one knows, that that way of Computation came not into Uſe, till Invented by Dionyſius exiguus, A. D. 525; who then firſt reduced the Cycle of Years to the Æra of Chriſt's Incarnation: And it was a good while after that, before it came into common Uſe. The Biſhop of Worceſter ſhews alſo, that it will not agree with the Time of St. Patrick's going into Ireland; and that there are many other plain Inconſiſtencies in it, fairly diſcovering it to be forged and counterfeited by the Monks.

(b) Primord. p. 207.

(c) Vol. I. p. 11.

But though there be no good Authority to allow theſe Monkiſh Traditions; we have ſufficient Grounds to believe that there was a Chriſtian Church planted in Britain very early, and even in the Apoſtles Time, and even by St. Paul himſelf.

Euſebius in his Demonſt. Evang. L. 3. C. 7. tells us, that the Apoſtles paſſed over into νησους Βρεττανικας, the Britiſh Iſlands. And Theodoret, among the Nations converted by the Apoſtles, expreſly mentions the Britains; (a) and in another Place he ſaith, that St. Paul brought Salvation to the Iſlands which lie in the Ocean; and again, that he went to Spain, and thence to other Nations. Jerom ſaith, that after having been in Spain, St. Paul Preached the Goſpel to the Weſtern Parts. (b) Clemens Romanus ſaith, he went to the utmoſt Bounds of the Weſt; by which the Britiſh Iſles muſt be underſtood: For Catullus calls Britain, Ultimam Occidentis Inſulam. And the Words of Venantius Fortunatus are very expreſs; where ſpeaking of St. Paul, he ſaith;

Tranſit & Oceanum, vel quà facit Inſula Portam, Quaſq; Britannus habet terras, quaſq; ultima Thule.

The moſt Learned Stillingfleet ſhews, this Fact to be farther Probable from theſe Three Conſiderations: 1. That St. Paul had Leiſure and Opportunity to come hither on this Gracious Errand. 2. That he was the moſt likely of all the Apoſtles to come hither: And 3. That the Britiſh Circumſtances were then ſuch, as that there was Invitation and Encouragement enough for him to Sail into Britain. And indeed that Judicious Writer adds ſo many probable Circumſtances in Confirmation of this Fact, that as they convince me, ſo I doubt not but they will any Careful and Impartial Reader; and notwithſtanding that the Papiſts have the Aſſurance to boaſt ſometimes, that they gave us our Chriſtianity; I don't at all doubt, but that we had the open authoritative Profeſſion of Chriſtianity in Britain, and in Kent, before ever there was any ſuch Thing even in Rome it ſelf. But I muſt not ſtay to enlarge any further on this Head; only give me Leave to introduce it to my preſent Purpoſe thus.

(a) Tom. IV. Serm. 9. Gildas ſaith alſo, that here was a Chriſtian Church, before the Defeat of the Britains under Boadicea.

(b) In Amos, C. 5.

Whoever they were that firſt preached the glad Tidings of the Goſpel to this Iſland, whether, as is highly probable the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles himſelf, or ſome of his Brethren the Apoſtles, or his Contemporary Diſciples, Kent was certainly the Place where they firſt Landed, and where, no doubt, they began that Good and Gracious Work, of converting the Britons to the Chriſtian Faith. For there were no other Sea-Ports then uſed by the Romans in Britain, than ſuch as lay over-againſt Gaul; from whence was the uſual Paſſage into this Iſland. And though in Proceſs of Time, Dover, and the Portus Lemanis came into Uſe for that Purpoſe; yet was it not till a long while after this: And conſequently we may very fairly, and with as much Certainty as can be had in Enquiries of this Nature, conclude, that Richborough, or the Ancient Sandwich-Haven was the Place where St. Paul Landed, when he came to Plant Chriſtianity in theſe Nations. So that though perhaps the Proverb of Kent, and Chriſtendom, might have a much later Riſe, and refer to the Times ſoon after Auſtin the Monk's coming hither, when the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity was in a good Meaſure confined to Kent, eſpecially among the Saxons; yet you ſee our Country hath a juſt Claim to a yet greater Honour, on that Account, as having been the firſt Place where the moſt Primitive Preachers of the Goſpel Landed, and where probably they began to Publiſh that moſt excellent Way of Salvation to the Britiſh World.

I doubt we have not Data enough to determine us where to place King Lucius; though that there was ſuch a Prince, Primate Uſher, in his Primordiæ (a) hath made plain; and that he was not a King over all England, but only in ſome particular Part, under the Romans, as Cogidunus and Praſutagus were. Biſhop Stillingfleet thinks his Kingdom was amongſt thoſe called the Regni by Ptolomy, which he makes to inhabit Suſſex and Surrey: And I have already on another Occaſion in this Hiſtory, ſhewed you that Kent alſo hath been reckoned among the Territories of the Regni: Which perhaps may ſerve ſomething to confirm the Tradition of King Lucius's having built a Church in Dover Caſtle; and another in St. Martins by Canterbury. And I don't ſee any Reaſon againſt ſuppoſing that Kent might be placed under his Government by the Romans, as well as Suſſex and Surrey; but rather to confirm it; ſince we have ſeveral Traditions, and ſome Kinds of Records, about him in this County; whereas there are none ſuch in either Suſſex or Surrey, that I could ever meet with. But as I allow all this to be only Conjectural, ſo I think Kent hath as fair a Claim to the Honours of King Lucius by Tradition, as any other Part of Britain, and perhaps a much fairer; as I ſhall ſhew hereafter in the Hiſtory of Canterbury Cathedral.

Of the Archbiſhoprick and Dioceſe of Canterbury.

AS I have ſhewed you that the Chriſtian Religion was planted in Britain very early, even in the Apoſtolical Times; ſo was the Britiſh Church governed by Biſhops and Archbiſhops, in the modern Senſe of that Word, long before Auſtin the Monk came hither, even ſome Hundreds of Years: One Archbiſhop was placed in London, another at York, and a Third at Carleon upon Uske, and afterwards at St. Davids in Wales. And they had all Biſhops under them, who preſided over particular Dioceſes in each of the Three Archiepiſcopal Provinces. We did not therefore derive our Chriſtianity, nor Sacred Rites, nor Form of Church Government from Rome; for Anciently our Time of the Celebration of Eaſter, and Manner of Baptiſm, &c. was rather agreeable to the Uſage of the Aſiatick Church; which is a good Reaſon to infer, that from thence we had our firſt Chriſtianity.

On the Converſion of the great Saxon King Ethelbert to the Chriſtian Faith, by the above-named Auſtin the Monk, Canterbury the Royal City and Reſidence of that Prince, was made the Seat of one Archbiſhoprick, as York was of another; as I ſhall fully ſhew below, under the Life of Auſtin.

And after this, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury became a Perſon of ſuch high Rank and Dignity, that all England was in a manner reputed his Dioceſe. The Biſhop of London was eſteemed as his Dean in the College of Biſhops, his Office was to Summon Councils: The Biſhop of Winton was his Chancellor, and the Biſhop of Lincoln his Vicechancellor. The Biſhop of Sarum (ſome ſay Worceſter) was his Præcentor, to begin the Service where he was preſent. Worceſter was his Chaplain, and Rocheſter his Croſs-bearer; (a) and if he could have had it, he expected as much Obedience from York, in Proceſs of Time, as he himſelf paid to Rome.

(a) Antiq. Britan. p. 20.

The Engliſh eſteemed him in Spiritual Things, aut Quæ ſunt Ordinis, &c. to be, as it were, Supreme; next under the King.

By Ancient Privilege belonging to the See of Canterbury, the Archbiſhop is Ordinary of the Court of his Majeſty's Houſhold (b) wherever it be kept, and the King and Queen are looked upon as his Pariſhioners; and in old Time he had their Offerings at the Altar.

(b) Heylin's Life of Laud, p. 198.

He is accounted the firſt Peer of the Realm, and hath Precedence of all Dukes which are not of the Blood Royal; and of all the Great Officers of State.

His Title is Primate and Metropolitan of all England; and he ſtiles himſelf Providentiâ Divinâ Cantuar. Archiepiſcopus: Whereas other Biſhops write, Permiſſione Divinâ.

The Coronation of the King or Queen hath of moſt Ancient Date belonged to him. And alſo the Right of Summoning the Biſhops and Clergy of his Province to Convocation, and of Preſiding there.

He qualifies Eight Chaplains, whereas a Duke can have but Six.

In Councils Abroad, where that Uſurper preſided, his Place was at the Pope's Right Foot.

He had Anciently the Primacy over Ireland, as well as England, and the Biſhops of that Kingdom were Conſecrated by, and made their Submiſſion to him; of which Wharton in his Ang. Sacr. Vol. I. hath preſerved ſeveral Forms.

And Pope Urban the Second, ſtiled him Papa Alterius Orbis; and ſo the Archbiſhops might have been in all Spiritual Matters here, under their Sovereign, if Rome had not outwitted them, as I ſhall ſhew you hereafter that it did, and how.

Eadmerus ſaith, that all Acts of Eccleſiaſtical Authority come either from the King, or him; and he calls him Princeps Epiſcoporum Angliæ; Pontifex Summus, Summus Patriarcha, &c. and ſaith, he did only exerciſe Vices Apoſtolicas in Anglia, Page 44, 58.

He had alſo this, among other Privileges, That ſuch as held Lands of him, were liable for Wardſhip to him, and were to compound with Him for it, though they held other Lands in Capite of the King.

(a) Rights of the Clergy, p. 54.

The Archbiſhop of (a) Canterbury hath Two concurrent Juriſdictions; the one as Ordinary of the See of Canterbury, the other as Superintendant throughout his whole Province, of all Eccleſiaſtical Matters, both to Correct and Supply the Defects of the ſeveral Ordinaries; and therefore Panormitan calls him Ordinarius totius Provinciæ; for he hath Juriſdiction, Nolente Ordinario, as in Caſes of Viſitation, which is a Right veſted in him by Cuſtom Immemorial.

Belonging to this his Provincial Juriſdiction, are the Court of the Arches, the Prerogative, the Audience, and the Conſiſtory at Canterbury: And a vaſt Number of other Privileges of old belonging to this See, you may find in the excellent Author of the Antiq. Britannicæ. In Wharton's Anglia Sacra, and in the Appendix to Batteley's Canterbury. Which being now, generally ſpeaking, grown out of Uſe, to avoid unneceſſary Prolixity, I only mention here. Let me conclude in Archbiſhop Parker's Words; Authoritas ejus non certis & definitis Arch. vel Metr. Juriſdictionis cancellis concluditur, ſed ordinaria libera peneque arbitraria per ſuam Provinciam excurrit & diffunditur.

When he viſits, he hath a Power of Cenſuring any Biſhop in his Province. If he viſits an inferior Dioceſe, and Inhibits the Biſhop, during ſuch his Viſitation, and he ſhould happen at that Time to have a Title to preſent to a Living by Lapſe, the Biſhop can't do it, but muſt preſent his Clerk to the Archbiſhop, becauſe during the Inhibition, the Biſhop's Power is ſuſpended.

He can viſit alſo both our Univerſities.

Another Privilege belonging to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury is this, That wherever they have any Manors, or Advowſons; that Place, though in another Dioceſe, is exempt from any Juriſdiction of the Ordinary, is reputed to be of the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and is called a Peculiar; of which there are ſeveral in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter, in this County; as indeed the whole Deanery of Shoreham is accounted ſo; and in other Dioceſes there are ſo many, as makes the Number in all about Eighty.

By the 25th of King Henry the VIIIth, Cap. 21. it was expected that all Licenſes and Diſpenſations, not repugnant to the Law of God, which before were ſued for in the Court of Rome, ſhould be for hereafter granted to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to his Succeſſors.

And in the 1ſt of Queen Elizabeth, Cap. 2. It was alſo Enacted, that by the Advice of the Metropolitan, the Queen, or the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, might publiſh ſuch Rites and Ceremonies, as would be moſt for the Advantage of God's Glory.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as Metropolitan, hath now under him Twenty One Suffragan Biſhops, Seventeen of which are in England, and Four in Wales. At firſt the Province of Canterbury was by Theodorus divided into only Five Dioceſes, but in Proceſs of Time they came to make up the preſent Number. And in this See, ſince its firſt Erection, there have been Eighteen Biſhops Sainted, Nine made Cardinals, Twelve Lord Chancellors, Four Lord Treaſurers, One Lord Chief-Juſtice of England, and Nine Chancellors of the Univerſity of Oxford.

But notwithſtanding ſo many of theſe Archbiſhops, as well as other Prelates of the Realm, have born theſe great Offices, as well as many others of leſſer Note; yet ſo poor Accounts have the ignorant Monks left us of their Lives, that you find little more of them in thoſe Hiſtorians, but their Courage in defending the Rights of the Church; which were in Reality and for the moſt Part, Papal Uſurpations; and ſome Legendary Stories of their Miracles; with their Donations to particular Convents or Churches.

As to the Dioceſe of Canterbury, conſidered in it ſelf, it is of no very great Extent, containing but Part of the County of Kent: It hath in it 257 Pariſhes; beſides the Peculiars in the Dioceſe of Rocheſter.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as Ordinary of that Place, hath under him in that City, as his Officers, the Commiſſary, the Archdeacon, and the Rural Dean of the Place. Of the Archdeacons Juriſdiction you will find an Account in its proper Place, under the Title of Archdeacon: And the Rural Deans I have already treated of, p. 227.

(a) The Office of Commiſſary came into uſe with the other Conſiſtorial Forms of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdictions, exerciſed by Officials, Chancellors, &c. about the Time of Pope Alexander the IIId. In Canterbury, before the Title and Office of Commiſſary took place, the Archbiſhop's Official and the Archdeacon had the Juriſdiction and Cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: But the Official uſually accompanying the Archbiſhop in his Journies to London, or elſe where; his Non-Reſidence at Canterbury was complained of; and by a Statute of Archbiſhop Winchelſea provided againſt, by enjoining his Reſidence there. (a) Somner Canterb.

And when the Archbiſhop came to fix at, or ſtay much at Lambeth, a Commiſſaryſhip was eſtabliſhed at Canterbury, and a Perſon in that Office appointed conſtantly to attend there. And upon this, the Archbiſhop revoked and called in the Juriſdiction, which ſeveral Rectors and Parſons of exempt Churches within the Dioceſe, had before exerciſed; conferring it upon the Commiſſary. The Record of which Somner gives in his Appendix, N. LXXV. He acquaints us alſo, That the Records of this Court of the Commiſſary reach no higher than about the Year 1396; though the Office was erected above 100 Years before; becauſe, 'tis highly probable, that they were deſtroyed in that abominable Rebellion, raiſed by Tyler, Straw, Ball, &c. in the Year 1381, in which the Rabble being inſtigated by their Teacher Ball, burned all the Houſes of Lawyers of any Kind, with all their Writings and Papers: A full Account of which you will find in its proper Place.

The Bailiffs formerly, and the Preſent Mayors of Canterbury, don't come into the Cathedral with their Maces born before them; becauſe within that Place their Authority ceaſeth. Antiq. Brit. p. 27.

In the Dioceſe of Canterbury there is but one Archdeaconry; though there are more in many others: There are in it alſo but Three Deaneries.

Archbiſhop Parker in his Antiq. Brit. tells us, That without the Eaſt Walls of Canterbury City, in the Church of St. Martin's in Dover, there was formerly a Biſhop, who was a kind of Chorepiſcopus to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; always reſided there, or ſomewhere in the County of Kent, and when the Archbiſhop was obliged to attend the Court, &c. ſupplied his Place, and did all proper Offices for him. This Biſhop being himſelf a Monk, governed the Monks of Chriſt-Church, and celebrated Divine Offices in the the Metropolitical Church, which being finiſhed, he returned to his own Home. He and the Prior of Chriſt-Church (who was then called the Dean) ſate alike habited, both together in Synods. And this Cuſtom continued even to the Normans Time: The laſt Biſhop of St. Martin's being Godwin, who died in the Year 1065. After his Death Lanfranc refuſed to conſecrate any other in his Place, ſaying, That there ought not to be Two Biſhops in one City. Whereas really this was not a Biſhop within but without the City. And inſtead of this Biſhop he appointed Valerius, one of his Clerks, to be Archdeacon: Of which Thing he repented before he died.

I don't here take any Notice of what Mr. Battely in his Cantuariâ Sacrâ, Part. 4. cap. 1. objects againſt this Account of Archbiſhop Parker and Mr. Somner; nor enquire whether there were not an Archdeacon of Canterbury before theſe Chorepiſcopi. But having collected ſomething, about the Succeſſion of theſe Biſhops from good Authority, I ſhall give it the Reader as I find it: Though I have already mentioned the Names of moſt of them before, pag. 200.

After the Act of Parliament of the 26th Year of King Henry the VIIIth, C. 14. Suffragans were appointed to take their Titles from ſome Towns in England there mentioned, and after this they were called Biſhops of Dover.

The Firſt of theſe was,

8. Richard Yngworth, Conſecrated in the Year 1537.

A. D. 1537. Decemb. 1. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, according to the Directions of the Act for Suffragan Biſhops, nominated to the King Two Perſons, that he might appoint one of them to be a Suffragan Biſhop for Dover. Theſe were Richard Yngworth Prior of Langley Regis, and John Codenham, both Doctors in Divinity. About a Week after, the King, by a Privy Seal, appointed the Former to be conſecrated; which was performed Dec. 9. by Virtue of a Commiſſion from the Archbiſhop to the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, and St. Aſaph. And the Day after, Cranmer iſſued out his Commiſſion to Yngworth, ordaining him his Suffragan by thoſe Preſents, till he ſhould think fit to withdraw his Commiſſion again.

In this Commiſſion it was expreſſed, that his Buſineſs and the Exerciſe of his Duty was confined within the Dioceſe and City of Canterbury; the Juriſdiction of Calais and the Marches thereof.

His Office was to confirm Children, to bleſs Altars, Chalices, Veſtments, &c. To ſuſpend from Places and Churches, and to reſtore to them; to conſecrate New Churches and Altars; to confer all the leſſer Orders, to conſecrate Holy Oil of Chriſm and Sacred Unction, and to perform all other Things belonging to the Office of a Biſhop.

This Commiſſion may be ſeen at large in Strype's Memorials of Cranmer's Life. Appendix, N. XXII.

The Form of the King's Mandate for the Conſecration of a Suffragan may be ſeen in the Hiſtory of the Reformation, Vol. I. Collect. 52. Book 2.

John Thornton Prior of Dover, ſeems to have been Suffragan here before Yngworth. And,

9. Richard Thornden Prebendary of Canterbury appears to have ſucceeded him. He was Suffragan of Dover, in 1543; and with ſeveral others combined againſt the Archbiſhop (Cranmer) to accuſe him of ſuch Matters, as they hoped would deprive him of Life; which was barbarouſly ungrateful in Thornden, who had been preferred by him. And further; when Queen Mary came to the Crown, this Thornden was one of the firſt that ſung Maſs at Dover; and being Vice-Dean in the Abſence of Dr. Wotton, he ſet up Maſs alſo in Canterbury, about which Archbiſhop Cranmer was much concerned, for He was ſlandred as conſenting thereunto; but he vindicated himſelf in a Letter to a Friend, and by a publick Declaration calls Thornden, a Falſe, Flattering, Lying Monk. Strype's Life of Cranmer, p. 305.

When Queen Mary came to the Crown, ſhe repealed the Act of King Henry the VIIIth; and then Suffragans had Foreign Titles again:

10. And, Thomas Chetham was conſecrated in 1557, by the Title of Epiſcopus Sidonienſis, and was Suffragan to Pool.

Queen Elizabeth revived the former repealed Statute. And then,

11. Richard Rogers, Archdeacon of St. Aſaph was conſecrated Biſhop of Dover A. D. 1569, and was Suffragan to Parker, Grindal, and Whitgift ſucceſſively: He was afterwards Dean of Canterbury, and the laſt Suffragan for this Dioceſe.

Of the Election of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

BY the old Canons and Conſtitutions of the Church, the Right of Electing an Archbiſhop (as well as of other Biſhops) was lodged in the Prior and Convent of the Cathedral Monaſteries; and the Confirmation of ſuch Election, was at firſt a Royal Conceſſion of the Sovereign Prince, though after the Papal Uſurpations came up, it was done by a Bull or Mandate from the Pope. For Inveſtitures of Biſhops were anciently made by Temporal Princes

(a), and usually by the Ring and Staff. Till Pope Gregory VII. (called Hildebrand) A. D. 1078. pretended to alter it; and by a Canon to prohibit all Inveſtitures by Lay-Men: Which was afterwards pretended to be confirmed by other Popes. And theſe Arbitrary Decrees and Canons were the Foundation on which the Popes afterwards built their Bulls of Proviſion (of which more fully hereafter) and their Donations to Biſhopricks.

But all this was plainly an inſolent Uſurpation, and had no Ground either from Scripture or Antiquity. Indeed Pope Hildebrand abovementioned had the Face to ſay, and in his firſt Canon to aſſert, That it was ſo determined by the Decrees of the Holy Fathers; but no ſuch Decrees have ever yet been, nor can be produced.

The firſt Struggle here about Inveſtitures was, I think, between King William the IId and Anſelm. The King inſiſted on his Right of Inveſtitures; but Anſelm would not allow it; but fled from England to Rome, and then the King ſeized on his Archbiſhoprick, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter.

King Henry the Iſt alſo aſſoon as he was ſettled on his Throne, claimed his Right of Inveſtiture to Biſhopricks: And acquainted the Pope by Letter, that His Predeceſſors always had it. Anſelm follows this Letter to Rome; on which the King baniſhes him, and ſeizes on his Archbiſhoprick again: But at laſt by Reaſon of Rebellions at Home, Invaſions threatned from Abroad, and the Perplexity of his own Affairs, he was made willing to reſtore Anſelm.

King John, by Charter in his 16th Year granted a Free Election of all Prelates, in all Cathedral and Conventual Churches for ever: He muſt have had the Power which he granted; and it was confirmed by the Bulls of Innocent the IIId, and Gregory the IXth. Sometimes our Princes did not recommend any particular Perſon to the Convents, but only gave them in Charge to chuſe a good Man. But the King did more often Name a Perſon to them, upon their Petition for Leave to fill up the Vacancy: And whenever the Monks liked the Man, and thought him zealous enough to preſerve the Rights and Immunities of the Holy Church, they elected him without any more a-do; and never queſtioned the King's Power. As to this Matter, thus wrote King Edward the IIId to the Pope.

Progenitores noſtri qui dudum fundârunt Eccleſiam ſingulas Cathedrales Eccleſias Regni noſtri vacantes olim liberè contulerunt Regio Jure ſuo (quod ipſum eſt vetuſtum inveſtituræ Genus) ſed poſt modum ad applicationem Cleri, ac Reverentiam & Rogatum ſummi Pontificis qui tunc univerſali præſidebat Eccleſiæ, Conceſſit Dominus Rex Angliæ qui tunc erat (ſc. Johannes) Capitulis Eccleſiarum Cathedralium, quod cedente vel decedente loci Pontifice, ſacrorum corporum votis, alius eſſet deſignandus: Qui tamen neceſſariò ſolennem Regis Aſſenſum, tametſi non Inveſtituræ formulam quam diximus expectaret. Seldeni Notis in Eadmerum, 142, 144.

But indeed they met frequently with other Oppoſitions and Interruptions; both from the Provincial Biſhops, and from the Pope: Notwithſtanding the latter had confirmed their Freedom of Election, by ſo many ſeveral Bulls and Decrees.

Sometimes the Biſhops of his Province pretended that they had the Right alone to elect their Metropolitan; or at leaſt in Conjunction with the Convent of Monks: On this the latter preſently appealed to Rome; and at long run got the better of the Biſhops, (though this Claim held 100 Years) and obtained Confirmations from the Pope of the Prior and Convents Right of Election. But of theſe Matters I ſhall ſpeak more fully under each Particular Archbiſhop's Life: And there ſhew you how, by degrees, the Election became ſettled in the way it ſtands at preſent by the Conge d'Eſlire: And in this Succeſſion of the Archbiſhops, I ſhall alſo obſerve to you, how very troubleſome, expenſive, and tedious their Confirmations grew; and the Methods of their obtaining their Palls, &c. And after all this, how they were at laſt received at their Cathedral, and inthronized.

The Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury is now rated in the King's Books at 2093 l. 18 s. 8 d. ½. Its Revenues are ſtill very conſiderable; but they are much ſhort of what they were formerly.

In the Time of King Henry the VIIIth, it was thought much too great and envious a Revenue: And conſequently it was very much leſſen'd by that Prince, and in what Proportion he thought fit, in his 35th, 36th, 37th, and 38th Years. But though ſomething hath been ſaid of this, by both Battely in his Cantuar. Sacr. p. 63, 64; and by Strype in his Life of Cranmer, yet the Accounts are too imperfect for me to give you the Particulars of. All I can ſay is, That theſe Pillages of the Archbiſhoprick, were done under the ſoft Term of Exchanges with the Crown for other Lands. But though Cranmer did all he could to preſerve the Revenues, and notwithſtanding that he had, and deſervedly, a very great Influence over that Prince, yet the Exchanges were by no means upon the Square.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury is a very conſiderable Patron; he hath the Archdeaconry and Two other Prebends of his Cathedral in his Gift; and a very great Number of Livings, both in Kent, London, and other Counties. And eſpecially when you add to theſe, what they call his Options: which are the Choice of any one Dignity or Living in the proper Gift of any Biſhop, by him Conſecrated, within his Province. And theſe Options don't die with the Archbiſhop; but if the Preferments don't fall during his Life, he can appoint the Diſpoſition of them by his Will, to whom he pleaſes; or can leave them to be diſpoſed of by his Executor, or I believe, by any Truſtees.

Of the Cathedral and Metropolical Church of Canterbury; and the Archbiſhop's Palace.

THE Antiquity of this Noble Fabrick is as Eminent as its Beauty and Magnificence. For as it hath been confeſſed by all to have been, in the whole, much the Nobleſt and moſt Sumptuous Cathedral in Britain, and indeed there continue ſufficient Marks of it to this Day; ſo 'tis beyond Controverſy, the moſt Ancient of any of the Saxon Churches; being built by the Care of Auſtin the Monk, when he came hither to convert the Saxons to the Romiſh Faith.

But it hath yet a Claim to a much higher and greater Antiquity, in which it may vie with any of the old Britiſh Churches. For though as a Cathedral Monaſtery, it dates its Original no earlier than about the Year of Chriſt 596, or 597, when Auſtin, having converted the great King of Kent, Ethelbert, to his Chriſtian Faith, prevailed with him to erect and endow this Church, which Pope Gregory afterwards made an Archbiſhop's See; Yet was there then, as Bede (a) tells us, on the Ground on which this Church now ſtands, another much more ancient one, ſpacious and large, which was built there by the Chriſtians, even in the Time of the Romans. The common Tradition is, That it was built when Lucius was King of this Part of Britain, about the Year 161; and probable it is, that it was not long after this Time, no doubt before the Dioclesian Perſecution, when that Church in Dover Caſtle, and that of St. Martin's without Canterbury, ſeem alſo very probably to have been erected.

Somner produces (b) Three Authorities out of the old Leiger Books of the Church, to prove the Erection of the Cathedral by King Ethelbert, An. 596: Two of which mention this Ancient Roman Fabrick; and one ſaith, that it was built by King Lucius. 'Tis not poſſible to be certain what Kind of Building this Roman Church was of; but, 'tis probable, that its Walls were like thoſe of Richborow Caſtle, or that of Stutfall, compoſed of Stone, with Rows or Ranges of long Roman Bricks at proper Diſtances; and ſuch, the remaining Pieces of the Church or Chapel in Dover Caſtle do ſtill ſhew themſelves to have been. Leland ſaith, he ſaw the Annals of Dover, which had the Appearance of very great Antiquity; and that they record this Church to have been built by King Lucius. If this be true, as I ſee no Reaſon why it ſhould not, we may eaſily ſuppoſe the other Two Chriſtian Churches of St. Martin, and this in Canterbury, to have been built alſo under his Government, or not long after it. Since it appears by the Three Roman Ways which met in Canterbury, from the Three Eminent Roman Ports of Richborow, Dover, and Lemanis, that it muſt very early have been a City of very great Reſort; and conſequently as likely to have the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity eſtabliſhed in it, under a Chriſtian King, as any other Place whatſoever.

From the Departure of the Romans out of Britain to the Coming of Auſtin, which was about 200 Years; 'tis probable this old Church lay deſolate; for tho' the Perſecutions here under Maximianus, A. D. 303. were but ſhort, as not laſting much above a Year; yet vaſt Numbers of Chriſtians were deſtroyed, the Books of Holy Scripture burnt, and the Churches generally demoliſhed. But aſſoon as the Perſecution was over, they began to repair their Churches again, and probably did ſo by this; but this is only Conjecture. For about 100 Years after the firſt coming of the Saxons hither (which Archbiſhop Uſher ſettles in the 494 after Chriſt,) the Chriſtian Religion was much ſuppreſſed here by thoſe Pagans; ſo that no doubt all that while, till the Converſion of King Ethelbert, their Churches, and this among the reſt lay waſte. But after the Donation of it to Auſtin by King Ethelbert, and Auſtin's Return from his Epiſcopal Conſecration, given him by the Biſhop of Arles in France, he immediately prevailed with King Ethelbert to build a new Church on the Site of the old Roman one: And ſuch an one was certainly built, and that no doubt of Stone; though the Churches and Monaſteries, for a good while after this, and in moſt other Places, were certainly of Wood (c). But this being built on the Remains of a Church originally of Stone or Brick, was doubtleſs of ſuch like Materials.

Though for about 340 Years after this, there is no mention made of it in any Printed or Manuſcript Books; except of Donations given to it, of which many are regiſtred in the Leiger Books.

Probable it is, that for about 200 Years after Auſtin, the Fabrick might continue in good Repair; but when afterwards the Danes began to make Incurſions into this Kingdom, the State of Eccleſiaſtical as well as Civil Affairs was ſo ſhatter'd, that this Church was ſuffered to run to Ruin and Decay. For we read that in the Year 938, when Odo was made Archbiſhop, that its Roof was in a very dangerous State, the Walls of uneven Height, and the broken Rafters ready to fall on the People's Heads. This old Roof therefore Odo (d) took down, mended and raiſed the Walls, and in about Three Years Time covered it with Lead. The firſt Inſtance perhaps of ſuch a Kind of Roof in Britain. And Osborn mentions it as a great Miracle, that all the while this Church lay open, when Odo unrooft it, there was neither Wind nor Rain to hinder the Celebration of Divine Service; though it was a wetter than ordinary Seaſon all round about. But this miraculous Power did not long attend it; for A. D. 1011. the Danes landing with a great Fleet at Sandwich (as hath been elſewhere obſerved in this Hiſtory) marched to and beſieged Canterbury, and among other Barbarities, rifled and burnt this Church: And by the Account which Osborn above-mentioned gives of this Matter, it appears that there were no Wooden Pews nor Stalls in this old Church: For the Danes, in order to burn it, were forced to lay or Pile up Wooden Veſſels one upon another to make the Fire reach the Roof.

Thus it lay in Ruins and Deſolations till Archbiſhop Egelnoth's or Agelnoth's Time; but he about A. D. 1038, began to repair it, and by the Munificence of King Cnute, compleatly finiſhed it. This King, I ſuppoſe, thought himſelf obliged to make ſome amends for the former Ravages of his Countrymen; and therefore gave great Largeſſes to this Work; endowed the Convent with the Port of Sandwich, and gave to the Church his Crown of Gold.

But in this good Repair this Cathedral continued not long, for in Archbiſhop Stigand's Time it was again much impaired by Fire: And Eadmerus ſaith, that now almoſt all the Ancient Charters and Records of the Privileges of the Church were deſtroyed. Stigand was a Man that loved Money too well to lay much out in Repairs of Churches; and therefore I ſuppoſe let this Cathedral lye in its Ruins, for the Three Years which intervened between this and his Depoſition; for I don't find that any Thing was done towards repairing of it, 'till Lanfranc's Time.

All we find remarkable of this old Church, is from a Paſſage or two in Eadmer (a), from whence we learn ſomething of the Make and Form of Churches in thoſe Days; viz. That the Quire and Nave of it, were on the ſame Floor or Level; and that the former was called the Undercroft, which was ſeparated from the latter by a Partition. That about the Middle of the Nave were Two Towers built without the Walls of the Church; one on the North, the other on the South Side near the South Door. And that this South Door was famous for holding Pleas there; In quibus omnes Querelas totius Regni, quæ Hundredis vel Comitatibus uno vel pluribus vel certè in Curiâ Regis non poſſent legaliter diffiniri, finem in ibi ſicut in Curia Regis ſummi, ſortiri debere diſceruiter: As Eadmer's Words are; on which the great Selden hath written a large Commentary. Battely obſerves from Tentzelius, that ſuch Kinds of Courts are Inſtances of the great Antiquity of the Churches where they have been held.

The Archbiſhop's Pontifical Chair was made of large Stones ſet together in Mortar, which was placed at the Weſt End of this Church cloſe to the Wall.

At Lanfranc's coming to the See, he found this Church miſerably out of Repair; and therefore he rebuilt it from the very Foundation, with the Palace and Monaſtery, and nearly compleated the whole, all included within a Wall, in Seven Years Time.

The Weſt End he adorned with Two ſtately Towers, on the Tops of them he placed Gilded Pinacles; the Nave was ſupported by Eight Pair of Pillars between it and the Choir; he built a great Tower, or Steeple, in the Centre as it were of the whole Fabrick; which from the Pinnacle on its Top, being a Gilded Cherub, was called Angle-Steeple; on each Side this Tower were the North and South Wings of the Croſs Iſle, and they were ſupported by a great Pillar ſtanding up in the Middle of each Wing: In this Form the Church continued for above Three Hundred Years, and the Angle-Steeple ſtood yet longer. The Choir which Lanfranc now built, was ſoon after his Death taken quite down by Anſelm (a) and Ernulphus, then Prior of Chriſt-Church, and Rebuilt in a more Magnificent and Splendid Manner; but it was not quite finiſhed till after their Deaths; but then Prior Conrade making an End of it, carried away the Glory of the whole Deſign, this Choir being called the Glorious Choir of Conrade. It was raiſed above the Floor of the Nave, and you aſcended into it, as you do now, by ſeveral Steps. Out of the Choir you aſcended alſo by Three Steps into the Presbyterium, where was another croſs Iſle, as is uſual in Cathedrals, and thence by Three more, up to the High Altar. Behind the Altar, by Eight Steps more, you went up to the Archiepiſcopal Throne, (as they love to call it;) this was now a plain Seat cut out of one Stone; and here on Feſtivals, and high Days, the Archbiſhop uſed to ſit in his Pontifical Ornaments, while Things were making ready for him at the Altar, to which then he deſcended, and Conſecrated the Hoſt.

Under all the Eaſt Part of the Church beyond Angle-Steeple, there was then, as there is now, a Vault called the Undercroft; for the Choir and all its Parts ſtood upon Arches, and by that Means left a large Place all under it, where then they placed ſeveral Altars, and made it ſubſervient to their uſual Superſtition. Here, under the South Wing of the Choir, was a Chapel, or Chantry, Founded by Edward the Black-Prince: And now in the Undercroft, is a Church for the Walloon and other Strangers.

This way of Building was brought in by the Normans, and was not in Uſe here before. At the Eaſt End of the Choir were built Two Towers, one on each Side; and the Body of Anſelm being buried in the Southermoſt, occaſioned it to be called Anſelm's-Tower.

When Ralph Biſhop of Rocheſter, was Tranſlated to Canterbury, as he was A. D. 1114, there was a new Dedication of this Cathedral to the Holy-Trinity, as Lanfranc deſigned it; for before it had been Dedicated to Chriſt only.

About Sixteen Years after this, another Damage befel this Church by Fire: The Author of the Antiq. Britannicæ ſaith, that the Fire was ſo great, that the Church fell down by it, and was again rebuilt by Archbiſhop Corboil, and Re-dedicated in a moſt ſplendid and extravagantly Magnificent Manner, the King and Queen of England, David King of Scots, and moſt of the Nobility of both Kingdoms being preſent at it. But as Mr. Battely obſerves, 'tis probable that only ſome Part of the Church was now burnt, it not being poſſible to have rebuilt it again in ſo ſhort a Time as the Hiſtory allows for it, if the Damage had been very great. But however, Corboil's Vanity was ſuch, as that he would have a new Dedication, becauſe, it may be, the former was not performed with Pomp and Splendor enough. However, this Glory had not long Continuance; for A. D. 1114, (about Forty Four

(a) As cited by Battely in his Cantuar. Sacr. p. 7.

(a) For it was not fallen down as the Author of the Supplement to the Church of Peterburgh ſaith, p. 169.

Years

Years after this Pompous Dedication) this Glorious Choir of Conrade and Corboil, was entirely burnt to the Ground, with the Prior's Lodgings, and many of the Offices of the Monaſtery; but it did not damage Angle-Steeple. This ſad Story, Gervas, who was an Eye-Witneſs of it, very punctually relates.

Of the Fabrick, Eaſterly, from Angle-Steeple, nothing ſeems to have been left Standing of this Choir, but the Two Towers above-mentioned at the Eaſt End of all; and at the rebuilding of the Tower they were not pulled down; theſe Towers therefore, are the greateſt Pieces of Antiquity of the whole preſent Fabrick.

The Monks on this Accident, took all poſſible Care to rebuild their Choir and Offices again; and in order thereunto, ſent not only all over England, but even beyond Sea, for the beſt Architects and Workmen: And in about Six Years Time got the Choir ſo far finiſhed, as that on Eaſter-Day, Te Deum and the uſual Service was Sung there; but the whole Building was not compleated till A. D. 1184.

But then a new Choir aroſe, more Large and Glorious than that of Conrade, which is what is now Standing, and a very fine one indeed it is: And though I can't pray as Extatick Mr. Batteley doth, (a) that this Choir may laſt as long as the Sun; becauſe I believe our Earth it ſelf will be burnt before that Luminary will go out; yet to preſerve the Beauty of ſo fine a Fabrick, and to ſave the Church of Canterbury the Charge of Rebuilding it as long as poſſible, I wiſh it may laſt as long as any other Choir whatever. And really 'tis very likely to do ſo; for this Roof, though advanced higher than the former, is now of Stone, whereas that was only of Timber; and there are Six new Pillars added to Strengthen and Support it. The Under-croft alſo, which was rebuilt at the ſame Time, hath a ſtrong Roof of Stone; and though the whole be now above Five Hundred and Thirty Years Old, yet it hath a firm and fair Appearance, and is very likely to continue in a good State for many Ages.

After the Monks had, and principally at their own Charge, Erected this Magnificent Structure, they began wiſely at laſt to conſider of ways to prevent its being burnt down again; and one they preſently fell into, which was to pull down all contiguous Buildings to it. But here they met with ſome Difficulty: For ſome of thoſe Buildings belonging to St. Auſtin's Abbey, that Convent, out of Envy to the Priory of Chriſt's-Church, would not part with them, even for a very valuable Exchange, till the King himſelf interfered, and perſuaded them to it; and the Compoſition between the Two Convents on this Account, was Sealed with the King's Signet.

Though we don't find any expreſs Mention of a particular Dedication of this Church to Becket, in our Hiſtorians; yet certain it is that after this new Repair, it began to be called the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr; and that on the Account of Becket's Murder here, A. D. 1170, of which more in his Life.

Becket was Sainted the Year before this laſt Deſtruction of the Choir by Fire; and during the Time of its new Building, vaſt Numbers of Viſits were made to it by all manner of Perſons; ſome of them of the higheſt, even of Royal Rank, on the Account of the Miracles which were ſaid by the Monks to be wrought daily at Becket's Tomb: And by the Offerings there made, the Convent was enabled in a great Meaſure to carry on the Work; and a Pope's Bull was obtained on this Account, to appropriate the Offerings to this Purpoſe, which of Ancient Right belonged to the Diſpoſal of the Biſhop.

When the Monks ſaw what a Fund of Wealth accrued to their Church this Way, and was like to continue in this Channel, 'tis natural to ſuppoſe that they would think of Dedicating their Church to this Rebel Saint; ſince which way ſoever Profit would beſt ariſe to them, the Monks always thought was the beſt for them to purſue: And thus, no doubt, this Church came to be Dedicated to Becket; and ſo it continued to be called for about Three Hundred and Fifty Years afterwards.

For the former High Altar, which was firſt Dedicated to Chriſt alone, and afterwards to the Whole Trinity, now loſt thoſe leſs profitable Titles, and took the Name of one, for whom they diſcovered a much greater Value and Veneration, and was now called the Altar of St. Thomas the Martyr.

A. D. 1220, the Body of Becket was tranſlated from his firſt Tomb, into the Place where the High Altar ſtood, and which was now demoliſhed to make Room for this new Saint; and it was now called St. Thomas's Shrine: and the Pomp of the Removal of Becket's Bones hither, was not greater than the Expence of it; For Stephen Langton contracted by it a Debt upon the Archbiſhoprick, which continued in Part till his Fourth Succeſſor, Boniface, who diſcharged it with Difficulty. And now his Death was called his Martyrdom, and his Paſſion; and (as we our ſelves have known ſometimes upon another Occaſion,) ſuch high Expreſſions came in Faſhion about it, as equalled his Sufferings with thoſe of Chriſt, and made them as Meritorious: But of this more in another Place. Let us go on with the Account of the Fabrick. The Two Wings of the great Croſs Iſle on each Side Angle Steple, continued for about Three Hundred Years in the Condition Lanfranc left them; except only that the Middle Pillar in each was taken down ſoon after Becket's Murder, in order to give a better Sight of the Place in the North Wing, where he was Slain. But in the Year 1376, they were both taken down by Simon Sudbury, and rebuilt from the Foundation, at the proper Coſt and Charges of the ſaid Archbiſhop, and they continue to this Day: So that their Age is about Three Hundred Thirty Two Years. Three Years after, this Publick-Spirited, and Generous Archbiſhop, took down alſo all the Ancient Nave, or Body of the Church, with a Deſign to have rebuilt it anſwerable to the Choir; but his unhappy Death prevented it, being Murdered by the Rebels in Tyler's Inſurrection. On this the Monks went on with it as well as they could, and were much aſſiſted by the next Archbiſhops, Courtney and Arundel, each of which gave above One Thouſand Marks towards the Work; and it was finiſhed in Arundel's Time, though about Thirty Years in Building. And it ſtill continues a Strong and Magnificent Fabrick, being now about Three Hundred and Seven Years Old. In the North Corner of the Weſt End of the Church, is a high Tower with Four Spires, or Pinacles, which being either built, as is probable, by Archbiſhop Arundel, or at leaſt furniſhed with a Ring of Five Bells given by him, is ſtill called Arundel Steeple. Thoſe Bells were at firſt placed in Angle-Steeple, but on its being Rebuilt, were removed into this Arundel Steeple, where they ſtill continue; and to them a bigger than any of the former was added by Prior William.

(a) Cantuar. Sacr. p. 15.

At the other, or South Corner of the Weſt End of the Nave, is that called Dunſtan's-Steeple, from a Bell in it Dedicated to him, which is a later and more Elegant Structure: And being begun by Archbiſhop Chicheley, from him hath been uſually called Oxford-Tower. But it was finiſhed by Prior Goldſtone, and is about Two Hundred Sixty Seven Years Old.

Goldſtone alſo built that Place on the Eaſt Side of the Martyrdom (as the Word is) now called the Dean's-Chapel, over which is built the preſent Library of the Church; now fairly Desked and Wainſcotted, and filled with a great many very good Books.

This Prior alſo finiſhed, what his Predeceſſor William Shelling had begun the Rebuilding of, the great Tower in the Middle of the Cathedral, called formerly Angle-Steeple; and in the Work he was much aſſiſted by the Purſe of Archbiſhop Morton: A noble, lofty, clean Tower it is, as any Cathedral in England can ſhew, and is a very great Ornament to this Magnificent Church. Its Age now is about Two Hundred Years; and very likely it is to ſtand many Hundred Years more; for 'tis very well built, and was ſupported within by Two larger, and Four ſmaller Arches of Stone, which were fitted into the Pillars in Goldſtone's Time. It had alſo, as Batteley ſaith, (a) a good Ring of Five Bells in it once; but in the 32d of King Henry the VIIIth, they were moſt of them ſold to Henry Criſp of Birchington, and Robert St. Leger of Feverſham; and I ſuppoſe the reſt went off the ſame Way.

Within this Cathedral, in the Times of Popery, Mr. Battely reckons up no leſs than Thirty Seven ſeveral Altars, and to the Number Mr. Somner adds One more; ſo extravagant was the Superſtition of thoſe Days. At the Weſt End, under Arundel-Steeple, is the Archbiſhop's Conſiſtory-Court now held, and near it is a fine Font, the double Gift of Warner, Biſhop of Rocheſter, formerly a Prebendary of this Church; for the Rebel Mob, in the late Civil Wars, having Demoliſhed another very Noble One which he had Erected there, after the Reſtoration he ſet up the preſent Font, a yet more Curious and Beautiful Piece of Work.

The South Cloiſter was built by Order of Archbiſhop Courtney, as he appointed by Will. On the Roof of all the Cloiſters are a great Number of Coats of Arms in Stone, which no doubt preſerve the Memory of the Benefactors to this Cathedral.

If the Reader hath a Mind to have an Account of the Riches of Becket's Shrine, and the other Pompous Adornments of this Cathedral, in the Times of Popery, I refer him to Eraſmus in his Dialogues, or Colloquium Peregrinat. Religionis Ergo; and to Mr. Batteley's Cantuar. Sacra. Eraſmus ſaith, Becket's Shrine ſhewed an Invaluable Treaſure, where Gold was the meaneſt Part, for it ſhone with Jewels of an extraordinary Bigneſs, ſome of which (he ſaith) were as large as a Gooſe Egg. But I do but juſt mention theſe Things, and proceed to give you an Account of the Memorials of the Interment of ſome Illuſtrious and Eminent Perſons within this Famous Cathedral; leaving the Mention of ſuch Archbiſhops as were buried here, till I come particularly to ſpeak of them in the Hiſtory of their Lives.

And firſt, here is a fine Monument, A. D. 1412, of King Henry the IVth, and his Queen Joan, Dutcheſs of Britain, and Daughter of Charles the Vth, King of Navarre; 'tis richly adorned with the Arms of moſt Chriſtian Princes Abroad, and of our Prime Nobility. His firſt Wife Mary, one of the Three Daughters and Heirs of Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, Eſſex, and Northampton, having been buried here before him, A. D. 1394.

Here alſo was buried the Valiant Edward, Prince of Wales, uſually called the Black-Prince, A. D. 1376, and a very Noble Monument there is over him, with an Epitaph in French.

A Third Monument there is of Margaret, Daughter of Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, repreſenting her as lying between her Two Husbands, John Earl of Somerſet, and Marquis of Dorſet, and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Second Son of King Henry the IVth, killed at the Battle of Little-Baugy in France.

They tell you alſo that Queen Ediva, a Saxon, was Interred here, her Body being laid in the ſame Grave with Archbiſhop Livingus.

In the Body of the Church is a Grave-Stone over John Bokyngham, or Buckingham, who in King Richard the IId's Reign, was Keeper of the Privy-Seal, and after Biſhop of Lincoln; but Pope Boniface the IXth, Tranſlated him againſt his Will to Litchfield, then a Biſhoprick not half ſo good (ſaith Somner). He refuſed to accept it, and retiring into the Convent of Chriſt-Church, ſpent the reſt of his Days among the Monks here.

In the Undercroft are, or were, Two Monuments, one of Iſabel de Dover, Counteſs of Athol, A. D. 1292, and the other of Joan Burwaſh, the Lady Mohun, of the Ancient Family of the Mohuns of Dunſter Caſtle in Somerſetſhire. In the Nave, a little above the Tombſtone of Bokyngham, is another over Sir William Septvans, of Milton by Canterbury, Eminent for his Services in the French Wars with King Edward the IIId; another Stone alſo over another Sir William Septvans, 1448. This Family was very Eminent formerly in this County. In the South Iſle of the Nave, is a Tombſtone over Sir John Guildford, 1493, of which Family I have often made Mention. Near this another Stone over Sir William Brenchley, 1446, formerly one of the Juſtices of the King's-Bench; he had a Chapel and Chantry in this Cathedral, being that which is now called Dean Nevil's Chapel. In the North Iſle of the Nave, are Memorials of Edmund Haut, Eſq; 1408, of Sir Thomas Fogg, and his Lady; of Robert Clifford, Eſq; 1422, and of William Arundel, a Judge; of William Lovelace, Serjeant at Law; and of the Lady Crook, Wife of Sir Gerard Crook, Knight; and of Sir John Fineux, Lord Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench in King Henry the VIIth's, and King Henry the VIIIth's Reigns, and a great Benefactor to the Priory of Chriſt's-Church.

Wever ſaith that there was in this Church formerly, a Monument of Sir William Molyneux of Lancaſhire, made Knight Banneret by Edward the Black-Prince, at Navarette in Spain, A. D. 1372.

As to the Priors, Eminent Deans and Archdeacons buried here, I ſhall mention them hereafter, under the Catalogues of their Names.

Of the Archbiſhop's Palace.

YOU will find below, in the Life of Auſtin, that King Ethelbert gave to that Monk his Royal Palace here, Situated to the Weſt

West of the Cathedral Church; retiring himself to the Reculver, a very Ancient and Eminent Place formerly, as I have shewed you, though now sunk into Ruins and Obscurity. This Palace, with the Neighbouring Church, Austin converted into a Cathedral, and Monastery, (a) where 'tis probable he had no distinct Palace, or large Habitation apart from the Monks; for as, if you consider them as Cathedral Canons, he was their Bishop; or as Claustral Monks, their Abbot; so he and they appear to have lived in Common, with regard to Goods, Possessions, Eating and Drinking, &c. and his and their Successors after them, according to the Ancient Usage in such Places, till the Time of Archbishop Lanfranc. But this Gentleman had a Spirit above this Primitive Simplicity; and therefore soon after he came to the See, he built him a Court and a Palace distinct from the Monks, Discommuning himself and his Successors entirely from them. But of this Structure there is, I believe, no Part at all at present remaining; it having been either destroyed by Fire, or sunk into Ruins and Decay, by the Time that Archbishop Hubert came to the See. For then Lambard saith it was so dilapidated, that he pulled down most Part of it, and in its Place laid the Foundation of that Great and Famous Hall, and other Offices, which were finished by his Successor, Archbishop Boniface; although some say, that Stephen Langton had built and compleated the Great Hall.

(a) Somner's Cant. p. 101.

Which Noble Room is famous for the Wedding Feast of King Edward the Ist, A. D. 1299, which was kept here with great Pomp. For the mighty Entertainment given here by Archbishop Warham, to the Emperor, Empress, King and Queen of England, &c. at his Inthronization, A. D. 1504. For that given by King Henry the VIIIth, to the Emperor Charles the Vth, and to the Queens of France and Arragon, A. D. 1519; and for another given here by Archbishop Parker to Queen Elizabeth, and many of the French and English Nobility. But in the late Rebellion, this Magnificent Building, with the whole Palace, was pulled down, and hath ever since been converted into Tenements. So that at present the Archbishoprick of Canterbury is without a Place in the City from whence it is denominated. The Archbishops had formerly several other Houses in this County, which they kept in Repair, and occasionally resided in, as I have already observed in this History, as well as one at Mayfeild in Sussex. But now there is but Two belonging to the See, viz. Lambeth Palace, and that at Croydon; the former of which anciently belonged to the Bishop of Rochester, but was parted with by Exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the Manor of Darent in this County; of which more under the Life of that Archbishop, by whom this Exchange was made.

The Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury.

I. AUSTIN.

I Have already shewed you that Christianity, and that of the Purest and most Primitive Kind, was planted in this Island very probably by St. Paul himself; and the British Church was governed by Archbishops and Bishops, Twenty Eight in Number, long before the Saxons came hither; and the Gospel had taken such deep Root here, that even severe Persecutions could not quite destroy it, though it reduced the Extent of its publick Profession into a narrow Compass, both in the Diocletian and Saxon Persecutions. But indeed during the latter, there were but very few, besides the Welsh or Ancient Britains, that dared openly profess the Religion of Jesus, while Paganism did so universally receive an Establishment, wherever the Saxons Arms and Successes gave them Power and Authority.

Yet however, even among the Saxons themselves, there were some few that were inclinable to embrace the Gospel during the Time of the Heptarchy; and certain it is, that Ethelbert King of Kent, and then the Chief in Power among the Saxon Kings in England, as I have before observed in his Life, had married Bertha, Daughter to Aribert, the King of the Franks; who was not only a Christian in her private Faith, but had also got Leave from the King her Husband, to have Chaplains and Priests to perform the Divine Offices of Christianity; which was effected by the Pious Care of her Uncle Chilperic, to whose Charge she was left in her Infancy. And I take it to be more than probable, that it was by her Means and Endeavours, that the Bishop of Rome was applied to, to send some Missionaries hither to further instruct this Nation in the Principles of his Religion; the French Priests, on Application to them, having discovered no Zeal nor Effort this way. But we must mention also a Story, (though to me silly and trifling) which Bede, Lib. 2. Cap. 1. and some Authors relate on this Occasion: They tell you then, That Gregory, afterwards Pope and Saint, as he passed the Markets of Rome, happened to see some beautiful Boys standing in the Streets, and in order to be sold for Slaves; and as Bede supposes, for immodest Uses. The good Man's first Enquiry was, of what Country they were: He was told of Britain; of which he then knew so little, that he asked again whether they were Christians or not; and when answered in the Negative, he said, It was pity the Father of Darkness should be Master of such fine Faces. And being told further, that they were Angli, or English, he quibbled upon the Word, and said, they look'd like Angels indeed: To carry on the Punning Strain, they make Gregory ask of what Province they were; to which he was answered, of Deira, or Northumberland, the People whereof Malmsbury saith, used then to sell their Children; God grant, quoth he, that they may be De Dei Irâ Eruti; and to make the Jest compleat, he asked what the King of that Country's Name was; and hearing it was Ella: Alleluja, quoth he, must needs be sung in those Parts, to the Praise and Glory of God. On this 'tis said he went to the Pope, and desired him to send some to preach the Gospel in Britain, offering himself to go on the Errand; but Gregory could not be spared from Rome; so nothing was then done: And remembring these Boys pretty Faces, even after he became Pope, he then took Care to send Preachers into England to propagate the Christian Faith there. Now this seems to me to be a pure Monkish Figment; and even those that tell it, own, as I said above, that he was Sollicited to do it by some of the Saxons, who complained of the Negligence of the French Priests; for that, though so very near us, they would not send any Persons over hither to Preach the Gospel to the English. But the Court of Rome saw further into Things, and therefore they gladly catched at an Opportunity, that would advance the Power and Profit of the Holy See; for the more People were converted to their Chriſtianity, the more Subjects and Slaves the Pope was ſure to have. Accordingly he picks out one Auſtin, a Roman by Birth, and, as' tis ſaid, a Benedictine Monk by Profeſſion, whom he had made Abbot of St. Andrews in Rome, a Monaſtery founded by himſelf; whoſe Qualities alſo were ſuch as he thought proper for the Work; for it ſeems his Learning did by no Means bear hard upon his Conduct, and ſo perhaps he might not know that there was any better Chriſtianity than that he had learnt at Rome. And I believe the Reader will judge with me by and by, that by the Letters he wrote, and the Queſtions he put to Gregory, that he was as Ignorant and Silly, as 'tis plain he was Haughty, Inſolent, and Imperious. Methinks therefore thoſe * Writers of ours, who dignify this Popiſh Miſſionary with the Title of the Apoſtle of the Engliſh, do both ſtrain, or rather depreciate the Senſe of the Word Apoſtle, and pay alſo too much Honour to the Roman Uſurpation and Hereſy. Surely the Word Apoſtle ſhould be kept ſo chaſte, as to imply only thoſe ſent by Chriſt himſelf, or by ſuch as had an immediate Commiſſion from him, viz. the Apoſtles themſelves.

* Angl. Sacra.

And by calling him alſo the Apoſtle of the Engliſh Nation, they ſeem to me to pay too great a Compliment to Rome, and to encourage that ſilly impertinent Queſtion of the Papiſts, Where was your Church before Luther? (They may as well ask where was your Corn before the Devil ſowed Tares among it? Or where was your Garden before the Weeds ſprung up in it?) For if we own we owe our Chriſtianity principally to this Monkiſh Apoſtle, we forget the real and great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, St. Paul, and all thoſe Primitive Miſſionaries, that Planted the true Goſpel here long before any of the Uſurpations of Rome were heard of.

A. D. 596. But we muſt go on with our Story. Gregory ſends this Monk Auſtin, with about Forty more on this Errand; but after they had gone a good part of their Way, they met with ſuch an Account of the Barbarity of the Saxons, as quite frighted the Monk, and made him reſolve to go back again to Rome, and get the Pope to releaſe him from the Undertaking, as by Letters he earneſtly deſired he would do. By which you ſee this Romiſh Nuntio had nothing of that real Courage and Reſolution, which the Holy Spirit endowed the true Apoſtles with. Gregory would not diſcharge him, but by many Reaſons did at laſt prevail with him to go forward on his Errand. And he perſuaded alſo the Princes of France, by Letters, to uſe theſe Miſſionaries kindly, and to ſupply their Wants. Auſtin therefore did at laſt go, and with him his Forty Companions; over whom Gregory made him a kind of Abbot: And probably they came out of his own Abbey. Auſtin Landed in the Iſle of Thanet, in this County, in the Year 597.

They (with their French Interpreters) (a) were very kindly received by King Ethelbert, though he was a Pagan, and their Errand as kindly accepted; for which, no doubt, good Queen Bertha had prediſpoſed her Huſband.

She had made Uſe for her Devotions, of St. Martin's Church, Situated a little without Eaſt-Gate in Canterbury; where Lethardus, her Chaplain, (ſome call him Biſhop, Epiſcopus Sylranecenſis) performed the Chriſtian Offices. This Church, which was an Ancient Roman Building, and had been uſed by the Britiſh Chriſtians, in the Time of the Romans being here, ſhe got to be allowed to theſe new Miſſionaries, to perform their Service in.

King Ethelbert, at his firſt receiving them in Thanet, ſeems to have been a little diſtruſtful of them, for he would receive them only in the open Air, and would not go into any Houſe with them, for fear of Enchantments.

Perhaps their Theatrick Manner of Approach frighted him; for Auſtin came with a Silver Croſs, and a Banner with Chriſt's Picture on it; and they Chanted or Sung their Litany as they went along. However maintained them at his own Charge, and went in Perſon frequently to ſee and hear the Manner and Subſtance of their Worſhip; and at length both himſelf, and many of his Court, embraced Chriſtianity, and were Baptized by Auſtin on Whitſunday, as Bede ſaith.

After this, or perhaps at firſt of all, he appointed Auſtin, and his Companions, Lodgings at a Houſe near Stable-Gate in Canterbury, and ſettled a fix'd Maintenance upon them.

But when himſelf and his Court had thus embraced the Chriſtian Faith, the King would compel no one to it by Force; as rightly judging that in all ſuch Caſes the Mind ought to be free.

And now Auſtin finding all Things go thus glib and well, as Bede ſaith, paſſed over into France to Etherius, ſome call him Virgilius, Archbiſhop of Arles, and got him to Conſecrate, and Entitled him Archbiſhop of England. Which it ſeems Etherius did, in Conſort with ſome German Biſhops; and he could with the ſame Eaſe, and Right, had it been ſo proper, have made him Archbiſhop of the Roman Empire. Wharton ſaith, this Ordination of Auſtin was before he came hither, Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. p. 89. but I think he doth not prove it.

Hither therefore now comes the Miſſionary again with this new Acquiſition of Title and Power; and then ſends Two of his Companions, Laurentius and Juſtus (a) to Rome (to Pope Gregory) in order to acquaint him with his good Succeſs here, and beg his Direction in ſeveral Articles. And now this new Chriſtian Religion made large Advances here. Camden from an old Manuſcript having ſhewn, (b) that on Chriſtmas-Day Auſtin baptized above Ten Thouſand Perſons, beſides infinite Numbers of Women and Children, in the River Swalle. It was indeed but a cold Time of the Year for River-Baptiſm; but you muſt ſuppoſe that they were Sprinkled only, and not Dipt. Gervaſe of Dover, and Ralph of Cheſter, will have this famous Baptiſm performed in the River Swalle in Yorkſhire. But as Cambden hath obſerved, our County hath a much more probable Claim to have been the Scene of this Action, and that it was in that Part of the River Medway, called the Eaſt-Swalle, by the Iſle of Shepey, where theſe new Converts were Baptized: For we have no Account yet, of Auſtin's having travelled out of Kent, towards the Northern Parts of this Kingdom. The only Miſchief is, that Bede tells this Story of Paulinus, and not of Auſtin, and then indeed the Northern Swalle will do.

A. D. 598. The Year following, Auſtin found out another Church, which in the Time of the Roman Government here, had been uſed

(a) Preſat. ad Monaſticon, from Bede.

(a) Some ſay it was Peter, who was afterwards the firſt Abbot of St. Auſtins.

by

by the Believing Britiſh; this he got the King to rebuild for him, and near it he ſettled Habitations for himſelf and his Companions: And this was afterwards, as I have before ſhew'd, when in Courſe of Time it became enlarged, the preſent Metropolitical Church of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury. William Thorn tells us alſo, that there was another Place juſt without the City Walls, in the Midway between this and St. Martin's Church: which Ethelbert had uſed as an Idol Temple; but Auſtin now got cleanſed from all Marks of Heathen Idolatry and Superſtition; and turned into a Chriſtian Church, dedicating it to St. Pancratius; and afterwards obtaining of the King the Gift of ſome Land adjacent thereunto, he founded there, aſſiſted by the King's Munificence, a Monaſtery: Which at firſt was dedicated to St. Peter and Paul; but in Proceſs of Time loſt that Name; and took that of the Miſſionary, being called St. Auſtin's Abbey (of which more in its proper Place.) And this he deſigned as a Burying-Place for the ſucceeding Kings of Kent, and his own Succeſſors.

And now the good King Ethelbert made a Complement of his own Royal Palace in Canterbury to this Monk; which Auſtin had the Modeſty to accept; and ſo the wiſe Prince retired to an anciently famous Place called Reculver in this County: And Auſtin began to reign at Canterbury.

But let us now ſee what kind of Queries Auſtin ſent by the Monks above-mentioned, to Pope Gregory: And what Anſwers he received.

1. His firſt Queſtion was about Biſhops; how they ſhould converſe with their Clergy; how behave and act in the Church; how the Offerings of the Faithful ſhould be divided and diſtributed.

To this the Pope anſwered, that they ſhould behave themſelves as the Scripture directs. That of the Offerings, Four Diviſions ſhould be made: One for the Biſhop and his Family. The Second for the Clergy; The Third for the Poor; and the Fourth for the Repair of Churches: But that nothing ought to be poſſeſſed in particular by any Clergymen; who were to imitate the Primitive Chriſtians, and have all Things common.

2. Auſtin asked whether Prieſts, not able to contain, might marry; and if they did, whether it diſqualified them to officiate or not.

This Queſtion, as Langborn and Tyrrel obſerve, is not in Bede, who gives the following Anſwer to the firſt Queſtion: But Sir H. Spelman hath ſet it right out of the Paris Edition of the Councils.

The Pope's Anſwer was, That ſuch Clergy might marry, and yet ſtill continue to officiate, and to receive their Stipends.

3. He ask'd how it came to paſs, that ſince there is but one Faith, there are ſuch different Cuſtoms in ſeveral Churches; as one Way of celebrating the Maſs at Rome, another in France, &c.

To this the Pope anſwers, that if he could find any where elſe any Thing more pleaſing to God, and was of a good pious Uſe, than what he had learnt in the Roman Church, he ſhould introduce it into England: For that Things are not to be loved for the Places, but Places for the good Things which are in them.

His Fourth Queſtion was about the Puniſhment of Sacrilege; in which the Pope directs to be moderate, and proportioned to the Deſign, and aggravating Inſtances of the Offender.

His Fifth Queſtion was, Whether if on the Account of Diſtance, a Number of Biſhops cou'dn't well get together, a Biſhop might not ordained without their Preſence.

Gregory anſwers, That in Britain, Auſtin might ordain a Biſhop by himſelf, becauſe it was not practicable to ſend over to Gaul for others to aſſiſt him. But after he had ſo ſettled Biſhops here, that they might not be too far from one another, he orders that Three or Four Biſhops, beſides Presbyters, ſhould be aſſiſting at a Biſhop's Ordination.

I omit his Three next Queſtions about Marriages within the Degrees of Conſanguinity; and alſo his Tenth and Eleventh, on the Account of their Immodeſty and Impertinence. But his Ninth Queſtion, with the Pope's Anſwer, is worth our Remembring. Auſtin asks how he ſhould behave himſelf towards the Biſhops of Gaul and Britain.

To this the Pope anſwers, That he allows him no Authority over thoſe of Gaul, but over all the Britiſh Biſhops he gives him a Primacy and Authority, to teach the Ignorant, ſtrengthen the Weak, and to correct the Perverſe. And thus you ſee the Original of Auſtin's Power here. Thoſe who have a mind to ſee all theſe Queſtions and Anſwers at large, may conſult Bede, Spelman's Councils, Langborn's Chronica Rerum Anglorum, &c.

After Auſtin had thus converted Kent to Chriſtianity, Malmsbury ſaith, A. D. 599. that he viſited for the ſame Purpoſe ſuch other Parts of England, as were then under King Ethelbert's Dominion; which was all the Saxon Conqueſts in England except Northumberland. In Dorſetſhire they ſay, Auſtin met with very ill Uſage for a while; but his Temper and Patience at length got the better of it; and by his daily preaching he brought over many to the Chriſtian Faith, baptizing in a Place called Cerne; and deſtroyed the Images and Shrines of the Saxon Idols.

A. D. 601. Lawrence and his Companion came back from Rome, bringing the Pope's Anſwers and Directions as above related; and with them a yet larger Number of Monks, to help them in the deſigned Work of converting the Engliſh: Among which were Juſtus and Paulinus, of whom I ſhall have occaſion to ſay more hereafter. Theſe brought over with them alſo Books, Sacerdotal Veſtments, Altar Furniture, and ſuch other Trumpery, as ſerve to compoſe the Pageantry of the Romiſh Religion.

They brought likewiſe for Auſtin the famous Ornament, called the Pall. Which you muſt know was a Pontifical Enſign, much of the Figure as 'tis born now, as the Coat Armour of the See of Canterbury, and of the Archbiſhoprick of Dublin in Ireland. It was made of Lambs Wool only, and purfled with Croſſes of Black, in Breadth about Three Fingers; and having two Labels, which parting like a Y, on the upper Part of the Breaſt, were pinned on the Shoulders; the other Part or Body of it hung down upon the Breaſt, and it was worn over all the other Veſtments. The Pall.

(a) This ſeemingly ſimple Toy was eſteemed as of moſt precious Value. But Biſhop Burnet ſeems to be under a Miſtake, both as to its Form and the Time of its Introduction: For in his Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, p. 307. he ſaith, the Pall was a Device of the Popes in the 12th Century, in which they began to ſend theſe Cloaks to the Archbiſhops as a Badge of their being their Legati Nati. But the Pall was neither a Cloak, nor was its Introduction and Uſe by any means brought in ſo late as that. Dr. Duck alſo in his Life of Chicheley, falls, I think, into ſome Miſtake about this Ornament. "The Pall (ſaith he) was an "Ornament taken from the Body of St. Peter, "and was worn only by Patriarchs, Archbi- "ſhops (and ſome Peculiar Biſhops (b), to whom "the Pope had granted ſuch a Privilege,) to "denote the full Power that they had over in- "ferior Biſhops. And it was worn only in the "Churches of their own Provinces; and that "only on certain Holidays appointed by the "Pope. And till they had received it, it was "accounted unlawful for them, to call a Sy- "nod, to make Holy Water, to confer Or- "ders, to conſecrate Churches, or to exerciſe "any Part of their Function". Whereas 'tis certain, that Biſhops which had no Palls could do theſe Things; and ſeveral of our Archbiſhops did many of them before they obtained their Palls. But let's ſee how theſe Baubles were made. (c) The Palls are made with great Ceremony, and at Rome only, and on the particular Feaſt Day of St. Agnes the Virgin. When they come to Agnus Dei in the Maſs, Two White Lambs are laid upon the Altar, and afterwards delivered to the Sub-Deacon of St. Peter's Church: He puts them out to Graſs till Sheering Time, and then of their Wool mingled with other, is made fine Thread, of which the Palls are woven. At each End of theſe Palls are thin Plates of Lead of the ſame Breadth with them. When they are thus finiſhed they are carried to the Bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul, (which I believe theſe Pall-Makers know only where to find), and there certain Prayers being ſaid over them, they are left all Night. The next Day, the Subdeacon receives them again, and keeps them carefully till ſome Archbiſhop wants one, and either goes to fetch it himſelf, or ſends his Proctor to ſue for it. Then is it delivered with many Ceremonies; and thoſe that carry it are enjoined ſtrictly not to tarry above a Night in a Place. I ſhall have occaſion to take notice hereafter more particularly, of the extravagant Price the Popes have put upon theſe Palls (d); and what a ridiculous Impoſition it is upon the Clergy: No one can uſe the Pall of his Predeceſſor, but muſt buy a new one at Rome; and if he be made a Patriarch or Metropolitan in a new Church, he muſt have a new Pall. Great Complaints have been made of this, by the German Biſhops eſpecially, and others; but to no Purpoſe; Rome's the Market ſtill, and the Pope ſets what Price he pleaſes upon them: Notwithſtanding that, Gregory the Great, in a Council at Rome, A. D. 595. determined they ſhould be given Gratis; Pro Pallio omnino aliquid dare prohibeo. Probable therefore it is, that it coſt Auſtin nothing; and certain it is, that Pope Gregory ſent it for London and not for Canterbury; which how ancient ſoever a City it might have been, Malmſbury ſaith, was not then of eminent Note at Rome. So that Gregory deſign'd London for the Seat of the Archiepiſcopal See. But in this Auſtin thought fit to diſobey him, and to fix it at Canterbury (e) in Complement to King Ethelbert, and the Inhabitants of that City, and of Kent, who had been ſo very civil and obliging to him; where he firſt Landed, and where he reaped the firſt Fruits of his Miſſion.

Pope Gregory alſo in his Letters, adviſed Auſtin, that if the Northern People of Britain embraced Chriſtianity, to found another Archiepiſcopal See at York; and that under each Metropolitan there ſhould be 12 Biſhops; and that Metropolitan to have the Precedence that was firſt conſecrated: But that during Auſtin's Life, even the Archbiſhop of York, and all other Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould be ſubject to him.

When I uſe thus the word Archbiſhop, I ſpeak in the preſent Language: For that was not the Term in Auſtin's Time. Nor is he ſo ſtiled by Pope Gregory, even when he ſent him the Pall: And Spelman obſerves, that when Bede calls him Archbiſhop, he uſes the Language of his own Times: For this Title is not among any of the Forms of Marculfus, who wrote about this Time: But it was uſed in the Eaſt, ſome time before it came into our Weſtern Parts.

A. D. 602. Auſtin, ſupported by King Ethelbert's Authority, ſummoned the Britiſh Biſhops and Doctors to hold a Synod under him: And on their appearing there, he adviſed them to leave their old Rites and Uſages, and to practiſe thoſe of the Roman Church. But no Arguments or Threatnings could influence them to make any ſuch Change, even though, if you will believe Bede, Auſtin wrought a Miracle before them, to convince them, that his Miſſion was countenanced by Divine Authority. And at laſt they civilly ſaid, That they could not agree to an Abrogation of their ancient Rites and Cuſtoms, without the Conſent of their People. And therefore they deſired, that another Synod might be appointed, to which they would repair in greater Numbers. This was agreed to; and thither came Seven of the Britiſh Biſhops, together with Deonotus Abbot of Bangor, and ſeveral of his Learned Monks, and other Clergy of Note. But before they came to this Meeting, they conſulted with a famous Anchorite; (probably the famous St. Theliau, ſecond Biſhop of Landaff, who, by Auſtin's Ordaining his Succeſſor muſt have lived till about this Time; and that he retired to a ſolitary Life, appears from the Regiſters of Landaff;) whoſe Wiſdom and Judgment they much relied on; how they ſhould treat with, and behave themſelves to Auſtin. Quoth the good old Sage, If he be a Man of God, follow him. How ſhall we judge of that, ſaid this venerable Body? Saith the Hermit, Chriſt ſaith, Take my Yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. If this Auſtin be ſo, you ought to believe, that he himſelf wears the Yoke of Chriſt, and offers the ſame to you: But if he be ſtern and haughty, 'tis plain he is not ſent by God, neither ought we to receive his Dictates. They enquired again, by what Teſt they ſhould diſtinguiſh whether he had that Chriſtian Temper of Mind or not. Contrive the Matter ſo, ſaith the Anchorite, that he and his Companions may come firſt to, and place themſelves in the Council: And then if, when you afterwards come, he riſes up to you and ſalutes you, you may believe him to be a Servant of Chriſt, and that you ought to hearken to what he ſaith: But if inſtead of this, he ſits ſtill in his Place, ſlights and takes no Notice of you, and that notwithſtanding you are the greater Number: Do you as much ſlight him.

They took his Direction exactly; and Auſtin who had as little good Manners as Learning, ſat ſtill when they came in, and took no manner of notice of them at all. This deſervedly gave them a Diſtaſte of his Pride and Brutality;

ty, ſo that they oppoſed and contradicted him with ſome Warmth. He propoſed to them theſe Three Things: That they would join with him in preaching the Goſpel to the Saxons; and that they would keep their Eaſter, and celebrate Baptiſm according to the Uſage of the Roman Church. They anſwered, that they would not comply with him in any one of them, nor receive him as their Archbiſhop; for they concluded among themſelves, that if this Man's Pride was ſuch, that he would not riſe off from his Seat to ſalute them in a Council, much worſe Treatment might be expected from him, if they ſhould ſubmit to his Authority. (a) And the Abbot Deonotus is ſaid to have given him this Anſwer:

"Be it known to you all, that we are cer"tainly all willing to be obedient and ſubject
"to the Church of God, to the Biſhop of Rome,
"and to every good and pious Chriſtian, ſo
"far forth as the Duty of Love and Charity
"obliges us reſpectively; and to help every "one by Word and Deed, ſo as to influence
"him to become the Child of God. But any "other or further Obedience than this, we "can't diſcover to be due to him that you call
"the Pope, nor can we acknowledge him to "be the Pater Patrum as you would make him.
"But ſuch a kind of Obedience as that I have "mentioned, we are willing and immediately
"ready to pay to him and every Chriſtian.
"But as to other Matters, we are under the "Government of the Biſhop of Carleon upon
"Uſk, (or rather of St. David's,) who is next
"under God, to guide and direct us in Spiritual
"Things". So that as Bede ſaith plainly, they refuſed to ſubmit to him as their Archbiſhop or Metropolitan.

And this Diſtance between the Two Churches of Wales and England continued till King Henry the IId gained the Submiſſion of the former by Force.

When Auſtin ſaw that by his Reaſonings and Perſuaſions he could prevail nothing upon them, he is ſaid to have threatned them, "That ſince
"they would not accept of Peace from their "Brethren, they ſhould meet with War from their "Enemies. And that if they would not ſhew
"the Way of Life to the Saxons, they ſhould
"by their Hands be puniſhed with Death.

On this Occaſion it may be very proper to ſhew you what the late Biſhop of Worceſter ſaith on this Subject, in his Hiſtory of Church Government.

The Time when Rome firſt began to uſurp ſuch Kinds of Authority as this, was at the Council of Sardis, when a Canon was made in Favour of that See; and which Pope Zozimus would have put upon the African Fathers, as a Canon of the firſt Council of Nice. But they would not be ſo deceived: Nor would the Gallican Churches neither, could they have help'd it. But they were forced to it by Valentinian the IIId, a weak and diſſolute Prince; who found Advantage and Strength would accrue to himſelf by flattering the See of Rome; which had at that Time ſo great an Influence on the Empire. He therefore grants to the Pope, by a Novel, an Authority over all Biſhops within his Dominions, which were then France, Spain, Italy, and Illyricum or Sclavonia.

And this occaſioned thoſe barbarous Nations, who ſoon after over-run all theſe Countries, to have a Veneration for Rome; becauſe they were converted to Chriſtianity by ſuch Biſhops as owned its Authority over them.

(a) Vid. Spelman's Councils.

But Britain, which that fooliſh Emperor had deſerted before this Novel or Law was made; might very well be ignorant even that there was ſuch a Law. And therefore they continued their Primitive Chriſtianity and Liberty, 150 Years after this; and told, you ſee, Auſtin plainly, That they would not be ſubject to the See of Rome. However, they would not break Communion with the Roman Chriſtians, till they were forced to it: But when they found the Roman Tyranny going to be impoſed upon them, then they ſtood upon their own Terms; and did as People of Senſe and Spirit will always do in ſuch Caſes, retort the Imputation of Schiſm, on them that were the Cauſe of it, and would no more communicate with them than with Pagans, as Bede ſaith, Lib. 2. c. 20.

The Place where this Council was held, is called by the Saxon Writers Auguſtines-Ac, or Auſtin's Oak; and Spelman conjectures, that it was at the Village of Auſtric for Auſtinſric, on the Borders of Worceſterſhire and Herefordſhire.

A. D. 604. Auſtin ordained Mellitus and Juſtus Biſhops, the latter for the See of Rocheſter, and the former in order to convert the Eaſt-Saxons to the Chriſtian Faith: In which he had ſo good Succeſs, that their King Sabert, Son of King Sledda and Ricula, Daughter of King Ethelbert, was prevailed with to embrace Chriſtianity, and to be baptized: After which King Ethelbert founded the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's in London; where Mellitus and his Succeſſors were Biſhops. This King Sebert laid alſo the Foundation of Weſtminſter Abbey.

In Rocheſter City alſo the Capital of that Part called Weſt Kent, the ſame King Ethelbert built another Cathedral Church, which 'tis probable Auſtin prevailed with him to dedicate to St. Andrew; as being that Saint to which Auſtin's Abbey in Rome was devoted. And here alſo was a Monaſtery founded, to which this King was a good Benefactor.

A. D. 605. William Thorn ſuppoſes Auſtin to have died, and Mr. Wharton rectifies it to 604. after he had endowed the Monaſtery (which afterwards bare his Name) in Canterbury with Apoſtolical Privileges. (Who knows what they are?) And was buried without Doors near the Church of that Abbey; becauſe it was as yet neither finiſhed nor dedicated. But when the Church was perfected, his Body Seven Years after, was removed into the North, Porch of it, by his Succeſſor Laurence; and in the ſame Place were all the ſucceeding Archbiſhops buried till Theodorus. Of which more hereafter.

There hath been a Diſpute about the Year of this Famous Archbiſhop's Death: Some placing it as late as the Year 613, ſome in 611, &c. as the Antiq. Britan. The Reaſon of which as Thorn and Langborn ſay, is, That ſome of the Chronicles make him to have ſate Sixteen Years.

He is repreſented as one of Stature exceeding tall, and of a very graceful Appearance.

And as they repreſent him rather Religious than Learned; ſo as Dr. Cave ſaith of him, He was rather Superſtitious than Religious.

Some Time before his Death, and when he found it approaching, he ordained Lawrence to be his Succeſſor in the See of Canterbury, leſt any Interruption might happen upon his Deceaſe.

Mr. Dean Kennet in his Parochial Antiquities, p. 610. ſhews from Pope Gregory's Epiſtle to Mellitus, that he ordered Auſtin to celebrate the ſolemn Anniverſaries of the Dedications of Churches, with Religious Feaſts kept in Arbours, Booths, or Sheds, made up with Branches and Boughs of Trees round about the Churches: Whence Whence our Wakes no doubt took their Original.

Mr. Wharton in his Angl. Sacr. and Mr. Tyrrel in the firſt Volume of his Hiſtory of England, are very zealous to clear Auſtin from being acceſſary to that Slaughter of the Monks of the old Monaſtery of Bangor in Flintſhire: (Not that in Carnarvan, which is the Seat of the Biſhop): And I doubt not but Auſtin was dead himſelf, at the Time when Ethelfrid King of Northumberland did actually ſlay thoſe poor Monks: But it doth not follow from thence that he might not prevail with King Ethelbert to excite Ethelfrid to that Expedition againſt the Britains, where this Slaughter happened; as Milton ſuggeſts in his Hiſtory of England: And which is all that Geofrey of Monmouth, Trivet, Biſhop Jewell, and the Judicious Author of the Antiquitates Britannicæ charge him with. And from what appears of the Pride and Reſentfulneſs of Auſtin, I muſt own, I fear he had too great a Share in cauſing the Accompliſhment of what he threatned the Britiſh Monks with, and what his Apologizers chuſe rather to call a Prophecy.

2. LAWRENCE,

A. D. 604. Succeeded Auſtin in the See of Canterbury, having been appointed and conſecrated thereunto by him, juſt before he died, as I have before obſerved: And leſt as ſome ſuggeſt, the Archiepiſcopal Chair ſhould have been moved to London. By Birth he was a Roman, one of thoſe Monks that came over with Auſtin, and a Man of good Learning. He took good Care not only within his own Province, but elſewhere to propagate the Chriſtian Faith, and laboured hard to bring the Britons of Wales, the Scots, and Iriſh, to one Conſent in Matters of Religion. But probably in this Deſign, he was much hindred by the Death of King Ethelbert: Whoſe Son Eadbald was a diſſolute and vicious Prince; and when reproved by Lawrence for his Crimes; of which one was marrying his Father's Widow; he not only quarrelled with him, but in a little Time renounced the Chriſtian Religion, and eſtabliſhed Paganiſm again. In which he was followed and ſupported by great Numbers of his People. Lawrence at laſt, tired out with unſucceſsful Attempts to recover and amend King Eadbald, and finding that he grew his Enemy, and hated him for his Reproofs, reſolved to follow Mellitus and Juſtus into France, whom the Sons of King Sebert had forced thither. But, as the Monks tell you, the Night before his intended Departure, he order'd his Bed to be made in the Church of his Monaſtery; where after many Prayers and Tears, by which he invoked Heaven to commiſerate the dreadful State of his poor Church, he at laſt fell aſleep. And then Bede ſaith, it ſeemed to him, that St. Peter ſtood by him, and firſt expoſtulating with him, at length chid and reproved him ſeverely, for the Deſign of forſaking his Church in this Extremity: And truly at laſt the Apoſtle proceeded to blows, actually whipping him and beating him ſeverely; as the poor Biſhop found to his Coſt by the Marks upon, and Pains all over his naked Body: By which he diſcovered alſo, that it was ſomething more than dreaming of Whipping. Well! with theſe Marks of St. Peter's Diſcipline upon him, he haſtes to King Eadbald, telling him the whole Story, and ſhewing his Wounds and Bruiſes to convince him of the Truth of what he ſaid. This ſtruck ſuch a Terror into the King, that he immediately forſook his Idols, repudiated his inceſtuous Conſort, cauſed himſelf to be rebaptized; and to ſhew that he was ſincere, and in real earneſt, he built a Church in the Monaſtery of St. Auſtin, and dedicated it to the Bleſſed Virgin.

Lawrence overjoy'd with this Reformation ſends for Mellitus and Juſtus home out of France; reſtoring the latter to his See of Rocheſter; and keeping Mellitus with him, till he could find ſome favourable Opportunity of replacing him too. But in this very Year he died, and was buried in the Porch of St. Auſtin's Abbey, by his Predeceſſor Auſtin, whoſe Body he had before removed thither. A.D. 916.

He is ſaid to have wrote a Book about the Obſervation of Eaſter; and Epiſtles to the Biſhops of the Welſh, Scottiſh, and Iriſh Churches, to perſwade them to, and to continue them in the Catholick Communion one with another.

3. MELLITUS,

WAS a Roman Abbot, Bede ſaith of Noble Birth, and as Noble a Mind, whom Pope Gregory ſent over after Auſtin, to aſſiſt him in the Work of converting the Engliſh. Some Years after, Auſtin conſecrates him Biſhop of the Eaſt Angles, or London, where he was Famous for converting Sebert to Chriſtianity, as hath been before obſerved; and in that City King Ethelbert built him the Cathedral of St. Pauls. Four Years after his Conſecration he went to Rome, to adviſe with Pope Boniface about ſome Things relating to his See. And about a Year or Two after his Return, Ethelbert King of Kent, and Sebert King of the Eaſt Saxons, being both dead; he was much diſturbed by the wicked Pagan, Son of King Sebert, and by Degrees worſe and worſe uſed, till at laſt they baniſhed him their Dominions. On this he went firſt to Laurence, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but finding him, as I have ſhewed you in his Life, in a not much better Condition, he took Juſtus, Biſhop of Rocheſter, along with him, and Sailed into France. From whence being ſent for on the Occaſion, as I have mentioned, of St. Peter's terrible Viſion to Laurence, he came to Canterbury, but could by no Means get Leave to go to his See: However, he was there maintained by Laurence till his Death. And that happening about a Year afterwards, he was on Laurence's Deceaſe, made Archbiſhop of Canterbury; where he diſcharged that great Office with as great Care, Piety and Integrity. He died of the Gout, and was buried by his Predeceſſor. He ſate Five Years, and died A. D. 624.

We have no Account of either Laurence, or his, or ſome of his Succeſſors, receiving any Pall from Rome. So that though Auſtin had one ſent to him, yet it was not, it ſeems, now looked upon as an Eſſential Part of the Dignity of the Archbiſhop.

If you will believe Bede, the City of Canterbury, was much indebted to this good Archbiſhop's Prayers and Preſence; for by thoſe alone, it was miraculouſly ſaved from being deſtroyed by Fire. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Lib. 2. Cap. 7.

4. JUSTUS.

HE was alſo one of thoſe Roman Monks whom Pope Gregory ſent over into England after Auſtin, A. D. 601, to aſſiſt him in the Work of converting the Engliſh Nation; and was by him, during his Life, ordained Biſhop of Rocheſter, under which Capacity you will find ſomething more of him, in the Catalogue of the Biſhops of that See.

On Mellitus's Deceaſe, he was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, where he ſate Nine Years, ſome ſay Twelve, and Deceaſed A. D. 633, or as others ſay, 636. But Wharton thinks (a) he ſate but Three Years, and died A. D. 627. He was buried by his Predeceſſors.

Stephen Birchington ſaith, Pope Boniface did in his Time determine, that the Metropolitical See, which Gregory deſigned, as I have before ſhewed you, to fix at London, ſhould now be placed for ever at Canterbury.

He ordained Paulinus to be Biſhop of the North Humbers; whence being expelled by the Pagans on King Edwin's Death, he came into Kent, and was made Biſhop of Rocheſter by this Juſtus. On his own Tranſlation to Canterbury, he ordained Romanus to be Biſhop of Rocheſter in his Room.

It appears by the Engliſh Biſhop's Letter to Pope Leo, (b) that Pope Boniface addreſs'd himſelf to Juſtus thus,

" Dilectiſſimo Fratri Juſto Bonifacius: Pal-
" lium per Latorem preſentium fraternitati tuæ
" benignitatis ſtudijs invitati direximus, Con-
" cedentes etiàm tibi ordinationes Epiſcopo-
" rum Exigente opportunitate Dei preveniente
" miſerecordiâ celebrare; ita ut Chriſti Evan-
" gelium plurimorum adnuntiatione ita omni-
" bus Gentibus, quæ nec dum converſæ ſunt
" dilatetur, &c.

And conſequently his Pall was ſent him from Rome, as they ſuppoſe Gratis, though afterwards the obtaining it became very expenſive. With the Pall Boniface ſent him Two Letters, one of which is Recorded in Bede, and the other in William of Malmsbury.

5. HONORIUS.

A Monk, and by Birth a Roman, and had been the Diſciple of Pope Gregory. He is repreſented as a Learned and Prudent Man. There is the ſame Uncertainty as to the exact Time of his coming to the See, as there is about his Predeceſſor Juſtus his Death. Some ſay he ſate Twenty Six, but 'tis moſt probable it was but Twenty Years; he died A. D. 653, and was buried among his Predeceſſors. From an Epiſtle of the Biſhops of England to Pope Leo, Printed by Mr. Wharton, (c) Page 461, it appears that they complained much of the Charge and Trouble of our Archbiſhops being obliged to go to Rome for their Conſecration and Pall; and they recite a Letter from Pope Honorius to this Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein are theſe Words:

" Dilectiſſimo Fratri Honorio Honorius Sa-
" lutem. Juxta Veſtrum Petitionem & Filio-
" orum noſtrorum Regum (a) vobis per preſen-
" tem noſtrum preceptionem, vice B. Petri
" Apoſtolorum Principis Auctoritatem tribu-
" imus; ut quando unum ex vobis Divina ad
" Sejuſſerit Gratia evocari, is qui Superſtes
" fuerit Alterum in Loco defuncti debeat Epiſ-
" copum Ordinare. Pro quâ etiam re ſingula
" veſtræ Dilectioni Pallia pro eâdem ordina-
" tione celebranda direximus, &c.

And accordingly this Honorius was Conſecrated at Lincoln by Paulinus Archbiſhop of York, who had a Pall ſent him for that Purpoſe.

Honorius Appointed and Ordained Biſhops in many Places; and by ſome (b) is ſaid to have divided his Province into Pariſhes; but that I judge, with Mr. Selden, to be a Miſtake for Biſhopricks, or Dioceſes; for 'tis probable enough he did not only divide his Province after that manner, but eſtabliſhed alſo ſome new Biſhopricks in it. But I take the Diviſion of Dioceſes into Pariſhes, not to have been performed till a good while after this. Some ſay the Diviſion which Honorius began, of his Province into Pariſhes, was carried on a good deal further by Theodorus, his next Succeſſor but one. And this I take to be very probable; and that Pariſh-Churches began firſt to be built under that great Archbiſhop's Preſidence. Lambard alſo is expreſs that Theodore firſt divided the Province of Canterbury into Five Biſhopricks.

6. DEUS DEDIT, or A DEO DATUS.

A. D. 655. AFter the Death of Honorius, the See of Canterbury lay vacant for about Eighteen Months; and then one Frithona, a Saxon, or Engliſhman, and the firſt that ever was ſo, was Elected in his Room; of what Parentage he was, or where Educated, we have no Account; but he is ſaid to have been a Man of Learning, and well qualified by other Virtues. On his being Elected, they ſeem to have given him this affected Name of Deus dedit, though his own was of good Signification in the Saxon Language. The See of York being now vacant, he was Conſecrated by another Engliſhman, and a Kentiſhman too, Ithamar Biſhop of Rocheſter; which is the firſt Inſtance we have of a ſingle Biſhop's Conſecrating an Archbiſhop. He was a careful and honeſt Governor of the Church, and ſate about Nine Years.

A. D. 664. He was buried by his Predeceſſors in the Porch of St. Auſtin's Church, belonging to the Abbey of that Name, and the laſt that was ſo.

On his Death the See was vacant about Four Years.

Pitſeus ſaith, he wrote Memoirs of the Lives and Actions of his Predeceſſors in this See.

After his Deceaſe, another Engliſhman, one Wigard, or Wighard, a Man of Years, Gravity, and Learning, was Elected in his Room; agreed to (ſaith Bede) by the whole Engliſh Nation, and ſent to Rome for Conſecration; with Recommendatory Letters from Ecbert, King of Kent, and Oſwy, King of Northumberland, to the Pope, and theſe attended with great Preſents: For on a Conference between thoſe Princes, he was judged to be the moſt proper Man to govern the Engliſh Church at that Time. But the good Man coming to Rome in the Time of a raging Peſtilence, loſt both his own, and moſt of his Attendants Lives, who died there of the Plague.

The Pope, deſirous to fill up the See ſpeedily, that had been ſo long vacant, appointed an Archbiſhop of Canterbury himſelf, one Adrian, Abbot of Thiridanum, near Naples, and an African by Birth. But he, good Man! would by no Means be perſuaded to take ſo great a Charge upon him, and propoſed one Andreas; who was judged to be very well qualified, only his Health would not permit him to undertake it: Then Adrian, on the Pope's ſtrong Importunity, recommend to him another Perſon, as he ſaid, of greater Learning and Years, and in all other neceſſary Qualifications, much fitter than himſelf. He named a Monk then in Rome, one Theodorus, by Birth a Greek, of Tarſus in Cilicia, the Place of St. Paul's Nativity; who was Sixty Six Years of Age, and well fraught with all Kinds of good Learning, eſpecially the Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Languages. But though the Pope approved of this Man, whom the modeſt Adrian had thus recommended, yet he would not conſent to appoint him Archbiſhop, unleſs Adrian would promiſe to go over along with him into England, and to aſſiſt and adviſe him in the Diſcharge of his Province, leaſt being a Greek, he ſhould introduce any Aſiatick Ceremonies or Uſages.

To this Adrian conſented, and Theodorus was Conſecrated A. D. 668. The next Summer they ſet out for England, but were a Year and half before either of them arrived here. Theodorus came firſt, but Adrian was detained a while by Ebroinus, though in ſome Time alſo ſent over, and was made Abbot of St. Auſtins in Canterbury.

7. THEODORUS.

A. D. 668. Theodorus being, as I have ſhewed above, made Archbiſhop at Rome, under the Conduct of an Engliſh Nobleman, one Biſcopius Benedictus, arrived in Kent, and entred on the Charge of his Archbiſhoprick; which he managed with ſo ſtrict and rigid a Diſcipline, that ſome blame him, as having been too ſevere. Some ſay he was the firſt that, properly ſpeaking, exerciſed the Authority of an Archbiſhop; others, the firſt to whom the whole Biſhops and Clergy of Britain conſented to ſubmit. Malmsbury ſaith he extended his Juriſdiction all over England, even on the other Side of the River Humber, placing and diſplacing Biſhops at his Pleaſure: And travelling all over England to viſit the Sees and Churches; and being mollified by the Submiſſion of Ceadda, though he had diſapproved of his former Ordination, and Appointment to York, he Reordained him, and made him Biſhop of Litchfield, in the Room of Ferumanus: And this he did at the Requeſt of Wulpher, and Conſent of Oſwy.

He called together a Synod of Biſhops at Hereford, where it was determined, that for the better Government of the Church, they ſhould aſſemble once a Year (on Auguſt the 1ſt) at Cloveſhoe; now, as I have, I think, made probable, Cliff at Hoo near Rocheſter in Kent. See Cliff.

A. D. 676. He made Hedda, a Monk of Whitby, Biſhop of Dorcheſter, and the Year after removed the See again to Wincheſter.

He brought over with him many Books, as a fine Manuſcript Greek Pſalter, ſeveral Greek Homilies, and the Works of Homer; which Lambard in his Perambulation of Kent, Page 316, ſaith, was ſhewed to him very fairly written on thick Paper, with the Name of Theodorus prefixed. What kind of Paper this was he doth not ſay, but I believe our Ragg-Paper is not any Thing near ſo Ancient as that. This Homer is alſo mentioned by Biſhop Godwine.

At Canterbury he erected a School, or rather a kind of Academy, with a good Library, much to the Advantage of that City; and he taught his Clergy to uſe Books, and know the Value of them; and he made all Sorts of Liberal Arts and Sciences to flouriſh.

A. D. 673. The Pope need not have been afraid of his not keeping up the Uſages and Rites of the Roman Church, for in this he was very exact and vigorous: And in a Council which he called at (a) Hertford, got them all eſtabliſhed; and in particular the Roman Time for the Obſervations of Eaſter. However, his Spirit was ſo great, that he would not allow of ſome of the Papal Uſurpations, and yet he always got good Treatment from Rome; though he often put in and removed Biſhops, erected new Sees, &c. without conſulting the Pope. For thus Pope Agatho writes to him;

Interim peto a Te Frater Theodore, ut permittas tuo per totam Angliam (b) Edicto Concilium congregare, utque Hæ Literæ noſtræ recitentur, &c.

And indeed, though the Pope was here held in Reverence and Eſteem, as being Biſhop of Rome, that Great, Imperial, and Learned City; yet he was allowed, properly ſpeaking, no Authority here as yet. But in Proceſs of Time, and by Degrees, and by Application and Art, he obtained a Juriſdiction over thoſe who only occaſionally asked his Advice: And then he pretented to diſpute ſeveral Points which he had before allowed of here; as the Clergy's receiving Inveſtitures from Princes; Kings calling Synods, and determining Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, without Appeals to Rome, Conferring and Transferring Biſhopricks, &c. (c)

A. D. 675. He deprived Vinfridus Biſhop of the Mercians, for his Diſobedience to him, and placed Saxulfus in his Room. (d)

And A. D. 678. a Complaint being made to him againſt Biſhop Wilfrid, that he held many Abbeys in Commendam, was ſerved in Silver and Gold Plate, &c. Theodore called a Council of Biſhops in Northumberland together, and immediately diſplaced him, and appointed two other Biſhops Boſa and Eta in his Room. On this, Wilfrid appealed to, and travelled to Rome, where Pope Agatho in a Council, which was called about our Britiſh Affairs, ordered him to be reſtored: And accordingly, Wilfrid returns with the Order, but then the King and he quarrelled; ſo that being accuſed of getting his Cauſe at Rome by Bribery, the King committed him to Priſon, and ſeized his Goods. Though they were afterwards reſtored to him, and himſelf enlarged, but ordered to depart the Realm.

A. D. 680. He called a Council at Hatfield, (Dr. Cave ſaith at Hethfield in Kent,) where were preſent the Kings of Northumberland, Mercia, East-Anglia, and Kent, as alſo himſelf as Preſident. And here at the King of Mercia's Deſire, he divided his Kingdom into Five Biſhopricks; viz. Cheſter, Worceſter, Litchfield, Leiceſter, and Hereford. Some reckon Lindſey and Dorcheſter inſtead of Leiceſter and Hereford.

A. D. 684. He held a Council at Twiford in Northumberland, where Cuthbert was made Biſhop in the Room of Hambert, whom he now deprived; and ſome Donations of King Egfride were confirmed. (a)

He wrote a Treatiſe called Pœnitentiale, which was publiſhed at Paris, with John Petit's Notes, A. D. 1677: With ſome other Things added to it.

Mr. Cambden ſaith, the Muſes were firſt tranſported to Oxford, from Creeklade; which Place probably Bede means by what he calls Greekſtade, where he ſaith this Theodorus firſt ſet up Schools of Learning, as I have before ſhewed you he did at Canterbury.

A. D. 690, he died in the Eighty Eighth Year of his Age, having ſate about Twenty Two Years, and was buried, not in the Porch of St. Auſtin's Abbey-Church, as his Predeceſſors had been, but within the Church it ſelf.

Malmsbury ſaith, before his Death he repented of his Severities, and deſired to be reconciled to Biſhop Wilfred, and was ſo.

Saith Biſhop Jewel, Part II. Page 141. Sonos Cantandi in Eccleſiâ, quos eatenùs in Cantiâ tantum Noverunt, ab hoc tempore per omnes Anglorum Eccleſias diſcere cæperunt. And indeed Geometry, Aſtronomy, and other Mathematick Sciences, did now firſt, by Theodoret's Means, become known here.

And as Stow ſaith, (b) the Uſe of Stone Buildings, and Glaſs Windows, were firſt brought into England by the Abbot of Wirrall, who was Bede's Tutor: But it appears by King Edgar's Charter to the Abbot of Malmsbury, that above Three Hundred Years after this, the Monaſteries here were built of Wood, and Boards for Walls; and perhaps they were generally ſo till the Normans came hither.

8. BRITHWALD, BERTWALD, BRICWALD.

HE came to the See A. D. 690, as moſt ſay, but more truly 692, having been firſt a Monk at Glaſtenbury, then Abbot of Reculver in this County. He was the Second Saxon, or Engliſhman, that had this Dignity. Though Stephen Birchington, and the Chron. Saxon, makes him to have been the firſt; but that is a Miſtake, for as I have ſhewed, Deusdedit was alſo an Engliſhman.

And A. D. 693, he was Conſecrated by Bregwine, alias Godwine, Metropolitan of Wales; if ſo you Tranſlate Galliæ, but ſome think it means France, as is its uſual Signification. 'Tis ſaid of him, that he had a good Share of Theological Learning, and this founded on the beſt and ſureſt Ground, the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

A. D. 694, He preſided at the famous Council which was held at Beccanceld, now Bapchild in Kent, under King Wightred; where 'tis remarkable, that Five Kentiſh Abbeſſes were preſent and Signed the Decrees. In this Council, though King Wightred could not write himſelf, yet ſuch was his Zeal for the good of the Church, that the Saxon Chronicle ſaith, great Care was here taken to reform Diſorders in the Eccleſiaſtical Matters of Kent; and it was agreed, that the King's Power and Authority was to have Place in Lay or State Affairs, but the Archbiſhop in the Diſpoſal of Eccleſiaſtical Preferments. Page 49. That he cauſed Written Charters to be made, to confirm to the Church of Canterbury, and other Religious Houſes, their Lands, Donations, and Privileges. And Spelman and Cauſabon, with Somner, agree, that the Canterbury Monaſteries had no written Charters, nor Muniments before this. And therefore the firſt of theſe Authors juſtly thinks the pretended Ethelbertine Charters to be all forged. Indeed Mr. Somner ſaith, that he ſaw ſome Charters of King Eadbald, Son of King Ethelbert, to thoſe Religious Houſes; and Two of Cedwalla, King of the Saxons, which appear to be genuine. But I think it much more probable from what hath been juſt now ſaid, that they are all counterfeited and forged: And I doubt not but that, (as Archbiſhop Richard wrote to Pope Alexander the IIId.) all the Ancient Charters of Exemption (before William the Conqueror's to Battle-Abbey, and many others after it,) are all forged. (a)

In Saint Edmund, Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Time, the Monks were convicted of this vile Practice, and as we ſhall ſee hereafter: But the Pope's Legate took up the Matter, and got them a Diſpenſation from Rome, which put an end to further Enquiry.

The Time when this Roguery of forging Charters firſt came up, was probably in the Eleventh Century, in Imitation of King William the Iſt's Grant to Battle-Abbey: For as Biſhop Stillingfleet obſerves, that was an Age of Ignorance, when ſuch Things would paſs upon the World; and when alſo the Monks had great need of ſuch Tricks as thoſe.

In a Charter of this King Wightred, dated this Year, Bertwald is ſtiled Primas totius Britanniæ; which Title, Birchington ſaith, was given him by Pope Sergius.

Somner ſaith, he held alſo a Council at Cliff, by Rocheſter.

On Gebmund's Death, he ordained Tobias Biſhop of Rocheſter.

A. D. 697, he held alſo a Council at Berkhamſtede, where ſome Reforms were made as to the Manners of the Clergy; and as to Eccleſiaſtick Diſcipline: And in particular the famous Trial of Ordeal, was now firſt brought in among our Engliſh Laws, whoſe firſt Mention was in the Council of Mentz, and after that in the Council of Triers; it was alſo added (at length) to the Laws of King Athelſtane, Numb. 23. *Vid. A. D. 703, Alfred, King of Northumberland, and he, held a Council in that Prince's Dominions, at a Place called Oneſtrefeild, or Oſterfeild, where Wilfred Biſhop of York, being accuſed of many Crimes, was deſired at firſt to reſign his Poſt, ſince his holding it brought continual Diſſentions and Quarrels; and on his Refuſal ſo to do, he was again Deprived and Excommunicated; and then again alſo, Old as he was, got to Rome, and obtained the Pope's Order for his Reſtoration; which Bertwald, out of fear of diſpleaſing that Power, acquieſced in; and ſo Wilfred, after all his Troubles, died at laſt in quiet Poſſeſſion of his See. Though the King would not regard the Pope's Letters, but ſaid, whatever his Predeceſſors, and the former Archbiſhops, and particularly Theodore had determined, to that he would ſtand, notwithſtanding any Orders from Rome to the contrary.

A. D. 731, the Year in which Bede concludes his Hiſtory, he died, and was buried in the Abbey-Church of St. Auſtin, after having ſate near Thirty Eight Years.

9. TATWINE, TADWINE, CADWINE, SCADWINE.

THIS Man, who was a Monk, or as Rad. de Diceto ſaith, a Presbyter of Brendune, in Mercia, came to the See A. D. 731, and ſate but Three or Four Years. He was Conſecrated at Canterbury, by Himgwald, Biſhop of London, Daniel Biſhop of Winton, Aldulf, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Aldwyne Biſhop of Litchfield.

They repreſent him both as Learned, and Religious, and to have a good Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and ſome ſay he was Sainted.

He died A. D. 734, and was buried in the Church of the Monaſtery of St. Auſtin in Canterbury. Bede alſo died this Year.

Henry Huntington mentions one Ecbright as his Succeſſor, but no other Author names him.

Godwine ſaith, there was a great Diſpute between the Archbiſhop of York and him about Precedence: But that Tatwine got the better, by going to Rome ſoon after his Conſecration, and tranſacting Matters himſelf; and he brought his Pall home along with him. Of this I can find nothing any where elſe; and I fancy there was no Quarrel between the Two Churches till after Archbiſhop Odo's Time, when they diſputed which had the right Reliques of St. Wylfrid; of which more hereafter.

This is all I can collect about this Archbiſhop.

10. NOTHELME, ſome call him NOTHELINE, and Lambard JOCELINE.

HE came not to the See till towards A. D. 735; ſo that there is room for H. Huntingdon's Notion of Egbright's coming in between him and Tatwine.

He was born in London, having been one, and Thorn ſaith the Chief of the Prieſts in St. Paul's Church; and Godwine ſaith, that he was alſo once Biſhop of London; but that ſeems as a Miſtake, which he falls into, after the Antiq. Britan. from whom he ſteals even Faults.

Bede owns himſelf much obliged to him for many Communications, with regard to his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which ſhews him to have been a Man of Obſervation and Letters: For beſides the Monuments he had preſerved here, he gave him ſome Light, by Extracts from the Pope's Epiſtles at Rome.

He was Conſecrated at Rome by Pope Gregory, whither he was forced to Travel for his Pall: For by this Time, and in his Predeceſſors, the Popes, it ſeems, had left off ſending them.

He died A. D. 739, and was buried in the Church belonging to St. Auſtin's Abbey in Canterbury.

This is all I can find of this Archbiſhop in theſe dark Times.

11. CUTHBERT, CUDBRICT,

CAME to the See A. D. 740. He was an Engliſhman, and Godwine ſaith of great Parentage; firſt Biſhop of Hereford, and from thence tranſlated hither.

And Langhorn cites Spelman's Councils, and ſome Manuſcripts, to prove that there was a Council held by this Archbiſhop, and King Ethelbald, at Cloveſhoe, or Cliff, A. D. 742, where King Wightred's Privileges granted to the Church of Canterbury, were agreed to and confirmed all over the Kingdom of Mercia. Vid. Chron. Saxon. p. 55. where this Council is alſo mentioned.

A. D. 747, by the Advice of Boniface, Biſhop of Mentz, who was an Engliſhman, and his Name Vinfridus, he called a Second Council of Biſhops to aſſemble at Cliff by Rocheſter, in order to put ſome Stop to that open and abominable Wickedneſs which then reigned among both Clergy and Laity: This produced an univerſal Ignorance and Stupidity. So that one of the Canons or Orders of this Council, was, that the Prieſts ſhould firſt learn themſelves, and then teach the People the Creed, and Lord's-Prayer in Engliſh, &c.

And it appears by King Alfred's Preface to the Paſtoral of Gregory, that the Prieſts then underſtood as little Latin, as the former Prieſts did Engliſh; for he ſaith he knew not one on the South-Side of Humber, who underſtood the Service in Latin, or could Tranſlate a Latin Letter into Engliſh. To which may be added, what Alfrick ſaith in his Grammar; viz. That a little before Dunſtan's Time, there was not one Engliſh Prieſt that could Write, or underſtand a Latin Epiſtle.

Another Council was alſo held by this good Archbiſhop, A. D. 756; but the Name of the Place is loſt, as well as an Account of the Canons and Decrees there made. Spelman's Council, Vol. I. Page 289.

He is ſaid to have built a Chancel to the Honour of St. John Baptiſt, in Canterbury Church, at the Eaſt End of it; which he deſigned for a Burying-Place for himſelf, and Succeſſors, but it was afterwards burnt down.

However, he obtained Leave from Eadbert, King of Kent, and Birchington ſaith from the Roman Court, (a) that for the future the Bodies of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury ſhould not be buried in St. Auſtins, as they had hitherto been; (perhaps in Obedience to the old Greek and Roman Law, that no one ſhould be buried within the City) but in his own Cathedral of Chriſt's-Church; which he knew would by degrees do, as it did, bring good Profit thither, and detach it from St. Auſtins.

of

He was the firſt that ordered the encompaſſing our Churches with Church-Yards, and introduced Burials in them, and in Churches.

A. D. 758, he died and was buried in the uppermoſt North Croſs Iſle of the Cathedral of Canterbury, on the Right Hand of the Altar of St. Stephen, and was the firſt ever buried there.

This is not the famous St. Cuthbert, for he was Biſhop of Durham, and lived before him, being Conſecrated by Archbiſhop Theodore.

12. BREGWINE.

HE came to the See A. D. 759; by Birth a German, and as Osborn ſaith, of Noble Parentage: He travelled here for the ſake of Learning, when he was very young; and they give him a very good Character, both for Piety and Prudence; which is all I can find worth mentioning about him; but if the Reader loves to be entertained with ridiculous Miracles, he may be regaled with ſuch wrought at St. Bregwin's Tomb, in the Place cited in the Margin. (a)

Radulfus de Diceto ſaith he had his Pall from Pope Paul, but ſate but Three Years.

He died A. D. 767, and was buried, as Cuthbert was, in his Cathedral, in St. John Baptiſt's Chapel. But the Monks of St. Auſtin's began now to be very much alarm'd at this, as foreſeeing what a Loſs it would be to their Church and Monaſtery in Time.

(a) Angl. Sacr. Vol. II. Page 75, 76.

13. LAMBERT, JAINBERT, JAMBERT, LAMBRIGHT, in the Saxon Chron. Anbrytite; and I take this to be the Man that in a Charter of King Egbert of Kent, in our Textus Roffenſis, is written GENGBERTUS.

HE was Abbot of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, but by Artifice made the Monks of Chriſt's-Church believe, that he would ſtrongly aſſert all the Liberties of their Church; and in particular that of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury being buried there; and accordingly they Elected him, and he was Conſecrated at Rome; where alſo he had his Pall, A. D. 764. He came to the See Two Years before, immediately on Bregwine's Death. But he deceived them entirely, and was, by his own Appointment, buried himſelf in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Auſtin's; leſt, I ſuppoſe, if he had been buried without in the Church, the Chriſt-Church Monks might ſteal his Body. While he was Abbot of St. Auſtin's, he went Twice to the Convent of Chriſt-Church, to demand the Bodies of Cuthbert and Bregwine; and the Second Time he came with armed Men, and would fain have forced away Archbiſhop Bregwine's Body; but the Monks of Chriſt-Church withſtood him ſo ſtoutly, that he was fain to depart without his Errand. The Monks of St. Auſtin's on this appealed to Rome, claiming Preſcription, that all Archbiſhops ought to be buried with them, becauſe the firſt were; though but in Bregwine's Time the Pope had determined this Matter againſt them: And this Cauſe they proſecuted with great Vigor and Expence; at laſt this Compromiſe was thought of, of chuſing Lambert for their Archbiſhop; which the Chriſt-Church Monks coming into, thoſe of St. Auſtin's gave over their Suit at Rome, for they were ſure of their Man, and the Chriſt-Church Monks were outwitted.

By theſe, and ſuch like impertinent Squabbles about Matters of Superſtition, Pride, and Profit, the Papal Power became by degrees to become allowed of here; for nothing did ſo effectually do it, as Appeals to Rome; which therefore our Princes ſhould have immediately prohibited, and ſeverely puniſhed the Appellants.

But I believe that was not the Reaſon which made King Offa ſo hard upon this Archbiſhop, as to ſet up another in Oppoſition to him. Some ſay he provoked the King by Treaſonable Practices; others that Offa did it, out of Hatred to Kent; others judge it was only to promote the Honour and Intereſt of his own Country: But the moſt likely Reaſon is, that he ſided with Eadmund, King of Kent, whom Offa fought with and vanquiſhed at Otford; though ſome ſay it was Alric with whom he engaged. But he certainly did ſet up a new Archbiſhop at Litchfield, for which he had the Sanction of a Council held at Chalchith in Mercia, where Lambert himſelf was preſent, and forced to give his Conſent. And he got the Pope (Adrian I.) A. D. 766, to exempt it from the Juriſdiction of Canterbury; for if any ſpiteful Thing were to be done, you were ſure to ſucceed in it at Rome for your Money; and from that Court he had even a Pall for his new Archbiſhop. The Sees of Worceſter, Cheſter, Sidancaſter, Hereford, Helmham, and Dorcheſter, ſome mention Dunwich alſo, were appointed for his Province; ſo that Canterbury had now left only the Sees of London, Rocheſter, Wincheſter, and Shirburne: And in this State Litchfeild continued Thirty One Years, as ſome ſay; and as Matthew of Weſtminſter tells us, in this Space had Three ſucceeding Archbiſhops, viz. Ealdulf, and Humberht, and Wigherht, in whoſe Time the See of Canterbury got out of its Eclipſe, and was again reſtored to the uſual Power and Dignity; which was effected by Kenulf, King of Mercia, Succeſſor to Offa, who fixed Athelard in his Metropolitical Station of Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with the Pope's Approbation; which was obtained at Rome by the Endeavours of that Archbiſhop: Who carried Letters from Kenulf to the Pope, to deſire it. (a)

He died A. D. 790, and was buried in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Auſtin's Abbey by Canterbury.

(a) Vid. W. Malmsbury.

14. ATHELARD, ETHILHEARD, in the Text. Roff. Athelward, and Eldred.

CAME to the See A. D. 790, but Edebred was not Conſecrated till 793, having been before Abbot of Malmsbury, and then Biſhop of Winton, from whence he was tranſlated hither. He had his Pall from Pope Adrian.

In his Time, by the Friendſhip of King Kenulf, and the Authority of Pope Leo, the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury was reſtored again to its Ancient Juriſdiction, Power, and Extent. This had been done by King Egfrid, if he had lived, but his very ſhort Reign prevented it.

A. D. 798, he ſummoned a Council to meet at Beccancelde, where met Twelve Biſhops, and Twenty Three Abbots, who all Signed the Decrees, which related to the Confirmation and Eſtabliſhment of thoſe Rights and Privileges of the Church, which King Wightred had granted to it. (a) And here was produced a Mandate from Pope Leo the IIId to Athelard, That no Layman ſhould have any Dominion over the Church. (b)

A. D. 799, he is ſaid to have gone to Rome; but Langhorn ſaith he held a Council at Cliff by Rocheſter, this Year; where it was agreed he ſhould go to Rome, and carry Letters from the King, and the Biſhops, about getting Canterbury reſtored to its Ancient Dignity.

A. D. 800, he held another Council at Beccancelde. Vid. Spelman's Council, Vol. I. Page 318, and juſt after this, as I imagine, went to Rome.

A. D. 803, he is ſaid to have called a Council at Cloveſhoe, at his Return from Rome, where King Kenulf, and Twelve other Biſhops were preſent: And here it was that the Metropolitical Chair was determined to be reſtored to Canterbury, and prohibited to be fix'd any where elſe for ever after.

Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 78. There is extant a Profeſſion of Obedience from Eadulf, or as Godwine calls him Eanbald, then Archbiſhop of York, to Athelard, as Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and it was very lucky for him at that Juncture, when another had been ſet up in Oppoſition to him for Thirty One Years, to find a Man in the See of York, of ſo complying a Temper.

A. D. 803, he died, and was buried in his own Cathedral, in the Upper North Wing, on the Left Hand of the Altar of St. Stephen.

And this Interment here almoſt broke the Hearts of the Monks of St. Auſtin's.

About Two Years after Athelard's Promotion to Canterbury, Charles King of the Franks, as R. Hoveden, and Simeon of Durham, tell us, ſent over hither a Book which he had received from Conſtantinople, containing the Decrees of the Second Nicene Council, held under the Empreſs Irene. In this Liber Synodalis, as they call it, were many Things contained contrary to the Faith received here; and among the reſt, the Injunction of Image-Worſhip: Againſt which Albinus, as they call him, but indeed Alcuinus, a Man of Note and Learning in that Age, wrote an Epiſtle, plainly proving that Practice to be contrary to the Holy Scriptures, and the Uſage of the Primitive Church: This was done in the Name of the Engliſh Princes, and Biſhops, and ſent over to the French King. From whence it appears, that our Engliſh Church had not yet ſwallowed down that abominable Idolatrous Practice of the Roman Church.

This Alcuine was an Engliſhman, but lived moſtly in France, whither he was ſent as a ſort of Reſident-Ambaſſador by our Kings; and he had ſo good an Authority over King Charles, that he is ſaid to have been his greateſt Encourager in eſtabliſhing the Academy at Paris.

15. WILFRID, in the Text. Roff. WULFRED.

A. D. 803. HE was elected, or rather appointed, and conſecrated at Rome by Pope Leo the IIId, from whom he had his Pall: He was a Monk of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and probably had before been Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Biſhop of St. Martin's; for one of his Name was certainly ſo about this Time.

A. D. 812. He is ſaid to have gone again to Rome, and not to have returned back till the next Year.

A. D. 816. He held a Council, where King Kenulf was preſent. Vid. Spelm. Concil. V. 1. p. 327. This was the Third Council of Chalchith; where the old were confirmed, and ſome new Canons made for the better Government of the Church.

A. D. 822. He held a Council at Cloveſhoe, under King Kenulf; where a great Number of Biſhops, Nobles, and Abbots were preſent. Spel. Conc. V. 1, 332.

A. D. 829. He died, and was buried in the upper North Wing of his Cathedral, near the Altar of St. Martin. But Five Years after the burning of the Quire in 1174, his Body was removed into the Nave of the Church, and laid under St. Elphege's by the high Altar.

He is ſaid to have allowed the Monks of his Priory to have each of them a proper Cell to himſelf; but provided, that as they lay before all in one common Room, viz. the Dormitory or Dorter; ſo they ſhould ſtill do, and lye in their Cloaths alſo, (as if Naſtineſs were a neceſſary ingredient in Religion,) as well as uſe the common Refectory, or Place of Eating.

But one would think this new Indulgence of their having every one a diſtinct Cabin, did not agree with them, for in his Time all theſe Frouzy Monks died but Five. Vid. Somn. Cant. p. 119.

Before his Time alſo, the Archbiſhops governed their Monks without any Prior or Dean, and lived in common with them for about 200 Years. But he now appointed a Dean, as the Subſtitute of the Archbiſhop: And this Government held for about 200 Years more.

It appears by what Gervas, Somner, Thorn, and the Liber Obitualis of Canterbury have recorded of this Man, that he was very induſtrious in maintaining the Liberties, and in increaſing the Revenues of his Church; to which he was a very conſiderable Benefactor himſelf.

16. FEOLGILD, FEGELD, FLEOLGILD, THEOLGILD. In the Text. Roff. SWIDRED.

HE came to the See, A. D. 830. having been before, as ſome ſay, a Monk of St. Auſtin's in Canterbury: Birchington ſaith, he was Abbot Abbot and ſate a Year; others, as the Sax. Chron. but Three Months: But that Time ſeems too ſhort for the obtaining of his Pall; which they ſay he had from Pope John. See Rad. de Diceto.

Mr. Tyrrell fancies there is a Miſtake in the Saxon Chronicle about this Man and Ceolnoth: But I think it eaſily reconcileable; by only ſuppoſing that the Chronicle calls Feolgild Abbot after he was Archbiſhop. For then the Senſe will be; this Year, viz. 830, Ceolnoth was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury on the Death of Feolgild, who had been Abbot of St. Auſtin's.

He died A. D. 830. and was buried at the Lower Door of the South Croſs Iſle of his Cathedral.

Some ſay one Sired ſucceeded him; but that dying before his Conſecration he is not reckoned in the Catalogue of Archbiſhops. And after all, perhaps this Sired, is only a Miſtake for Swithred; another Name it ſeems of this Feolgild.

17. CEOLNOTH, CELNOD, and by Corruption EILNOTH.

HE came to the See A. D. 830. having been, as ſome ſay, Dean of the Priory of Chriſt-Church, and went to Rome for his Conſecration and Pall, which he received from Pope Gregory the VIth. A. D. 831.

The Monks being all dead but Five, in his Convent, as I have before obſerved; he was forced to ſupply the Place with ſecular Clerks, who were to be aſſiſtant to thoſe happily ſurviving Five, till ſome more of that precious Order of uſeleſs Lubbers could be got. Which 'tis certain did not come in very faſt: For the Danes were invading and moleſting his See almoſt all the Time that he ſate: So that he left Clerks behind him in the Monaſtery, which his Succeſſor ejected. However he himſelf was a good Benefactor to his Church; for the Village of Chart, which had been ſomehow alienated from it, perhaps by King Offa, he now got reſtored to it.

A. D. 833. A Council was called at London, where the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York were both preſent, with many other Biſhops; and here Withlafius's Donations to Croyland Abbey were confirmed; and Determinations made to oppoſe the Danes: So that this was rather a kind of Parliament. (a)

A. D. 838. A Council was held at Kingſton upon Thames, by Ceolnoth, under King Egbert and his Son Ethelwolf; where were alſo preſent many Noblemen as well as Biſhops: So that this alſo ſeems to have been a Meeting of the ſame Nature with the former. (b)

A. D. 855. A famous Council or Parliament was held at Winchеſter; where were preſent Three Saxon Kings, both the Archbiſhops, and many Noblemen and Biſhops. (c).

He died A. D. 870. and was buried in the North Croſs Iſle of his Cathedral, behind the Altar: So that he ſate 40 Years Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

He was commonly called Ceolnoth the Good, or the Good Biſhop.

Speed in his Hiſtory of England, and Camden, Pref. cxxxv. Tab. N. 4. have preſerved a fair Silver Coin of this Archbiſhop which was ſtruck in his own Mint at Canterbury; for at this Time there were Seven Mints in that City, Four of the King's, Two of the Archbiſhop's, and One of the Abbot's of St. Auſtin. And Sir Andrew Fountain gives us Two more of him, in his Tables of Saxon Coins at the End of Hicks's Theſaurus.

On all theſe, this Engliſh Mitre or Cap is of a very different Figure from that which is now Painted on our Biſhops Coaches: Whence they take that, I don't know, unleſs from ſome old Pictures of Aaron, or the Figments of Heralds.

18. ETHELRED, ETHERED, ATHELRED.

HE came to the See A. D. 871, having been firſt a Monk of Chriſt-Church, and afterwards Abbot of Malden, and Biſhop of Winton: He went to Rome for Conſecration, and had his Pall from Pope Adrian II.

He turned all the poor Clerks out of the Monaſtery of Chriſt-Church, and filled up the Places with Monks: But the Danes continually plagued and perſecuted him and them: For they hated Monks ſo, that they deſtroyed almoſt all their Houſes in England: So that that idle Order ceaſed all over the Kingdom, for about 90 Years Space: And in the Northern Parts, according to Biſhop Godwin, there was neither Monk nor Nun for 200 Years; or not till the Middle of the Reign of King William the Iſt. All Churches and Religious Offices being ſerved by married Prieſts: And the Monaſteries were filled with them.

A. D. 888. He died, and was buried in the Under Croft of his Cathedral, under the Chapel of the Holy Trinity, and by the Altar of St. Auſtin.

19. PLEGMUND, PLETMOND.

AFter Ethelred's Death the See was vacant about a Year, as ſome ſay, perhaps more, and then was elected, ſaith the Sax. Chron. by God and all his Saints, this Plegmund, A. D. 890.

He was born in Mercia; and firſt was a Hermit near Cheſter; the Place of his Retirement being called from him Plegmandeſham; from whence he was fetched out to be one of the Inſtructors and Counſellors of King Alfred, being very eminent for his Learning and other good Qualifications.

He went to Rome about a Year after, and was conſecrated by Pope Formoſus, who ordered him to fill up the Biſhopricks which the Daniſh Wars had made vacant: And accordingly at his Return, he ordained Seven new Biſhops at Canterbury in one Day, A. D. 905. In order to the filling up of theſe vacant Sees, the King (Edward the Elder) cauſed Plegmund to ſummon a Council; which was accordingly held A. D. 904 (d). For it ſeems the Pope deeming it to be the King's Fault, that it was not done before, had iſſued out a Sentence of Excommunication againſt him. But Atheline, Biſhop of Winton, or as ſome write Plegmund himſelf, carrying a large Sum of Money to Rome, ſoon got it off, and ſet the King ſo right and well with Pope Marianus, that he granted an Immunity to the Saxon School at Rome; and ſent the King ſeveral Preſents, very valuable in thoſe Days; one of the chiefeſt of which was a Piece of the Croſs.

They tell you alſo, that when this good Archbiſhop was at Rome, he paid a great Sum of Money for the Relicks of St. Blaſius; which he gave to his Church, as a moſt valuable Preſent. And no doubt they had great and miraculous Virtues, or elſe they had never been ſold! But perhaps though their Efficacy was worn out at Rome, it would do very well again in a freſh Place.

He died in great Honour and Veneration from the whole Church, for his Learning and Goodneſs A. D. 915. ſome ſay 923, and was buried in the South Porch of the upper South Croſs Iſle of his Cathedral, by the Altar of St. Gregory.

There is a Coin of his among the Nummi Saxonici in Camden's Pref. p. CXXXV. Tab. 5. N. 3. and Two others in the 9th Table of Sir Andrew Fountain's, at the End of Dr. Hicks's Theſaurus.

As he was Tutor or Inſtructor to Alfred before he was King, and his principal Adviſer afterwards; ſo he crowned King Edward his Son.

Some write that he got a new Confirmation (a) of the Rights and Privileges of his See from Pope Formoſus, and a Subjection of all the Biſhops of England to him.

(a) Rad. de Diceto.

20. ATHELMUS, ATHELINUS, ADELMUS.

HE came to the See A. D. 915. ſome ſay 923, having been firſt a Monk in, and then Abbot of Glaſſenbury: After this he was made Biſhop of Wells, and the firſt in that See.

He crowned King Athelſtan; and laid the firſt Foundation of the famous Abbey of Malmſbury, as W. of Malmsbury ſaith; though Godwine thinks it to be more ancient.

He died A. D. 927 or 928, as ſome ſay; others give a very different Date; (but I don't aim at Accuracy here) and was buried in his own Cathedral in the Northern Croſs Iſle behind the Altar.

The Dates both of the Admiſſions, Times of Sitting, and Deaths of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury in theſe dark Times are ſo uncertain, that there is no ſuch Thing as true Chronology to be found: And the accurate Purſuit of that is not agreeable to my Deſign; which is chiefly to give Memoirs of the Lives and Actions of theſe Archbiſhops, and eſpecially in ſuch Parts of them as relate to publick Affairs.

21. WULFELMUS, WLFELM, WILFELM, WOLSINE.

HE came to the See, A. D. 925. as his Predeceſſor, ſo he had been firſt Biſhop of Wells. He receiv'd his Pall from Pope John. He was Lord Chancellor, and the firſt Archbiſhop that ever was ſo: And he ſtands firſt in the Catalogue of Chancellors in Spelman's Gloſſary, by the Name of Wolſinus.

So that for the Honour of this See it may be ſaid, That the Firſt Chanceller of England was an Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

A. D. 928. A Council was held by Order of King Æthelſtan, in which this Archbiſhop preſided; and it was a kind of Parliament, where many of the Nobility were preſent as well as Biſhops. Here many Laws and Decrees were made; of which you may find an Account in Spelm. Concil. V. 1. p. 396. And in Lambard's Archaionomia.

A. D. 934. Another great Council or Parliament was held under the Authority of King Edmund, where Wulfelme alſo preſided; and here was a great Appearance of the Nobles and Biſhops, &c. and many Laws and Statutes were enacted. Spelm. V. 1. p. 419. Lambard's Arch. p. 57.

He died A. D. 941, and was buried in the North Croſs Iſle of his Cathedral Church, before the Altar.

22. ODO, SEGODUS, SEVERUS,

WAS born of Noble but Daniſh and Pagan Parents, who diſinherited him becauſe he would turn Chriſtian. On this he got into the Service of one Athelm, a Nobleman in the Engliſh Court, who ſent him to the Schools, and got him baptized and ordained, and carried him with him to Rome. Some write that after this, he ſerved King Edward in his Wars; but others ſay it was before he took Orders.

He was at firſt only a Secular Prieſt, and as ſuch was made Biſhop of Sbirborne; but on his Election for Canterbury, A. D. 941. he could not obtain his Pall, till he entred into the State of Monkery: But after he received the Qualifiſying Habit from the Abbot of Fleury in France, he obtained his Pall, and all was well. Osborn, in his Life, ſaith, he himſelf refuſed the Primacy, becauſe he was no Monk; alledging, that all Archbiſhops before him had been ſuch: But Godwine ſaith he was miſtaken in that; Nothelm and Two or Three others before him, having been only Secular Prieſts. Thus early did the Church of Rome fall into the Policy of confining the great Eccleſiaſtick Preferments to ſuch Prieſts as were under a Vow of Cœlibacy: For by this Means they became in a great Meaſure independant upon the State; where they could have no ſuch ſacred Pledges as Wives and Children to engage them againſt enſlaving it to a Foreign and Arbitrary Juriſdiction: and our Kings were ſo blind and bigotted as not to foreſee the Miſchief that muſt enſue both to themſelves and their Subjects from thence.

Some ſay that he had good Military Talents; for he was thrice in the Field after he was a Biſhop, and did good Service there to his Prince: But Osborn, in his Life, ſays, it was by his Prayers only. Some make him to have been Biſhop of Wiltſhire; whoſe See was placed at Ramsbury: And others have given him Winchester. (a)

A. D. 944. He is ſaid to have held a Council and made many Canons and Decrees.

(a) Stephen Birchington.

A. D. 948. A Council was held at London under King Edred, where Odo, and the Archbiſhop of York were both preſent. (b)

He is ſaid alſo to have excommunicated King Edwi, a great Hater of Monkery, and to have produced a Divorce between him and his Kinſwoman, and beloved Wife, (or Concubine, as ſome will call her) Algiva or Athelgiva: And his Power, it ſeems, being as great as his Severity (c) he cauſed her to be dragg'd out of the Court by armed Men, contrary to the King's Command; uſing her indeed with Barbarity, and burning her with red hot Irons to deſtroy the great Beauty which had ſo captivated the King; nay, cutting her Hamſtrings, and then baniſhing her into Ireland. Though ſome ſay he hamſtring'd her when ſhe came back, and as ſhe was going to the King.

The poor King being thus at the Mercy of an inſolent Prelate, lived Two Years excommunicated, and then was depoſed, and died excommunicated.

Other of our Hiſtorians give a better and juſter Character of this King: But Malmsbury the Monk, who tells this Story of him, could never forgive him for turning the Monks out of Malmsbury Monaſtery, and making it, as he calls it, a Stable of Secular Clerks: And baniſhing Dunſtan, the great Patron of Monkery out of England.

And ſo partial are the Monkiſh Writers, that they never mention any Thing of Edgar's Lewdneſs, becauſe he was a Friend to their Order, though he was notoriouſly vicious that Way. And Edwi's Expulſion from the Throne was all right, as long as he was an Enemy to the Monks, for then they were the Church.

Osborn ſaith, there were ſome wicked Clerks in Odo's Time, who aſſerted that Chriſt's real Body and Blood, was not in the conſecrated Wafer; but that Odo convinced them, by ſhewing them one that ſhed Drops of Blood: Which Miracle he had obtained of God by his Prayers, and a great deal of ſuch Stuff you may find in that Author. Angl. Sacr. Vol. 2. p. 78, &c.

A. D. 957. A Council was held at Branford in Middleſex, under King Edgar, where King Edwi's Decrees were aboliſhed; Dunſtan order'd to be called out of Baniſhment: And many Things done for the Benefit of the Church.

A. D. 958, or thereabouts, he died, and was buried in his Cathedral, in a Chapel at the Eaſt End of the Church, behind the Altar.

But Five Years after, this Quire being burnt down in A. D. 1174. the Monks moved his Corps, and placed it under Dunſtan's in the Nave of the Church by the high Altar.

He was a good Benefactor to Canterbury Cathedral; for Osborn, in his Life, ſaith, he took down the Roof and rebuilt it.

Bede ſaith, that Odo wrote ſeveral Books, both in Verſe and Proſe.

After him there were two other Archbiſhops before Dunſtan, Elfſius or Elfſinus, alias Gliſo, who died of Cold in the Alps, as he was going to Rome for his Pall: He was before Biſhop of Winton; and as they tell you, ſuch a Hater of Odo, that after his Election, he kicked his Tomb, and inſulted him: And they make his ſudden Death on the Alps a Judgment on him, for this Rudeneſs and Indignity to Odo. But all this is, becauſe he was preferred by King Edwi. As was indeed alſo,

One Brightbelmus, who was Biſhop of Wells; a too good Man, ſaith Osborn; but he was judged not to have Spirit enough, and ſo King Edgar was perſuaded by the Monks to reject him: And no doubt by the Artifices of Dunſtan. I hope this Brightbelm was the only Man that ever was too good to be made an Archbiſhop.

THis Man, they ſay, was born in Somerſetſhire, and of Noble Parentage, being a remote Kinſman of King Athelſtan's, and well educated in the Mechanick Arts; (Lambard calls him the Famous Jugler:) For he was excellent at all Kinds of Smithery, Joinery, and Turners Work; a good Muſitian, and an eminent Graver and Painter. In Dr. Hicks's Theſaurus, p. 44. is a Picture of Jeſus Chriſt, with Dunſtan at his Feet worſhipping him, drawn by the Hand of Dunſtan himſelf, where the Out-Line is bold and good (a): And perhaps Shading of Pictures was not then come into uſe. He is ſaid alſo to have written very fairly; and to have had likewiſe a good Share of Learning in the Liberal Arts and Sciences.

He came to Court in King Athelſtan's Time; but after ſome Time was accuſed for a Magician (in thoſe ignorant Times) and baniſhed from thence (b). On which he retired to his Kinſman Elphege Biſhop of Winton, who ſent him to Glaſſenbury, (the Place of his Birth) where he was firſt a Monk, and afterwards Abbot, and the firſt Abbot of a Convent of Monks in England; at leaſt of the Benedictine Order. In King Edmond's Time he was permitted to come to Court again; but in a little while his old Crimes of Magick and Wantonneſs, (for it ſeems he was Magician enough to charm the Ladies) being alledged againſt him, he was baniſhed a ſecond Time.

But when King Edred came to the Crown, he grew into great Favour, being made Treaſurer and Chancellor to that Prince: But on Edwi's obtaining the Kingdom, who ſoon found that all the Wealth of the Kingdom almoſt, by Dunſtan's means, was creeping into Monaſteries; that little of it was employed as it ought to have been, to ſecure the Nation againſt the Invaſions and Incurſions of the Danes; he ſoon and wiſely left off beſtowing it in that Superſtitious Way; and recalled alſo ſeveral Grants which his Predeceſſors had made to the Religious Houſes: And on the Monks refuſal to part with their Lands, he uſed them with Severity. And Dunſtan coming into Diſgrace at Court on this Account, and into the Prince's Hatred, (perhaps alſo for being too great a Magician among ſome Court Ladies, as well as for reproving the King for his Love of Queen Athelgiva) he was a third Time baniſhed the Court, and expelled the Kingdom. On which he went into Flanders, A. D. 955, and there probably promoted the Rebellion againſt his Sovereign; which Osborn ſaith, was raiſed by the Spirit of Chriſt.

And now the Monks being removed out of the Two Monaſteries, ſecular Prieſts or Clerks were placed in their Rooms: So that Gervas ſaith in his Time (and I ſuppoſe he means in the South of England) ſcarce any one had ſeen an Abbot, and many not ſo much as heard of a Convent of Monks. For indeed before Dunſtan's pretended Reformation of them, the Monaſteries of England were much like our Cathedral or Collegiate Churches, where Secular Prieſts lived with their Wives and Families, like our Deans and Prebendaries, and were governed by none of the Monaſtick Rules. See Gervaſius, Capgrove, &c. In Angl. Sacr. Vol. 2. p. 92. cited by Wharton.

Reyner will have the Benedictine Order of Monks to have been introduced here by Auſtin: But Bede, who gives a pretty accurate Account of the State of our Religion here till the Year 731, makes no manner of Mention of the Rule of St. Bennet. And at the firſt Regulation of the Religious here, in Archbiſhop Cuthbert's Time, A. D. 747, in the great Synod of Cloveſhoe, there is nothing ſaid of it at all. And by what appears, one may conclude, that our Canterbury Monks, (as in a large Senſe they were called) were governed by Rules and Laws made among themſelves, and preſcribed by the Archbiſhop; and this Method ſeems to have held till the Daniſh Invaſions here.

Before the Time therefore of this Regulation of Dunſtan, the Father and great Patron of Monkery, all our Monaſteries were ſtocked with ſecular Prieſts, or Clerks; who were often married Men. So that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, there were no Monks here till Dunſtan's Time.

And it appears from Bede, Lib. V. Page 3. That an Abbeſs had a Daughter, which was a Nun in the Houſe with her; ſo that 'tis not unlikely, that even the She Devotees were married in thoſe Days. And it ſeems not to have been unuſual in the Saxon Times, for Monks and Nuns to live together in the ſame Houſe, and to have the Supreme Governor an Abbeſs; as perhaps was the Caſe at Whitby, Repingdon, Coldingham, &c. and ſo great Repute had theſe Female Governors in thoſe Days, that we find no leſs than Five Signing the Orders of a Council held at Bapchild in this County, as I have before obſerved.

The Two firſt Monaſteries brought to be regulated according to the Order of St. Benedict, were Glaſtenbury, and Abendon: And though the Monkiſh Writers make a horrible Clamour againſt King Edwi, for expelling Monks out of all their Monaſteries, and making them Stables for Clerks; yet beſides theſe Two which Dunſtan had reformed, as they call it, there was no other Religious Houſe in England, that had any Monks in it at this Time.

I know what Teſtimonials Reyner produces of the Opinions of our Learned Men, about a more Ancient Uſe of the Rule of St. Bennet here, than what I give; but I queſtion very much whether it can be proved or not: The Reader, in a Matter of ſo much Obſcurity, and ſo little Moment, may judge as he pleaſes.

But aſſoon as King Edgar had got the Crown, Dunſtan was recalled Home, and made Biſhop, firſt of Worceſter, in a great Council held at Bradford in Wiltſhire, A. D. 960. and afterwards Biſhop of London. Both which Sees this Man who had made a Vow of Poverty, held together: And he alſo entirely govern'd the See of Rocheſter, ſays Eadmer and Osborn; ſo that the Biſhop of that Name was only a Cypher. And he, and Two more, viz. Ethelwald Biſhop of Winton, and Oſwald Biſhop of Worceſter, entirely governed the King and Kingdom. All married Prieſts were ejected and proſecuted, and the Monaſteries increaſed and enriched.

A. D. 960. Dunſtan was tranſlated to Canterbury, and went to Rome for his Pall. And if you will believe the Monks, much a-do there was to make him take it: But Dunſtan was never ſo ſqueamiſh about taking Preferments. And now out went all the poor Seculars again, and the Monks were every where eſtabliſhed in their Room: And he rebuilt and repaired their Monaſteries. As that of Weſtminſter, and St. Auſtin's in Canterbury; both which had been ſpoiled by the Danes.

A. D. 965. in a Council held at Wincheſter, by Dunſtan's Power with King Edgar, a new Regulation of Monkery was made; and foreign Monks were ſent for over from Fleury and Corbie in France, to inſtruct our own in the Rule of St. Bennet: So that now probably the Conſtitution was partly that of the Order of the Benedictines, and partly compoſed of the old Cuſtoms of Engliſh Religious or Devotees, in uſe here before.

Though many Learned Men think the Benedictine Order was here before.

Dunſtan was ſo artful a Man, that he knew how to turn every Thing to the Advantage of the Eccleſiaſticks; and therefore he made uſe of the vicious Inclinations of King Edgar to raiſe their Power, as he had taken Advantage of the amorous Diſpoſition of King Edwi to ruin him: For he perſuaded Edgar to make Laws for the Compenſation of Sins: And no doubt got it believ'd, that the very beſt Amends a King or a Prince could make, was to found a Monaſtery, and to eſtabliſh Monkery.

A. D. 969. A Council was held at London where Dunſtan, and almoſt all the Biſhops in England were preſent. Spelm. Conc. Vol. 1. p. 479. Now Orders were given for the Expulſion of married Prieſts.

A. D. 970. Another was held at London. Ibid. 484.

A. D. 975, a Council was held at Wincheſter, where Dunſtan preſided. Ibid. 490.

A. D. 977. Another was held at Kirtlington, ſome ſay at Wincheſter, under King Edward the Confeſſor, Ibid. 493. Here the grand Debate ſtill continued; which was about introducing and eſtabliſhing Monkery, and ejecting all the Secular Prieſts: Who were ſo unlucky as to have a Crucifix, that ſtood in the Room, to declare againſt them; if you will believe the Monkiſh Writers. (a)

A. D. 978. Another was held by Dunſtan at Caln in Wiltſhire, where the ſame Debate was revived; and many Reproaches caſt on Dunſtan for his Zeal for Monkery: But at laſt the Room tumbled down, and all preſent were hurt but Dunſtan, who eſcaped upon a Beam: And this Miracle, they ſay, obtained Quiet for Dunſtan, and all his Monks ever after. (b)

And this Year it was, that this Holy Man's Skill at Propheſy, as well as Wonder-working, began to ſhew it ſelf: For Etheldred was crowned King by him and Oſwald; whom Dunſtan obſerving to have piſſed in the Water of the Font, when he was baptized, ſwore, By God and St. Mary, that the Boy would prove a Lazy Fellow: And now, as he crowned him againſt his Inclination, ſo he propheſied that in his Time, ſuch Miſeries ſhould come upon England as never fell before; and that the Sin of his Mother, and of thoſe Evil Counſellors who adviſed him to obtain the Kingdom by the Death of his Brother, ſhould not be expiated but by great Slaughter of his People. Will. of Malmsbury.

But 'tis pity his Knowledge of paſt Things was not as perfect as that of future; for then he might have known that the King neither deſired, contrived, nor ſo much as knew of his Brother's Death. But Prophecy is eaſier, it ſeems, attained by Monks than Hiſtory. The only way to ſave Dunſtan in this Caſe, is to lay the Blame on the ignorant Monks that writ his Life; and to that alſo, we muſt impute, I hope, the Inſolence, not to ſay Blaſphemy, of this famous Saint, when he ſnubs the Devils that were carrying away King Edwi's Soul; for Osborn makes him put himſelf on a Level with Jeſus Chriſt. Vid. Angl. Sacr. Vol. II. Page 108.

When he Crown'd Ethelred, he Adminiſtred to him a Coronation Oath; which ſhews that Cuſtom to have been at leaſt thus Ancient.

He died A. D. 988, after having ſeen Seven Kings of England, ſaith Birchington, and was buried in his Cathedral, at the Weſt End of the Undercroft, and according as he had appointed, very deep in the Ground, with a Pyramidal Monument over him. But after the Fire which happened A. D. 1174, (of which before in the Account of Canterbury Church) the Monks removed his Body into the Nave, by the Altar of the great Croſs. And yet Heylin in his Life of Laud, Page 206, ſaith he was buried in a Chapel in St. Paul's Church at London, which Chapel was Dedicated to him.

Bale ſaith, he wrote ſeveral Books; but I know of none that are preſerved, but that called Concordia Regularum, containing Twelve Chapters; which you will find in the Appendix to Reyner's Book of the Benedictine Order, Page 77.

Dr. Hicks, in Diſſert. Epiſtol. Page 60. in his Obſervations on the Will of one Elpbege, ſhews that Dunſtan actually did call the County Court, and order a Day for their Meeting; and he thinks all Biſhops in thoſe Days had the like Power within their own Diſtricts; but Quere? And that among the Hatton Manuſcripts, there is a Book of Canons called Codex St. Dunſtani, which he thinks was the Book which Dunſtan brought into Court in this Trial, as the Sheriff uſed to bring his Dom-Boc, in Civil Cauſes. He obſerves alſo, that One Thouſand Men were ready to Swear, that what Dunſtan atteſted was true.

As to the ridiculous Story of his taking the Devil by the Noſe with a red-hot pair of Tongues, when he came to viſit Dunſtan working at his Forge, and of his breaking his Paſtoral Staff about the rough hard Head of Satan, when he appeared to him, to fright him another Time, in the Form of a Bear; you may find them in Osborn's Life of him, Malmsbury, and ſome others, if you delight in ſuch Stuff.

His Relicks were in ſuch great Eſteem, that the Monks of Glaſtenbury pretended that they had them, and that they were tranſlated thither from Canterbury; and accordingly they built a Shrine for him, and drew away the Canterbury Trade to their new Shop. On this, in Warham's Time, they reſolved to open his Tomb at Canterbury, and to get ſufficient Witneſſes to the Atteſtation of his Body's being really there; but they would not venture to do it before any Laymen, Five Monks only compoſing the Jury; ſo that what they found, they only knew, perhaps nothing at all. However, on this Archbiſhop Warham wrote again and again to the Glaſtenbury Monks, to leave off all Pretence to his Relicks; but it was with great Difficulty that they were brought to ſhut up a Shop of ſo good Trade and Cuſtom as this had been.

24. ETHELGAR, ÆTHELGAR, in the Textus Roſſenſis Agelgar. Brompton calls him Stilgar: Radborne ſaith his Name was Ethelgar, or Algar.

HE came to the See A. D. 988, having firſt been a Monk of Glaſſenbury, then Abbot of Wincheſter, and Biſhop of Selſey in Suſſex: But now Chicheſter is the Place of that Biſhop's See. He ſate but a Year and Three Months in the See of Canterbury. He went to Rome, and had his Pall from Pope John.

He died A. D. 989, and was buried in his Cathedral Church, in the South Wing of the Upper Croſs Iſle, by the Altar of St. John the Evangeliſt. And this is all I can find of this Archbiſhop.

25. SIRICIUS. In the Textus Roſſenſis Sigericus.

HE came to the Chair A. D. 989, having been firſt a Monk in Glaſſenbury, and afterwards made Abbot of St. Auſtins in Canterbury by Dunſtan, and after that Biſhop of Salisbury.

I think there is little Remains of him in our Hiſtories, but the cowardly ill Advice he gave King Ethelred, which was to bribe the Danes from over-running the Country, by the Sum of Ten Thouſand Pounds, and to Influence them to quit the Coaſts. Which only quieted thoſe Ravenous Pirates for about a Year; after which Time they came again, and were as outragious as ever; for finding once that large Sums of Money were to be obtained this way, during the Reign of a weak and ill adviſed Prince, they inſulted us with the greater Rage and Fury.

He died A. D. 994, and was buried in the Undercroft of his Cathedral, by the Altar of St. Paulinus, under the South Wing of the uppermoſt Croſs Iſle.

Malmsbury, and ſome few others, place Elfric, or Alfric, the next ſucceeding Archbiſhop before this Siricius. But Mr. Wharton, Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 103, hath made the contrary appear, and eſtabliſhed the Order I here place them in: Which is alſo confirmed by our Textus Roſſenſis.

26. ELFRICK, ÆLFRICK, ALURICUS, GODFRICUS.

HE came to the See A. D. 994, or 995, having been formerly a Monk in the Convent of Glaſſenbury, after Abbot of that of Abington, (a) and then Biſhop of Sarum, (not Wincheſter, as Mr. Tyrrel miſtakes it.)

He was Elected Archbiſhop A. D. 994, in a Synod held at Ambresbury, (the Pagus Ambri of Mat. Weſtminſter) by King Ethelred, and all his Wiſe Men, ſay the Saxon Annals.

(a) Wharton denies him to have been Abbot of Abington, and ſaith he was only a Monk there. And John Capgrave ſaith he was Abbot of St. Albans; which Eadmerus in the Life of Oſwald confirms.

A. D. 997, he went to Rome to receive his Pall; which perhaps he omitted ſo long to do, becauſe being made Archbiſhop by the Conſent of the King, and the Parliament, he had the leſs need of a Foreign Confirmation.

'Tis in ſome Meaſure uncertain, whether this Man, or one that was Archbiſhop of York, be that Elfric, or Ælfric, who was the famous Grammarian, the Author of Part of the Saxon Chronicle, &c. and who publiſhed the Two Gloſſaries on the Saxon Tongue: One of which Francis Junius tranſcribed from a Manuſcript of Sir Peter Paul Ruben, (which was a Perſon of good Learning, as well as an excellent Painter) and communicated it to our Mr. Somner, who publiſhed it with a Latin Grammar in Saxon, at the End of his Saxon Dictionary. The other is in Latin and Saxon, and was written as a Comment on his Grammar, and is extant at the End of thoſe Copies of the Grammar which are now in the Cotton Library, and in that of St. John's in Oxford: And this Latter ſeems to be the ſame with the Dictionary Latin and Saxon, which Dr. Cave, in his Hiſtoria Literariâ, (a) numbers amongſt the Manuſcripts of our Elfrick. And that Learned Hiſtorian, from a Manuſcript of Biſhop Uſher's, ſeems to me to have reconciled the Difficulties, and to have made it plain that our Archbiſhop of Canterbury was the ſame Perſon with Elfrick the Grammarian. But Mr. Wharton, in his Angl. Sacr. hath a Diſſertation de Duobus Elfricii, in which he thinks he hath proved the contrary; and that the Grammarian was Elfrick, Archbiſhop of York, Vol. I. Page 125.

I ſhall not enter into the Diſpute; but I am not convinced my ſelf by Mr. Wharton's Reaſons, and therefore ſhall take the Grammarian and our Elfrick, to be the ſame, as the Generality of our Learned Men do.

A. D. 1005, he is ſaid by ſome to have got an Authority from the Pope, and the King, to Eſtabliſh Monks again in the Monaſtery of Chriſt-Church, to expel the Seculars, to which he was a great Enemy; which he is ſaid to have effected. But how theſe Seculars could get in again there, after having been turn'd out by Dunſtan, as one would think they muſt have all been by ſuch a mortal Hater of Clerks, and ſuch a Friend to Monks as he was, I can't account for: And yet Mr. Wharton ſeems to think this piece of Hiſtory right: But I rather think that Archbiſhop Elfrick's was no other than a farther Reform of the Monks there. For 'tis certainly true, that in his Time Canons were made, enjoining the Prieſts on Sundays and Holy-days to teach People the true Senſe of the Goſpel, &c. (b)

And here 'tis worth obſerving, that ſo far was the Engliſh Church now from coming into that nonſenſical Corruption practiſed by the Papiſts, of uſing Prayers in an unknown Tongue; that it was Enacted by ſevere Laws, that the Prieſts ſhould teach the People the Lord's-Prayer, Creed, Ten Commandments, &c. in the Vulgar Tongue; and ſuch as refuſed to learn, were prohibited the Communion, and even Chriſtian Burial, if they did not learn them in Engliſh before they died.

And indeed by the Writings of this Archbiſhop, as well as others his Contemporaries, an Engliſh Roman-Catholick, that asks his Proteſtant Neighbour the ſilly Queſtion where his Religion was before Luther? may eaſily ſatisfy himſelf, that the Religion of theſe Times, corrupt as it was, yet was by no Means ſo bad as modern Popery. For Elfrick preſſes the reading of the Holy Scriptures, and appeals to them as the Rule of Faith and Manners, and anſwers the Objections that ſome had brought againſt their being tranſlated into the vulgar Tongue. And he was certainly a Man of good Life and Piety, as well as Learning; took great Pains in compoſing Homilies, or Sermons, to inſtruct the People in the Principles of Chriſtianity; and he himſelf Tranſlated ſeveral Parts of the Holy Scriptures into the Saxon or Engliſh Tongue. The Penteteuch, Joſhua and Judges, of his Verſion, being ſtill extant in the Bodleian Library in Manuſcript.

He wrote alſo ſeveral Tracts which have been publiſhed; as,

Tractatus de Veteri ac Novo Teſtamento.

Homilia Paſchalis de Corpore & Sanguine D. N. J. Chriſti. In which are many good Arguments againſt that Popiſh Monſter, the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, which was then beginning to creep into the Church.

And he ſhews very well, what the Senſe of the Engliſh Church was then, about what hath been ſince called, by ſome, the real Preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt: For he ſaith his Body is only there Spiritually and Figuratively, &c. That is not at all, as a Body; but only by the Efficacy of his Spiritual Power, to render the Sacrament effectual, and be able to anſwer the Purpoſes for which it was deſigned.

And the Learned Dr. Hicks, in his Saxon and Mæſogothic Grammar, Page 63, of his Theſaurus, when he explains the Uſe of the Saxon Prepoſition For; cites the Saxon Rubricks, as repreſenting our Saviour delivering the Bread and Wine to his Diſciples, for his Sylfes Lichaman, and for his agen Blod.

That is, as that Prepoſition ſignifies, not as, but for, or inſtead of his own Body and Blood. And this way of Explication he proves to be uſed deſignedly, and ſeveral times in our Old Engliſh Manuſcript Rubricks. So much eaſier is it to come at Truth, by good natural Senſe, then by learned Sophiſtry.

This was Printed in Latin and Saxon at London, A. D. 1566, by John Day, with a Preface of Archbiſhop Parker's concerning the Author, and his Writings.

Liber Pœnitentialis: Epiſtola de Canonibus.

And in the Benet Library in Cambridge, in the Cottonian, in the Bodleian, and Lumley Libraries, are ſeveral Manuſcript Pieces of this Learned and Eminent Prelate.

He died A. D. 1005, and was buried firſt at Abingdon, but afterwards his Body was removed by King Cnute into the Porch of the Upper South Croſs Iſle of Canterbury Church, and depoſited by the Altar of St. John Baptiſt.

Wharton cites the Latin-Saxon Annals, aſſerting of this Archbiſhop; Quod vir fuit prudens valde, ita ut in illo tempore nullus Sapientior haberetur in Angliâ. Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 796.

The following laſt Will and Teſtament of this great Man being happily preſerved in Saxon, I judge will be a very agreeable Piece of Curioſity to the Reader.

N. B. I have not given you the exact Verſion of this Will, Word againſt Word every where, as before I did in that of Birhtric, (ſee Mepham) where I had Mr. Lambard's Help: But I believe you have its true Senſe and Meaning: Though the Latin Verſion given by Dr. Hicks, be, as he obſerves, a very bad one.

27. ELPHEGE, ÆLPHEGE, in the Textus Roffenſis Ælfeacus: His Sirname was Godwine.

HE was born in Glouceſterſhire, and, as Godwine ſaith, of great Parentage; and was firſt a Monk at Dereburſt, and afterwards Abbot of Bathe, and then was made Biſhop of Winton.

And while ſuch, he was ſent by King Ethelred on an important Errand to Anlaff the Dane, which he performed well, and brought Anlaff with him to the King. He came to this Province A. D. 1006. and went to Rome for his Pall, where if you will believe Osborn, he had a Viſion of the Death of his Succeſſor in the See of Wincheſter. After his Return to England the ſame Writer ſaith, he held frequent Synods to make Rules and Canons for the better Government of his Church: And they all allow him to have been a Man of great Strictneſs of Life, of good Temper and Diſpoſition, and endowed with Charity, and all Chriſtian Virtues. But nothing in Particular is related of him, which is worthy of Remark, till the Miſeries which the barbarous Danes brought upon him; which muſt now be ſomething more fully expreſſed, than it was in the ſhort Account I have before given of it, under the Title of Danes in Kent. Osborn would fain make him a Martyr; and therefore repreſents him as expoſed to the Fury of the Pagan Danes becauſe he preached to them the Chriſtian Religion. But as Mr. Wharton hath obſerved, (a) this Part ſeems to be all feigned: For Eadmer, in the Life of Anſelm, makes Archbiſhop Lanfranc, at whoſe Deſire Osborn wrote the Life of Elphege, to deny his having been a Martyr; and to ſay plainly that he did not ſuffer purely becauſe he was a Chriſtian, but becauſe he would not or could not redeem his Life for a Sum of Money. And Eadmer himſelf gives another very probable Reaſon for their Cruelty to him; and that was, becauſe he upbraided them in very ſharp and ſevere Language, for their Barbarity and Tyranny, and their ſavage Uſage of the City of Canterbury.

For after thoſe cruel Pirates had A. D. 1011. beſieged, taken, and ſack'd and burnt the City of Canterbury; ſlain many of the Monks, plunder'd their Houſes, and decimated the People of the Town; (for they put 7236 Perſons to Death that Way, leaving only about Four Monks and Eight Hundred Laymen Alive, ſaith Florence of Worceſter:) They firſt in their Rage for his upbraiding them, wounded, then fettered and carried away Priſoner with them, the Archbiſhop; keeping him Seven Months in Priſon; and as ſome ſay, in a dark Dungeon.

About the End of which Term they propoſed to him to redeem his Life with 3000 l. and to perſuade the King to buy their Departure out of England, with the further Sum of 10000 l. But he not complying with their Demands, they murder'd him at Greenwich in a moſt barbarous and cruel Manner, and threw his Body into the Thames. I omit the Story of the Apparitions of Angels to him, and of St. Dunſtan, &c. related by Osborn (in his Life of Elfege, Angl. Sacr. Vol. 2. p. 139, &c.) as meer Monkiſh Fictions.

(a) Ang. Sacr. Vol. II. p. 134.

The Saxon Annals tell us, that early the next Day after his Death the Biſhops of London and Lincoln recovered his Body, and carrying it to London, cauſed it to be buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. But A. D. 1023. his Body was removed from thence into Canterbury Church, by Archbiſhop Æthelnoth: And after the Burning of that Cathedral, A. D. 1174. the Monks removed his Remains again into the Nave, and placed it by the high Altar.

The Church at Greenwich is dedicated to this Archbiſhop, who was canonized for a Saint.

28. LIVING, LIFWING, LEOVING, LIVINCUS in Textus Roffenſis; by ſome called Ethelſtane, or Elſtane, which perhaps was his Sirname.

HE came to the See A. D. 1012. having been before Biſhop of Wells. He received his Pall from Pope Benedict the IXth.

The Danes kept him a long while in Priſon, and uſed him very barbarouſly; and after his Enlargement he was ſo afflicted with the Miſeries of his Country, which he ſaw every Day more and more ravaged and ſpoiled by the Danes, that he withdrew out of the Kingdom; and in a voluntary Exile had at laſt the Satisfaction to outlive thoſe diſmal Calamities, and to ſee Peace reſtored by King Cnute.

He died A. D. 1020. and was buried in the upper North or Croſs Iſle or Wing of Canterbury Cathedral, on the left Hand of the Altar of St. Martin.

29. AGELNOTH, ÆTHELNODUS, in Textus Roffenſis Ailnoth.

DRayton in his Polyalbion makes him of the Blood Royal; others, that his Father was an Earl, called Agelmare. And Birchington ſaith, that he was ſtiled the Good. He was according to ſome a Monk of Glaſtenbury; others tell you, that he was Dean of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury; a new Title that the Canons there had given to their Head or Governor. And perhaps after the great Slaughter of the Monks by their mortal Enemies the Danes, above-mentioned in Elphege's Time, Secular Canons or Clerks might get Poſſeſſion of the Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury. He was alſo, according to ſome Authors, Biſhop of Lincoln, before he was tranſlated to Canterbury.

He came to this See A. D. 1020. and went to Rome for his Pall: Where, they ſay, he was ſo ſuperſtitiouſly extravagant, as to give an Hundred Talents of Silver, and One of Gold, for one of the Arms of St. Auſtin of Hippo; and that he gave it to the Church of Coventry: But why he ſhould not bleſs his own Metropolitical Church with ſo precious a Relick, is hard to imagine.

He refuſed for a while to crown King Harold, and ſtuck cloſe to the Children of Queen Emma; but was afterwards either by Threats or Promiſes prevailed upon to perform the Ceremony.

He removed the Body of Elphege from London to Canterbury: And he was alſo otherways a good Benefactor to his Cathedral. For that Part of it which had been burnt and deſtroy'd by the Danes in Elphege's Time, he rebuilt; and prevailed with King Cnute to give the Town of Sandwich, and ſeveral other Donations, to his Monaſtery.

He died A. D. 1038, and was buried in his own Cathedral, in the North Croſs Iſle, before the Altar.

30. EADSINE, more frequently Edſias, Edſi, Eadſig, by ſome Eadline.

HE came to the See A. D. 1038, having been at firſt a Secular Prieſt and Chaplain to K. Harold. And there being one of this Name Biſhop of St. Martins by Dover, about this Time, 'tis not unlikely that this was he: He was preferred to the Biſhoprick of Winton, and from thence Tranſlated hither.

Alfric, who was Archbiſhop of York, and this Eadſine, agreed, as appears, very well together, and joined in the Coronation of King Edward the Confeſſor; ſo that the Quarrel between the Two Metropolitans was not yet begun.

Finding himſelf decaying under an incurable Diſeaſe, William of Malmsbury ſaith he reſigned his Archbiſhoprick to one Siward, Abbot of Abington, and this was done A. D. 1043, and H. Huntingdon ſaith, he was actually Conſecrated Archbiſhop: And Dr. Hicks, in his Diſſert. Epiſtol. Page 17. ſaith, that all our Hiſtorians agree in it, that after this, Eadſine never took the Title of Archbiſhop.

But the Peterburgh Annals cited by Wharton, tell us he did reaſſume the Archiepiſcopol Power on Siward's Death. For Siward died before this unhappy Man, whoſe Life continued a Burden to him till A. D. 1050.

Wharton, in his Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 107, ſaith, that Siward was never Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor ever Biſhop of Rocheſter, but only a Chor-Epiſcopus, or Subſtitute to Eadſine, and Godwyn ſaith he was ſo ſtiled by Eadſine himſelf. But let him be what he will, he managed his Truſt ſo very ill, as to have left no very good Character behind him, according to the Generality of our Hiſtorians.

But Wharton cites a Manuſcript, which expreſſes that he was forced to leave his Cure for Sickneſs; and that going back on that Account to Abington, he there died, A. D. 1049. (a)

Eadſine died A. D. 1050, and was buried in the Undercroft of Canterbury Cathedral, on the North Side of the Eaſt End, under the Chapel of the Holy Trinity, and by the Altar of St. John Baptiſt.

31. ROBERTUS GEMETICENSIS, ſo called, becauſe Educated in the Abbey of Gemetica in Normandy.

HE was firſt made Biſhop of London by King Edward the Confeſſor, and A. D. 1050, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. He became known to King Edward, when he was forced to fly into Normandy. But his Promotion was by no Means pleaſing to the Engliſh People, on the Account of his being a Norman, and keeping Numbers of French about him; for they have always had a great Diſaffection to the Advancement of all Strangers. The Saxon Chronicle ſaith, that immediately on his Election or Nomination to Canterbury, he went to Rome for his Pall; and after his Return, refuſed to Conſecrate Sparhafocus, who was Abbot of Abington, Biſhop of Lincoln, though he went to him with the King's Letters and Seal, alledging that the Pope had forbidden him to do it. But Sparhafocus, by Virtue of the King's Order, got Poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprick, and held it all the following Summer, and Autumn; but after that the King diſplaced him, and gave the See to another Norman, named William, as Godwine ſaith.

That Writer repreſents this Robert, and I fear too truly, as a proud and ambitious Man, and one that could brook no Rival in Power; and he ſaith, that having no one but Emma, the King's Mother, to oppoſe and reſtrain him, he reſolved to begin firſt with her, and to deprive her of that Influence which he ſaw ſhe had over the eaſy poor King her Son, whom Radborne ſaith he could make believe Black to be White.

Wherefore he firſt put it into King Edward's Head, that his Mother had uſed him hardly and ſeverely, when he was young, and in Normandy, and had alſo attempted to poiſon him; that ſhe had joined with Earl Godwine in the Murther of his Brother; and that at this Time ſhe was guilty of a Criminal Correſpondence with Alwin, Biſhop of Wincheſter, as the commonly received Story runs. (a)

On this the wiſe King, without proceeding to any Trial, at the Direction of Robert, preſently Impriſons his Mother in the Nunnery of Warewell, ſeizes on all her Treaſure, baniſhes Earl Godwine and his Sons, and forbids Alwin to ſtir out of Wincheſter on pain of Death.

The Queen endeavour'd all manner of Ways to have her Innocence cleared up, and to be brought to a fair Tryal; and if you will believe the Monkiſh Writers, was yet much more concerned for the Imputation caſt upon the Biſhop of Winton, than even for her own Reputation. But the Archbiſhop prevailed upon the King to allow her no other Trial than that ſevere one of Ordeal; which as ſome (viz. Brompton and Knighton) tell the Story, was for her to walk barefooted over Nine Plowſhears, though they were heated red-hot; and if either ſhe had been afraid to venture on this hard Ordeal, or had hurt her Feet by it, both her ſelf, and the poor Biſhop, were to have been adjudged guilty of the Crime alledged againſt them. Thomas Radborne, in his Hiſt. Major. Wintonienſis; and the Wincheſter Annals, both publiſhed by Wharton, in his Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 133, 192, &c. aſſure us that ſhe did undergo this ſevere Trial in the Church of Wincheſter, and came off with Honour and Safety; for St. Swithune appear'd to her, and aſſured her of his Protection; which he afforded her ſo efficaciouſly, that ſhe trod with her whole Weight on every Plowſhear, not blinded, but with her Eyes open, and yet when all was over, ſhe did not know ſhe had done her Purgation; having, as theſe

(a) But other Writers (as Simeon, &c.) ſay, that this was done at the Advice of Earl Godwine, Leofric, and Geward, at the Inſtigation of Godwine, who hated her for imputing to him the Murder of her Son Alfred.

Monks

Monks tell you, not felt the leaſt Pain or Uneaſineſs.

But all this whole Affair is omitted by the Author of Queen Emma's Life, by William of Malmsbury, the Saxon Chronicle, and other Ancient Writers; and ſeems to be a Romance formed by the Monks of Winton, to do Honour to their Biſhop and Church: Eſpecially as to the great and ſhocking Circumſtances of it.

Theſe Monks tell us alſo, that after this honourable Acquittance, the King and his Mother were reconciled, and ſhe reſtored to all her Eſtate and Honour; and that the poor King, by way of Penance, ſubmitted to be whipp'd not only by his Mother, but even by the Eccleſiaſticks too. But our Robert, their Accuſer, ſuſpecting the worſt, was either really, or feignedly, Sick all this while at Dover; and as ſoon as ever he heard how Matters went, and that not only the King was reconciled to his Mother, but alſo to Earl Godwine, he fled over into France, to the Abbey of Gemetica, where he was brought up, and there he alſo after died, his Heart being broke, as was ſuppoſed, by Grief and Vexation. And indeed he was juſtly puniſhed by Heaven for his Pride and Ambition, not enjoying his high Dignity much above a Year.

But Rad. de Diceto intimates, that the Reaſon of his Fall was his doing ill Offices between, and betraying Earl Godwine and his Sons to the King; ſowing Diſcord between the King alſo and his Nobles, and obtaining the Archbiſhoprick it ſelf by Money. And he ſaith, that after he was deprived of his See, he went to, and appealed to Rome; and that he died at Gemetica, at his return back from thence; but he doth not acquaint us what Succeſs he met with at the Pope's Court.

And on the whole I judge it to be moſt probable, that as he had inſtigated the King againſt Earl Godwine, and his Sons, ſo upon their Reconciliation he fled into Normandy, and was deprived after his Eſcape thither.

He died A. D. 1051, and was buried in the Church of the Abbey above-mentioned, which he had built himſelf with great Coſt, and in great Splendor.

This Archbiſhop is ſaid by ſome to have been the firſt Occaſion of King William the the Iſt's obtaining the Crown of England; by perſuading King Edward the Confeſſor to make Duke William his Heir; and when this was effected, he is reported alſo to have carried (himſelf) this welcome News to the Duke; and that when he went to acquaint him with it, he took Harold along with him, and made him debar himſelf by Oath, and Promiſe to the Duke, of all future Claim to the Realm of England.

32. STIGAND.

HE had been Chaplain to King Harold, and as Biſhop Godwine ſaith, to King Edward the Confeſſor, to whom he was alſo a Privy-Counſellor, and inſtrumental in making the Peace with Earl Godwine. After that he was made Biſhop of the Eaſt-Saxons, from whence he was turned out; and then of Chichеſter, as ſome ſay.

But he was certainly made Biſhop of Winchеſter, and came to the See of Canterbury A. D. 1053, which he took Poſſeſſion of without the uſual Introductory Ceremonies.

And at firſt he made Uſe of the Pall of his Predeceſſor Robert, and while he was Living, which was thought contrary to the Canons of the Church, (as hindring the Sale of a new one from Rome): But afterwards he had another Pall, though of not much more Virtue, from Pope Benedict, who had himſelf been excommunicated at Rome.

Stigand was cited to Rome, and plagued about this new Way of getting into the Chair, but by his Money he bribed off the Evil Day as long as he could. There is ſome Difference among the Hiſtorians about his Behaviour, with regard to Duke William's Claim of the Crown of England; for Brompton, and ſome others ſay he refuſed to Crown him after his Conqueſt of Harold, becauſe his Title was precarious: And the famous Story of his frighting King William with his Kentiſhmen, and their Green Boughs, in November, is in every ones Mouth, but I think is ſufficiently refuted in Page 308 of this Hiſtory.

I take it to be much more probable, that Stigand was in Kent at Duke William's Arrival there, and that he made his Submiſſion to him with the reſt of our Countrymen; but on King William's refuſing to be crown'd by him, becauſe of his precarious Title to this See of Canterbury, (See Radborne's Hiſt. Maj. Winton) for he was look'd upon as not Canonically inveſted in this See, having both obtained it by Simony, and holding it in Commendam, with the Biſhoprick of Winchеſter: On this Diſgrace, I ſay, he haſtened to London, and there, with the Earls Edwin and Morchar, ſet up Edgar Atheling; and by denying the King Entrance into London, very much to the Detriment of this Kingdom, did highly exaſperate him againſt the Engliſh, whom before he was inclined to treat kindly: And it ended alſo in his own Deprivation, as you will find in our Hiſtories.

Soon after King William's Coronation he went into Normandy, and took Stigand along with him, with ſome others whom he did not care to truſt at Home; and on his Return, Stigand went into Scotland to hide himſelf from the Sentence that he foreſaw would be pronounced againſt him by the Council. But at laſt he thought better of it, and appeared in Perſon, though it availed him little.

For A. D. 1070, and in the Third Year of King William the Iſt, a great Council was held at Winchеſter, by the King's Command, (vid. Florent. Vigorn.) and the Pope's Approbation; where Stigand having been before ſuſpended by the Pope, was deprived of his Archbiſhoprick for theſe Reaſons there alledged. I. That he had not only uſurp'd the Archbiſhoprick while Robert was Living, but had alſo uſed the Pall that he left at Canterbury, when Robert was expelled by Violence. II. That he had unjuſtly held the Biſhoprick of Winton, together with this Archbiſhoprick. III. That he had received his other Pall from Benedict, whom the Church of Rome had excommunicated, for obtaining the Apoſtolick See by Money. And after his Deprivation the King clap'd him up in Priſon, where as Rad. de Diceto ſaith, he died, A. D. 1070.

He was buried at Winchеſter, his Body being laid in a Coffin of Lead, on the Top of the North Wall of the Presbytery; as Godwine tells us: Who ſaith alſo, from Rad. de Diceto, that after his Death, (a) a little Key was found hanging about his Neck, the Lock of which being with ſome difficult Search diſcovered, ſhewed a

Note

Note or Direction where vaſt Treaſures were hid or buried under Ground in ſeveral Places: All theſe the Conqueror ſeized on, and appropriated to his own Uſe. And ſome think, that one Reaſon why he laid him in Priſon, and uſed him ſo hardly, as he did, there, was to force him to confeſs where his Riches lay. But the good Archbiſhop was a true Miſer, he would part with none of it while he lived, and buried it with him when he died: And to the preſſing Demands which were made upon him for a Diſcovery of his Treaſures; he anſwered roundly with luſty Oaths and Imprecations, that he had no Money nor Wealth at all. Which though in him a premeditated Lye, was true enough in one Senſe; for no Man can properly be ſaid to have any Thing that he doth not uſe and enjoy.

He doth not appear to have had much Religion, by his Laughing at King Edward the Confeſſor's laſt Viſion or Dream, which frighted all other People (a); though Godwine ſaith he was wiſe; nor, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Times, was he much over-loaded with Learning: But he knew how to get and ſave Money, and that ſome other Archbiſhops ſince him, have thought one of the moſt uſeful of all the Sciences.

33. LANFRANC,

AN Italian, born at Pavia, and brought up a Monk in the Monaſtery of Bec in Normandy; he was made Prior of that Convent, and afterwards Abbot of St. Stephens in Cane, by Duke William.

He came to the See of Canterbury, A. D. 1070, and being Elected in an extraordinary Manner, and approved by the general Conſent of all the Great Men of the Kingdom, was Conſecrated by Giſo, Biſhop of Wells, and Walter Biſhop of Hereford.

He was very tenacious of the Juriſdiction of his See over that of York; and the Controverſy ran ſo high, that both appealed to, and went to Rome about it, but it was not ended there. Stephen Birchington ſaith, that when he went to Rome for his Pall, the Pope ſtood up and kiſſed him, and gave him Two Palls.

In a Council held at Windſor this Year, he contended with Thomas Archbiſhop of York, for Precedence; who, when he came for Conſecration, refuſed to ſwear Canonical Obedience to him: And by the Judgment of the King, and Hugo the Pope's Legate, Lanfranc carried it againſt the Archbiſhop of York; who being ordered by the King to ſubmit, refuſed it, without a Proteſtation, that what he did ſhould not prejudice his Succeſſors.

Radulf de Diceto ſaith, that on this Diſpute, it was proved by many Authorities, that the Church of York ought to be ſubject to that of Canterbury: But that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury yielded to York the Juriſdiction (in Spiritual Matters) in all Places beyond the River Humber, and within the Biſhoprick of Durham. But yet, if the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſummoned a Council, be it where it will, York was to attend him, and to pay him Canonical Obedience. And that Lanfranc ſhewed alſo, that Anciently the Archbiſhops of York had made Profeſſions of Obedience to thoſe of Canterbury, and ſworn to it at their Conſecration; but that now for the King's Sake, he would remit to him the Oath, and only take his Profeſſion of Obedience in Writing.

And to this Agreement and Determination, the King, and Hubert, the Pope's Legate, and all the Biſhops and Abbots preſent, did give their Conſent. The Form of Thomas's Profeſſion of Obedience you have in the Antiq. Britannicæ, Page 3.

'Tis likely alſo, that it was in this Council where the King, Lanfranc, and many Peers and Biſhops were preſent, that the Quarrel between the Archbiſhop of York and the Biſhop of Worceſter was ended, and that Church declared to be free from all Uſurpation. (a)

A. D. 1075, A Council was held in London, wherein Lanfranc got a Third Reformation of the Monks in England, whereby they were brought much nearer to the Benedictine Rule and Order, than they were before by Dunſtan: I mean the Monaſteries of Ancient Foundation; for as for the New Ones, which were now, or not long after founded, they followed any Rule which their Founder pleaſed to appoint. (b)

He did alſo much reform the Rudeneſs and Irregularity of the Clergy, mightily beautified his own, and ſome other Cathedrals; and began the Foundation of Hoſpitals for Sick, Leprous, Lame, and other poor and diſtreſſed People.

He innovated and altered moſt of the Uſages of the Engliſh Church: For before his Time, the Archbiſhops ſeem to have lived in common with their Monks, as in a College: But Lanfranc built himſelf a Palace, or Court, apart from them: (Curia is the Word uſed by Eadmerus) and ſhifted, parted, and ſettled, the Manors and Poſſeſſions of the Church of Canterbury, between himſelf and his Monks, as they now ſtand in Domeſday-Survey. And he altered the Title of Dean of the Convent, into that of Prior.

A. D. 1076, he held a Council at Wincheſter, where great Debates aroſe about the Marriage of Prieſts. Vid. Counc. Brit. Tom. II. Page 12. and a Decree was made, prohibiting Prieſts Marriages. Againſt which, both he, and his Succeſſor Anſelm, were mortal Enemies; calling the Prieſts Wives by the contemptuous Name of Focalia, and forcing them to repudiate them, which Huntingdon ſaith was never done before: And Malmsbury ſaith, that one Reaſon for it was, that Prieſts Sons might not inherit their Fathers Benefices. At firſt he only made the Canons to put away their Wives, and permitted the Country Clergy to keep thoſe they have: but forbad any ſingle Prieſts to Marry.

A. D. 1077, another Council was held by him at Weſtminſter, where many Noblemen and Biſhops were preſent, Ibid. Page 14.

A. D. 1078, he held a Council at London, where all Biſhops Sees were ordered to be placed in Cities.

He was a great Benefactor to the See and Church of Canterbury, and to the City of that Name. See the Placitum apud Penenden, Page 50, of this Hiſtory. To his Church he got Thirty Two Manors reſtored, that had been alienated from it; and he much repaired the Walls of Canterbury. He built the Priory of St. Gregory, the Hoſpital of St. John's in that City, and that of Harbledown near it; and began the Fabrick of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, which Corboil and others compleated; and he rebuilt Rocheſter Cathedral almoſt from the Ground.

He

He is represented as having a good deal of Learning for those Times, and as a Man of good Temper and Probity, though some charge him with Pride towards the other Bishops: And as King William the Ist had a great Esteem and Value for him, so he improved his Power with the King to do good Offices between him and his People; and he prevented the King's running into some cruel Acts against the English, which their Opposition had like to have exasperated him into; as particularly his destroying the Abbey of St. Albans, when Frederic, the Abbot of that Place, rebelled against him.

He is said also to have given away Five Hundred Pounds per Annum to the Poor; a great Sum in those Days. But he could never get the King, though he labour'd it hard, to acknowledge the Supream Authority of the See of Rome. For the King alledged, and very truly, that never any of his Predecessors had done so before him. And he would never let Lanfranc call a Synod without his Leave; nor let any of his Subjects acknowledge any one to be Pope, but whom he espoused. A Letter written by King William the Ist to the Pope on this Occasion, may be seen in Selden's Notes on Eadmerus.

Lanfranc is said to have been the Chief Cause of King William the IId's obtaining the Crown of England, and to have persuaded his Father to bequeath it to him; for the Nobility and Gentry were more inclined to Duke Robert, the Right Heir. But as there have been Reasons in all Ages, that have made some Churchmen break through the Notion of Hereditary-Right; so now this Archbishop having a great Love for William, who was Educated under him, and a Regard to the Conqueror's Will, was prevailed on by that, more than by any Considerations of Primogeniture, to set up William Rufus, whom he Crowned himself. And as they say, he made it part of that King's Coronation Oath to follow his Advice and Council, so he continued to have a great Influence over him, and thereby kept him from doing many oppressive Acts, till towards the latter End of his Reign, when he had gained his Point upon his Brother Robert. But then the King began to slight him, and some say banished him; so that he went to Rome, and rambled about a good while; but he was at last recalled. Others say, he returned not till after the King's Death. (a)

He brought in, and got solemnly confirmed in a Synod at London, a Canon of the Council of Toledo: Ut nullus Episcopus vel Abbas seu quilibet ex Clero hominem occidendum, vel membris truncundum judicet, vel Judicantibus suæ authoritatis favore commendet. And this afterwards seems to have become a fix'd and known Rule of the Church of England, and to have given Rise to that Opinion, that our Bishops should withdraw from the House of Lords, in Cases of Impeachment for Life. But though they might withdraw, and perhaps still may, if they please, it doth not follow that they must, nor doth it appear, that by our Constitution they are obliged so to do. Vid. Gibson's Code, Page 144, 145.

That Excellent Prelate Mat. Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, appointed the Famous William Lambard, Author of the Perambulation of Kent, to insert into the Book called Textus Roffensis, a very valuable and ancient Manuscript, now in the Possession of the Church of Rochester, these remarkable Words: (b)

Quando Willielmus Rex glorioſus Morabatur in Normanniâ; Lanfrancus erat Princeps & Cuſtos Angliæ ſubjectis ſibi omnibus Principibus, & juvantibus, in his quæ ad defenſionem vel pacem pertinebant Regni, ſecundum Leges Patriæ; Lectioni aſſiduus & ante Epiſcopatum & in Epiſcopatu, quando poterat.

Et Quia Scripturæ, Scriptorum vitio erunt nimium corruptæ, omnes tam veteris tam novi Teſtamenti Libros, nec non etiam Scripta ſanctorum Patrum, ſecundum Orthodoxam Fidem ſtuduit corrigere.

Now when I consider that this Lanfranc was an Italian, and strongly addicted to the Authority of the Pope of Rome, and to the Faith and Doctrine of that Church; I don't question but that this good Man took Care, under the Notion of correcting the Errors of the Sacred Books, and those of the Ancient Fathers; to give their Words such a Sense as was agreeable to what he called the Orthodox Faith; and even to foist in also whatever he thought convenient for that Purpose: And therefore from hence, (as (a) a learned Writer observes,) you may begin the Date of the Foisting in of many spurious and corrupt Pieces of the Fathers, and of falsifying the Text of the vulgar Latin Bible.

Mr. Lambard inserted the Passage abovementioned, into the Textus Roffensis, in the Year 1573.

Lanfranc died A.D. 1089, after having sate Eighteen Years, and was buried in the East End of his Cathedral, near the Wall on the South Side, by the Chapel of the Holy-Trinity. But after the Fire in the Year 1174, his Body was removed, and placed nigh the Altar of St. Martin, in the Nave of the Church.

He wrote a Comment on St. Paul's Epistles.

HE was by Birth a Roman, of Lombardy, and had been Abbot of the Abbey of Bec in Normandy, and Supervisor of the Publick Schools, and was reputed a Man of Learning, and Strictness of Life.

The Occasion of his coming into England, was to visit Hugh Earl of Chester, who being very Sick, sent for him over to confer with him about some private Affairs. After his Arrival, he was much respected by all Sorts of People, and in particular by the King himself: And so being well recommended by the Barons, Bishops, and Abbots to the King, (viz.

William

William the IId) when he was very Sick at Glouceſter, he was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1093, without any Election of the Monks, after the See had been kept vacant Four Years. Eadmerus (a) will needs have it that he was mighty unwilling to be promoted to the Archbiſhoprick; and ſaith, that when they forced him to the King's Bedſide, he clinched his Fiſt ſo hard, that they could not get the Paſtoral Staff into his Hand; but becauſe they could not, they made him touch it, which was deemed enough; and therefore declaring him Inveſted, they carried him to the next Church to perform the uſual Ceremonies. If this Story of his Epiſcopari Nolo be true, the Reaſon of it probably was, that Anſelm did not like that way of Inveſtiture, and would rather have had it from the Pope: But Biſhop Godwin ſaith, that when the King, at the Perſuaſion of thoſe about him, complimented him with this great Preferment, it was with Hopes that he would refuſe it, but that Anſelm ſtuck faſt to the Offer, and took the King at his Word; and that the King afterwards, with all his Art, could not get him to relinquiſh. And this I take to be much the more probable Story.

Before his Conſecration, which was done by Order of a Council held A. D. 1093, where almoſt all the Biſhops in England were preſent, and where, after ſome Diſpute about Precedence between him and York, he had the Title given him of Primate and Metropolitan of all England: After this, I ſay, Anſelm demanded of the King the Reſtoration of all ſuch Church Lands as his Predeceſſor Lanfranc had in Poſſeſſion; to which the King at firſt ſeemed willing to agree, becauſe he judged himſelf near Death; but after he was got to be pretty well again, he receded from his Promiſe, and would fain have retained the Poſſeſſion of ſuch Church Eſtates, as after Lanfranc's Death he had given to ſome of his Courtiers; and he preſſed Anſelm to conſent, that they ſhould deſcend by Inheritance to their Poſterity. But with that Anſelm would by no means comply, which ſeems to have been the firſt Occaſion of the Quarrel between them.

Though others tell you, 'twas for his reproving the King too freely for his Vices, and for his deſtroying Churches to make a Foreſt.

But afterwards, A. D. 1095, Anſelm, expreſly contrary to the King's Command, eſpouſed the Cauſe of Urban, in Oppoſition to Clement, whom the King favour'd, and acknowledg'd the former as the true Pope, and would have gone to Rome to fetch his Pall from him, but the King would not let him. For he had in the mean Time ſent Meſſengers thither for it; who at their Return with it, brought along with them the Pope's Legate, (Gualter Biſhop of Alban) by whoſe Management with the King, Urban was at length acknowledged for Pope here; but the King had before prohibited any one to own his Title to the Papacy without his Leave. Which occaſioned great Troubles to the King from the Court of Rome, whoſe Management was too Artful and Cunning for him, and much embaraſſed his Affairs. And when the King began to make Uſe of ſome rough Means, Anſelm began to be ſo uneaſy, that he deſired Leave to go to Rome; which Requeſt was at firſt abſolutely denied him, and at laſt granted with great Reluctance and Difficulty: And as ſoon as ever Anſelm was gone, the King ſeized upon all the Temporalties of his Archbiſhoprick. And though Anſelm pretended that he ought not to be debarred viſiting the Pope, Cauſâ Regiminis Eccleſiæ, yet he was told by the Biſhops, as well as by the Lay-Lords, that it was a Thing unheard of, and contrary to the Uſage of the Realm, for any Biſhop to do it without the King's Licenſe. (a)

This Treatment of Anſelm by the King, put Pope Urban into a great Rage; ſo that he declared openly in a Synod, that King William ought to be Excommunicated; but 'tis ſaid that Anſelm himſelf interpoſed to ſtop that Cenſure. However, the King would not reſtore Anſelm, who therefore retired to Lyons in France, and there continued till the King's Death.

But there were other Cauſes which concurred to raiſe the King's Diſpleaſure againſt this Archbiſhop, who was in his Temper very reſolute and poſitive, and would never recede from any Thing which he had once determined on. He was very ſtiff and ſtubborn, with regard to the Point of Inveſtitures to Biſhopricks, and openly oppoſed the King's Prerogative, though he himſelf held his Archbiſhoprick by that Regal Inveſtiture.

A. D. 1094, a Council was held at Rokingham, by almoſt all the Nobility, Biſhops, and Clergy of the Kingdom, where Anſelm at firſt refuſed to ſwear Allegiance to the King; but at length the Synod determined it againſt him, and declared that he might do it, notwithſtanding his Duty to the Apoſtolick See. (b)

But the Year following another Council was held, to which came as great a Number of Biſhops, Nobles, &c. And here Anſelm refuſed again to ſwear Allegiance to the King, unleſs with a Reſerve of his Duty to Pope Urban; on which many of the Biſhops honeſtly declared, that they would no longer hold any Communion with him, or pay any Subjection to him. See Eadmerus, who was then preſent in the Council.

For theſe, and ſuch like good Qualities, and particularly for his Zeal againſt the Marriages of Prieſts, and his firm Adherence to the Intereſt of the Apoſtolick See, Anſelm had great Honours paid him by Pope Urban. As for Inſtance; whereas other Archbiſhops of Canterbury had their Place in a General Council, next to that of the Biſhop of St. Ruffinus, his Place for hereafter, ſhould be at the Right Foot of his Holineſs; and who condeſcended to ſay of him, becauſe he preferred his Obedience to the See of Rome, before his Duty to his Lawful Sovereign, Includamus hunc in Orbe noſtro tanquam alterius Orbis Papam; and truly Anſelm was as well qualified for the Exerciſe of Spiritual Uſurpations here, as the beſt Pope of them all ever was at Rome.

After William Rufus's Death, and King Henry the Iſt's Acceſſion to the Crown, Anſelm was invited Home, the King promiſing to ſubmit all Things to his Counſel and Direction; and indeed he was very ſerviceable to that Prince, in keeping his People to him, and keeping out Robert, the Right Heir to the Crown. But the Want that King Henry the Iſt had of him, occaſioned his making ſome Conceſſions to the Court of Rome, and to him, which were as little for the Sovereign's Honour, as the People's Advantage. As particularly, though Anſelm himſelf had received his Inveſtiture from the King's Brother, yet he now refuſed to take it from him; alledging, that it was prohibited in a Synod which was held at Rome.

And in a Synod which he held not long after this at London, he depoſed ſeveral Biſhops who had been inveſted into their Sees by the King; and declared, that none ſo inveſted ought to be Conſecrated. On this the King wrote to Pope Paſchall, and by his Ambaſſador aſſerted his Royal Right to ſuch Inveſtitures. Anſelm follows the Ambaſſadors to Rome, to make good the Cauſe in Perſon againſt his Sovereign; which ſo exaſperated the King, that he baniſhed him again as his Brother had done, and ſeized upon his Biſhoprick. At firſt the Pope eſpouſed Anſelm's Cauſe; but finding it not in his Power to conſtrain the King to comply, he changed his Note, and fell to wheedling, and in ſoft Words perſuaded him to do Homage to the King, and to relinquiſh his Right. Some ſay alſo that Anſelm having viſited Adela, the King's Siſter, and Counteſs of Blois, and thereby pleaſed and obliged her very much, ſhe did very much influence the King to reſtore him. And the King having at that Time ſome other Deſigns on the Anvil, which he judged would be the better carried on by the Connivance or Friendſhip of the Church, agreed to Anſelm's Reſtoration; who therefore returned with the Ambaſſadors, bringing with him large Preſents from the Pope to the King, though he had now kept the See of Canterbury near Three Years in his Hands.

Thus went out (a) of Uſe the old Method of Inveſtiture of Biſhops, Abbots, &c. by the Ceremony of the Ring and Staff, which all Chriſtian Princes claimed and reſerved to themſelves as a Right; but the King even now would retain the Right of Nomination of all Biſhopricks and Abbeys, and the Perſons ſo nominated were not allowed Conſecration before they had alſo done Homage to the King.

And on this Agreement Anſelm Conſecrated thoſe Prelates which he had before refuſed.

After this Reconciliation between the King and the Archbiſhop, Anſelm went on again amain in the Prohibition of Prieſts Marriages, and in Divorcing ſuch as were Married, from their Wives; and the Good Man puniſhed Marriage as ſeverely as Fornication. But Mat. Paris blames the King very much for ſuffering him to go on at that Rate. Theſe Things were done in a Synod held at Weſtminſter, A. D. 1103.

Some ſay that half the Clergy of England were now either Married, or the Sons of Prieſts.

A. D. 1107, a Council was held in the King's Palace at London, where Gerard, Archbiſhop of York, and many Noblemen, Biſhops, and Abbots were preſent: And here Gerard promiſed Submiſſion and Obedience to the See of Canterbury, (for Anſelm had revived the Diſpute about Precedence.) And Two Years after, another Council was alſo held at London, the King Preſent; where Thomas Archbiſhop of York did actually make his Submiſſion, and Promiſe of Obedience to Canterbury; and 'twas well for him that he did; for Anſelm was in a great Rage about it, and had fully reſolved not to Conſecrate him; and not only ſo, but to Excommunicate all Biſhops who ſhould perform that Ceremony; and he had written to Pope Paſchall to deny him his Pall. Eadmer. Lib. 4. Page 97.

But when Thurſtan was Elected Archbiſhop of York, and the King had declared, that if he did not ſubmit to Canterbury, he ſhould not be Conſecrated, he refuſed it, went to Rome, and got Conſecration from the Pope.

Anſelm died A. D. 1109, in his Seventy Sixth Year, and was buried in his own Cathedral.

After his Death, the Clergy hoped to have got their Wives again; but which is very ſtrange, the King himſelf continued the Edict for their Cælibacy; dreading, I ſuppoſe then, a Quarrel with the Pope: For otherwiſe, it was the worſt Policy that ever a wiſe Prince, as he was, ran into. For by this Means the Clergy came to have little or no Dependance upon, or Intereſt in the State, where they could have no ſuch Sacred Pledges as Wives and Children. And conſequently muſt become by Degrees the entire Creatures of Rome, and be perpetually endeavouring to leſſen the Power of the State, in order to eſtabliſh that of the Church.

While Anſelm was in the Abbey of Bec, he wrote ſeveral Books; De Veritate. De Libertate Arbitrij. De Caſu Diaboli. De Grammatico. Monologion. Proſologion.

And after he was preferred in England, he wrote another Book, De Incarnatione Verbi. All his Works were Printed at Norimberg, in Folio, 1491; and at Cologn, in Three Tomes, A. D. 1573; again alſo there, A. D. 1612, in Four Tomes.

On his Deceaſe the King took the Archbiſhoprick into his Hands, and kept it vacant about Five Years; but at laſt, by the Advice of his Barons, he filled it with Ralf, Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Anſelm was a Man of Learning for thoſe Times, and of Strictneſs of Life; but he was with all, Poſitive, Vainglorious, and Proud, and unequal in his Cenſures and Severities: For while he proſecuted the Married Clergy with the utmoſt Vigour, forcing them every where to Divorce, or put away their Wives, which was what had not been done by Dunſtan, nor any of his Predeceſſors; he was remiſs and negligent in puniſhing Simoniacs, and even interceded for ſome of them with the Court of Rome.

He was, to the utmoſt of his Power, a zealous Promoter of the Papal Authority here; in which he was vigorouſly oppoſed, and ſometimes roughly treated by his Sovereign, and at laſt forced to comply. And the general Senſe of the Nation fell in with that of the King; inſomuch that the Biſhops, as well as the Nobility, told Anſelm, that for him ſo much as to go to Rome without the King's Licenſe, was Res inaudita, & uſibus Regni omnino contraria. But it appears, that the falſe Step which King William the Iſt made, in procuring the Pope to ſend ſome Eccleſiaſticks hither to join in the Determination of the Squabble between Canterbury and York about Precedence, occaſioned a Notion, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury could be neither judged nor condemned by any one, but by the Pope alone: Which Opinion, though new to the Engliſh, (a) did certainly both encourage Anſelm to oppoſe his Sovereign in many Particulars, and the Pope to preſume ſo far, as to claim the Right of Inveſtitures to Biſhopricks.

35. RALF. Radulfus de Turbine, according to Brompton.

AFTER Anſelm's Death, the King kept the See of Canterbury vacant for Five Years; as probably not knowing where to find a moderate tractable Man, from whom he might expect better Treatment than he had receiv'd from Anſelm.

But at laſt, at the united Requeſt of his Peers, and Biſhops, he reſolved to fill up the See, and determined in his own Mind upon Farecius, who was Abbot of Abington. Many of the Lords were againſt any one who was a Monk, and deſired rather that one of his Majeſty's Chaplains, or ſome other ſecular Clerk, might be preferred to this Dignity. But to this it was urged, that Stigand was the only Secular Clerk who had been made Archbiſhop of Canterbury for a long Time; and his Character was ſuch, as would not much invite them to the Choice of a Secular. At laſt they all agreed in recommending this Ralf, as much the fitteſt Perſon for this Office; to which the King complied.

Ralf had been a Benedictine Monk, and Abbot of a Monaſtery in Normandy, which was his Native Country, though ſome ſay he was an Engliſhman; but his being not ſo, was then enough to prefer him. Anſelm was his great Friend and Patron, and had made him Biſhop of Rocheſter, from whence he was Tranſlated hither, A. D. 1114.

'Tis ſaid that he was Elected by the Biſhops of the Province, the Clergy, and the People of Canterbury, and to the great Joy of all Perſons; for he was much beloved for his Affability: And his Conſecration was performed with a great Concourſe of Men of all Ranks, and with mighty Pomp.

Notwithſtanding all the Threatnings and Decrees of the Pope, he ventured to take his Inveſtiture from his Sovereign, King Henry the Iſt.

There was ſomething new in this Man's receiving his Pall, which was ſent him from Pope Paſchal by Anſelm, the Nephew of the late Archbiſhop; for ſaith Eadmerus, in Anſelm's Time, Pallium ſuper Altare delatum ab eo aſſumptum eſt, utque ab omnibus pro Reverentiâ St. Petri ſuppliciter deoſculatum eſt, &c. But when this Ralf took it, it is ſaid by the ſame Author, Facta prius de fidelitate & Canonica Obedientia Profeſſione; which new Oath (a) was now probably exacted by the Pope, to make the See of Rome ſome Amends for Ralf's taking his Inveſtiture from the King, after Anſelm had ſo warmly contended the Point with his Sovereign, in Obedience to the Papal Decree. And this ſeems to be the firſt Time that ever any Oath of Obedience to the Pope was taken by an Engliſh Biſhop. But the Ice thus once broke, the Pope went on a-main, and ſoon after got it to be taken by Biſhops, and Abbots, as a neceſſary Part of their Inſtitution and Conſecration.

In his Time, Thurſtan Archbiſhop of York, got Conſecration from the Pope (Calixtus) without making the uſual Profeſſion of Obedience to the See of Canterbury; which very much vexed Ralf; and therefore, though Old, Gouty, and Paralitick, away he trudges to Rome about it; and the Diſpute held Five or Six Years before it was ended; and at laſt the Pope grew ſo ſturdy, that he threatned the King, and our Ralf both, with Excommunication, if they did not admit him; which was at laſt done, though he had received his Conſecration from the Pope without the King's Conſent.

This Archbiſhop, as ſome repreſent him, (a) was, notwithſtanding his general Facetiouſneſs, by Fits very peeviſh, croſs, and poſitive. For they tell you, that when Adeliza, Daughter of Godfrey, Duke of Lorrain, and Wife to King Henry the Iſt, came to be Crowned by this Ralf, he went firſt to the King his Sovereign, who ſate Crown'd in his own proper Chair of State, and asked him who it was that Crown'd him? The King not being very ready with his Anſwer, as, no doubt, being very much ſurprized at the Queſtion; ſaith Ralf, whoever he was, he did me Wrong; (though by the By, Ralf was not then Archbiſhop) and as long as you hold it thus, I will do no Office at this Coronation. The Good King replied, who was an humble and modeſt, as well as a Learned Man, Do as you think beſt. On which Ralf took off his Crown, but at the Peoples Intreaty put it on again, and then proceeded to Crown the Queen. And ſo fond was this Old Man of the Rights of his Church, and of Crowning, that even at a Solemn Feſtival, when it was cuſtomary in thoſe Times for our Kings to wear their Crowns, he would not let the King put it on himſelf, but it muſt always be done by his Sacred Hand.

He ſate Eight Years, and in the main behaved himſelf well in his Office, abating theſe Fits of Pride and Peeviſhneſs, which did now and then poſſeſs him; and a conſtant Levity and Affectation of Low-Wit, which intermingled it ſelf in all his Converſation, and got him the Name of Nugax, the Trifler.

He died A. D. 1122, and was buried at the Entrance into the North Croſs Iſle of Canterbury Cathedral.

The Saxon Chronicle acquaints us that the Year after his Death, a Council was held at Glouceſter, where the King deſired the Biſhops to name to him a proper Man to ſucceed this Archbiſhop in the See of Canterbury.

All the Biſhops agreed unanimouſly, on the Account of Ralf's inſolent Behaviour abovementioned, never to recommend a Monk any more, and the King readily concurred with them in that Notion. But after ſome Diſputes, the Monks of Canterbury at firſt oppoſing this Reſolution for Three Days together, at length determined to Elect William de Corboil, who was Canon of a certain Monaſtery called Cice, though others ſay he was a Benedictine Monk, and Abbot of Oſiche in Eſſex.

Theſe Names of Oſiche and Cice, ſeem to ſtand for one and the ſame Place, and I think the Authority of the Saxon Chronicle to be ſtrongeſt; and therefore conclude, that that was a Houſe of Clerks, or Canons. The Chronicle ſaith alſo, that the Pope ſent over a Legate to complain of this, but the Monks would not recede from their Choice of Corboil. However, the King refuſed to admit the Legate, or allow of his Reſidence here, declaring it to be contrary to the Uſage of the Realm, and the Rights of the Crown.

Corbell, Corveill, and ſome write him Corbett; and Brampton calls him alſo Willielmus de Turbine.

HE came to the See A. D. 1122, in the Manner as is above related; ſome will have him to have been a Benedictine; which Order 'tis not impoſſible he might enter into after his Election to Canterbury, as Odo did before him.

He went to Rome for his Pall, taking with him, as ſome ſay, Thurſtane Archbiſhop of York, and Bernard Biſhop of St. Davids. But I believe Thurſtan had been there a good while before this.

King Henry the Iſt granted him a Charter, confirming him in the Poſſeſſion of his See, and in all the Rights and Privileges of it; whichCharter was written in the SaxonCharacter and Language. (a) This ſhews that the Saxon Tongue was not as yet quite loſt, though, no doubt it was very much diſuſed. But this is but one ſingle Inſtance, and perhaps was done by King Henry the Iſt, to oblige his Queen. The King granted alſo to this Archbiſhop, and his Succeſſors for ever, by the Advice of his Barons, The Conſtableſhip of the Caſtle of Rocheſter, and with Liberty to build a Tower in it any where for his own Uſe.

Becauſe Thurſtan, Archbiſhop of York, had refuſed to acknowledge the Precedency of the See of Canterbury, and had obtained a Conſecration at Rome, (where any Thing might be had for Money) without making any Profeſſion of Obedience to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; this poor Man was ſo blinded with Rage and Pride, that though he was fully inveſted in his See by Lawful Authority, yet he not only accepted of, but ſollicited a Bull at Rome from Pope Honorius, whereby he meanly held his Archbiſhoprick as a Papal Gift; and baſely ſubjected by it, both his own See to the Authority of the Pope, and by taking out alſo a Legantine Power from him, did do all he could to enſlave the whole Engliſh Church to a Foreign Juriſdiction.

And in this weak Proceeding he was the firſt, and left a ſcandalous Example for Becket, and ſeveral others of his Succeſſors to follow.

The main Reaſon which induced him to this, ſeems to have been the Gratification of his Pride and Revenge againſt Thurſtan; whom now as a Legate, he could Viſit, require Obedience from him, and prohibit him the great Indignity which he had offered to him, of having his Croſs born erected before him, within the Province of Canterbury.

And thus, this Papa alterius Orbis, this Primas Angliæ Scotiæ & Hiberniæ necnon Inſularum adjacentium; & Qui ſolus gerebat vices Apoſtolicas in Anglia; to gratify a little ill-natured Pride, condeſcended to become the Pope's Subſtitute, and a precarious Dependant upon that inſolent Uſurper.

And ſuch a piece of Folly as this, occaſioned other Inſults of the like Nature to be put upon the King and the Government. For A. D. 1125, Cardinal Cremæ came over hither in the Quality of Legate from Pope Honorius, upon a Pious Deſign of redreſſing the great Abuſe of Prieſts Marriages, and the King who was then in Normandy, weakly gave him Leave. But the People of England complained of it as an Innovation, of which there had been no Inſtance ſince Auſtin the Monk's Time; and they declared that this Kingdom had never been Subject to any Legantine Power before. Vid. Gervaſe of Canterbury. However, this Holy Cardinal aſſembles a Synod at London, where with great Pretence to Purity in Words, he inveighed againſt the abominable Sin of Prieſts Marriages; but he had the ill Luck that Night to be caught in Bed with a Whore himſelf; which diſgraced him ſo, that tho' he made ſeveral Canons againſt that Crime; the Clergy did not much regard them, but kept their Wives notwithſtanding.

Some Years after this, viz. A. D. 1129, the King fooliſhly fell into this Notion of the Celibacy of the Clergy, and in a Synod prohibited Prieſts Marriages; but he allowed of Diſpenſations for Money, and ſo made the Purſes of the Prieſts pay for the Sins of their Bodies.

Stow ſaith, that by his Simplicity, in a Council held at London, A. D. 1129, Auguſt the 1ſt, he gained to have the Cogniſance of the Focary of Prieſts, or a Power to grant them Licenſes to keep Wives and Concubines; and that the Biſhops repented of it when it was too late. See the Life of King Henry the Iſt.

In May, A. D. 1127, he held a Council at Weſtminſter, where he preſided, Sicut Apoſtolicæ ſedis Legatus, inſtead of doing it in his own Legal Right as Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And this I believe is the firſt Inſtance of any one in his Office ever doing ſo.

But as he gave up the Rights of his See to gratify his Revenge and Pride, ſo he dealt equally free with his Lawful Sovereign.

For he, among other Nobles, Biſhops, and the Principal Men of the Kingdom, had ſolemnly ſworn Fealty to Maud, the Empreſs, in her Father's Life-time, as the next undoubted Heir to the Crown. But though that Lady had been alſo his particular Patroneſs, yet he left her, and went in to King Stephen, whom he Crown'd with his own Hand, though with ſuch Horror and Trembling, that the Hoſt fell out of his Fingers. And the reſt of the good Biſhops ſoon followed his Example, and were firm for King Stephen at the firſt; but when in proceſs of Time, they found he was not ſo much for the Church as they hoped and expected, away they turn'd all at once to the Empreſs again; though before they had ſaid of her, that being a Woman ſhe was unfit to Govern; and that it was a Shame for ſo many Men to be ſubject to one of that Sex.

He did ſome few generous Things; as rebuilding the Nunnery of Shepey, after the Danes had deſtroyed it, and ſadly ravaged the Iſland. And Lambert ſaith he founded a new Church for Monks in the South Part of Dover.

A. D. 1130, the Cathedral Church of Canterbury was in his Time burnt down; which as I have ſhewed in another Place, he rebuilt, and had a new Dedication of it.

He died in the Second Year of King Stephen, having ſate about Thirteen Years, and was buried at the Entrance into the North Croſs Iſle of his Cathedral.

King Stephen taking the Advantage of his dying Inteſtate, ſeized upon all the Archbiſhop's Goods, and converted them to his own Uſe; and kept alſo the See vacant for Two Years. During which Time the Pope purſued his Deſigns upon England with Vigor; and that Prince being obliged to go to Rome for the Confirmation of his precarious Title to the Crown,

Crown, was forced to bear ſome Things of that Nature, which in freer Circumſtances he would ſcarce have acquieſced in. For now Pope Innocent the IId ventured to ſend over hither Alarick Biſhop of Hoſtia, with a Legantine Power.

And this is the Second Inſtance. At this the Nation grumbled and complained, and he was by no Means at firſt received here eaſily.

But he proceeded, for all that, a Step or Two further than Crema did, and called a Synod, Apoſtolica Authoritate, and commanded the Church of Canterbury to Elect an Archbiſhop. And in the Council which he held here, he made a Decree, that if any one injured an Eccleſiaſtick, and did not make him Satisfaction after the Third Admonition; he ſhould then be under ſuch an Anathema, as that none but the Pope himſelf could abſolve him from it; unleſs in the Caſe of Repentance at the Point of Death, when he was not able to go and ſpend his Money at Rome. And about Four Years after, this was renewed again, in a Council held at London.

This was a bold Stroke; and is the firſt Inſtance here, of any one's being obliged by a Canon to ſue out an Abſolution from the Pope in Perſon. But it ſeems not much to have been regarded here, ſince Four Years after, it was thought fit to renew it. Henry Huntingdon, Anno 1142.

The Bull of Pope Honorius, which Conſtituted this weak Creature the Pope's Legate, is Extant in Wharton's Anglia Sacra, Vol. I. Page 792; where that Author ſhews alſo, that the Introduction of the Papal Power into the Engliſh Church, was entirely owing to this William Corboil; for though from about the Year One Thouſand and Seventy, the Popes had aimed at it, yet neither would our Kings or Archbiſhops admit of any ſuch Thing till now.

31. THEOBALD.

A. D. 1138, A Council or Legantine Synod was held at Weſtminſter by Alberic the Pope's Legate, Eighteen Biſhops, and Thirty Abbots being preſent; here this Theobald, a Benedictine Monk, and Abbot of Bec in Normandy, was Elected Archbiſhop, a Man of no great Learning, but of a ſweet and obliging Temper. Gervas ſaith, that the Chapter of Canterbury were ſent for to London on this Occaſion; who concurred in the Choice, and publickly declared their Conſent to it, in the Preſence of the King, the Nobility, and Biſhops, &c.

A. D. 1139, a Synod was held at Wincheſter, to aſſert the Immunity of the Church againſt King Stephen, but to little Effect. Vid. William Malmsbury, Lib. 2. Page 103.

This Theobald, and the other Biſhops, now began to introduce the Canon and Cæſarean Laws here; which about the Year 1139, were publickly read and mixed with the Body and the Practice of the Feudal and National Law of this Kingdom; by which Means the Plainneſs and Clearneſs of the Law began to be loſt, Juſtice to be delayed, and Tricks, Chicanries and Sophiſtries introduced, to make Tryals tedious and expenſive. The Judges were all Clergymen, and the Monks the only Pleaders; and nothing hardly but Quirks, Subtilties, and Sophiſtries, were now judged as neceſſary to a Lawyer.

On the long Conteſt between him and the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Pope found it a very difficult Thing to manage Eccleſiaſtical Affairs here by a Legate, without the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Concurrence, and therefore he had Recourſe to a very Artful Contrivance, to preſerve his own Power and Authority here, and yet not to have any Quarrel with ſo great a Prelate as Canterbury; which was, to create him and his Succeſſors Legati Nati, which was done about this Time. And Archbiſhop Parker ſaith, this Theobald was the firſt who had this Title, which held till Cranmer's Time; but then in a Synod held A. D. 1554, it was laid aſide.

Appeals to Rome ſeem alſo to have been firſt introduced in this Archbiſhop's Time, by reaſon of the Conteſt between him and the Biſhop of Winton, who was King Stephen's Brother, and had alſo a Legantine Power from the Pope. On this Quarrel both applied to Rome, as to a Superior Court; which is what our Hiſtories ſay was not done before in this Kingdom. The Word Appeal indeed, and that in Reference to the Pope, was ſometimes uſed before, but it was only meant as an Addreſs, to know the Judgment and Opinion of a Great and Learned Biſhop, and not as an Application to him as a Judge. For when Archbiſhop Anſelm would have appealed to Rome, in the Difference between the King and him; our Nobility and Biſhops told him, it was a new and unheard-of Thing, and contrary to the Uſage of the Kingdom; and they required an Oath of him, Quod nunquam amplius ſedem S. Petri, vel ejus vicarium, pro quavis, quæ tibi ingeri queat, cauſa appelles: And we find by Eadmerus, that Pope Paſcall the IId complains of our King Henry the Iſt, Quod nullus inde clamor, nullum judicium ad ſedem Apoſtolicam deſtinatur.

But afterwards, either the Pope prevailed with that King to admit it, or perhaps the Clergy foiſted it into his Laws after his Death; for it is in one of his Ordinances Enacted, That if a Biſhop erred in Faith, and was incorrigible, Ad ſummos Pontifices vel ſedem Apoſtolicam accuſetur. But perhaps this is the only Inſtance in which an Engliſh Law encourages Application to a Foreign Judicature, and therefore the liker to be a Forgery.

And after this, in the Aſſize at Clarendon, A. D. 1164, there is an entire Chapter ſpent in ſhewing, that Appeals to Rome were an Intruſion into, and a Violation of the Engliſh Nation's Right: So that when at laſt they were obtained, it was with great Struggle and Difficulty. But after Pope Innocent the IIId got the better of King John, the Clergy alſo being inſtrumental to obtain the Magna Charta, Appeals to Rome became allowed of, and were practiſed continually.

A. D. 1142, a Synod was held at Wincheſter, where Theobald preſided as the Pope's Legate; and here William the King's Dapifer, and ſeveral others who adhered to the King were Excommunicated. William Malmsbury, Page 106.

The ſame Year alſo was another Synod held at Weſtminſter, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, as Pope's Legate; the Occaſion of it was the Redemption of King Stephen, who was taken Priſoner by Maud.

A. D. 1148, the Pope (Eugenius the IIId,) Summon'd Theobald to a Synod at Rheims, but the King would not let him go. Gervas of Dover, and W. Thorn.

How-

However, he ſtole away thither without the King's Leave, and at his Return was expelled the Kingdom for ſo doing. But he got hither alſo again by Stealth; and to make himſelf the more formidable, interdicted Divine Service throughout the Kingdom, which is the firſt Inſtance of that Kind. (a)

At his Return he lived obſcurely in Norfolk, till by the Interceſſion of ſome Biſhops, he was reſtored to the King's Favour, and to his Office. And ſoon after this he was ſo great with King Stephen, that he was employed by him in making the final Peace between Maud and him, at Wallingford.

A. D. 1152, the King in Parliament, propoſed to Theobald, and the other Biſhops, to Diſinherit Henry Duke of Normandy, and make his own Son Euſtace King; in this ſome Biſhops out of Fear complied, but Theobald would not, and therein was ſupported by the Pope.

For this King Stephen Impriſoned him; but he eſcaped, and got beyond Sea; and returning A. D. 1154, was inſtrumental in the Agreement between the King and the Duke, where the latter was declared Heir to the Crown.

A. D. 1154, a Synod was held at London under King Henry the II, where the Old Laws of King Edward the Confeſſor, and other Ancient Cuſtoms of this Kingdom, and the Charters and Privileges of the Biſhops, Abbots, &c. were all confirmed under the Great Seal. Concil. Brit. Tom. 2. Page 52.

A. D. 1157, a Synod was held at Chicheſter, in which the Diſputes between the Biſhop of that Place, and the Abbot of Battel were ended. Ibid. Page 52.

A. D. 1160, a Synod was held at Oxford, in which the Opinions of the Waldenſes, then newly brought into England by one Gerrardus Teutonicus, were condemned, and the Propagators of them ordered to be whipp'd out of the City. Ibid. Page 59.

He died A. D. 1160, and was buried in his Cathedral Church, at the Eaſt End, on the North Side, by the Chapel of the Holy-Trinity. But after the Fire in 1174, the Monks moved his Body into the Nave, by the Altar.

A. D. 1151, A great Breach was made upon the Power and Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury. For Pope Eugenius ſent a Legate into Ireland with Four Palls; one of which was delivered to the Archbiſhop of Dublin, and the other Three to Three other Biſhops; each of which was to have a Preſidency over Five Epiſcopal Sees. And this was done contrary to the Uſage of Ancient Times, and to the Dignity and Authority of the See of Canterbury, from whence the Iriſh Biſhops uſed to receive their Conſecrations. Chronicon Normannorum, Page 986, as cited by Wharton in Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 793.

38. THOMAS BECKET, the Firſt Engliſh Archbiſhop after the Conqueſt.

THIS Man, ſo famous in Story, was born in London, (b) his Father was a Merchant, and had been Portreeve of that City; his Mother was a Syrian Woman. Stow ſaith he was a while the Sheriff of London's Clerk; but having a Mind to Learning, his firſt Education was with the Prior of Merton-Abbey in Surrey; and from thence he was ſent, firſt to Paris, and then to Bononia, to Study the Canon-Law.

On his Return from Abroad, he commenced, as ſome ſay, Doctor of Laws at Oxon. After this he went to Court, and was made by the King Governor of Cabory in Quercy in France, and Governor to the King's Son Henry. He was alſo by Archbiſhop Theobald, made Archdeacon of Canterbury, and was at the ſame Time Provoſt of Beverly, Prebendary of St. Pauls and Lincoln, and Parſon of St. Mary-Hill, and of Bromfeild, and Chaplain to the King. He was alſo made Lord Chancellor of England, as is ſaid in his Life, at the Recommendation of Archbiſhop Theobald; and when he died, A. D. 1162, ſucceeded him in the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, being ſent over by the King from France.

The Author of his Life, cited in the Margin, owns that he was given to Youthful Follies, and above meaſure Ambitious of Popular Fame; and that though he was Chaſt in his Body, yet he was Amorous in his Talk, Page 3.

And Biſhop Godwine ſaith, that being recommended to Court by Theobald, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who judged him a very fit Man to maintain the Churches Cauſe; he uſed all manner of Arts and Ways to ingratiate himſelf with the King, giving into all the Delicacies and Luxuries of the Court, in his Habit, Attendance, Sports, and Pleaſures, and appeared rather like a great Military Officer, than a Chancellor, much leſs a Divine: So that it was ſaid, the Chancellor had forgotten that he was an Archdeacon, he lived and behaved himſelf ſo little like a Clergyman.

But by this Means he gained his Point with the King, and got ſo entirely into his Favour, that after having continued Chancellor about Four Years, on Theobald's Death the King determined to make him Archbiſhop of Canterbury: And accordingly, being then in Normandy, he ſent Richard Lucy, an Eminent Privy-Councellor, to get the Monks of Canterbury to Elect Thomas Becket; which was not only effected, but the whole Convocation of the Clergy agreed alſo in the Election, except Gilbert Foliot, Biſhop of London. He was firſt Ordained Prieſt, by Walter Biſhop of Rocheſter, being only a Deacon before, and then Conſecrated by the Biſhop of Winton, 1162, being ſcarce Forty Four Years of Age.

Immediately on his gaining this high Station in the Church, he changed his former gay Courſe of Life, for one of great Gravity and Auſterity; put on a Monk's Habit, declared for a Monaſtick Life; reſigned his Chancellor's Place, and wrote the King Word, when he ſent him the Great-Seal into France, That he could not ſerve the Church and the Court both at once: For he had in Truth now got that Poſt, which he was ambitious of, and ſerved his King for. The King, who knew the Haughtineſs of his Nature, on his thus throwing off the Care of Temporal Government, was much offended, and Prognoſticated what a Plague he would be to him, and repented heartily that he had placed him in the Metropolitical See.

Becket diſobliged abundance of Men alſo, by the rigid Enquiries he made into the Lands and Eſtates belonging to his Archbiſhoprick; and very many Complaints were made againſt him to the King, that under Pretence of recovering the Rights of the Church, he did by by his Skill and Cunning in the Law, ſeize upon whatever he pleaſed.

But the main Quarrel between the King and him was on this Occaſion: The Clergy were ſo high in thoſe Days, that they claimed an Exemption from the Power of all Temporal Courts; and on this Account horrible Crimes, ſuch as Murders, Rapes, and Robberies, were daily committed by them, above One Hundred ſince the King's coming to the Crown; without any other Puniſhment, than ſome light Sentence in their own Spiritual Court.

This grew ſo great a Grievance, that the King reſolved to publiſh thoſe Laws and Cuſtoms of England, which had been framed by his Grandfather, King Henry the Iſt, and whereby the Licentiouſneſs of the Clergy were in a good Meaſure reſtrained, but which had yet never been promulgated. And becauſe he feared the Archbiſhop eſpecially, and ſome other Biſhops and dignified Clergy might oppoſe this; he deſigned to communicate his Intentions to the Pope, and to deſire his Approbation and Countenance. But Becket ſmoak'd this Matter out, and had ſo prepoſſeſſed the Pope, that the Propoſition was rejected at Rome on its firſt Propoſal. This being known, highly provoked the King, ſo that he reſolved to curb and reſtrain the exorbitant Power of the Clergy; and the Archbiſhop was ſo far from ſeeking to appeaſe or pacify him, that he exaſperated him daily more and more.

The King went on however with his Deſign, and in a Synod at Weſtminſter, A. D. 1164, required the Clergy to ſubſcribe thoſe Laws and Declarations; but they would none of them do it, except Hillary, Biſhop of Chicheſter; nor agree to it, without adding the Clauſe, Salvo Ordine ſuo.

But not long after, ſeveral of the Biſhops followed the King to Woodſtock, and complied; and even Becket and his Followers: And in the Meeting at Clarendon in Wiltſhire, all of them ſwore abſolutely to the Obſervation of thoſe Laws and Cuſtoms.

However, after this, diſliking what he had done, Becket got the Pope to abſolve him from his Oath; for He, it ſeems, had the Maſter-Key of their Conſciences, and ſo ſet himſelf to ſtand out againſt the King's good Deſign. But at laſt Becket fearing he might have been clapp'd up, endeavoured to get out of the Kingdom; and accordingly attempted to eſcape in a Boat from Romney in Kent; but being driven back by contrary Winds, he was ſeized, and carried a Priſoner to Northampton; and there before a Council, accuſed of Extortion, Forgery, Perjury, and Treaſon; and he was, notwithſtanding his Appeal to the Pope, condemned here, even by his own Suffragan Biſhops.

The next Night after his Condemnation, he broke out of Priſon, ran away, and ventured himſelf again upon the Sea in a poor old rotten Fiſher-Boat; and though with only Three Attendants, had the good Luck to get ſafe into the Low-Countries, whence he Poſted to the Pope, who was then at Senon; and by him was placed in the Monaſtery of Pontiniac. From this Place he thundred out Excommunications againſt all ſuch as ſhould obey thoſe Orders enacted at Clarendon, A. D. 1164, which he himſelf had ſigned and ſworn to.

This occaſioned the King to ſeize on his Goods, and the Temporalties of the Archbiſhoprick; and to ſend Ambaſſadors into France and Flanders, that he might not be protected there. And he requeſted alſo of the Pope to confirm the Statutes of Clarendon. The French thinking this Difference between the King and the Archbiſhop would occaſion ſuch Stirs in England, as they might make Uſe of, though in a League of Amity with our King, immediately invaded Normandy, taking ſeveral Places there by Aſſault.

The Pope anſwered cautiouſly, that he would conſider of it: But Becket went on amain, and excommunicated particularly all ſuch Biſhops as were not in his Faction.

Theſe Proceedings ſo enraged the King, that firſt he got Becket turned out of the Abbey of Pontiniac, by threatning to baniſh all the Monks of that (Ciſtertian) Order out of his Dominions, except that were done. Next he drove all his Relations, Friends, and Dependants, out of the Realm. And by the Advice of Gilbert Biſhop of London, entred into a League with the Emperor, againſt the Pope and the French King; and tampered with the Cardinals to ſet up another Antipope, in the Room of Lucius, then newly dead.

On this the Pope began to fear a Storm; and therefore ſent the King Word, that he would order all Things between him and the Archbiſhop, to his entire Satisfaction. But for this Compliance, he was ſeverely reprimanded by his Chief Protector, the French King! So that the poor Pope was at a great Loſs how to turn himſelf in this tickliſh Affair. But at laſt he thought of a right Expedient; which was, to obtain a Reconciliation between the King and the Archbiſhop, and to make the King of France a Mediator for Becket. This he effected; and brought the Two Kings, and Becket, all together at Paris.

On Suit made to him, and Becket's Submiſſion, our good King Henry agreed to his Return, and to receive him into Favour; and offered a Recompence for ſuch of his Goods, and Temporalties as he had actually already given away. But when Becket came to make his Submiſſion, he did it with this Expreſſion Salvo honore Dei; which the King took for a tricking and evaſive Anſwer; and on his taking Notice of it as ſuch, the other not complying, they parted without any Reconciliation. Tho' the King complied ſo far, that in the Judgment of thoſe Preſent, the Archbiſhop was entirely to blame, and was condemned as the Continuer of theſe Stirs and Differences, as well as the firſt Author of them.

Some Time after this, another Reconciliation was on the Point of being concluded, but was broke off by ſome peeviſh Expreſſions: However, at laſt the King and he were fully reconciled, only his full Reſtitution was deferred till he had behaved himſelf quietly at Canterbury, according to his Promiſe; and where he was ordered firſt to go and abide a-while.

But ſo far was he from Quietneſs, that he ſent Excommunications againſt the Biſhops of York, London, and Sarum, before him into England; and againſt all thoſe that were concerned in the Coronation of the Young King; which Office he ſaid no one ſhould have done but himſelf. The Perſons under this grievous Cenſure, Poſted to complain to the King in Normandy, which brought new Affliction to him; ſo that he curſed the Time in which he made Becket Archbiſhop, or reſtored him: And unwarily added, as ſome tell us, That he was very unhappy, that no one would eaſe him, and make an Example of this troubleſome Prelate.

There were Four Knights preſent, who thought it would be an acceptable Thing to their Maſter, to diſpatch this Prelate: Accordingly they entered into a Vow, and bound themſelves by a ſolemn Oath, to deſtroy him; and going over into England, they found Becket at at Canterbury, in his Return from Woodſtock; where the Young King would not ſee him, till he had revok'd the Excommunication of thoſe that Crowned him.

Theſe Knights, whoſe Names were Reginald Fitz-Urſe, Hugh de Mortwill, William de Tracy, and Richard Briton, either had a Meſſage, or pretended one from the King to him; which, I ſuppoſe, he receiving with his uſual Pride and Inſolence, high Words aroſe between them; ſo that they charged the Monks, in the King's Name, to ſee him forth-coming. But they were ſo precipitate, that returning again at Evening Prayer, they ruſhed into the Church, and calling out for the Traytor, they fell on the poor Archbiſhop, and ſlew him with their Swords, on the Steps as you go up into the Choir. They deſigned, 'tis ſaid, to have thrown his Body into the Sea, or to have cut it all to Pieces; but the Prior and Monks ſuſpecting ſome ſuch Thing, buried it immediately in the Undercroft of the Church, whence it was after taken, and moſt ſumptuouſly enſhrined at the Eaſt End of the Choir. This is in ſhort the Hiſtory of the Murder of this Bold and Rebellious Prelate: And in all its Parts 'tis authorized by the Popiſh Writers of his Life, who celebrate him for his protecting Prieſts that were guilty of Murder, and other ſuch hainous Crimes, and his refuſing to Sign the Ordinances of Clarendon.

The Ordinances which he diſliked were theſe Five.

I. That no Appeal ſhould be allowed to Rome, without the King's Licenſe.

II. No Biſhop to go beyond Sea without it.

III. No Biſhop to excommunicate the King's Tenants in Capite without his Leave.

IV. That the Biſhop ſhould have no Cognizance of Perjury, nor Fidei Læſionis.

V. That the Clergy might be convened before Lay-Judges, and the King's Courts have Cognizance of Churches and Tythes.

Theſe Writers call his Compliance with the King afterwards, that way, his Fall; and ſay, that at the Perſuaſion of his Croſs-bearer, (who perhaps was a Biſhop of Rocheſter,) he wrote to the Pope for, and had Abſolution for doing it.

The Author of his Life tells us alſo, that the King cited him before the Parliament at Northampton, to anſwer for the Revenues of many Biſhopricks and Abbeys, which were vacant during the Time of his being Chancellor; and of which he had given no Account to the Crown: Page 37. To this Becket deſired Leave to Anſwer by his Council. And afterwards he was tried for this, and condemned, by the Judgment of the Barons, and ordered to be committed to Priſon. And the Biſhops pronounced by the Mouth of the Biſhop of Chicheſter, that they owed him no longer any Canonical Obedience.

But the next Day he waited on the King, and would, againſt all Perſuaſion, carry his Croſs himſelf. The Archbiſhop of York told him, that was arming himſelf againſt the King, who yet carried a much ſharper Weapon. Becket replied, that though the King's might kill the Body, his Weapon would deſtroy the Soul, and ſend it to Hell. The King was frighted, ſo that he ran into his Cloſet, as ſoon as he heard of it; but at length he came out with the Earls and Biſhops, (who were almoſt to a Man againſt Becket) and charging him with his Diſobedience, Treaſon, and other Crimes; he appealed to the Pope, and got away, as is ſaid above, into Flanders.

This Author ſaith further, that Becket told one of the Barons, that they were all obliged to obey God and him, ('tis well 'twas not him and God) before any Earthly King whatſoever; Page 44. And that as ſoon as he got to the Pope, he plucked off his Ring, and laid down his Staff, and reſigned his Archbiſhoprick, in order to receive it again from the Pope.

And he concludes with owning, at Page 342, that when after his Reconciliation with the King, Becket came over hither; he found the Biſhops almoſt all againſt him; and that ſome had gone over to the King into France to complain againſt him, as an Enemy to his Majeſty, and all good Men, (which they did becauſe he had excommunicated the Biſhops of London, Exeter, and Sarum, and ſuſpended York and Durham, who aſſiſted at the King's Coronation:) When, I ſay, theſe Complaints were made againſt him, and that the Archbiſhop of York in particular told the King, that as long as Becket was alive, it was impoſſible he ſhould enjoy his Kingdom in Quiet, or ſee any happy Days; this Popiſh Author owns, that theſe Things forced from the King thoſe Words, which occaſioned his Murder.

As ſoon as the Pope heard of which, he immediately excommunicated all the Authors of it, and Conſenters to it; and the poor King was fain to purge himſelf by Oath, that he gave no Orders to deſtroy him, and was not conſenting to, or ſo much as privy to the Deſign. And beſides all this, he could not get to be abſolved before he did the following Penance:

Firſt, He was to pray, and offer at the Tomb of this Martyr, as they call him; next, he was to be whipp'd in the Chapter-Houſe, and receive a Laſh from every Monk; then he was to maintain Two Hundred Soldiers at his ſole Expence, for a Year, in the Holy War, each to be paid Two Hundred Crowns; and he muſt revoke the Declarations made at Clarendon, which occaſioned this Murder: And at the Pope's Command to go into Spain againſt the Infidels, and to take on him the Croſs for Three Years.

And ſuch was the unhappy State of his Affairs at that Time, that he thought fit to ſubmit to all this. So they led him into the Church, and then out again, and abſolved him, without any Whipping, as the Author of Becket's Life writes, Page 369.

The Place where Becket was killed in Canterbury Cathedral, was afterwards called the Martyrdom; and many Papiſts have been ſo ſilly and ſuperſtitious, as to carry away little Fragments of the Stones on which he fell, and on which they pretended to ſhew the Stains of his Blood. But the Miſchief of all is, that when Benedict, one of the Priors of Canterbury, was made Abbot of Peterburgh, he carried away with him the Stones on which the Carkaſe of this famous Saint fell; and A. D. 1177, made Two Altars of them in his new Church. So that our good Catholicks are as much out in the Object of their Worſhip, as they are in the Reaſon of it. Sed qui vult decipi decipiatur.

Archbiſhop Langton built a very rich Shrine for the Body of this Rebel Saint, after his Canonization; and it thrived ſo well, that the Church made Annually about Six Hundred Pounds of the Offerings there; and the Viſitants were ſometimes, at a Jubilee, to the Number of of One Hundred Thouſand Souls; which Jubilee is celebrated every Fifty Years.

King Henry the VIIIth, in the Year 1538, ordered this Shrine to be deſtroyed, and the Bones of Becket to be burnt; and when they took up his Body, they found his Scull in its proper Place: Whereas there was another Scull which was ſaid to be his, and which was ſhewn and worſhipped at his Shrine for many Ages before.

The Riches of this Shrine were very great, there being Two Cheſts of Gold, and precious Stones, &c. carried off, which were ſo heavy, that each required Sixteen Men to remove them.

And A. D. 1539, the King cauſed it to be publiſhed, That (a) Becket ſtubbornly withſtanding the Laws of the Land, againſt the Enormities of the Clergy, had fled into France, and to the Biſhop of Rome, the Maintainer of theſe Enormities, in order to procure the Abrogation of thoſe Laws. And that his Death, which was vulgarly called his Martyrdom, was occaſioned by a Reſcue which Becket made of a Man out of the Hands of Juſtice: That he gave opprobrious Language to the Gentlemen who adviſed him againſt that Stubbornneſs, and who had cautioned him of the Danger of raiſing a Riot or Commotion among the People, to promote that Reſcue. And further, that this Saint did not only call one of them Bawd, but that he alſo took Tracy by the Neck, and ſhook him almoſt to the Ground: And that during this Fray, one of them was provoked to ſtrike him, and conſequently a Quarrel further ariſing, he happened to be killed: That his Canonization had been made only by the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Champion he had been, and whoſe uſurped Authority he had maintained, &c. And for theſe Reaſons his Majeſty thought fit to declare to all his loving Subjects, that inſtead of a Saint, he ought to be eſteemed as a Rebel, and a Traytor; and that his Feſtival ſhould not be kept, nor his Shrine frequented, nor the People permitted to commit Idolatry there as they had formerly done.

When Becket was at Sens in France, he pretended that the Bleſſed Virgin appeared to him in the Nuns Church there, and gave him an Eagle of Gold: Which was a Bottle in that Form, full of precious Ointment, and told him, that all the Kings of England which ſhould be anointed therewith, ſhould be happy and fortunate, &c. And this Bottle was afterwards with great Solemnity delivered to Henry, the firſt Duke of Lancaſter, in the Reign of King Edward the IIId.

The Author of Becket's Life, above-mentioned, at Page 385, ſaith, that after his Murther, the Aſſaſſins went to Rome, and applied themſelves to the Pope for a Pardon and Abſolution; who enjoined them an eaſy Penance enough, conſidering what a Crime this was in it ſelf, and muſt needs appear to be to the Pope; for he only ordered them to go to the Holy War; but ſaith he, as they went towards it, William Tracy died by the Way in Italy; the others going to Paleſtine, were then enjoined by the Pope to ſtay in the Place called the Black Mountain, a kind of Priſon for Penitents, where they died, and were buried before the Door of the Temple.

But this is ſo far from being true, with Relation to Tracy, that 'tis certain, after the Fact he went into Devonſhire, where at a Place called Wallacombe, he lived a private Life, and was buried in one of the Iſles of the Pariſh Church there, which he himſelf had built, and thereby, no doubt, had commuted for his Crime, and got Abſolution.

Mr. Selden, in a Letter to Aug. Vincent, before his Corrections of Brook's Heraldry, tells us, that Becket's Life was written by Fitz Stephen, a Monk of Canterbury, and his Contemporary, and out of it he gives us this Particular. That,

Becket being accuſed before the whole Baronage of England (at Northampton) for Injuſtice done in his Court-Baron of Pagham, in Suſſex; and alſo of Contempt, in not appearing when called by the King's Proceſs to Anſwer; the Court found him guilty in the Forfeiture of his whole Perſonal Eſtate; but that they differed whether the Sentence ſhould be pronounced by a Lay or Spiritual Man; the former declined it for fear of the Pope, and the latter ſaid, they ſate there only as Barons, and not as Biſhops. But the King being diſpleaſed at this, at laſt Henry of Blois, Biſhop of Wincheſter, gave Sentence againſt him.

About Fifty Years after his Death, it was a Queſtion much debated by the Learned Univerſity of Oxford, whether Becket were damned or ſaved. Some loyally maintaining that he deſerved Death and Damnation for his Contumacy and Rebellion againſt the Miniſter of God, his Lawful Sovereign: But others argued, that the many Miracles which he wrought after he was dead, were a certain Sign of his Salvation. But as there was more Proof of the former, than of the latter, I doubt the Concluſion went againſt him. But that is a Matter I ſhall not enter into, but ſhall cloſe this Account of him in the Words of Dr. Cave Hiſt. Liter. Vol. I. Page 681.

Longum eſſet omnia viri hujus procaciſſimi Auſa Nefaria commemorare; quoties Ille in Principis Caput conjurarit; quoties Eundem apud Pontificem & exteros Reges accuſarit; quoties denique Angliæ Regem, Epiſcopos Proceres & Clerum excommunicârit, abſolverit, abſolutoſque iterum anathematizârit.

There were ſeveral Things in this Reign that ſerved to advance the Papal Uſurpations and Encroachments on the Power of our Engliſh Monarchs: For A. D. 1163, a Council being held at Tours in France, under Pope Alexander, the King unwarily permitted the Engliſh Biſhops to go thither, where they received uncommon Honours, and entred into an Agreement with the Pope to ſet up his Authority in England: Which they manifeſtly executed at their Return, declaring for the Pontificate, againſt the Regal Power. And when on the King's Quarrel with Becket, he acquainted the Pope with it by his Ambaſſadors, and hoped to have influenced him to eſpouſe his Cauſe, he could obtain no manner of Satisfaction at Rome. Becket had all along declared openly for an univerſal Exemption of the Clergy from the Power of the Civil Magiſtrate; and in this all the Biſhops at firſt joined with him, but Hilary Biſhop of Chicheſter.

And though the King for a good while exerted himſelf like a Man of Spirit and Reſolution, yet at laſt France and the Pope joining againſt him, the latter perpetually threatning him, and others perpetually ſoliciting him to be reconciled to Becket, he was induced to a weak Compliance, and to reſtore a Man of an implacable Temper, who behaved himſelf with the ſame, or a greater Inſolence, as ſoon as ever he ſet his Foot on Engliſh Ground.

(a) Book of Martyrs, Fol. 1134.

Echard, in his Life of King Henry the IId, runs into a Miſtake about the Place of this Man's Death; for he was not ſlain, as he ſuppoſes, at the Altar, nor was that ſhamefully polluted with his Blood and Gore; but as he was coming down the Steps from the Choir into the Body of the Church.

Archbiſhop Parker ſaith, that the Monks of Canterbury choſe one Robert Abbot of Bec in Normandy, their Archbiſhop; but that he preferring a quiet and private Life before ſuch Ruffles and Storms, as he ſaw ſuch an high Station ſometimes expoſed Men to, wiſely declined it.

39. RICHARD,

WAS Prior of St. Martins in Dover; and A. D. 1173, elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the Chapel of St. Catherine at Weſtminſter, by the Chapter of Canterbury, and with the concurrent Suffrages of the Provincial Biſhops, (a) after the See had been vacant about Two Years.

Some indeed tell us, that the Monks of Canterbury would rather have Elected their own Prior, Odo; but this ſeems a Miſtake, for the King left them entirely to their Choice, recommending no particular Perſon to them, only deſiring them to chuſe a quiet and peaceable Man.

He is generally repreſented as a Man eaſy in his Temper, and of great Liberality; of good Cunning and Management, keeping himſelf well both with the King, and the Pope; and he quarrelled with no one but with the Archbiſhop of York about Supremacy, and there indeed he ran as great and ridiculous a Length as any of his Predeceſſors.

He went to Rome and had his Pall 1174.

A. D. 1175, a Synod was held at London, the King preſent, and all the Biſhops and Abbots of the Province of Canterbury, where Richard preſided: Here that moſt important Affair about York's bearing his Croſs within the Province of Canterbury, and ſome other Things about the Manners of the Clergy, were debated. Vid. Conc. Britan. Tom. II. Page 103. and R. Hoveden in Anno.

And the ſame Year, in Winter, was held another, the King and his Son being both Preſent, with a great Concourſe of Peers, Biſhops, &c. where Roderick of Connaught King of Ireland, was admitted to do Homage, and agreed to pay a Tribute to the King of England. Hoveden's Annals, Part II. Page 312.

A. D. 1176, a Council was held at Northampton, where the Two Kings of England, Henry the IId, and his Son, and the King of Scots were preſent; in which was debated the Subjection of the Biſhops of Scotland to the Church of England, and eſpecially to the See of York. But while the Scots denied any ſuch Subjection to be at all due, and Richard claimed it to his See of Canterbury, it ended without any Determination. But here the Conſtitutions or Statutes of Clarendon were again confirmed by Oath.

This Year alſo, or as ſome ſay 1178, a Synod was held at Weſtminſter, Hugo, the Pope's Legate being preſent, where was a Comical Scuffle between our Richard and the Biſhop of York, about the old Matter of Precedence.

York, as ſome tell the Story, came in firſt, and placed himſelf on the Right Hand of the Legate; which Richard when he came in, not being able to bear, would not ſit down, but complained highly of the Indignity, and falling from Words to Blows, his Attendants pulled York out of his Seat, threw him down on the Ground, and trampled on him, and tore his Sacred Veſtments, his Chimer, his Caſule and Rochet from his Back; at which the Legate was ſo frighted, that he ran away. But the Author of the Antiq. Britannicæ, makes Canterbury to have come firſt, and to have been placed by the Legate on his Right Hand; and that York coming in afterwards, ſate down upon the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſqueezing him to get in between him and the Legate: That then he was ſo uſed by Canterbury's Men; and that going dirty and torn as he was, to complain to the King, he got only Laughter and Deriſion for his Rudeneſs and Folly.

The next Day York appealed to Rome, and the Reſult was, that the Pope ſettled the Titles and Precedence to be as now they ſtand. Vid. Hoveden.

A. D. 1177, a Council was held at Weſtminſter, called (Pan Anglicum) where the King, Richard, and moſt of the Biſhops, Peers, and Abbots of the Realm were preſent; and here the Quarrel between the Two Kings of Navarre and Caſtile was accommodated by the Judgment of King Henry the IId.

Stow ſaith, that this Archbiſhop gave One Thouſand Marks towards the building of London-Bridge, which was began A. D. 1176, and was Thirty Three Years in finiſhing. The Method that they took to build it, was by cutting a new Channel to divert the Courſe of the River. This began a little to the Eaſt of Rotherhithe, or Redriff, and ended, or came into the old Courſe of the River at Batterſey.

A. D. 1179, he treated the Two Kings of England and France at his Palace of Canterbury; the latter came over to viſit Thomas Becket's Tomb; he ſtaid in the Church all Night, and had the great Honour to be made a Brother of the Convent of Chriſt-Church; and he offered at the Shrine of Becket a large Diamond, called the Regal of France, which 'tis a wonder the Monks never ſold, and placed another in its Room; but it held till King Henry the VIIIth's Time, and then he got it, among other good Plunder, and wore it in a Ring upon his Thumb.

This Archbiſhop ſeems to have had a good Influence over the King, for at his Suit he releaſed Queen Eleanor, whom he had kept Priſoner for near Twelve Years before.

He died A. D. 1184, and as they tell you, (a) on this Occaſion.

He had been ſome Time at Rome, and had there, by the uſual Method of Money, prevailed both againſt the King, and the Archbiſhop of York, in Suits he had there depending, both about his own Conſecration, and alſo his Precedence over the other. After which, ſleeping one Night in his Palace which he had then at Wrotham in this County, he dreamed, or fancied, that a Reverend Perſon appeared to him at his Bedſide, and with a loud Voice ſaid, Who art thou? The poor Archbiſhop awaked, but with the Fright not being able to ſpeak, the Spectre ſaid, Thou art he that haſt ſcattered the Goods of the Church committed to thy

thy Charge, and therefore I will ſcatter thee; and then vaniſhed. And indeed Fabian in his Chronicle, doth charge him with Crimes of this Kind. Upon this Richard aroſe in the Morning, and intended to go to Rocheſter; but on the Way the Viſion, and the Spectre's Words, were always in his Head, and gave him ſuch Uneaſineſs, that one would think he were guilty; for after having told the Story to his Attendants, he was ſtruck with ſuch a Terror, Coldneſs, and Shivering, that he could hold it no further than Halling, where was then a Seat belonging to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and there he died the next Morning, in Agony and Torment.

He was buried in the Chapel of the Bleſſed Virgin, in his own Cathedral, at the North Side, and in the upper Part of the Nave.

Rad. de Diceto ſaith, he divided Kent into Three Archdeaconries, and the ſame is ſaid in the Antiq. Britan.

And Archbiſhop Parker further writes, that under the Notion of viſiting his Province, and exerciſing his Legantine Power; he rode about from Place to Place with a great Equipage and Attendance, and put the Convents and his Clergy to ſo very great an Expence, that he contracted an univerſal Ill-will.

There was a great Squabble between him and Roger, Abbot of St. Auſtins in Kent, about Profeſſion of Obedience to him, of which I ſhall give an Account in Roger's Life.

40. BALDWIN.

A Devonſhire Man, and but of mean Birth; he was firſt a Schoolmaſter, and after an Archdeacon; which Office he left, pretending to forſake the World, and turned Ciſtertian Monk, and became Abbot of Ford in Devonſhire.

A. D. 1181, he was made Biſhop of Worceſter: And Two Years after was elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the Suffragan Biſhops, after a great Conteſt, and with the Monks Conſent; for they diſputed warmly for their Right of Election. The King applied firſt to them, and then to the Biſhops, to chuſe ſome honeſt, quiet, and peaceable Man; but the Monks would not join with the Biſhops; and as ſoon as ever they found them to meddle in the Election, they appealed to Rome, and there the Affair hung for Nine Months. At laſt the Biſhops obtained a Mandate, commanding them and the Monks to join together: When the Day of Election came, the Monks would not appear, ſo Baldwin was choſen by the Biſhops only; the Monks proteſting againſt the Election, though they liked the Man well enough then: But at laſt the King went to Canterbury, and made up the Quarrel between them, which he could not effect without vacating the former Election, and letting the Monks chuſe Baldwin anew. See Gervas, Col. 1466, and 1474. 1475.

However, the King was ſo far from being pleaſed with their Behaviour in this Affair, that he put Baldwin upon building a College at Hackington, near Canterbury, now uſually called St. Stephens, in order to get the Election of the Archbiſhop out of the Hands of the Monks of Chriſt-Church.

In this College it was deſigned, that the King ſhould for ever nominate one Prebendary, and each Biſhop of the Province another; that ſo a Society of Men of good Education, Learning, and Knowledge of the World, might be eſtabliſhed, who ſhould have Rivalled the Monks, and who were to chuſe ſuch an Archbiſhop as the Crown ſhould approve of. And to give the greater Credit to this new College, it was to be Dedicated to that now famous Saint and Martyr, Thomas Becket.

In Purſuance of this Deſign, the Archbiſhop began the Foundation with the King and Pope's Licenſe, and with great Appearance of Magnificence; but before the Building obtained any conſiderable Height, the Monks made a heavy Complaint againſt it at Rome. However, the Work went on, the Church was almoſt finiſhed, and Dedicated as deſigned. And ſeveral ſecular Prieſts were inſtalled in the College as Prebendaries. But the enraged Monks were reſtleſs and unwearied in their Solliciration againſt it at Rome, and at laſt, by the never-failing Method of Bribery, they got an Order from the Pope to diſſolve this new Corporation, and to Raſe and Level the Building to the Ground, which was done accordingly, though erected by the very ſame Pope's Licenſe.

After this, Pope Urban, the Monks great Friend, dying, he was ſucceeded by Gregory the VIIIth, in whom Baldwin fancied he had ſo great an Intereſt, that he went on again with his Deſign, though in another Place. For having exchanged with the Church of Rocheſter, the Manor and Church of Darent, and the Chapel of St. Mary at Helles, for the Manor and Church of Lambeth, in the Place where now the Archbiſhop's Palace is Situated; (a) he began the Foundation of another College, bringing hither the Materials which he had provided for the ſame Purpoſe at Hackington. But here alſo he was oppoſed by the Monks, after the ſame Manner, and with the ſame Violence as before; and by expreſs Order from the Pope, forbidden to go on with the Building.

As the judicious Sir Roger Twiſden (b) obſerves, the Pope went now a little farther Length than he ever had gone before, and appointed a new Officer here, called his Legate à Latere, about A. D. 1189. He often indeed confined the Grant of the Legatus Natus, before, ſo, that he could do nothing but what the Pope pleaſed; but after this new Legate à Latere was thought of, (who was ſo called, from his near Dependance upon the Pope's Perſon,) his Power entirely ſuperſeded that of the other. This Kind of Legate ſeldom ſtaid long here, and when he did ſo, was taken by the Engliſh for a lurking Enemy: And the Popes never ventured at this Stretch of Power, till they had brought the Archbiſhops low, put them under a Neceſſity of receiving their Pall from Rome, and then hampering them with Solemn Oaths, De fidelitate & Canonica Obedientia, to defend the Regalia S. Petri.

There is ſome Difference among our Hiſtorians, about the Temper of this Archbiſhop; ſome (c) repreſenting him as a paſſionate and reſentful Man, while others ſay, and more truly, that he was ſo mild and eaſy, that it ran into a Defect that Way. And ſo one would think his Caſe really was, when Pope Urban directed a Letter to him thus, (d) Monacho ferventiſſimo, Abbati Calido, Epiſcopo Tepido, Archiepiſcopo remiſſo. But perhaps he was unequal, and ſometimes in one Extream, and ſometimes in the other. For when Earl John, the King's Brother, had married his firſt Couſin Iſabella, Daughter to Robert Earl of Glouceſter, contrary to the Archbiſhop's Prohibition, he wrote him an angry Letter, enjoining him not to touch the Virgin, and to appear before him at a Day aſſigned. But John appealed to the Legate à Latere, and ſo got clear of Baldwin.

He died at the Siege of Acon or Ptolemais in Paleſtine, whither he had accompanied King Richard the Iſt, who went with a great Force Abroad to carry on the Holy War, A. D. 1190, and was buried there. All his Goods he left to be diſtributed among the Soldiers, at the Diſcretion of Hubert, then Biſhop of Sarum, and who not long after was Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

He wrote Sixteen Tracts on ſeveral Subjects, which are publiſhed by Bernard Toſſier, in the Biblioth. Ciceſtrenſ. Tom. V. A. D. 1662. And Bale and Pitſeus mention ſome other Writings of his which are not yet Printed, and where the Manuſcripts are, I don't know.

This Baldwin is ſaid to be the firſt Archbiſhop that viſited Wales, and compleatly reduced it within his Province. He viſited it by a Legantine Authority. See Wynn's Hiſtory of Wales.

41. REGINALD FITZ-JOCELINE.

THIS Gentleman was haſtily elected by the Monks of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and forced into the Chair, in order to get the Start of the Biſhops of the Province, who were come down to Canterbury to elect an Archbiſhop by the King's Mandate. Though the King had alſo written to the Monks, and ordered them to elect ſome good, quiet, and peaceable Man. He was then Biſhop of Bath and Wells; but in a little Time after his Confirmation, and before his Conſecration, he died, A. D. 1191, to the exceſſive Grief of the Monks, who hoped they had now an Archbiſhop after their own Hearts Deſire.

Much after the ſame hurrying Manner, the Monks proceeded alſo in the Choice of Hubert, the next Archbiſhop, preſenting him to the Biſhops of the Province, who were come down to Elect: However, the Biſhops now went on, and elected him again, and the Biſhop of London declared the Election.

But after Hubert's Death, A. D. 1206, this Controverſy between the Chapter of Canterbury, and the Provincial Biſhops, about the Right of Election, was ended by a Bull of Pope Innocent the IIId, who determined the Matter in Favour of the Monks, A. D. 1206. The whole Controverſy is recited in the Bull. In theſe Conteſts the King always ſent his Mandate, and generally to the Biſhops, but ſometimes to both them and the Convent.

But notwithſtanding that the Pope ſeemed thus to have confirmed the Right of electing Archbiſhops and Biſhops to the reſpective Cathedral-Monaſteries; you will ſee, in a little Time, he broke in upon it himſelf, and by Bulls of Proviſions, entirely defeated the Power of the Monaſtick Chapters in theſe Caſes.

42. HUBERT WALTER.

HE was born at Weſt Derham in Norfolk, and Educated under Reginald de Glanfeild, Juſticiary of all England. After his going into Orders, his firſt Preferment was the Deanry of York, and after that he was made Biſhop of Sarum; and while ſuch, he went with King Richard the Iſt into the Holy-Land, and had a Command of ſome Engliſh Troops, with whom he performed great Services at the Siege of Acon in Paleſtine, and in other Actions.

He was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the Year 1193, and probably for the Zeal he ſhewed for the Redemption of his Maſter, King Richard, who was taken Priſoner by Leopold Duke of Auſtria.

For on the King's Captivity he came home into England, and raiſed Two Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Marks among the Clergy for his Enlargement; a vaſt Sum in thoſe Days. And conſidering how odious his Predeceſſor Baldwin had been to the Monks, for not being of their Order, he, while his Pall was coming from Rome, went to Merton Abbey, and there profeſſed himſelf a Monk.

Soon after his Advancement to the Archbiſhoprick, and while the King was a Priſoner, he held a Council of the Earls, Biſhops, and Barons, on the Account of the baſe Conſpiracies with Philip King of France, and the Conſequential Diſturbances raiſed by Earl John, the King's Brother; and who was there diſſeized of his Lands, Excommunicated, and his Caſtles ordered to be Beſieged. He was then Juſticiary of all England, and as ſome ſay, Regent, Lord Chancellor, and Pope's Legate; but ſome Time after this, the Pope adviſed King Richard not to let him act as Juſtitiary any longer, nor to admit for the future any Biſhop or Prieſt into that, or ſuch like great Secular Offices, becauſe, no doubt, he feared his Power; and that it would attach the Clergy too much to the State of England, and prompt them to adviſe the King to become more independant upon the Pope.

The King complied in ſome Meaſure with this; Hubert was removed from being Juſtitiary, and Fitz Peter placed in his Room. (a) But he was not removed from his Place of Chancellor, unleſs he was put in again afterwards; for he held that Office at his Death.

Archbiſhop Parker ſaith, he made only a Feint of reſigning that great Office, on the Account of its being inconſiſtent with the Duty of his Archbiſhoprick, and that the King took him at his Word; at which Hubert was afterwards very uneaſy.

Matt. Paris ſaith, Nullus Clericus niſi Cauſidicus; he ſpeaks indeed of King William the IId's Reign; for then, and till the Time of King Edward the Iſt, almoſt all the Offices of the Law were executed by Prieſts. But that wiſe King began to bring Laymen into Offices of the Law, and Judiciary Proceedings. 'Tis plain therefore, that this Demand of the Pope about Hubert, was particularly levelled at him, and his Power, and was not deſigned, as the Pope pretended, only to take the Clergy off from being engaged in Secular Employments.

Sir William Dugdale in his Orig. Juridiciales, Page 9. ſaith, that when Hubert was Juſtitiary, he ſent the firſt Form of an Oath, which was to be

be taken by every Man in England; which probably was that of Allegiance, or to keep the King's Peace.

A. D. 1195, Hubert, as the Pope's Legate, held a Council at York, the King being preſent, where many Things were done towards reforming the Manners of the Clergy. Vid. Hoveden in Anno 1189, and Conc. Brit. Tom. X. Page 1791.

A. D. 1198, being a Kind of Lieutenant of all England, he gathered a great Force, and got a Victory over the Welſh, who had then rebelled; and as ſoon as he returned to London, he reſigned up his great Office.

A. D. 1199, he made a Speech in favour of King John's Claim to the Crown of England; alledging, that the Crown ought to go according to the general Conſent of the whole Nation; and accordingly King John was Elected, and he Crowned him. And the King either continued him, or made him anew Lord Chancellor of England.

And the Archbiſhop got, but with great Difficulty, a Seventh Part of their Goods from the Clergy, for the King's Uſe.

The ſame Year, Hubert deſigning to hold a Synod at Weſtminſter without the King's ſpecial Writ, (who was then in France) Geoffry Fitz-Peter, the Juſtitiary, bravely ſent him a Prohibition againſt it. However Hubert, as Pope's Legate, would hold the Council; and there ſeveral Things were ordered, which ſeem not to have been thought obligatory, becauſe Enacted without the King's Licenſe, and therefore the Decrees are omitted by Lyndwood, &c. This Hubert did out of Spight to the King, in whom he found himſelf diſappointed.

King John in his 3d Year, granted Leave to Hubert to change the Tenure of the Lands belonging to the See of Canterbury, from Gavelkind to Knights Service. Lambard's Peramb. Page 588.

A. D. 1200, Hubert held another Synod at London, for the Reformation of ſeveral Things in the Church, though Galfride Earl of Eſſex, and the King's Juſtitiary, had prohibited him. Hoveden. Concil. Brit. Tom. II. Page 123.

He had, as his Predeceſſor Baldwin, many Bickerings and Conteſts with his Monks of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and who, by their bribing the Pope to eſpouſe their Quarrel, got the better of him in all his Attempts againſt them; for though he compleated the Exchange began by Baldwin, with the Biſhop of Rocheſter, of Darent, &c. for Lambeth, and deſigned to go on with a Chapel and College there, which Baldwin had begun, yet they influenced the Pope to make him put an entire Stop to it. And all Hubert could obtain at Rome, after the Matter had hung there a great while, was, that if he would pull that Chapel down, he might build another on a new Foundation; and which he might endow with Revenues of One Hundred Pounds per Annum, and place in it Twenty Canons or Prebendaries: But it was expreſly prohibited, that any Biſhop ſhould be Conſecrated there, any Abbots bleſſed, any Chriſm made, or any Orders there conferred. And they had ſo good an Intereſt in the Roman Court, that doubtleſs they obtained from the Pope, that Prohibition which was ſent to him, againſt his holding any Secular Employments with his Archiepiſcopal Office.

He died A. D. 1205, and was buried in the South Wall of the Church of Canterbury, but without any Inſcription; for the Tomb is ſtill viſible, and appears to be one of the moſt Ancient in this preſent Cathedral, as Mr. Somner thinks.

The Place of his Death was a Houſe which the Archbiſhops of Canterbury ſeem then to have had at Tenham.

Matt. Paris ſaith, King John was much pleaſed at the News of his Death, ſaying, he never was King till then; but his Joy was but of ſhort Continuance; for the next Succeſſor, Stephen Langton, proved a much greater Plague to him; for by his Means, 'tis probable, he loſt not only his Honour, and his Kingdom, but alſo his Life too.

The Cauſe of King John's preſent Hatred to him, (beſides the general Envy that his Ambition, profuſe and pompous way of Living produced) was probably this; the King had got together Four Thouſand Mariners, and a powerful Land Army, with a Deſign to recover his Dominions in France: But juſt when the King was ready to Embark at Portſmouth, by Hubert's and the Earl of Pembroke's unaccountable Perſuaſions, all the Expedition was put by, and the Men Disbanded. This terribly enraged the King, ſo that as ſoon as he was Dead, he ſeized on all his Goods and Poſſeſſions.

He did many Great and Magnificent Things; he encloſed the Tower of London round with a Wall and a Ditch, and let the Water in all round it by a Moat, as it is now.

He was the firſt that deviſed the Aſſize of Bread, and that regulated the Weights and Meaſures of Mercantile Goods.

He built a Monaſtery at North Derham in Norfolk, where he was Born, and began another at Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire, for Ciſtertian Monks.

He much increaſed the Revenues of his See, and adorned it with a great many ſumptuous and ſtately Buildings, as Biſhop Godwin ſaith.

In his Temper he was immoderately ambitious, and a mighty Admirer of Pomp and Grandeur in his way of Living, by which he contracted the Envy of the Nobility: And King John went once to Canterbury on Purpoſe to put him to Expence, with a great Train of Company and Attendance.

But he was withal a Man of great Prudence, and exact Juſtice; and though poſſeſſed of more Power than any Archbiſhop before him ever had, ran into but few Extravagancies and Exceſſes of it. But he was but little skilled in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and had more of the Virtues of a General, and a Judge, than of a Biſhop and a Metropolitan: However, he was a true Lover of his Country, its Laws and Liberties, and did very good Offices for it, both with King Richard and King John.

After this great Archbiſhop's Death, the Chapter of Canterbury aſſembled together to elect another in his Room, without acquainting the King with their Deſign, or ſtaying for his Order. But they were divided among themſelves, as ſome relate the Matter. Others ſay, they firſt agreed to chuſe one Reginald, who was their Sub-Prior, and made their Election at Midnight with all Secreſy; Inthronizing him, binding him alſo by an Oath, not to diſcloſe the Matter to any one, till he ſhould come into the Pope's Preſence, whither they ſent him immediately, and with all Privacy. But this poor Man's Vanity defeated all their Caution; for as ſoon as he got over the Sea, he made his Election known, and ſhewed his Teſtimonials of it every-where. This vex'd the Monks ſo, that they reſolved to diſappoint him, and now out of Revenge to him, they applied to the King, and got his Leave to Elect another. The King recommended

John

John Gray, who was then Biſhop of Norwich, and the Monks choſe him, and his Election was fairly and regularly declared, or publiſhed, before the King and the People.

On this moſt of the Monks poſted away to Rome, on the Account of theſe Two Elections, ſome preſſing earneſtly for Reginald, and others for Gray. The Pope was for neither of theſe Men, and ſollicited each Party of the Monks privately, to recede from their Friend, and to Elect Stephen Langton; but they dreaded the King's Diſpleaſure, and would not come into it. However, when the Pope began to threaten them, and declared the former Elections void, they could not ſtand it any longer, but were at laſt terrified by him into the Choice of Stephen Langton; contrary to their Faith before given to the King to abide by the Election of Gray.

The Suffragan Biſhops alſo at Rome claimed their Right of Election, but the Pope would not regard it, but ſupported that of the Monks; and he declared the King's Licenſe to Elect, not to be neceſſary, ſince the Election was to be confirmed at Rome.

43. STEPHEN LANGTON,

WAS an Engliſhman of a good Family in Leiceſterſhire, but was Educated Abroad in the Univerſity of Paris, of which he was now Chancellor, and in great Favour with the French King, and a Cardinal.

After the Pope's forcing the Monks to Elect him Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his declaring him to be ſo, and his Confirming and Conſecrating him was known at the Engliſh Court, King John forbad Langton to come into the Kingdom; and the Biſhops ſtood by him, and adhered to the Election of the Biſhop of Norwich: Sending their Proctors to Rome, and complaining of any Election that the Monks ſhould make without their Concurrence, who by ancient Cuſtom had a Right to be joined with them, and had actually concurred with them in the Choice of Three Archbiſhops.

The Monks, on the other Hand, claimed their Right of Electing ſolely, without any Concurrence of the Biſhops; and thus the Matter hung at Rome for this Year 1206.

The next Year, King John being involved in Troubles and Difficulties at Home, by the Clergy's violent Oppoſition of a Tax that he had impoſed; the Pope thought he might venture to abide by Cardinal Langton's Election; but however he tried firſt the ſoft Way, and ſent over hither a Nuntio with a Preſent to the King of Four extraordinary Baubles; viz. Four Rings ſet with Stones, of as many different Colours, and which by his Letters to the King, he repreſented as having Wonderful and Myſterious Virtues; and therefore deſired him to admit of Langton for the Archbiſhop, who was an Engliſhman, and a Cardinal, and well skilled in all Kinds of Learning; but to the Chapter of Canterbury he ſent expreſs Orders to receive him, and to obey him.

The King was in a great Rage, and charged the Monks of Canterbury with Treaſon; and ſince they would adhere to the Pope and Langton, he ſent Officers to expel them the Convent; who executed the King's Commands violently, driving the poor Monks out with drawn Swords, and threatning to burn them, and the Monaſtery together, if they did not immediately quit the Houſe; which therefore they did, and fled over into Flanders, and were kindly received in the Abbey of St. Bertin, and in ſome other neighbouring Monaſteries.

The King alſo wrote to the Pope, complaining of the Injury done him, in obtruding thus an Archbiſhop upon him, who was bred up Abroad, and a Friend to his open Enemies; and declaring that he would not recede from the Election of the Biſhop of Norwich; and at laſt told him, that if he could not have a fair Satisfaction at Rome, he would ſhut up his Ports againſt all Foreign Prelates and Prieſts, and never ſeek hereafter for Judgment in the Roman Church. The Pope returned a ſoft Anſwer, and told him, that Two Monks had been deputed to obtain his Conſent to Langton's Election, but that they were detained at Dover, and ſo could not deliver their Meſſage: However he juſtified the Election of Langton as agreeable to the Canons of the Church.

And ſoon after this he wrote to Three Biſhops here, to argue and adjuſt this Affair with the King; and if he would not comply, to threaten the Kingdom with an Interdict. All this increaſed the King's Diſpleaſure, and particularly the Inſolence of Simon Langton, the Cardinal's Brother here, who adviſed the King to throw himſelf upon his Brother's Mercy, or elſe he could do nothing in his Behalf. So that the King declaring he would not comply, A. D. 1208, on March the 22d, the Biſhops of London, Ely, and Worceſter, put the whole Kingdom under an Interdict, which was a Prohibition of all Divine Service, except Confeſſion, Baptiſm, and the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt to Sick Perſons.

Upon this the King proceeded with the utmoſt Violence againſt the Clergy, requiring all Prelates, &c. to depart the Kingdom, confiſcating their Goods and Revenues, and even Impriſoning their very Concubines.

So that the Clergy of England were now under a ſad Dilemna, being ſuſpended if they diſobeyed the Pope, and deprived if they would not obey the King.

The Nation lay under this Interdict for above Three Years, to the great Hurt both of King and People; and the King himſelf alſo was now excommunicated. But at length he began to relent, and finding the Pope abſolutely inflexible, agreed to the peaceable Admiſſion of Langton, and to the Return of the proſcribed Biſhops and Clergy; for he found the Circumſtances of his Affairs ſo precarious, that he was forced not only to comply in this Point, but ſoon after in much greater, of which all our Hiſtories give a Melancholy Account.

After Langton's Arrival, which was in A. D. 1213, the King was Abſolved from his Excommunication, but the Interdict had not been yet taken off; and he took an Oath to defend and maintain Holy Church, and to make Satisfaction to all ſuch of the Clergy as had been deprived, &c. during the Time of the Interdict. But neither all this, nor his mean throwing himſelf at Langton's Feet, when he firſt met him, could ſecure Stephen long to his Intereſt. For he took the Part with thoſe Barons that deſerted the King at Portſmouth, in his deſigned Expedition for the Recovery of his Dominions Abroad, and threatned all thoſe with Church Cenſures, who ſhould aſſiſt him in puniſhing any of them.

And this Year, in Auguſt, Langton held a Synod, or Council, at London, to compoſe the Differences between the King and his Barons; and told them that he had found a Charter of King

King Henry the Iſt, by which, if they would, they might recover their Ancient Liberties, which had ſo long been loſt; and he was all along, after this, the ſecret Adviſer of the Barons in the War that they afterwards made upon the King, and by which they obtained Magna Charta, and their other Charter of the Foreſt, &c. This Charter, (which Matt. Paris hath preſerved a Copy of) being read, was gladly received, and ſworn to by all there preſent.

And there is another good Thing related of him, as done this Year:

Viz. When the poor King was forced by the Pope to confirm his former verbal Reſignation of his Crown to him, by an Inſtrument under his Hand, which was ſervilely executed in a great Aſſembly, in St. Paul's Cathedral at London: On this Occaſion, I ſay, Langton is reported to have ſtood up, and in the Name of all the Clergy and Laity of England, to have delivered in an Appeal or Proteſtation againſt it at the High Altar; and indeed he was the great Promoter of the Nation's Liberties.

But as Langton now thus openly and boldly oppoſed the Uſurpations of the Pope, his great Friend and Benefactor, ſo the Pope expreſſed his Reſentments of it; and immediately ordered his Legate here to fill up the vacant Benefices, without Langton's Conſent. On which Langton held a Synod at Dunſtable, of his Suffragan Biſhops; where he complained of this Indignity, and got Letters to be ſent to the Pope about it.

And ſoon after, for his ſiding with the Barons againſt the King, the Pope ſuſpended him, ſummoned him, and brought him to Rome, and enjoined all his Suffragans to withdraw their Obedience from him: Nay, he went ſo far, as to vacate the Election of Simon Langton, the Archbiſhop's Brother, into the See of York.

A. D. 1222, he called a Synod at Oxford, in order to reform ſome Matters in the Church. Conc. Brit. Tom. II. Page 181.

Here a young Fellow being convicted of counterfeiting the Five Wounds of, and pretending to be Jeſus Chriſt, was delivered over to the Secular Arm, condemned to be Crucified, and was executed accordingly: This Wretch had Two Wenches with him, who perſonated alſo the Two Maries.

A. D. 1226, Another was held by him at Weſtminſter under Otto, the Pope's Legate, where ſome Obventions being demanded from the Pope, the Synod demurred to the Payment, and complained of the Exactions and Avarice of that Court, and would not determine it as the Pope's Right, but left it as they found it. Matt. Paris.

To this Archbiſhop, and to his Succeſſors, King John gave the Patronage of the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter, as you may find by the Charter cited by Mr. Pryn, Page 24, where alſo is a Patent in theſe Words:

Rex Priori & Monachis Roffenſibus ac liberè Tenentibus de Epiſcopatu ſalutem: Sciatis quod Reddidimus venerabili Patri noſtro Domino, S. Cantuar. Epiſcopo, Patronatum Epiſcopatus Roffenſis, cum omnibus Pertinentijs tamquam jus ſuum; & ideo vobis mandamus quod ei tanquam Domino & Patrono ejuſdem Epiſcopatus ſitis in omnibus intendentes. In cujus Teſtimonium has Literas, &c.

A. D. 1226, Thirteen Friars-Minors, or Preachers, being ſent into England with Gilbert Fraxineto their Abbot, and Peter de Roch, Biſhop of Winton, waited on Archbiſhop Langton at Canterbury, and ſome of them preaching before him, pleaſed him ſo well, that he became a great Friend to their Order. And about Two Years after this, Nine more Friars came over and landed at Dover, Five of whom ſtaying at Canterbury, began the firſt Houſe of that Order there, the other Four came up to, and ſettled at London.

King Henry the IIId being at firſt Crowned haſtily by the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Bath, was afterwards, when the State of the Kingdom was ſettled and compoſed, Crowned again in a very Solemn Manner, by Stephen Langton at Weſtminſter, A. D. 1220.

In which Year alſo this Archbiſhop, at his own Charge, tranſlated Becket's Bones out of the Stone-Coffin, into a very Rich Shrine of Gold, and adorned with Jewels: And at this Scene of Sumptuous Superſtition, were preſent the King, and the Pope's Legate, and almoſt all the Nobility and Dignified Clergy in the Kingdom, with a vaſt Number of Foreigners, and numberleſs Crouds of the common People; and the ſplendid Feaſt that the Archbiſhop made on this Occaſion, was hardly ever exceeded by any Thing before or ſince.

A. D. 1223, he was ſent to the French Court, on the Death of King Philip, to demand the Reſtitution of Normandy, and the other Dominions formerly poſſeſſed by our Engliſh Kings in France; but he had no favourable Anſwer.

At his Return he joined with Hubert de Burgh, and others, in adviſing the King to reſume ſuch Lands of the Crown, as in the late unſettled Times were got into private Hands; which Advice contracted great Hatred and Animoſities againſt them both.

Stephen Langton made the Pope alſo his profeſs'd Enemy, by the Zeal he ſhewed in ſtanding up for the Liberties and Laws of his Country, againſt the Uſurpations and Encroachments of Rome, notwithſtanding he had been preferred by that Power and Intereſt only.

He died A. D. 1229, at his Manor Houſe of Slindon in Suſſex, and was buried in his own Cathedral, at the Eaſt End of St. Michael's Chapel.

Fuller ſaith, he wrote Commentaries on all the Books of the Old, and on ſome of the New Teſtament; and that he was the firſt who about A. D. 1210, divided the Bible into Chapters; as Robert Stephens did afterwards divide thoſe Chapters into Verſes.

Archbiſhop Parker ſaith, he wrote many Things elegantly, and judiciouſly; and in particular, the Hiſtory of the Reign of King Richard the Iſt.

Upon his Death there aroſe a new Conteſt between King Henry the IIId, and the Monks of Canterbury, about the Election of a Succeſſor. The Monks obtaining the King's Leave to Elect, choſe one Walter de Heveſham, or Hemeſham, a Monk, whom the King refuſed; and he gave the Archbiſhoprick to Richard, who was then Chancellor of Lincoln. On which, away poſts Hemeſham to Rome, in order to get Conſecration from the Pope; and the King hurries alſo his Proctors thither to oppoſe him, and to get his Nomination of Richard confirmed: Objecting alſo great Crimes againſt Walter, as that he was not only illiterate, but infamous in his Life and Converſation; that his Father was hanged for Theft; and that he had debauched a Nun, and got ſeveral Children by her.

Thus he made Way to get him put by, and have Richard's Election confirmed; which, ſome ſay, was not at laſt done, but upon the King's Proctor's promiſing the Pope a Grant of the Tenths of all the Moveables both in England

England and Ireland, to aſſiſt him in his Wars againſt the Emperor. But then his Holineſs vacated the poor Monk's Election, for his Inſufficiency; for undoubtedly Walter was not able to grant Tenths of the Goods of Kingdoms.

And the cautious Monks themſelves, in order to prevent the Pope's ſending a Bull of Proviſion, went to a new Election, and choſe Richard.

But Matt. Paris ſaith, that the Pope put him in by his own Power, which is in ſome Meaſure true, in the Senſe above explained.

44. RICHARD WETHERSIDE, uſually called the Great.

THIS Gentleman was Chancellor of Lincoln, and thence preferred to the Archbiſhoprick, A. D. 1229, being Conſecrated at Canterbury by Henry Biſhop of Rocheſter, without any Pall received from Rome. But he enjoyed this Dignity but a little while; for he loſt his Life on the Occaſion of a Quarrel between him and Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, about ſome Lands of the Earl of Glouceſter, which were Tunbridge-Caſtle, the Lowy of Tunbridge, (a) and the Appendant Manors. Theſe Lands the Archbiſhop claimed, as belonging to him in the Minority of the Earl of Glouceſter, whoſe Father died in his Homage. But Hubert de Burgo, the King's Juſticiary, had entred upon them, and got them into his Poſſeſſion. Richard, to make his Title good, travels to Rome, and appeals to the Pope, excommunicating all thoſe (except the King) who had any Hand in ſeizing upon thoſe Lands. The King ſent alſo his Proctors to Rome, to repreſent the Matter to the Pope, and to make out his juſt Claim to theſe Lands which he had given to Hubert, on the Account of the Infant Earl his being in his Wardſhip. But the Archbiſhop gained his Point in the Roman Court, the Pope giving Judgment for him. On which, with great Joy, haſtning Home, after Three Days Journey, he fell Sick at St. Gemma, and there died, and was buried in the Friars-Minors Monaſtery, A. D. 1234.

They repreſent him as a wiſe and learned Man, and of good Life, very graceful in his Perſon, and eloquent in his Speech, mild and good-natured in other Things, but highly tenacious of the Rights and Privileges of his See.

He wrote ſeveral Books, as de Fide & Legibus, de Sacramentis, de Univerſo Corporali & Spirituali, &c.

In a little Time after Richard's Conſecration, the Pope ſent over one Stephen, his Chaplain, to demand the Payment of the Tenths which were promiſed him, on his vacating Walter de Hemeſham's Election: The King, by Silence, ſeemed to be willing to conſent to the Performance of his Promiſe, but the Barons expreſly declared againſt it; while the Biſhops fearing the Pope's Diſpleaſure, ſubmitted to it. Stephen producing the Pope's Authority, went about all England, demanding and exacting this Tenth by his Officers in a very rigid Manner, to the great Diſtreſs and Scandal of the Nation; only the brave Earl of Cheſter kept the Publicans from coming into his Palatinate, and ſaved all his People from this Tax.

Richard held a Synod at Weſtminſter, where ſeveral very good Provincial Conſtitutions were made.

In his Time, and a while after his Death, moſt of the good Dignities, Prebends and Livings of the Church were poſſeſs'd by Italians; which was a Thing hateful to the Engliſh Nation, too apt (ſometimes without juſt Ground) to be rude to Strangers. But now this was thought by the King, and his great Miniſters, ſo great a Detriment to his Native Subjects, that they did underhand encourage the common People to inſult them, and even to beat and plunder them. So that the Italians were forced to hide themſelves in Churches, Monaſteries, &c. till they could find a convenient Opportunity to fly the Country, and make the beſt of their way Home. When the Pope complained of this, the King ſaid he knew nothing at all of it; but however, no Enquiry was made after the Perſons who committed theſe Outrages, nor any Puniſhment threatned or inflicted. But by the Abſence of theſe Popiſh Foreigners, who were all entirely in the Intereſt of the Roman Pontiff, and perpetually ſending the Wealth of the Nation Abroad, the Engliſh People recovered ſome Degree of Liberty, though they were not able entirely to ſhake off the Popiſh Yoke till ſome Hundreds of Years after.

After Richard's Death, the Monks of Canterbury being unwilling to incur the King's Diſpleaſure, elected Ralph Nevil, Biſhop of Chicheſter, and then Chancellor of England, a Perſon very highly favoured by his Majeſty. The King was very much pleaſed, at their preſenting Nevil to him, and immediately inveſted him with the Temporalities of the Archbiſhoprick. When the Pope heard of this, he asked Simon Langton, Brother to Archbiſhop Stephen Langton, who was then at Rome, what kind of Man Nevil was? Simon, either out of Hatred to the King, or perhaps hoping for the See himſelf, told him that he was a Man of no Character, either for his Learning or Morals, but a Cunning Intriguing Courtier, and who was the King's Principal Counſellor and Manager; and who, if he ſhould get into the Archiepiſcopal Chair, would perſuade the King to refuſe Payment of the Tribute agreed to by King John, and influence the whole Nation to throw off the Papal Yoke. The Pope remembred well that his Brother Stephen, when Archbiſhop, had endeavoured to ſtop the Payment of that Tribute, and had proteſted and appealed againſt it; and therefore was warmed by this Account of Simon's to that Degree, that without aſſigning any Reaſon or Cauſe at all, he entirely nulled the Election of Ralph, and gave the Monks a Licenſe and Order to chuſe another. Upon this they elected John their Sub-Prior; and in this Election the eaſy King concurred and approved of their Man. Accordingly he goes to Rome for the Pope's Confirmation, who not liking him, over-awed and influenced him ſo, that the poor old Man gave up his Election, left Rome, and trudged home again to England.

The Pope having thus Twice ſucceſsfully baulked the King's Deſigns, ſends now a Third Order to the Monks to elect a bold reſolute Man, who would ſtiffly defend the Rights of the Church, and govern his Province with Spirit and Authority. On this the Monks Elected one Blund, a Reſident in the Univerſity of Oxford, and whom the King approved of. But the Pope now grown more inſolent by Succeſs, vacates his Election alſo, upon ſlight ſlight Pretences of his having bribed the Monks, and of his holding Two Benefices with Cure of Souls, &c. and peremptorily ſends them an Order to Elect Edmund, Canon and Treaſurer of the Church of Sarum. They complied, and the Pope immediately ſent Edmund over his Pall. Though what his Reaſons were for pitching upon this Man, who was no Monk, nor eminent any way as to Zeal for the Papal Power, doth not appear.

But indeed he was an honeſt, good, and learned Man, and ſo agreeable to the King, that he eaſily obtained his Conſent to his Election: And it muſt needs much heighten his Character, that he was made Archbiſhop without his Knowledge, or any way applying for it.

45. EDMUND, uſually called St. Edmund.

HE was born at Abington in Berkſhire, and Educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, where ſtudying Theology, and entring into Orders, he became a very noted Preacher, and was much followed in Oxfordſhire, Glouceſterſhire, and Worceſterſhire. At length he was made Canon of Sarum, and Treaſurer of that Cathedral, and Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1234.

One of the firſt Things he did after his Promotion, was honeſtly and boldly to perſuade the King to remove from his Council the Biſhop of Winton, and Peter de Rivallis, who had adviſed him to introduce vaſt Numbers of Poictovins, and other Strangers, into Places of Truſt and Profit, to the great Injury and Exaſperation of his own Native Subjects. With this good Counſel the King complied, confining the former to his Dioceſe, and baniſhing the latter.

And not long after, this Archbiſhop was ſucceſsfully employed in making Peace between the King and the Welſh, and ſuch of his Barons as had ſided with them.

And indeed he was in the main a true Lover of his King and Country; but an Accident ſoon after happened, in which his Zeal for the Superſtitious Canons of the Church carried him beyond his Prudence, and unfortunately brought upon him the Hatred of his Sovereign: Which was his ſo violently oppoſing the Marriage of Simon Montfort, Earl of Leiceſter, with the Widow of William Marſhal, Earl of Glouceſter, and Siſter to the King: becauſe after her Husband's Death, ſhe had entred into a Vow of Religion. For the King did not only obtain a Diſpenſation from the Pope to make good this Marriage, but out of Spite to Edmund alſo, he deſired the Pope to ſend over hither a Legate of Spirit, and one endowed with ſufficient Power to oppoſe and leſſen the Power of the Archbiſhop. Cardinal Otto was ſent hither for this Purpoſe, whom the King ſupported and favoured, though he oppreſſed his People with intolerable Exactions, and (a) filled all the vacant Benefices with Italians, and other Foreigners, and the Kingdom with a rapacious Brood of Proctors and Tax-gatherers for the Pope; and all that the poor Archbiſhop got for complaining of theſe Oppreſſions, was Contempt and Ridicule.

After theſe Troubles from the Court, he naturally met with others from all Hands; the Monks of his Cathedral quarrelled with him for conſecrating Biſhops any where but at Canterbury: The Monks of Rocheſter Cathedral alſo and he had a great Diſpute about the Election of a Biſhop for that See. They preſented to him one Richard de Wendover, whom the Archbiſhop would not admit of, becauſe he knew him to be a weak and unlearned Man. On this the old Trade went on, the Monks appealed to Rome, and the Archbiſhop poſted thither in Perſon; but he had better have ſtaid at Home, and acquieſced at firſt, for Otto, the Legate, outwitted and defeated him, and after a tedious and expenſive Suit, poor Edmund was caſt, and forced to return home with Vexation and Diſgrace.

In his Abſence, the Monks of Chriſt-Church had choſen a Prior, whithout his Conſent; for which, when Edmund excommunicated them, the Legate releaſed and abſolved them. However, Edmund went on, and Interdicted their Church, and at laſt Otto went thither in Perſon, heard the Cauſe, and finding the Monks guilty of Forgery, turned out their Prior, and puniſhed them with Severity.

He had alſo a little ſeeming Succeſs in a Complaint he made to the Pope, about the King's keeping vacant Benefices for a long Time in his Hands; and for a great Sum of Money which he paid at Rome, he obtained an Order that he might fill up ſuch Vacancies as the King ſhould omit to preſent Perſons to, for above Six Months Time. But as ſoon as the King perceived this, he bribed the Pope ſo, that he revoked his own Order, and defeated all the good Intentions of the Archbiſhop.

Tired therefore, and teazed almoſt to Death with theſe continual Troubles, he retired from his See to the Abbey of Pontigniac in France, and there in a little Time broke his Heart, and waſted himſelf to a Skeleton with Grief, died A. D. 1242, and was buried in the Church belonging to the ſaid Abbey.

About Six Years after his Death, this Man whom one Pope helped to kill, another, viz. Innocent the IVth, Sainted; and Lewis King of France removed his Body into a Rich and Sumptuous Shrine.

There was an Altar Erected to him in our Church of Rocheſter, as appears by a Charter of Donation to it, which I have ſeen.

Dr. Cave makes this Archbiſhop to have been one of the Tutors of the famous Roger Bacon, at Oxford. And Leland ſaith, that Bacon wrote the Life of this Edmund; but the Author of the Antiq. Oxon ſaith, 'tis a Miſtrke in the Name, the Perſon they mean being one Robert Bacon.

(a) The Revenues ariſing from Benefices given by the Pope to his Italians out of England at this Time, was found to be above Sixty Thouſand Marks per Annum, which exceeded the King's Revenue in all its Branches; and in the Year 1253, it appeared that the Foreign Eccleſiaſticks had above Seventy Thouſand Pounds per Annum here, when the Crown Revenue was ſcarce a Third Part of it.

46. BONIFACE.

THIS Gentleman was Son to Peter Duke of Savoy, and Uncle to Queen Eleanor, but had little elſe to recommend him; however, the Monks of Canterbury, at the King's Nomination of him, who was deſirous by it to oblige his Queen, unanimouſly elected him.

The King on this, by Perſuaſions and Threatnings, got the Hands and Seals of all the Biſhops and Abbots, to recommend him to the Pope; to whom Boniface went, and got his Conſecration from him at Lyons, A. D. 1244. But ſome of the Monks were ſo ſorry that they had conſented to his Election, that they left the Convent, and turned Carthuſians, vowing perpetual Penitence. Juſt after this Conſecration, his Brother Peter, Duke of Savoy, came over hither, and built that once Noble Palace in the Strand, which ſtill bears his Name, and is called the Savoy.

A. D. 1245, he went to Rome, aſſigning for a Reaſon, that his Church had contracted a Debt of Fifteen Thouſand Marks, by the expenſive Tranſlation of Becket's Body into the Shrine built by Langton, and by the Careleſneſs and Litigiouſneſs of ſome of his Predeceſſors: Which he could not poſſibly pay without conſulting the Pope. But before he went off, he cut down the Woods, let long Leaſes, and by all the ways he could poſſible, raiſed a large Sum of Money here, which he carried Abroad along with him, and ſpent it in raiſing Soldiers to defend and maintain the Quarrels of his own Family. When he came to the Pope, partly by good Words, but chiefly by Bribes, he obtained of him the Grant of the Biſhoprick of Valentia in Provence, and ſome other profitable Benefices, to hold them in Commendam with his Archbiſhoprick. And after this he managed the Pope ſo, that he got a Bull to receive the Profits for Seven Years, of all the vacant Benefices within his Province. The King at firſt oppoſed this Grant, but was at laſt brought to conſent to it: However, he forbid, all over England, the paying any more Money to the Pope's Officers, and ordered thoſe who came on ſuch an Errand to be Impriſoned.

And in a Parliament held ſoon after at London, the King getting rid of that Dread of the Pope which had ſo long poſſeſs'd him, complained to the Peers, Biſhops, and Commons, of theſe Papal Uſurpations and Exactions, and (a) of the Donation of almoſt all Eccleſiaſtick Benefices to Foreigners. And ſevere Letters were written to Rome by the King, his Barons, Biſhops, and Abbots, on this Occaſion; to which the Pope thought it proper to return no Anſwer, but with his uſual Artifices, to proceed in a ſoft and ſecret Way, when open Violence and Swaggering would not be born here.

A. D. 1250, Boniface returned Home; and as though he had not Pillaged the People enough before, now reſolves upon an entire Viſitation of his Province, and begins firſt with his Church and Dioceſe of Canterbury; where he plagued the Monks ſo, that they had a freſh Occaſion to repent that ever they choſe a Foreigner and a Soldier for their Archbiſhop.

When he came to London, he took up his Lodgings in the Biſhop of Chicheſter's fine Houſe, and made the Londoners ſend him in Proviſions. He quarrelled with, and abuſed the Biſhop of London by foul Language; and finding that the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls had appealed to Rome againſt his Viſitation, he excommunicated them all.

Next he went to the Priory of St. Bartholomew, where he was received by the Sub-Prior and Convent with great Pomp in their Habits; but he look'd ſtern and big, and ſaid, he came to Viſit them. Upon which one anſwered, with a loud Voice, That they had a very Learned and Vigilant Biſhop, who would viſit them when there was Occaſion, but they ought not, nor would be viſited by any one elſe. This ſo provoked this bluſtering Prelate, that he flew upon the poor old and decrepit Sub-Prior, who ſtood next to him, knock'd him down with his Fiſt, and then kick'd him and trampled upon him; tore his fine Cope and rich Veſtments, which became Plunder to the Crew he carried with him. And in this Struggle the Archbiſhop happening to fall backwards, diſcovered that he had Armour, a Coat of Mail on, under his apparently Sacred and Spiritual Habit. The Biſhop of London being informed of this, adviſed his Canons to go and make Complaint to the King, and to relate the whole Matter to him; they attempted to do ſo, but could not get Acceſſion to the King, the Queen having prepoſſeſſed him in Favour of Boniface. But the Citizens of London in the mean Time got to Arms, and had certainly torn the Savoyard to Pieces, if they had not been appeaſed and ſtopp'd by the King's Proclamation, and with much ado he ſlipp'd down to the Thames Side, and got to Lambeth in a Wherry. From whence he ſoon thundered out his Excommunications againſt all that oppoſed him, and they, as ſoon as they could, appealed to the Pope againſt him, ſending to Rome the Dean of St. Pauls on that Errand. Boniface follows him thither, and entred Rome with great Pomp and Splendor; he carried with him Letters from the King and Queen to the Pope in his Behalf, and believed at firſt, that by that Means, by his high Birth, and more eſpecially by his deep Purſe, he ſhould gain all his Points at Rome; but he was in ſome Meaſure miſtaken, for the Pope trimmed, and took Money on both Sides, and at laſt he found it neceſſary to make an End of this Quarrel by Compoſition.

After his Return to England, on ſome ſlight Occaſion, he excommunicates the Dean and Canons of St. Pauls a Second Time; which ſo alarmed the whole Clergy, that they agreed on a Meeting at Dunſtable, and there raiſed a Sum of Four Thouſand Marks, to carry on a Suit at Rome againſt the Inſults of this peeviſh and malicious Archbiſhop.

The Pope, in his great Goodneſs accepted of their Money, and gave them an Equivalent in very fair Promiſes; as he did the Archbiſhop alſo, for the like Sum given him, to determine the Cauſe for him. And the cunning Pope carried his Diſh ſo even, as to pleaſe both Parties tolerably well; for though he did not Inhibit the Archbiſhop from going on with his Viſitation, yet he ſo bridled him, that it was likely to become moderate enough, and tolerable; and ſo it proved for a while; for though Boniface at his Return went on with his Viſitation, yet at firſt he proceeded with Temper and Mildneſs. But he could not hold it ſo long, before his Pride and Ill-nature began to ſhew themſelves.

The next Place that he had a Quarrel with, was the Chapter of Lincoln, where he challenged the Donation of all their Prebends and Benefices. The Archdeacon, William Lupus, undertook the Defence of the Churches Right; but Boniface ſo worried him with Excommunications, &c. that the poor Man was forced to run away and hide himſelf at Rome: There his Caſe moved Compaſſion, the Pope protected him, and at laſt gave Judgment for him; but he was ſo waſted with Care and Travel, that he could not hold it any longer, but died in his Travels home to England.

While he was thus buſy in carrying on the Plagues of his Viſitation, his own Monks of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury obtained from the Pope a Charter of Exemption and Immunity from being viſited by the Archbiſhop. But when this was brought to him at St. Albans, he ſo little valued the Pope's Bull, that he threw it into the Fire, and burnt it to Aſhes, excommunicating alſo thoſe who brought it. This was complained of both to the King and the Pope, but without any Redreſs from either.

At laſt this, which was called by his Clergy the troubleſome Viſitation, had an End; and then away goes Boniface with the great Sum of Money he had amaſſed by it, over into Foreign Parts, and raiſes an Army by it to deliver his Brother out of Captivity, who had been taken Priſoner by the Citizens of Taurinum; but though he had alſo other Helps and Aſſiſtances, this Expedition proved unſucceſsful, and he was forced to return to England with Loſs and Diſgrace.

Soon after his Return, the Biſhop of Rocheſter appealed againſt him to the Pope, for invading ſome of his Rights and Liberties, but without any Succeſs; for his own Birth, and the King's Favour, ſecured him at Rome againſt any Complaint at that Time, let it be never ſo juſt.

A. D. 1265, about this Time, a War being likely to break out between the King and the Barons, about the Laws and Liberties of England, which the Pope had ſecretly abſolved the King from obſerving, though he had bound himſelf by the moſt Solemn Oaths ſo to do: Boniface leaving one Hugh Mortimer to collect the Revenues of his Province and See for him, left the Kingdom, and went over into Savoy; whence, after a Stay of Four Years, he returned; but was firſt of all forced to promiſe the Barons that he would behave himſelf quietly and peaceably in his Province, and not raiſe any ſuch Diſturbances and Buſtles as he had formerly done. The King alſo joined in this Deſign, and interpoſed to make up all the Eccleſiaſtical Differences between the Archbiſhop and his Suffragans, and the Abbots and Priors of Convents. The Church of Rocheſter compounded with him for all Feudal Services, &c. (a) for the Annual Sum of Ten Marks.

And though formerly proud, turbulent, and cruel in his Temper and Behaviour, he now towards the end of his Life grew more moderate, and did ſome very good Things; for he cleared his Church entirely from the great Debts (above-mentioned) which it laboured under; he finiſhed that noble, large, and ſumptuous Hall, in the Palace at Canterbury, which his Prededeſſor Hubert had begun, and built a very fine Hoſpital at Maidſtone, called the New-work, which was afterwards turned into a College of Secular Prieſts by Archbiſhop Courtney.

A. D. 1266, he held a Provincial Synod at London, by the Pope's Command, where the Legates, Otto and Ottoboni, were both preſent.

Some Time after this, he, with his Suffragan Biſhops, waited on the King, and complained to him, that Foreigners had got Poſſeſſion of moſt of the Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and therefore deſired him to prefer Engliſhmen, among whom there was Choice enough, for both Learning and Piety. I will do it willingly, ſaid the King, and think it very proper, in the firſt Place, that your ſelf, who are both a Stranger, and Unlearned, and my Brother Athelmar, Biſhop of Winton, who have no Merit at all but your Relation to me, ſhould reſign your Biſhopricks, and get home to your own Countries, and then I'll promiſe you to ſupply your Places with Good and Able Men. This Anſwer of the King ſo ſhocked Boniface, that he grew uneaſy here; and perceiving himſelf to be diſagreeable to the King, and diſtaſtful to his Biſhops and Clergy, he gathered up all the Money he could, and ſo loaded with Pelf and Curſes, retired into Savoy. And A. D. 1270, died in the Caſtle of St. Helena. (a)

He made ſeveral Conſtitutions, in which the Immunities of the Church were carried very high; againſt which my Lord Coke thinks thoſe Anſwers to the Articles of the Clergy, which he found in a Fragment of an Old Parliament Roll, were levelled; but it doth not appear that thoſe Anſwers were ever confirmed by Parliament, as ſeveral others were to the Articles of the Clergy in the Ninth of King Edward the IId, &c.

On his Death, Wilhelmus de Chillenden, Sub-Prior of Chriſt-Church, was with the King's Licenſe Elected Archbiſhop by the Monks. But the Pope excepted many Things againſt him, as to his Learning and Sufficiency, and at laſt forced him to quit his Election: And then ex Plenitudine Poteſtatis ſuæ, he placed Robert Killwardby in his Room; and then the Monks, to keep up a Shew of their Right, elected him likewiſe. The King and his Council making a publick Proteſtation againſt this Act of the Papal Power.

47. ROBERT KILLWARDBY.

THIS Man was born in England, and Educated at Paris, and is ſaid to have been a Man of Letters; he was a Franciſcan Fryar, and Provincial of the Order. He was Conſecrated at Canterbury by William Biſhop of Bath, and Twelve other Suffragan Biſhops, A. D. 1272.

Soon after this, the Prior of Canterbury demanded of him Three Thouſand Marks, which he pretended were ſpent in promoting Chillenden's Election, and which the Pope had appointed the next Archbiſhop of Canterbury to pay. Robert demurred a little to this, and began to enquire into the Morals and Behaviour of the Prior, in order to find Cauſe to remove him; upon which the cautious Prior prevailed with his Monks to remit One Thouſand Three Hundred Marks of the Sum demanded, and then the Archbiſhop paid the reſt, and enquired no further.

A. D. 1275, upon the Arrival of King Edward the Iſt, and his Queen Eleanor, he Crowned them both with great Solemnity at Weſtminſter.

A. D. 1276. And ſoon after this he revived the neglected and almoſt obſolete Statutes made by his Predeceſſors, for regulating his Court of the Arches, reducing them to Five Eminent Articles.

(a) That Year that Boniface died, there was ſuch terrible ſtormy, and exceſſive Rainy Weather, with Thunder and Lightning, about Canterbury, that the whole Country was drowned, the Cattle waſhed out of the Fields, and the Trees blown or waſhed down, and carried into the Roads and Highways, ſo that the like was never heard of before. Antiq. Britan. Page 188.

The next Year he held a Synod at London, whither the Archbiſhop of York was Summoned; and here Llewellin Prince of Wales was Excommunicated for refuſing to obey the King's Commands. On this, Llewellin preparing for War, and King Edward raiſing Forces to reduce him, he demanded Twelve Knights, or Men at Arms, of the City of Canterbury. The Citizens demanded of the Monks of Chriſt-Church to bear a proper Part of this Expence; which they abſolutely refuſing, ſo enraged the Citizens, that they beſieged them in their Convent, and probably had uſed them very ill, had not Robert by his prudent and mild Management interpoſed, and produced a Reconciliation.

A. D. 1278. The next Year Robert viſited his Province, and both the Univerſities; and in the Schools at Oxford, he diſputed learnedly and well againſt ſome idle Notions and Opinions, which were then vulgarly received, and which his Succeſſor, John Peckham, got afterwards to be condemned in a Synod.

Towards the latter End of his Time, he made a Collection for building the Monaſtery in London, called the Black-Friars; and obtained ſuch large Sums, that he finiſhed the Work well, and yet put a good Sum into his own Pocket beſides. But in this he had the Advantage of the Stones of an old Tower which formerly ſtood hard by, and now was gone to Ruins. This Tower, or Caſtle, was burnt down, with the whole City almoſt, A. D. 1080.

This Archbiſhop ſolemnly excommunicated all the Violaters of the old Charters of the Laws and Liberties of England, which were confirmed by King Edward the Iſt. But the Year after, Pope Clement the Vth revoked this by a ſpecial Bull, which produced no ſmall Stir among our Barons, and was the Occaſion of a further Confirmation of them not long after; wherein alſo, ſome new Articles were added, expreſſing what Puniſhment the Infringers of them ſhould have; theſe were called the Articuli ſuper Cartas, and were made in the 28th of King Edward the Iſt.

It appears by ſeveral old Deeds, that he continued Archbiſhop in the Year 1278, and therefore Mr. Battely miſtakes in ſaying, he reſigned A. D. 1277.

But ſome Time in the Year 1278, he was ſent for to Rome by Pope Nicholas the IIId, and made Cardinal of Hoſtia, and Biſhop of Portua; whereupon reſigning his Archbiſhoprick, he went over into Italy, and there fell Sick, and died in a few Months after.

He never had any Pall from Rome.

He wrote ſeveral Tracts which are not publiſhed, but remain in Manuſcript in the Libraries of Bennet-College and Peterhouſe in Cambridge, as alſo in Baliol-College in Oxon; a Catalogue of which you may find in Dr. Cave's Hiſt. Literar. in Anno 1272.

After his Reſignation, the Monks of Canterbury elected Robert Burnel, Biſhop of Bath, to ſucceed him, but the Pope would not hear of any ſuch Thing; and without conſulting either them or the Suffragan Biſhops, by the Plenitude of his own Power, Appointed and Conſecrated John Peckham, another Friar-Minor, to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

For now this new Order of Friars was grown into ſuch Requeſt, that the poor Monks were every-where contemned as a Company of uſeleſs and inſignificant Fellows.

48. JOHN PECKHAM.

HE was born in Suſſex, of obſcure Parents, and had his firſt Education in the Monaſtery of Lewes; thence going to Oxford, he got into the now faſhionable Order of Friars-Minors, and as his Predeceſſor Robert had been, became Provincial of that Order. After this he went a while and ſtudied Theology at Paris, and being made Canon of Lyons, he went and lived there. And after him, it became cuſtomary for the Archbiſhops of Canterbury to be Canons of Lyons, as long as till King Henry the Vth's Reign. At Lyons he ſtudied the Canon and Pontifical Law; and to perfect himſelf in that then neceſſary Learning, he travelled to the Univerſities of Italy, and to the Roman Court, where he practiſed, and was made by the Pope Auditor of his Palace. And from hence he was on Kilwardby's Reſignation, made Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the ſole Papal Power, A. D. 1279.

This Friar John, as well as Friar Robert, his Predeceſſor, own'd himſelf entirely the Pope's Creature, calling that Uſurper his Lord and Creator, who indeed treated him accordingly; for immediately on his Admiſſion to the See of Canterbury, he demanded Four Thouſand Marks of him, under pain of Excommunication if he refuſed it. Poor John wrote to the Pope to get his Payment off, and repreſented his own and his Churches Poverty in the moſt moving Terms he could, but it availed nothing; all he could get, was only a Years Time to pay the Money in.

In his firſt Year he held a Council at Reading in Berks, where ſome Regulations were made in the Religious Houſes. (a)

A. D. 1280, he held a Council at Lambeth, where, ſaith Archbiſhop Parker, inſtead of enjoining the Preaching of the Goſpel, he moſt ſtrictly enjoined the Pope's Decrees made in the Council of Lyons, and the Injunctions of the Legates Otto and Ottoboni, to be obſerved; and as if this was not Burden enough, he Enacted Sixteen new Eccleſiaſtical Laws; and though the King forbad theſe Things, he would inſiſt upon them.

While theſe glorious Things were a doing, the Archbiſhop of York coming to the King, and being forced to travel through part of the Province of Friar John, was ſo inſolent as to let, or order his Croſs to be there born erect before him: This had often been deemed a terrible Indignity and Vexation to the good Archbiſhops of Canterbury; and did now ſo Anger our Friar, who had been bred up to renounce the World, that he immediately, under pain of Excommunication, forbid all Perſons throughout all his Province, to deny even Meat and Drink, and all Neceſſaries of Life, to the Archbiſhop of York, and his Attendants, as long as he ſhould preſume to have his Croſs born up in that ſaucy Manner: And by this he gained his Point: For the Yorkiſts having been uſed to Eat and Drink well, choſe rather to feed with their Croſs down, than ſtarve with it Erect.

But the Abbot of St. Auſtins in Canterbury, was in ſome Meaſure even with him; for pretending an Exemption from his Juriſdiction, he would

would not let Peckham, bear up his Croſs within his Abbey.

In this Council alſo, thoſe Abbots, who, pretending Exemption, refuſed to come to the Synod, were ſuſpended and excommunicated; as Weſtminſter, St. Albans, St. Edmundsbury, and Waltham; and though they pretended to appeal to the Pope, yet were forced to ſubmit.

The Council over, he viſited his Province in Perſon, and receiving ſome Provincial Benevolence, was much more mild and moderate than was expected.

A. D. 1284, he went alſo to Lewellin Prince of Wales, and endeavoured to perſuade him to make his Peace with, and ſubmit to King Edward: But when he found he could not prevail, he returned to England, and Excommunicated him and his Adherents.

In the next Parliament the King demanded a Tenth from the Clergy; but the Archbiſhop got it poſtponed, by moving for a Confirmation of the old Eccleſiaſtical Immunities mentioned in the Laws of King Cnute, and King Edward the Confeſſor, &c.

In another Synod now held, he puniſhed and remedied many Diſorders of the Clergy, as Non-Reſidence, &c. and was very ſevere on ſuch, as contrary to the Canons, held more than one Benefice with Cure of Souls. He exerciſed alſo great Severities upon the Jews, pulling down all their Synagogues within his Province, and hardly permitting at the King's Requeſt, that they ſhould be allowed one only in London.

He was alſo very ſevere in inflicting the Cenſures of the Church againſt Adulterers and Fornicators; and one Sir Walter Gifford, who had debauched Two Nuns, he Excommunicated, and would not take off that (then dreadful) Sentence, till Gifford had agreed to be ſtripped and whipped Three ſeveral Sundays, in the Pariſh-Church where the Nunnery ſtood, and in the Pariſh-Church, and Market-Place of Shaftsbury; not to wear the Habit, nor take the Title of a Knight upon him, nor to wear a Shirt for Three Years; which Term alſo he was to ſpend in the Holy War.

A. D. 1282, he built a College at Wingham in Kent, of which I ſhall ſpeak fully in another Place.

A. D. 1290, he held a Council at Reading, where he would have drawn all Cauſes about Advowſons, &c. into the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, but the King expreſly forbad it.

This Council ſeems to have been the firſt Synod, where our Clergy had Proctors to repreſent them, diſtinct from the Archdeacons.

Though Things ſeemed to run hard upon him at firſt, as his Houſes and Caſtles being all out of Repair, which coſt him Two Thouſand Marks; the King taking his Firſt Year's Profits; the Pope demanding, as was ſaid above, Four Thouſand Marks, and his Inthronization Charges coming to Two Thouſand Marks more, yet he died very Rich, A. D. 1292, at Mortlock, and raiſed good Eſtates for his Relations.

He was buried in his own Cathedral of Canterbury, in that Part which is called the Martyrdom, on the North Side; where ſtill remains a Monument of him with his Effigies in Wood.

He wrote ſeveral Books; as,

Collectanea Bibliorum, Printed at Paris 1514, and at Cologn 1541.

Conſtitutiones Forty Seven, which are Printed in Lyndwood's Provinciale.

Perſpectiva Communis cum Figuris, Publiſhed by John Gauricus.

And ſome Things of his remain yet in Manuſcript, an Account of which you may find in Cave's Hiſt. Liter. Vol. I. Page 740.

The Pope ſent this Archbiſhop a Bull, (which you may ſee at Large in Fox's Acts and Monuments, Page 30, and which ſome ſay had been ſent before to Boniface, when he was Archbiſhop,) to exempt the Clergy from the Payment of any Tax laid upon them by the State, or any Lay Prince. But he had not Courage enough to produce it: And when Winchelſea attempted to animate the Clergy to inſiſt upon it afterwards, it availed nothing againſt a Prince of the Spirit of King Edward the Iſt.

The Archbiſhop of Litchfield being Ill and Weak, (a) Peckham required him by a particular Inſtrument to provide himſelf of a Suffragan, whoſe Duty there appears to have been, circumeare Prædicare, Eccleſias dedicare, Virgines conſecrare, Ordines celebrare, Parvulos confirmare, & alia exequi quæ ad Officium Epiſcopale requiruntur.

So that this Suffragan ſeems to have been of the ſame Nature with the Ancient Chorepiſcopi, or Biſhops in the Country, and were ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from the Proper Biſhops of the City, or See. In the 26th of King Henry the VIIIth, Cap. 24. is an Act for the Nomination and Conſecration of Suffragan Biſhops.

By another Inſtrument, Peckham alſo appointed Three Coadjutors to the Biſhoprick of London, giving them Power to Collate to Benefices, to inſtitute Clerks, to grant Diſpenſations, &c. and yet none of theſe were Biſhops. But ſuch alſo were of Ancient Standing in the Chriſtian Church, and about their Appointment there are many Rules in the Canon-Law; though with us their Power did not extend to conferring of Orders, but only to the Diſcharge of voluntary Juriſdiction, in Caſe of the Infirmity or Inability of the Biſhops.

49. ROBERT WINCHELSEA.

ALL we find of this Man in his Youth is, that he was put to School at Canterbury, thence (as ſome ſay) went to Merton-College in Oxon, and from thence to the Univerſity of Paris, of which he was made a Rector.

At his Return Home, he commenced Doctor at, and was made Chancellor of Oxford, and afterwards Prebendary of St. Pauls in London, and Archdeacon of Eſſex.

When he had theſe Preferments, he behaved himſelf very well in them, preaching conſtantly at St. Pauls, and viſiting his Archdeaconry every Year.

And grew ſo eminent for his Learning and good Manners, that he was taken Notice of at Court, and came into this High Station with the general Approbation of all Men.

He was freely Elected Archbiſhop by the Monks of Chriſt-Church, neither the King, nor the Pope, nor the Suffragan Biſhops interpoſing, A. D. 1292.

When he went to Rome for his Conſecration and Pall, he was much celebrated there, as he had been here, and in other Places, for his excellent Learning, fine Parts, good

Preach-

Preaching, and gentle Deportment. So that he might have been made a Cardinal, if he would have ſtaid there; but as ſoon as ever his Buſineſs was over, he haſted home to England.

As ſoon as he was Conſecrated, he got a Bull from the Pope to give the Biſhoprick of Landaff to whom he pleaſed; and in Purſuance thereof, without the King's Authority, he did give it to John de Monmouth; which made the King detain the Temporalties of the Biſhoprick in his Hands for near Two Years.

While he was at Rome, the King wanting Money to carry on his War againſt France, demanded a Moiety of the Goods both Spiritual and Temporal, of the Clergy. This great Exaction Planet-ſtruck the Prelates, but the King purſued his Demand, and made them comply with it; which was afterwards the Cauſe of great Diſſentions between him and his Clergy, and eſpecially between him and this Archbiſhop.

When he came home he went to the King, and paid his Homage to him in Wales, where he was then reducing a Rebellion that happened there, and Robert excommunicated Madoc Llewellin, the principal Author of it.

He came to London with the King in great Favour; but ſoon after calling a Synod, the Prelates made ſad Complaints of the late Exactions of the Crown, and of their being ſo over-awed by the King's Power, that they were forced to comply with them. And he revived, and got paſſed into a Decree, the Injunction of the Pope, which I mentioned before, That the Clergy ſhould not be Taxed by any Secular Power, without the Pope's Conſent.

Some Time after this, King Edward wanted Money again for his French and Scottiſh Wars, and demanded a Supply of his People. The Laity eaſily complied, but the Eccleſiaſticks hung back, made great Delays, and at laſt offered only a Tenth, which the King refuſed at firſt to accept. Robert, and his Clergy, adhered to their Offer, and deſired the King to be ſatisfied with it, and at laſt he acquieſced.

After his Return from Abroad, which the Invaſion of the Scots occaſioned: and after that he had obtained Victory over them, the King called a Parliament at Berwick, and there demanded new Supplies to defray the Expences of theſe Wars. The Clergy now abſolutely refuſed to be Taxed any Thing at all, inſiſting on the Pope's Order, which I lately mentioned; and the Archbiſhop had got a new Order from Pope Boniface, to inforce the former Decree. The King adjourns the Parliament to London, and there renews his Demand upon the Clergy, and receiving no Satisfaction, locks up all their Barns, ſeizes upon their Corn, &c. On this the Archbiſhop openly enforced the Pope's Decrees, and threatned Excommunication to all the King's Officers that ſhould ſeize upon the Clergy's Goods. The King ſent ſome proper Perſons to reaſon the Matter with the Convocation; but the Archbiſhop adhered and ſaid, it was his Duty to obey his Spiritual Lord the Pope, before his Temporal one, the King; but if the Pope would give Leave, he ſaid, they would then comply with the King's Demands.

This exaſperated that ſturdy Prince ſo, that he aſſembled a Parliament without the Clergy at Salisbury, and put them all out of his Protection; which terrified them ſo, that they contrived a Way, by taking Letters of Protection from the King, to oblige the King, and yet to avoid the Pope's Diſpleaſure too; (a) but Robert would not recede an Inch from his Opinion, and therefore the King ſeized upon his Goods for his Contumacy. The Clergy got Friends to make their Peace with the King, and offered him at laſt a Fifth, or even a Fourth Part of their Moveables; which being accepted, the King finding himſelf engaged in a Foreign War, releaſed the Archbiſhop's Goods, and received him into Favour.

The Barons laid hold of this Opportunity to influence the King to confirm the old Charters of Liberties, which with Reluctance he conſented to. In his Abſence the Scots invaded the Northern Parts, and the Clergy readily gave a Tenth towards the Charge of reducing them; which when the King underſtood, he was very angry that they would conſent to be Taxed ſo eaſily in his Abſence, when they had denied him almoſt every Thing he asked of them, when here.

A. D. 1300, a Peace being concluded with France, Robert Winchelſea married King Edward to Margaret, the French King's Siſter, at Canterbury, and the Nuptials were celebrated with great Magnificence.

The Year after, the Pope having quarrelled with the King of France, and preparing to defend himſelf againſt him, asked a Tenth for Three Years, of all the Engliſh Clergy's Goods, which the Prelates readily came into, though they made ſuch Difficulties of affording their Lawful Sovereign any neceſſary Supply.

A. D. 1305. The King having made an End of his Wars in Scotland, began to puniſh ſome great Men whom he charged to have been in a Conſpiracy againſt him when he was in Flanders; and particularly, he charged this Archbiſhop with High-Treaſon, and of a Deſign to depoſe him, and to ſet up his Son in his Stead. Robert did not deny the Crime, but threw himſelf at the King's (b) Feet, and with Floods of Tears begg'd his Mercy; and now called him his Sovereign Lord, and gave him ſuch Titles as he had never done before, and even at laſt begg'd the King's Bleſſing. The King told him, that though he had well deſerved it, yet he would take no Perſonal Revenge upon, but would leave him to the Juſtice of thoſe of his own Order; and accordingly baniſhed him, and preferred a Complaint againſt him in the Pope's Court, whither Robert was cited, and forced to go in Perſon, and was ſuſpended by the Pope, till he could clear himſelf of the Crimes charged upon him by the King, which Suſpenſion held Two Years.

When he parted with the King, as above, he retired, and lay hid in the Priory of Canterbury, (or in ſome of their Tenants Houſes, for he was a while at Chartham, as appears by the Annals of St. Auſtin's-Abbey,) no one elſe daring to harbour or ſupport him. But this coſt the Monks very dear, for as ſoon as ever the King heard of it, he proſcribed them alſo, as he had done Robert, and by Proclamation forbad all Perſons to ſupply them with Neceſſaries; ſo that about Eighty of theſe poor Fellows were expelled the College, and forced to beg their Bread as they could get it, the King ſeizing upon all their Revenues. But after he heard that Winchelſea was gone beyond the Seas, he reſtored the Monaſtery again to its Rights and Privileges.

Some

Some Time after this, the Biſhop of Winton preſuming to intercede with the King on the Behalf of his Lord the Archbiſhop, as he called him; the King was in a great Rage, and told him he thought he had been his Lord, and not that Traytor; and therefore confiſcated his Goods, and put him out of his Protection. But this valiant King died while Winchelſea was in Exile; and his Son, King Edward the IId, having a mind to be Crowned by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and not to have him tried in a Foreign Court, ſent for him Home, and reſtored him to his See. But being indiſpoſed and weak, he could not make Haſte enough Home to perform the Coronation Solemnity, and therefore by an Inſtrument named Three Biſhops to ſupply his Place; of whom Wincheſter being one, the King choſe him to do the Office. But the Archbiſhop of York wiſely refuſing to come at all, unleſs he could have his Croſs born before him, was prohibited to appear at the Solemnity.

This important Squabble about the Erection of the Croſs, continued near Three Hundred Years.

But in A. D. 1353, it was finally concluded, and the Reſult was, that either Archbiſhop might have his Croſs born before him in the others Province.

During Winchelſea's Baniſhment there was a great Buſtle about this Matter, which he revived at his Return; and ſent the King Word, that if York preſumed to have his Croſs born before him in his Province, neither himſelf nor his Suffragans would come to Parliament; ſo that he was forced to order York to go Home; and then indeed his Grace Robert, condeſcended to wait on his Sovereign, and to do his Duty in Parliament.

On Winchelſea's Return, all the Profits of the Archbiſhoprick during the Time of his Abſence, were reſtored to him; ſo that his Baniſhment proved in the End an Advantage to him, and he was eſteemed by this Means to be the richeſt Archbiſhop that had ever ſate in that Chair.

About 1310, Peter de Gaverſton having, by the King's Order, Impriſoned the Biſhop of Coventry, the Archbiſhop would ſuffer no Buſineſs to be done in a Convocation juſt then called, till he was releaſed. However, he excommunicated him afterwards in that very Convocation, for refuſing to ſwear to the Performance of the Decrees there made, and for adhering to Gaverſton againſt the Archbiſhop and the Clergy. Coventry appealed to the Pope, and not only got off his own Sentence, but even obtained, by Gaverſton's Means, thoſe very Decrees to be made null at Rome.

Winchelſea died at Otford A. D. 1313, and was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, by the South Wall, and near the Altar of St. Gregory. But his Monument, which was very Sumptuous and Noble, on the Account of the Vulgars frequenting it perpetually, and celebrating him as if he had been a Saint, was ordered to be demoliſhed, at the Time of the Reformation. And though the Earl of Lancaſter, and his Succeſſor Walter, and moſt of his Suffragans, joined in a Requeſt to the Pope to get him Canonized, it failed of Succeſs.

(a) Excepting his Pride and Haughtineſs, after his obtaining the See of Canterbury, his Faults, (as Archbiſhop Parker obſerves) were rather Local, and ſuch as the Times led him into, than Perſonal; for though he ſtood to the Pope in maintaining the Rights and Liberties of the Church againſt the Crown; he joined alſo with the Barons in their juſt Demands for the Rights and Liberties of the People of England, and for the Confirmation of the Charters of Liberties.

He diſpoſed of his Preferments excellently well, to Men of Senſe and Learning; and would not be byaſſed nor led (as the Faſhion is now) by any great Mens Letters, nor Perſonal Recommendations, into the Advancement of Men of no Merit. He maintained at his own Charge, ſeveral poor Youths at the Univerſities; and in his Charity at Home was profuſe, not to ſay pompous: For he gave Twice a Week to every Beggar that came to his Door a Farthing Loaf; a great Alms in thoſe Days, when Wheat was not Three-Pence a Buſhel, and the uſual Number of theſe Beggars was between Four and Five Thouſand; and at every great Feſtival he gave away One Hundred and Fifty Pence to ſo many poor People, and ſent Neceſſaries to many poor Perſons, whoſe Infirmities detained them at Home: And he was alſo very Liberal to ſuch as had once lived well, but were now fallen into Decay.

At his Table he was chearful, pleaſant, and affable, but baniſhed all Buffoons, Flatterers, and Detractors, from his Houſe.

On Winchelſea's Death, the Monks Elected Thomas Cobham, (who was then at Paris) Dean of Sarum, and Prebendary of York, according to their uſual Form: A Man ſo very good, that he uſually went by the Name of the Good Clerk: But the King ſent Poſt to Rome, and got the Pope to vacate the Election, and put in his Friend, Walter Reynolds, Biſhop of Worceſter. The Pope gladly catched at ſuch an Opportunity of exerting his Power; and therefore immediately advanced Reynolds, pretending that he had for this Time, reſerved the Power of beſtowing the Gift of this Archbiſhoprick to himſelf, and that long before it was Vacant. So Cobham, who was a Man of a good Character for Learning and Probity, was made only Biſhop of Worceſter.

50. WALTER REYNOLDS.

HE had been Chaplain to King Edward the Iſt, and in King Edward the IId's Reign, was made Treaſurer and Chancellor, and at laſt Biſhop of Worceſter; from whence he was preferred to this Dignity, A. D. 1313, and had his Pall ſent him from Rome, but at a very great Expence.

Battely, in his Cantuar. Sacra, Page 51, ſaith, that from the Regiſters it appears that he had all theſe Bulls:

1. One reſerving to the Pope the Proviſion of an Archbiſhoprick upon a Vacancy.

2. Another directed to him as Biſhop of Worceſter, and declaring him Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

3. A Third declaring the Election of Cobham void.

4. A Bull to the Chapter of Canterbury, to receive him for their Archbiſhop.

5. A

5. A Bull to the Biſhops of this Province to receive him as their Metropolitan, and to obey him.

As ſoon as he was Archbiſhop, he laid down his Chancellor and Treaſurerſhip, and took Care to keep up the Authority of his See, by buying off the Danger of Complaints and Appeals againſt it at Rome from his Provincial Biſhops, Abbots, &c.

By theſe Gifts, Preſents, and Bribery, he obtained all theſe large Privileges and Conceſſions from the Pope.

1. That for the next Three entire Years, he might viſit his Province either in Perſon, or by his Officers, might inhibit all the Juriſdiction of his Suffragan Biſhops, and receive Procurations, &c. in every Place that he viſited.

2. That no Religious Houſes, or any other Churches, &c. ſhould, upon the Account of any pretended Immunities or Privileges, be exempt from his Viſitation.

3. That he might have a Power of reſtoring Two Hundred Regular Prieſts, who had been Suſpended or Excommunicated for Diſorders.

4. That he might diſpenſe with One Hundred Clerks which were under Age, and prefer them to Benefices with Care of Souls notwithſtanding.

5. That he might alſo abſolve and clear One Hundred Laymen, who were under the Cenſures of the Church, for laying violent Hands on Prieſts or Clergymen.

6. That he might diſpenſe with Forty Clerks for holding Two or more Benefices with Cure of Souls.

7. That wherever he viſited any Cathedral or Collegiate Church, he might have a Power of conferring one Dignity or Prebend in that Church on whom he pleaſed.

8. That he might have Power to grant a Pardon or Indulgence for One Hundred Days, to any one, in any Place where he ſhould Viſit, Preach, give Alms, or keep any Hoſpitality.

Thus furniſhed out every way with Powers, or Tricks, to pick the Peoples Pockets, and fill his own, he began his Viſitation in Perſon, and carried it on till he was interrupted by the Barons War, and by being ſent for to Court by the King.

After this War was ended, one Adam Tarlton, Biſhop of Hereford, was Apprehended and Arraigned for Rebellion; which Reynolds hearing of, he, with the Archbiſhops of York and Dublin, entred the Court with their Croſſes born before them, frighted away the Judges, and took the Priſoner from the Bar. This made a great Noiſe, and the King afterwards had Tarlton tried anew; and when he was found guilty by a Jury of Laymen, he ſeized upon his Temporalties; and this ſeems to have been the firſt Inſtance of a Prieſt or Eccleſiaſtick's having been tried by a Jury of Laymen. But afterwards the Archbiſhop reconciled him to the King, and got him made Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſo much was that unfortunate Prince led by this Artful Courtier.

And as he now got Pardon and Preferment for a Rebel, ſo ſoon after he turned one himſelf: For he was ſo ungrateful to his Maſter, that after this he ſided with the Barons againſt him, furniſhed the Queen under-hand with Money to carry on the War againſt her Huſband; and not only agreed to the King's being depoſed, but preached a Sermon upon that Occaſion, in Juſtification of what was done; and ſaid, That the Voice of the People was the Voice of God. (a)

He was made one of the Twelve Guardians to the young King.

The Queen ſome Time after ordered him to Conſecrate one James Barclay, who was Biſhop Elect of Exeter; he did ſo, but becauſe it was done without the Pope's Cognizance, he was ſo plagued and teized by that Pontiff, that it broke his Heart; for he was a poor Spirited Wretch, and could not bear himſelf up under any Difficulty, Adverſity, or Affliction.

He died A. D. 1327, at his Manor of Mortlock, and was buried in the South Wall of the Choir of Canterbury Cathedral, where he had an Effigy cut in Stone; and Godwine and Wever ſay, there was alſo an Inſcription, but 'tis now defaced and gone.

The Letter which he wrote to the Pope about the Canonization of his Predeceſſor, Robert Winchelſea, you may find in Anglia Sacrâ, Vol. I. Page 173.

At this Man's Inthronization, Bartholomew Lord Badeleſmere, offered himſelf to the Earl of Glouceſter, who was the Archbiſhop's High-Steward and Butler, to perform the Office of Chamberlain: Which he claimed as his Due, in Right of his Manor of Hatfeild by Charing; as the Earl of Glouceſter claimed to be Steward and Butler, on Account of his Manor of Tunbridge, &c. And that you may make ſome Gueſs at the Pomp of ſuch a Solemnity as the Inthronization of an Archbiſhop of Canterbury in thoſe Days, when Noblemen thought it an Honour to attend at it; I ſhall here give you from Mr. Somner and Lambard, the Fees this Earl of Glouceſter claimed as his Due at this Time.

Seven Robes of Scarlet; Thirty Gallons of Wine; Fifty Pounds of Wax for Lights for himſelf; Hay and Oats for Eighty Horſe for Two Nights; the Diſhes and Saltſellars which ſtood on the Archbiſhop's Table, by the firſt Diſh; and at his Departure, Proviſions for himſelf and Attendance, with only Fifty Horſe for Three Days, in ſome of the next adjacent Manors of the Archbiſhop. Theſe Fees belonged to him as Steward.

As Butler alſo he had theſe Fees:

Seven Robes of Scarlet; Twenty Gallons of Wine; Fifty Pounds of Wax; Hay and Oats for Sixty Horſe for Two Nights; the Cup wherewith the Archbiſhop ſhould be ſerved; all the empty Casks; and either Six Hogſheads of Wine, or as many as ſhould be drunk under the Bar.

51. SIMON MEPHAM,

WAS a Kentiſh Man, born at Mepham: and to mention that by the By, had among his Provincial Biſhops at one Time, theſe Six all of this County, (b) viz. John

Grandiſen,

Grandiſon Biſhop of Exon, Stephen Graveſend Biſhop of London, Henry Burroughs Biſhop of Lincoln, Thomas Cobham Biſhop of Worceſter, Richard Swinfeild Biſhop of Hereford, and Hamo de Hetb Biſhop of Rocheſter. He had commenced D. D. and was Parſon of Tunſtall in this County, Canon of Chicheſter, and Prebendary of Landaff, when the Monks of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury obtaining the King's Licenſe, freely elected him Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1327; the King approved of him; and the Convent making their way to the Pope by Money, to prevent any Interruption, he was Conſecrated by the Pope at Avignion the ſame Year.

He was eſteemed very Learned in the Profeſſion of Theology for thoſe Times.

The firſt Thing he did at his return from thence, was to excommunicate all ſuch as had been concerned in the Murder of Walter Stapleton, Biſhop of Exon, who was beheaded by the Mob of London in Cheapſide, for oppoſing the Queen's Rebellion againſt King Edward the IId; which he did, (a)

A. D. 1328, when he held a Council or Synod with his Suffragan Biſhops at London for this Purpoſe.

A. D. 1330, he held another Council at Lambeth, an Account of which you may find in Spelman's Conc. Brit. Tom. II. Page 497.

A. D. 1333, the doughty Difference abovementioned between the Two Archbiſhops about carrying their Croſſes ran ſo high, that neither Simon, nor any of the Biſhops of his Province, would come to Parliament: And in a Parliament then held: of Eccleſiaſticks, only York, Lincoln, and Carliſle, with the Abbots of York and Selby were preſent; whereby nothing was done, the Affair of Scotland was neglected, and the Nation put to the Charge and Trouble of another Seſſion. (b)

He began a Viſitation of his Province after the Manner of ſome of his Predeceſſors; but Grandiſon Biſhop of Exon, oppoſed him in it, and would not let him ſo much as come into his Church; and he appealed to Rome againſt his Viſitatorial Power; but on what Foot I know not, unleſs perhaps it were becauſe he viſited without any ſpecial Bull from the Pope.

There were great Controverſies alſo between him and the Abbey of St. Auſtins in Canterbury, and which were carried ſo far, that the Pope delegated one Ictterius as his Nuntio, to hear the Cauſe, who gave it againſt the Archbiſhop, and condemned him One Thouſand Two Hundred and Ten Pounds Coſts, as ſome ſay; but the Antiquitat. Britan. and Godwine, ſay it was but Seven Hundred Pounds. This Simon refuſing to pay, was pronounced Contumacious, and as ſome ſay, died under the Sentence of Excommunication; ſo that he could not be buried till the Abbot of St. Auſtins had abſolved him: Which Sentence was got to be reverſed by his Succeſſor.

He died A. D. 1333, at his Palace of Mayfield in Suſſex, and was buried in his own Cathedral, where he lies under a Tomb of Black Marble, on the North Side of St. Anſelm's Chapel, but without any Inſcription.

(a) Polidore Virgil aſcribes this to John Stratford, Mepham's Succeſſor, but he is miſtaken.

52. JOHN STRATFORD.

OF this Gentleman's Birth I find nothing.

When he was young he addicted himſelf to the Study of the Civil and Canon Law, and made very good Proficience in it; and being taken publick Notice of, was made Archdeacon of Lincoln. Here he behaved himſelf ſo handſomely, as to gain the Favour of Archbiſhop Walter, and by him was made Dean of the Arches. In this Poſt he ſtill ſhewed himſelf to more Advantage, and was a wiſe, learned, and equal Judge. And by this Means he became ſo eminent, that he was made a Privy-Counſellor and Secretary to King Edward the IId; where he gained ſo good Credit and Reputation, as to be ſent Ambaſſador to the Pope; and while he was at Rome, the Biſhoprick of Winton becoming vacant, the Archbiſhop got the Pope to put him into that See by a Bull of Proviſion; of which kind of Inſtrument I ſhall ſay more in the next Archbiſhop's Life.

This was done without conſulting the King, and did afterwards occaſion great Troubles and Vexations to Stratford. For Roger Baldock, the Chancellor, had a mind to that Biſhoprick, and the King intended it for him when it ſhould become vacant: But Stratford being thus haſtily and covertly preferred to it, contracted thereby the Hatred both of the King and Baldock. The latter of whom began to perplex and plague him as ſoon as ever he returned from Rome; perſuading the King to ſeize upon the Revenues of his See, becauſe he was made Biſhop by the Pope without the Royal Aſſent. He worried him alſo by various Kinds of Subpœna's, Citations and Proceſſes; and for his Non-appearance, made a ſtrange Proclamation, that no one ſhould any way harbour him or ſupport him with the common Neceſſaries of Life, or hold any kind of Correſpondence with him: Under theſe Afflictions the poor Man labour'd for a whole Twelve-Month, without any Redreſs; for what can any Man do ſuddenly againſt Arbitrary Power, exerting it ſelf under the Form of Law? But at length the Archbiſhop got the Pope to write in his Behalf to the King, and he himſelf ſtrengthned with that Authority, waited on his Majeſty, to expoſtulate with him for this very hard Uſage of Stratford: The King laid all the Fault on Baldock's Councils, (and all Arbitrary Miniſters are rightly ſerved when ſo dropp'd by their Prince); but the Archbiſhop urged, that if the King diſapproved of the Pope's way of providing for Biſhopricks, he might ſignify it to him by his Ambaſſadors, and declare againſt it; but that it was hard to let Stratford ſuffer for it, who did not ſeek it, nor contrive to apply that way for his Preferment, and who certainly was a very Honeſt, Loyal, and Learned Man. This Reaſoning at length prevailed upon the King; ſo Stratford was brought into Favour, and the Revenues of his See reſtored to him.

And indeed Stratford was ſo very faithful and loyal to his Maſter, as to adhere firmly to him in all the Difficulties which the Queen and Mortimer brought him under; for which they had afterwards put him to Death when they were in the Heat and Height of their new and ill-gotten Power, if he had not avoided his Sentence by Flight. But afterwards in King Edward the IIId's Reign, when they had revenged themſelves upon moſt of their Enemies, and began to cool and ſettle; they conſidered that Stratford was guilty of no Crime, but an ill-timed Fidelity to his Maſter; and therefore being fully apprized of his Integrity and Capacity, they got the young King to invite him to Court; who did ſo, and made him Chancellor of England.

And ſoon after this, upon Simon Mepham's Death, wrote to the Pope to make him Archbiſhop of Canterbury. On this the Convent of Chriſt-Church reſolved not to give up their Right of Electing, though the King did his of Nominating; and accordingly held a Chapter, and choſe him Archbiſhop themſelves. The Pope complied with the King's Requeſt, and made Stratford Archbiſhop by his own Power. Beſides the Bull of Proviſion by which he was Conſtituted Archbiſhop, which you may ſee in Batteley's Cantuar. Sacra, in the Appendix, Numb. V. He had Five other Bulls alſo; one to the Convent to admit him; a Second to the Clergy of the Dioceſe, and City of Canterbury; a Third to the People of thoſe Places; a Fourth to the Vaſſals of the Church of Canterbury; and a Fifth to the Provincial Biſhops: So that the Pope made a very good Trade of theſe Bulls of Proviſion; ſtretching it alſo a little further on this Occaſion; for he put in a Man to be Biſhop of Wincheſter, on the King of France his Recommendation; this was Adam Biſhop of Worceſter, who in an Embaſſy, in which the King had employed him to France, proved manifeſtly Partial to the French Intereſt; and conſequently this angred the King ſo, that he ſeized on his Temporalities, and did not reſtore them again, till the Clergy in the enſuing Parliament interceeded for him.

In this Seſſion, the King having a Supply granted him for the Holy War, ſent John, now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the Pope, and to the King of France, to concert Matters about their joint Expedition thither; and there, i. e. in France, he met his Pall, which the Pope had ſent him from Rome, by Haimo Biſhop of Rocheſter; and ſoon after, hearing of the Pope's Death, returned Home: The Deſign of his Embaſſy coming to nothing.

And now after his Inthronization, he viſited his Dioceſe and his Church. Not long after this, viz. A. D. 1334, the King began to think of, and to prepare for a War with France; to ſupport which, the Archbiſhop undertook to ſupply the King with what he thought would be a ſufficient Sum of Money: For the Tenths for Six Years, which had been given for an Expedition to the Holy War, and which were reſerved for that Purpoſe in the Cathedral Churches, were now appropriated to this Affair. And Stratford had perſuaded the King to this War againſt the French King, who had uſed England ill in ſome late Inſtances: And to make his Ancient Claim upon the Kingdom of France. Juſt before the Expedition A. D. 1334, a Parliament was called, where the Archbiſhop got the King a Tenth for Three Years from the Clergy; and at the King's Departure he was left Regent of the Realm.

The King was Young, and though he carried over with him an immenſe Sum of Money, ſuch as the Archbiſhop judged would have, at leaſt, maintained the Army for Three Years, yet it was all ſpent in One Year, and the King and his Army in great Want. On which he wrote to Stratford for more, and put him in mind of his Promiſe to ſupply him with Money ſufficient for the War.

Stratford wrote him back, that he wondred ſo great a Sum could be ſo ſoon ſquandred away, and deſired him to change his Treaſurer, and bad Counſellors, and put in others, who would be more frugal, and better Husbands. And the Pope, now dreading the Conſequences of King Edward's Succeſſes againſt France, wrote to the Archbiſhop to influence him to perſuade the King to accept of good Terms, and conclude a Peace.

The Archbiſhop, ſeeing theſe new and preſſing Demands for Money, and knowing alſo how much the Nation was ſtraitned and impoveriſhed by the late Taxes, and the perpetual Popiſh Exactions, fell in with the Pope's Judgment, and wrote to the King to make Peace.

This was very diſagreeable to the King and the Nobility, that Stratford, who had been the Perſuader to, and Undertaker for this War, ſhould be the firſt that ſhould adviſe to end it; and at a Time too, when the King had ſo much Proſpect of Succeſs: It got him therefore univerſal ill Will; and his Enemies ſuggeſted to the King, that his Advice muſt be the Reſult of Treachery, and Adherence to the Intereſt of the Enemy.

On this the King ſlips privately Home to London, and deſigned to ſeize on the Archbiſhop, but his Officers not finding him at Lambeth, miſſed of him; and Stratford hearing of his Danger, got haſtily to Canterbury, and there lay concealed, and upon his Guard; thither the King ſent Two Officers to expoſtulate with him, and to tell him, that either he muſt find Money to defray the Debts of the Army, or go over thither and offer himſelf up in Perſon to the King's Creditors, as a Security for thoſe Debts. The Archbiſhop deſired Time to return an Anſwer to theſe hard Demands; and accordingly wrote ſeveral preſſing Letters to the King, ſtating the Caſe truly, and deſiring him, as before, to put away his Evil Counſellors, &c. but all without Effect, the King continued inexorable. When he ſaw this would not do, he appealed to the People in his Publick Sermons, ſtating his hard Caſe openly, and wiſhing and lamenting with Tears, that he had minded his Church Affairs more, and ſecular ones leſs; wherein he was ill uſed for his Diligence and his Fidelity; and then he Curſed and Excommunicated by Bell, Book, and Candle, all thoſe who gave the King ill Advice, &c. and ordered the Biſhop of London, and the reſt of his Provincial Biſhops, to Read and Publiſh theſe Cenſures. The King then wrote to the Biſhop of London, making his Complaints as above againſt the Archbiſhop, and deſiring him to contrive ſome way to make thoſe Cenſures have as little Force as poſſible. And in the mean Time, he ſent ſome proper Perſons to the Archbiſhop to perſuade him to go to the King immediately, and Diſcourſe with him on the Affair of the French War; but Stratford deſired Time to conſider of this.

Some time after this, came ſome Perſons deputed from the Duke of Brabant, and when he would not talk with them Perſonally, they fixed the Purport of their Meſſage upon the high Croſs in Canterbury, which was to demand Money lent by their Maſter to the King.

The King on this writes a Letter to the Chapter of Canterbury, ſetting forth the whole Affair between him and the Archbiſhop; and the Archbiſhop cauſes that, and his own Anſwer to be made Publick; and they are both, with the King's Reply, though all very long, preſerved from Stephen Byrchington, in the Antiquit. Britan. Page 224.

When this Epiſtolary War was over, the King Summon'd the Archbiſhop to Juſtice; and he refuſed to Anſwer but in a Parliament: So a Parliament was called, and ſafe Protection given to him to make his Appearance in it. Hither he came, attended by a great Number of Biſhops, Clergy, and Eſquires, but was prohiprohibited to take his Seat in the Houſe till he had made up his Accounts in the Exchequer with the King, and anſwered to the Crimes charged upon him; he obeyed the Order, went into the Exchequer, and there had a Copy of the Charge brought againſt him by the Crown; to which he promiſed a ſpeedy Anſwer; and then, with the King's Leave, had his Place in the Parliament: Here he complained of his hard Uſage, and deſired he might Anſwer in the Houſe, to the Articles brought againſt him by the Crown. When the Houſe ſat again, the King's Officers again denied him Entrance; he demanded his Right in Form, but was ſtill hindred from going into the Houſe. With that he took his Croſs into his own Hands, and proteſted, that he would not ſtir from thence till the King gave him Admiſſion into Parliament: As he thus ſtood at the Door, many Perſons came to him, and gave him reproachful Language; at which he was ſo provoked, that he beſtowed this round hearty Curſe upon them; The Curſe, ſaid he, of God Almighty, of his moſt Bleſſed Mother, of St. Thomas, and of me, light on the Heads of all thoſe who have thus miſled the King, and who hinder his Affairs, Amen, Amen.

Some Time after this, by the Interceſſion and good Offices of the Peers, the King gave him Leave to ſit in Parliament, and to have his Cauſe heard there, and a Committee of Twelve were appointed to report the State of his Caſe to the King: But all Ranks of the Nobility continually interceeding with the King for him; before that Report was made, he was received into Favour, acquitted and cleared; and became ſo dear to the King, that he truſted him with the Management of all Publick Affairs, as much or rather more than ever. When the Parliament was diſſolved, he applied himſelf to Eccleſiaſtical Matters, and held Two Provincial Synods of his Clergy, where A. D. 1337, many good Orders were eſtabliſhed. The King went on with his War in France ſucceſsfully; and becauſe the Clergy gave him a Tenth for Three Years, he granted them many Privileges which were inconſiſtent with the Welfare of the Kingdom; but which they always took Care to obtain, when a King was in Diſtreſs for Money, and wanted their Aſſiſtance.

He died at his Palace in Mayfeild in Suſſex, A. D. 1348, and was buried in his own Cathedral, on the South Side of the Altar of St. Dunſtan, having a fine Monument of Alabaſter erected for him, with his Effigies upon it.

This Gentleman was thrice Lord Chancellor of England, A. D. 1331, 1335, when his Brother was allowed to be his Deputy, and again in the Year 1341.

He was very bountiful in his Charity to the Poor, relieving Thirteen poor Perſons every Day Thrice, and moſt times with his own Hands.

About the Year 1343, the King, in Conſort with his Barons, had declared for the Liberty of the Church of England againſt the Papal Exactions, and had in particular forbidden the Pope to fill up any more Biſhopricks here by his Method of Proviſion, againſt which the Statutes of Proviſors was made.

The Letters which paſt between him and the Pope on this Occaſion, are inſerted in the Antiq. Britannica, Page 257, (a) but are too long to be repeated here.

And would his Wars Abroad, and the Poſture of his Affairs have permitted him, and his Peers encouraged him to ſtand to it, there had probably now been a Period put to the Power of the Pope in England. But ſoon after, he deſired the Pope to make his Secretary Biſhop of Durham, which the Pope gladly did.

Upon Stratford's Death alſo, when the Prior and Convent of Canterbury unanimouſly elected Thomas Bradwardine, D. D. becauſe the King was ſtrongly inclined to John Ufford, he wrote to the Pope to put him in by a Bull of Proviſion: The Pope finding the King thus fickle and inconſtant, conceived new Hopes of the Continuance of his Power, and immediately made Ufford Archbiſhop, giving him more Privileges and Conceſſions than any Pope had ever granted before.

(a) In Tho. Walſingham, and other Hiſtorians.

53. JOHN UFFORD, or OFFORD.

THIS Noble Gentleman, who was Son to the Earl of Suffolk, was Educated in the Study of the Civil and Canon-Law at Cambridge, where he commenced Doctor, and was afterwards made Dean of Lincoln. His Learning and Knowledge being equal to his Birth, he was called to Court, and firſt made a Privy Counſellor, and then Lord Chancellor, and at laſt was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the Papal Power, as is aboveſaid, A. D. 1348. But he never was Conſecrated, nor received his Pall, dying of that dreadful Plague, which this Year conſumed almoſt half the People of England.

He was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, by the North Wall, near Becket's Shrine. Though he ſtaid ſo little a while in the Chair, he began to build a Palace for the Archbiſhop at Maidſtone in this County; but his Death prevented its attaining any Degree of Perfection.

54. THOMAS BRADWARDINE.

ON Ufford's Death this Gentleman was again Elected Archbiſhop by the Monks of Canterbury, and the King conſented to it. 'Tis ſaid alſo, that the Pope had appointed him to this Dignity by his Bull of Proviſion, as ſoon as ever he had Notice of Ufford's Deceaſe.

He was born in Suſſex, was bred at Merton College in Oxford, of which he was Fellow; he was alſo Proctor of the Univerſity, and commenced there Doctor of Divinity: He was Confeſſor to King Edward the IIId, and much eſteemed by him for his good Preaching; and he was very ſerviceable to him in his Wars in France by his Counſel, and by exciting the Courage of the Officers and Soldiers in his Sermons.

He was firſt made Prebendary of Lincoln, and then Chancellor of London. He was accounted a very good Philoſopher, Mathematician, and Divine, and was uſually ſtiled Doctor Profundus.

His Lectures, or Sermons, he reduced into Three Books, and entituled them De Cauſa Dei. This Book was Printed by the Care of Sir H. Saville at London, 1618, Folio.

He wrote alſo Geometrica & Arithmetica Speculativa, both Printed together at Paris, A. D. 1512. And Tractatus Proportionum Venet, 1505. And Bale mentions ſome other Tracts of his which are not Printed.

He was Conſecrated at Avignon, A. D. 1349, and ſoon after his Return, being inveſted with his Temporalities, he died of a Fever in a few Weeks, and before he was Enthroned, at Lambeth.

He was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, by the South Side of St. Anſelm's Chapel.

And after his Death, all the ſucceeding Archbiſhops were conſtituted by the Pope's Bulls of Proviſion, as he was, till the Time of the Reformation, though ſeveral of them were duly Elected alſo by the Chapter of Chriſt-Church.

Theſe Bulls of Proviſion, as well as ſeveral other Powers which came from Rome, were inſolent Uſurpations on the Rights of our Kings: For (a) our Princes claimed Anciently the ſame Right in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, as the Roman Emperors had exerciſed before the Fall of that Empire. They had Anciently by their Authority divided Biſhopricks, granted Inveſtitures, and made Laws both relating to Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes and Perſons. And when the Popes began at firſt to extend their Power here beyond the Limits aſſigned them by the Canons, they met with great Oppoſition in England, with Regard to all Parts of their Uſurpations. But Rome taking its Advantage of the Weakneſs of ſome, and the perplexed unhappy Circumſtances of others of our Kings, managed their Matters ſo ſteadily, that in Time they gained their Point. And if they had not run into the Infatuation of oppreſſing the Clergy here, ſo as to drive them by their intolerable Exactions to ſeek Shelter under the Secular Authority, they might in all Probability eaſily have gained the entire Civil Government, and have been Maſters of all the Temporal Power of our Princes. But the diſcontented Clergy ſupported the Secular Power then, as much as they had before advanced the Papal Uſurpations.

When Pope Boniface the VIIIth pretended to Eſtabliſh it as an Article of neceſſary Faith that all Power both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, was derived from the Pope; he began here to claim a Right of diſpoſing all Benefices by his Bulls of Proviſions. Upon which ſome Laws were made, as hinted above, (in the 25th of King Edward the Iſt.) reſtraining thoſe Invaſions upon the Crown. But though theſe Proviſions were thus condemned for the future, yet there being no Puniſhment declared for the Tranſgreſſors of the Facts, it was laughed at and eluded at Rome.

In the 25th of King Edward the IIId, a more ſevere Law was Enacted, depriving all that offended againſt it of their Benefices, and puniſhing them beſides with Impriſonment, and Arbitrary Fines; and by another Act, they were put out of the King's Protection.

Several other Confirmations of this were made in this Reign, and alſo in that of Richard the IId, in which the former Puniſhments alſo were extended, not only to the Proviſors themſelves, but alſo to all ſuch as were employed by them, or took Farms of them. And in the Sixteenth of King Richard the IId a Law paſſed, that if any one purchaſed Tranſlations, Excommunications, or Bulls from Rome, which were contrary to the Right of the King, &c. both they, the Receivers, and Executors, were put out of the King's Protection; their Goods and Chatels forfeited to the King, and their Perſons Impriſoned.

And from ſome material Words in this Statute, Premunire facias, it came to be called the Statute of Premunire. But notwithſtanding all this, and ſome other Laws after made, eſtabliſhing the Liberty of Elections, our Kings being often more taken up with preſerving their own Prerogatives, than the Rights of their People, were often prevailed with by the Arts of the Clergy, to grant Pardons, and Licenſes, to ſuch as had obtained Proviſions from Rome; by which Means theſe good Laws were frequently evaded.

However, in King Henry the Vth's Time, all theſe Pardons and Licenſes were condemned; and the Weakneſs of the Papacy, their Situation at Avignon, and the Schiſm which after followed, between the Popes of Rome, and thoſe which ſtill ſate at Avignon, hindred thoſe Grand Uſurpers from carrying on their Shew with a high Hand, and made them very cautious of thundering out their Cenſures.

And all that our Princes made of this Advantage was, to oblige the Proviſors to depend on their Licenſe to execute their Bulls, and by that Means to get Money out of them, which was all the Uſe theſe good Laws were put to. Nay, ſo very kind were ours, as well as other Chriſtian Princes, that they took Pains at Conſtance to make up that Breach in the Papacy, which it was the Intereſt of all of them to have kept open, and to have made wider: For as ſoon as that was cemented, the Popes went on as before; and Pope Martin the Vth, though he did not care to venture on ſo rough a Prince as our King Henry the Vth, yet he in the next Reign, attempted the Repeal of all thoſe Laws here; annulling the Statutes made by King Edward the IIId, and by King Richard the IId, and declaring all ſuch to be Excommunicated as obſerved them.

55. SIMON ISLIP.

HE had his Education as his Predeceſſor had, in Merton College in Oxon, where he commenced D. LL. in which Profeſſion being Eminent, he was made Canon of St. Pauls in London, (a) and Dean of the Arches to John Stratford, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and afterwards became a Privy Counſellor, and was Secretary and Keeper of the Privy-Seal to King Edward the IIId. Being thus well known at Court, and a Favourite of the King's, the Monks of Canterbury, on Bradwardine's Death, Elected him Archbiſhop. But the Pope, to keep his uſurped Claim of diſpoſing of Biſhopricks here, vacated the Monks Election, and put him in by a Bull of Proviſion. After his Conſecration, A. D. 1349, and the Reception of his Pall, he retired privately to Canterbury, to avoid Buſtle and Expence, and was there Enthroned without any Pomp, Noiſe, or Feaſting. For he was in his Temper very frugal, but a little too rigid and ſevere. He deprived, when he viſited his Dioceſe, great Numbers of his Clergy; which much frighted his Comprovincial Biſhops: And John Synwall, Biſhop of Lincoln, at a great Expence, obtained from Rome an Exemption from his Viſitation; but Simon got it revoked.

Numbers

A. D. 1351, he pulled down the Manor Houſe belonging to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury at Wrotham, and carrying the Materials to Maidſtone, finiſhed the Houſe there which John Ufford had begun, and obtained from the Pope a Power to Tax the Clergy of his Province for this Work.

A Parliament being now called, the old Quarrel about their Croſſes aroſe again between our Two Archbiſhops, and was carried ſo high, that the King thought fit to interpoſe, and to determine it under the Great Seal; which he did thus, That each Archbiſhop might have his Croſs born before him erect in the other's Province; but that to ſhew ſome Preference to Canterbury, every Archbiſhop of York ſhould, within Two Months after his Inthronization, ſend by his Vicar-General, or ſome ſuch Meſſenger of Note, a Piece of Gold with the Image of an Archbiſhop bearing his Croſs in his Hand ſtamped on it, and of the Value of Forty Pounds Sterling, by way of Preſent to the Southern Metropolitan, and which afterwards was to be offered at Becket's Shrine. That in all Synods, and ſuch like Aſſemblies where the King was preſent, Canterbury ſhould have the Right, and York the Left Hand: And Laſtly, that in great and broad Streets, both their Croſs-bearers ſhould go on Breaſt; but where they were ſo narrow that this could not be done, there Canterbury's ſhould go firſt.

And thus ended this doughty Squabble, which had continued a great while, to the Scandal of both Sees.

He founded a College in Oxford, which was then called Canterbury-Hall or College, and which is now ſwallowed up in Chriſt-Church; it was reſigned into the Hands of King Henry the VIIIth, in the 27th Year of his Reign.

The Parſonages of Eaſtry and Monkton in Eaſt-Kent, which by Archbiſhop Richard had been appropriated to the Almnery of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, but had been taken away by Baldwin, in the Quarrel between him and his Monks, he reſtored again to the firſt Uſe, and eſtabliſhed there perpetual Vicars.

He diſliked the diſſolving ſuch Marriages as were contracted by Perſons who were under Vows of a Single Life; and though he laid a Puniſhment on the Counteſs of Kent, who being a Widow, and a Nun profeſſed, was yet privately Married; yet, I ſay, he did not Divorce her from her Husband, but ſuffered them ſtill to Cohabit.

He died A. D. 1366, which was occaſioned by a Fall from his Horſe, as he rode to his Palace at Mayfield; for being by his Fall all Dirty and Wet, he fell aſleep without changing his Cloaths; and when he waked had a Paralytick Fit, which ſoon carried him off. And this was an unlucky Year for Prelates, no leſs than Six more dying within the Compaſs of it.

Simon was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, towards the upper End of the Nave of the Church, in the Middle Iſle; and under a fair Altar-Tomb inlaid with Braſs. But his Funeral was private, and as little expenſive as poſſible; for your good Men that love Money heartily, are for ſaving it even after Death.

On Iſlip's Death, the Monks of Canterbury unanimouſly Elected William Edyndon, then Biſhop of Wincheſter, but he abſolutely refuſed to accept of it.

And then the Pope, with the King's Approbation, and at his Deſire, placed Simon Langham in the Chair, by a Bull of Proviſion.

56. SIMON LANGHAM.

HE was firſt a Monk in the Convent of Weſtminſter, and afterwards both Prior, and then Abbot there. While Abbot, he was alſo Great Treaſurer to the King; and ſome Time after was preferred to the Biſhoprick of London; but that of Ely being void at the ſame Time, and of more Value, he choſe the latter.

At the King's Requeſt, he was after this made Archbiſhop of Canterbury by a Bull of Proviſion, A. D. 1366. And ſome Time after, and while he held the Treaſurerſhip, he was made Lord Chancellor.

From Canterbury College in Oxford, he took away the Parſonage of Pagham in Suſſex, which his Predeceſſor had annexed to it, and placed a Head over it, who was one of his own Monks; and indeed his great Deſign was to eject the Seculars out of it, and to turn it into a Convent of Monks. The famous John Wicliff was a Scholar there at this Time; who joined heartily with the reſt of his College, in oppoſing the Introduction of Monks into it; and they appealed to the Pope againſt the Archbiſhop. But Langham's Intereſt was ſo great at Rome, that their Effort proved unſucceſsful, and the Monks carried it againſt them.

Soon after this, Pope Urban made Langham a Cardinal, which ſo diſpleaſed the King, that he ſeized on the Revenues of the See of Canterbury, as in a Vacancy. Simon did not ſeem at all concerned at this, but with Difficulty obtaining Leave to go to Rome, he reſigned the Archbiſhoprick, and went and lived there.

He did little or nothing to benefit the Archbiſhoprick, but was extravagantly liberal to Weſtminſter-Abbey; his Gifts to that Hive of Monks, amounting to the large Sum of Ten Thouſand and Eight Hundred Pounds. And hither, after his Death, his Body was brought, and ſumptuouſly buried.

57. WILLIAM WITLESEY.

THIS Gentleman was a Relation of Simon Iſlip, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who Educated him in the Study of the Civil and Canon Laws, in which he commenced Doctor, and was employed by Simon to Negotiate Matters for him in the Court of Rome; which he performed with ſo much Diligence and Dexterity, that he made him his Vicar-General, and after Dean of the Arches, making him alſo Archdeacon of Huntington, and giving him the Parſonages of Croyden, and Cliff by Rochеſter. He was alſo preferred after this to the Biſhopricks of Rochеſter, Worceſter, and London, ſucceſſively, and now on Langham's Reſignation, was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the Pope's Bull of Proviſion, A. D. 1369. Soon after, he received his Pall, and was inthroned at Canterbury privately, without the uſual Pomp and Buſtle.

The next Year he held a Synod in St. Pauls, London, and preached to his Clergy there, an Elegant Elegant Sermon in Latin, as he did another afterwards in a ſubſequent Synod.

By his Intereſt with the Pope, he got the Univerſity of Oxford to be ſet clear and free from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Lincoln, and to be governed only by its own Chancellors and Proctors, as it is now.

About this Time, after the Convocation roſe, proper Meſſengers were ſent to the Pope, to deſire him to forbear ſending any more Bulls of Proviſion hither, but to leave the Conventual Elections free; and that the Biſhops choſen in ſuch Chapters, might be confirmed by the proper Metropolitans, according to the Ancient Cuſtom and Uſage of this Land; and afterwards it was determined in Parliament that it ſhould be ſo; and that the King ſhould not interpoſe either by his Authority, or Money, or by Application to Rome, to hinder the Freedom of ſuch Elections: But this Order was neither much regarded, nor long obſerved. Antiq. Britan. Page 254.

A. D. 1375, he died at Lambeth very Aged and Infirm, and was buried in the upper End of the Nave of Canterbury Cathedral, between thoſe Two Pillars which are over againſt the Tomb of Simon Iſlip.

On his Death, as ſome tell us, Vid. Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 794, Simon Langham being then at Rome, made an Intereſt with the Canterbury Monks to be rechoſen Archbiſhop, and they did Elect him, but under the feigned Name of Adam Eaſtow. When the King came to underſtand this Trick, he was exceeding angry with the Convent, and threatned to baniſh the Monks out of the Kingdom, and to confiſcate all their Revenues and Goods. But Pope Gregory the Eleventh interpoſed, and made their Peace; ſo that at laſt they yielded to Elect Simon Sudbury, whom the Pope made Archbiſhop by his Bull of Proviſions.

They tell you alſo, that Simon having been in England A. D. 1374, as the Pope's Nuntio, was ſeverely chid by the Pope and Cardinals for uncovering his Head to the King: But he modeſtly excuſed himſelf to them, by aſſuring them, and proving by Witneſs, that he did but half uncover it.

In his Return Home, he called at Chriſt-Church in Canterbury, and there bribed the Monks ſo, that they came into his Re-election, as is aboveſaid; but the King would have no Cardinal Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

58. SIMON SUDBURY.

THE Pope, glad of an Opportunity to break in on the Order of Parliament above-mentioned, which rendred the Capitular Elections of Biſhops free, agreed with the King's Judgment, and by his Bull of Proviſion, made Sudbury Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1375.

This Gentleman, whoſe Father's Name was Tybold, was born at Sudbury in Suffolk, and thence was called Simon of Sudbury: He was bred up in the Study of the Civil and Canon Laws, where he took his Degree of Doctor; and to compleat his Knowledge therein, viſited the Univerſities of France and Italy. While he was at Rome, Pope Innocent the VIth made him his Domeſtick Chaplain, and one of the Auditors of the Rota; and afterwards by a Bull of Proviſion, made him Chancellor of the Church of Saliſbury, and ſoon after that Biſhop of London; whence he was Tranſlated to Canterbury, as is above ſaid.

In the firſt Year of this great Promotion, he was ſent Ambaſſador to Bruxels by King Edward the IIId, in Conſort with the Duke of Lancaſter, to Negotiate a Peace between France and England; but it came to nothing.

A. D. 1377, he Crowned King Richard the IId, and was ſoon after made Lord Chancellor. About this Time John Wickliffe preaching openly againſt ſeveral Corruptions of the Roman Church, ſo alarmed the Pope, that he ſent to the King, and to Sudbury, either to Silence him, or to deſtroy him. The Archbiſhop had Wickliffe apprehended, and examined him in the Preſence of the Duke of Lancaſter, and gave him a Charge to preach no more any ſuch pernicious Doctrines. But Wickliffe, tho' he forbore a little while, yet in a ſhort Time went on again with greater Freedom than ever, to inveigh in his Sermons, againſt the Superſtitious Rites of the Church of Rome. Being taken up again, he was brought before a large Aſſembly of the Biſhops at Lambeth-Houſe; but there was ſuch a Croud of the common People about the Houſe, that the Archbiſhop and Biſhops dared not to proceed againſt him, but diſcharged him again.

The Year following Sudbury called a Synod at London, (a) where they debated about hindring the Growth of this new Scbiſm, as they called Wickliffe's Tenets; but I think no great Matter was done, except the making of Three new Conſtitutions about Auricular Confeſſion.

The Followers of this John Wickliffe were called Lollards, and his Hereſy Lollardy, and Lollardiſm; which Name firſt aroſe from the Preaching of a zealous poor Mendicant Fryar at Paul's Croſs; who ſaid theſe were the Lollia, or Tares, which Satan had ſown amongſt the good Wheat; and repeated it ſo often, that the People took the Word, and ever after called thoſe Noble Proteſtants by the Name of Lollards.

This Archbiſhop was barbarouſly murdered by the Rebels in Wat Tyler's Inſurrection, (of which I have given you an Account in this Book, Page 94.) for they had received a Notion that he adviſed the King againſt his coming to any Terms, or offering any Accommodation with the Rebels; and therefore they were reſolved to revenge themſelves upon him; and finding him in the Tower of London, they hurried him out immediately, and ſtruck off his Head upon Tower-Hill: They mangled him ſadly too, giving him Eight ſeveral Strokes with the Ax, before they could diſpatch him; but at laſt they fix'd his Head on a Pole, carried it along with them, and fix'd it upon London-Bridge, leaving his Body unburied. Which at laſt, after a Day and an half, was taken up and carried to Canterbury, and depoſited in his Cathedral, on the South Side of the High Altar, juſt above Archbiſhop Stratford's Tomb.

There was a handſome Monument erected for him, to which the Mayor and Aldermen of Canterbury were wont, for a great while, to pay a Solemn Annual Viſit, in order to commemorate his great Benefactions to their City: Which were indeed very conſiderable; for he rebuilt at his own Charge, all that part of the Wall of Canterbury which had been deſtroyed by the Danes, and which was uſually called the Long-Wall, reaching from the Weſt Gate to the North one.

(a) Vid. Lindwood's Prov. Lib. III. Fol. 183.

He

He built alſo the Two preſent Wings of Canterbury Cathedral, and had pulled the Nave quite down, in order to rebuild it again in a better Manner, if he had lived.

He built alſo a fine College for Seculars at Sudbury, in the Place where his Father's Houſe ſtood, endowing it very handſomely; and he built the upper End of St. Gregory's Church in Sudbury.

William de Chartham, who writes that Fragment of this Archbiſhop's Life, which is publiſhed in the Angl. Sacra, Vol. I. Page 40. acquaints us, That it was Propheſied of this Prelate (no doubt by ſome of the Monks) that he ſhould die an untimely Death: And the wiſe Reaſon he gives for it is this, That Sudbury honeſtly told ſome Pilgrims whom he met on the Road to Canterbury, and who were going to pay their Devotions at Becket's Shrine, That they had as good ſave their Journey, and go back again. "Quod illa Indulgentia Plenaria quæ "apud Cantuarios Sperabatur, nullius com- "modi vel valoris fuerat. That is, That the Plenary Indulgence or Pardon of their Sins, which they expected to have at Canterbury, was of no Value, nor Benefit at all.

If he had Senſe enough to think, and Honeſty enough to ſay this in thoſe Times, his Name ought to be remembred with Honour and Reverence by all true Proteſtants. And indeed his Courage and Steadineſs in adhering to his Prince in his Troubles; as well as the Patience and Reſignation of Mind which he ſhewed in his own, even at Death, demonſtrate that he muſt have been a Man of great Virtue, Courage, and Firmneſs of Spirit.

59. WILLIAM COURTNEY,

WAS the Son of Hugh Earl of Devonſhire, and his Lady Margaret, Daughter of Humphrey Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Eſſex. He early addicted himſelf to the Study of the Civil and Canon Law. Soon after his taking Orders, he was made Prebendary of Bath, Exeter, and York, and in ſome Time Biſhop of Hereford. He ſucceeded Sudbury in the Biſhoprick of London, where he ſtaid Six Years, and was, as Walſingham ſaith, made a Cardinal, and at laſt was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1381. The Monks of Chriſt-Church conſented to his Election, but he was conſtituted alſo Archbiſhop by a Bull of Proviſion from Pope Urban the VIth, before the Monks had choſen him. After the King had alſo conſented, and reſtored him the Temporalities, a Monk comes to him at Lambeth, being ſent by the Convent of Chriſt-Church with his Croſs. And he told Courtney, That he was the Meſſenger of the King of Kings, who commanded him to take that Croſs, as the Enſign that he appointed him to govern his Church; but I believe Courtney received him rather as the Monk's Agent, than as an Ambaſſador from Heaven. The next Year he married King Richard the IId to the King of Bohemia's Siſter, with great Pomp and Solemnity, which he did before he received his Pall; for that was brought to him ſoon after from Rome, by Sir Thomas Cheyney.

Some time after the Reception of his Pall, he puniſhed the Bailiffs of Canterbury with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, for aſſuming a Power to hear Matrimonial Cauſes, which belonged only to Spiritual Men. As he did likewiſe thoſe of Romney; and he plagued the City Serjeants, for bearing their Maces within the Precincts of his Church, and made them for the future leave them at the outer Gate of the Cloſe. And calling a Provincial Synod at London, he there got many of Wickliffe's Opinions condemned as Heretical, and made ſome Perſons of Note recant, who had been Eſpouſers of them; and ſome who would not recant, he condemned as Hereticks; and though they appealed to the Pope, the Archbiſhop went on and excommunicated them, and got the Royal Power to ſupport him in his Proceedings. So that in another Synod held at Oxford 1383, he forced thoſe poor Wretches to recant, and abjure their new Opinions.

Wickliffe himſelf was all this while in great Danger of being apprehended, and caſt into Priſon; but he abſconded, and ſhifted about from Place to Place, and at laſt died in a firm Adherence to the Doctrines he had preached to the People.

About this Time Courtney excommunicated one Richard Iſmonger, (a) a Layman of Ayleſford, for daring to puniſh Men for ſome Crimes which the Church only ought to take Cognizance of: And though the poor Man ſubmitted, asked Pardon, and promiſed heartily never to do ſo again; yet the good Archbiſhop enjoined him this Puniſhment, That he ſhould be whipped Naked Three ſeveral Market Days at Weſt Malling, and as many at Maidſtone; and then that he ſhould alſo enter Naked into Canterbury Cathedral, and there offer a Wax Light of Five Pounds Weight at St. Thomas Becket's Shrine. Which I mention only as an Inſtance of what we may expect from the Inſolence of Popiſh Power, if God for our Sins, and Ingratitude, ſhould ever let us feel the Weight of it again.

In this Archbiſhop's Time the Pope granted a ſtrange kind of Power to one Walter Diſs, who was Confeſſor to the Duke of Lancaſter, and a Carmelite Friar; one Branch of which was, that he might make Men Chaplains to the Pope, and who then ſhould be Subject to no Juriſdiction, nor to any Rule, Diſcipline or Inſtitution whatſoever.

Into this glorious Order of Chaplains Papal, did one Peter Patteſhall get Admittance for his Money; and ſtaying among this Lawleſs Crew a while, at laſt goes over to the Lollards, and there betrays all the Roguery and Wickedneſs of the Friars of all Sorts. (b) And publickly preached againſt all thoſe Orders, charging them with all manner of Crimes, as with Murder, Treaſon, Rapes, Adulteries, Sodomy, &c. naming the Perſons guilty, and telling the Times and Places where theſe horrible Facts were committed; which made great Numbers leave the Popiſh Superſtitions, and embrace Wickliffe's Opinions; among which were ſeveral of great Birth and Fortune. Theſe the Papiſts called Caputiatos aut Pileatos, Cap-Men, or Bonneters, becauſe they would not doff their Caps to the Hoſt.

Theſe Things highly angred Courtney, who was before a mortal Enemy to the Lollards.

A. D. 1388, deſigning a Provincial Viſitation, he deſired the Favour of Pope Urban, that he might receive no Impediment in it from the Roman Court; which having obtained, he began his Viſitation, and received no Oppoſition till he came to the Dioceſe of Exeter, where the Biſhop enjoined his Clergy not to ſubmit to his Viſitatorial Power, under the Penalty of Excommunication. And the Archbiſhop on the other Side excommunicated all

all such as would not submit to this Power; and though Exeter appealed to the Pope, yet the Archbishop went on with his Visitation, and cited the Bishop to answer to Articles exhibited against him in his Court. But the poor Somner, which carried the Citation, being met with on the Road, by some of Exeter's Men, was made to chew and swallow the Instrument, Seal and all. This Act set the King and Court against him; who siding with the Archbishop, Exeter dropp'd his Appeal at Rome, and submitted himself to his Metropolitan.

Next the Bishop of Sarum opposed his Visitation, and got a Bull of Exemption for his Diocese from the Pope; but Courtney managed him so smartly, that he brought him also to a Submission, and an Acknowledgment of his Visitatorial Power; which afterwards he exercised every where throughout his Province, without any Opposition at all.

A. D. 1394, a new Statute against Papal Provisions was made, enforcing the former Enacted in this Reign, and making it Imprisonment for any one to sue out, use, or accept any such Bull of Provision. And soon after this, the King summoned all such Clerks as were Abroad in Rome, and other Foreign Courts, and yet had Benefices in England to return Home, which they all did.

The Pope upon this sent over an Artful Nuntio to expostulate with the King against the Statutes of Provisors, the Quare Impedit, and the Statute of Premunire, which as great Infractions of the Rights of the Church, he desired might be abrogated: The King desired him to stay till the next Parliament, which he did, but found both Lords and Commons so resolved to oppose the Papal Exactions and Usurpations, that he obtain'd no more by all his cunning Management, than that the Bulls of Provisions should continue in Force till the next Sessions of Parliament.

The Opinions of Wickliffe did now gain very great Ground, and that among Men of Condition and Distinction, as well as among the Populace, and many free Things were preached and written against the Power of the Clergy, which even the Interposition of Regal Edicts could not wholly suppress.

The Archbishop obtained this Year Four Pence to be paid to him out of every Twenty Shillings of the Clergy's Revenues within his Province, by a Papal Authority. But the Bishop of Lincoln appealed to Rome against it; and during the Time of this Suit's hanging in the Roman Court, the Archbishop died at Maidstone, A. D. 1396, and was buried (a) as most write, in his Cathedral of Canterbury, near Becket's Shrine, on the South Side, where there is a Monument for him, with his Effigies on it, at the Feet of Edward the Black Prince's Tomb; though there is an Inscription in Maidstone-Church, which implies that he was buried there, as I have already observed, when I spake of that Place.

But Wever saith it was the Custom of old for great Persons to have Tombs erected for them in more Places than one. 'Tis certain he ordered his Body to be buried at Maidstone by his Will: But Somner saith he found by the Leiger Books of Canterbury, that King Richard the IId was there when his Body was interred in that Cathedral, and probably he ordered him to be there buried, and overruled his Will, if it be true that he is buried in that Church.

At Maidstone he pulled down the old Work of the Hospital built by his Predecessor Boniface, and re-edifying it, turned it into a College of Secular Priests. The Church of Mepham also, which was now dilapidated, he rebuilt, and Four new Almshouses near it for the Poor.

Towards the Repair of the Nave of the Church of Canterbury, the Walls, Cloysters, &c. he gave One Thousand Marks, and got One Thousand more from the King, and a Silver Image gilded, representing the Trinity, with Six Apostles standing round it, in the whole of One Hundred and Sixty Pounds Weight.

He built also all the South Side of the Cloister anew, which cost him Three Hundred Pounds, and he gave near as much more for other Repairs.

That he was in his Temper proud and haughty, appears by several Instances of his Behaviour; one comical Example of it I have already given you under Saltwood Castle, Page 383. Another I think may be this, In the Tenth of King Richard the IId, he made a Solemn Protestation, that though he had a Right to be at all Councils and Parliaments, yet he was to be Sworn to no one inferior to the Pope, and therefore ought not to be Sworn; however, saving this Prerogative, he did at last condescend to take the Oath of Fidelity to the King. (a)

But he made another very honest, and bold Protest, in the Parliament of the Sixteenth of King Richard the IId; which was, That the Pope ought not to excommunicate any Bishop, or to meddle in the Disposal of any Ecclesiastick Dignity, nor to make any Translations of Bishops within this Realm without the King's Will and Consent: And he declared, that in this the Crown had been always free, and subject to no one but God, and to no Earthly Sovereign; and this he prayed might be entred. Ibid. Page 384.

Once on a Prospect of an Invasion from France, this Archbishop directed his Letter to the Commissary of Canterbury, to Arm the Clergy of that City and Diocese, thus; every Benefice of above One Hundred Marks per Annum, was to find a Man at Arms, and Two Archers; one of Forty Pounds to find Two Archers; one of Twenty Pounds to furnish out One Archer; and all under Twenty Pounds per Annum, were to find Coats of Mail, and small Arms. (b)

The Author of the Life of King Richard the IId, Printed at London, 1681, in Octavo, tells us, that this Archbishop got a Bull from the Pope to Tax all the Clergy in his Province at Four Pence in the Pound, of all Ecclesiastical Goods and Revenues, without pretending any true or lawful Cause for the same, Page 153.

60. THOMAS ARUNDEL,

WAS a Man of great Birth, his Father being Richard Fitz-Allen, Earl of Arundel, and his Mother Eleanor, Daughter of Henry Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster.

Being

Being bred up young in the Theological Studies, as ſoon as he took Orders he was made Archdeacon of Taunton; and though in the Romiſh way of Expreſſion, no higher than a Subdeacon, was made Biſhop of Ely, thence Tranſlated to the Archbiſhoprick of York; and A. D. 1396, to this of Canterbury, by the Pope's Bull of Proviſion.

Henry Chillinden, Prior of Canterbury, delivered him his Croſs after the ſame Manner, and with the ſame Form of Words as was done to his Predeceſſor Courtney; and he was ſoon after inveſted with the Pall, and inthroned at Canterbury with great Pomp and Feaſting.

The Convocation now Sitting, was Prorogued for ſome Time; and when they met again, the Scholars of the Univerſity of Oxford preferred a Complaint againſt their Chancellor and his Commiſſary, for obtaining from the Pope a Bull of Exemption from both Metropolitical and Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, alledging that this, under the Pretence of a Privilege, was in Reality a Slavery; ſince by it they were exempted from the Right and Advantage of appealing againſt the Oppreſſions of the Chancellor's Proceedings to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as their proper Viſitor; and therefore they Petitioned the Archbiſhop, that as they owned his Viſitatorial Power, ſo he would pleaſe to reſcind this pretended Exemption of the Chancellor's, and which they themſelves did now Solemnly, and in Form renounce.

This Renunciation the Archbiſhop ratified and confirmed, and declared the before-mentioned Privileges of Exemption to be null and void. And when the Chancellor upon this left his Poſt in a Huff, the Archbiſhop called him back to it again by an Edict, and puniſhed him for his Rudeneſs.

As ſoon as he was ſettled in his See, he began a Viſitation of his Province; and that being over, a Parliament was called, and ſate at London, A. D. 1397. Here the Archbiſhop's Brother, the Earl of Arundell, and ſome others, were condemned, for Rebellion and Treaſon; and the Archbiſhop himſelf was ſummoned to appear as a Party concerned; and he not attending at it, but pleading, as Courtney, his Predeceſſor did, that Eccleſiaſtical Perſons ſhould not ſit as Judges in Caſes of Blood, (unleſs, I ſuppoſe, when Heretick Blood is the Caſe, and then it was meritorious) he was proſcribed (a) by Order of Parliament, and ordered to get out of the Kingdom in Forty Days, upon the Forfeiture of his Head.

This was done at the Importunity of Sir John Busby, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons; for before, the King was inclined to have pardoned him: But Busby beſought the King that he might not be admitted to Anſwer, leſt by his great Wit and Cunning he might induce Men to believe his Story.

On this he goes to Rome, and was kindly received by Pope Boniface, who wrote to the King to reſtore him; and when he could not prevail with him ſo to do, the Pope made Arundell Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's in Scotland, by a Bull of Proviſion, and by the Word of his Mouth, and gave him ſeveral other rich Dignities in England the ſame way. But after he had received a ſevere Letter on this Occaſion from the King, he not only revoked the Tranſlation of Arundell to St. Andrew's, but made Roger Walden, then Dean of York, and Biſhop of London, at the King's Deſire, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who therefore muſt now be conſidered as ſuch. Some ſay Arundell did never accept of the Archbiſhoprick of St. Andrew's, but inſiſted on his Right to Canterbury.

61. ROGER WALDEN,

WAS by the Pope's Bull af Proviſion, and the King's Deſire, as I ſaid, made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1398, confirmed, conſecrated and inthroned; and accordingly he executed the proper Offices belonging to the Metropolitan; he convocated Synods, and made ſeveral Provincial Conſtitutions, of which Lyndwood hath retained one, about the Obſervation of Holidays.

And now the Pope having gone this Length to oblige the King, thought it a proper Time to exert his own Power again; and accordingly, notwithſtanding the late ſevere Acts of Parliament to the contrary, which I have mentioned above, he went on to fill up the vacant Biſhopricks here, by his Bulls of Proviſions. But when the King ſaw how far this was likely to go, he called a Convocation of the Clergy, and asked of them whether the Pope had any ſuch Right of diſpoſing of Biſhopricks, or not? They were afraid of the Pope, and ſo did not anſwer directly to the Queſtion, but adviſed the King to write to the Pope to deſiſt from the Practice. This cowardly trifling Anſwer more enraged the King againſt the Pope; and he ſwore, that if his Clergy had ſhewed Reſolution enough to have withſtood the Papal Power, he would have firmly ſupported them with the Royal one.

After this the Pope ventured to ſend a Nuntio hither, to perſuade the King to permit the Pope's Bulls of Proviſions, and to revoke the Acts made againſt them; but the King (knowing the Inclinations of his People to be ſtrongly againſt the Papal Uſurpations) anſwered rightly, that it was not in his Power.

A. D. 1399, the King made an Expedition into Ireland; during which Time Henry Duke of Lancaſter, whom the King had baniſhed, and who had thereupon concerted Meaſures with Archbiſhop Arundell, and others Abroad, came into England with a great Force, and ſeizing upon Scroop the Treaſurer, and ſome others of the King's Counſellors, whom they judged to be the Authors of their Diſgrace with the King, ſtruck off their Heads.

Arundell was deep in all this Affair, not only perſuading Lancaſter to take the Crown, but perſuading him to depoſe King Richard, and giving him Inſtances of Kings who had been dethroned for ill Government; and he contrived afterwards the Means to ſeize this King Richard the IId.

But to go on: The King hearing of this Invaſion, returned Home as ſoon as he could, but found Lancaſter had gotten ſo great an Army together, as rendred him a very formidable Enemy; and perceiving alſo his Subjects generally inclined to revolt from him, he deſired a Conference with Arundell, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who he heard was among theſe Malecontents; and when he came to him, the King told him, that he was ready to quit the Crown, if he might be ſecure of his Life, and an honourable Maintenance; and on thoſe Terms he delivered himſelf into the Hands of the Duke of Lancaſter.

As ſoon as Pope Boniface, the Infallible, heard that King Richard was in the Power of Lancaſter, he immediately declares this Roger Walden, who had been an Archbiſhop of his own Creating for Two Years, to be an Invader and Uſurper, and conſequently down he pulls him from his Metropolitical Chair, and replaces Arundel in his Room, who had declared he would have no new Pall, and that Walden's Promotion was null and void; and in his Bulls lays all the Blame of his former Conduct on the Miſrepreſentations which King Richard and Roger had given him.

Here therefore ends Walden's Metropolitical Power; but he was afterwards made Biſhop of London, and died in his firſt Year.

As ſoon as Henry the IVth had got into the Throne, by the Conſent of the People, and the depoſing of King Richard the IId, the Loyal Arundell Crowned him, and preached a Sermon at that Solemnity in his Praiſe.

A Parliament being called ſoon after, Arundell aſſembled a Synod in St. Paul's, to which came the Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland from the King, not to demand Money, (a) but to aſſure them that the King would ſupport and maintain their Rights and Privileges, and would puniſh all Hereticks, and ſuch as were Enemies to the Church, according as they ſhould deſire, and therefore he deſired their Prayers.

This was a notable and ſure way to ſupport a precarious Title to the Crown, and it will always ſucceed; for the Clergy don't uſe to oppoſe, nor ſo much as to queſtion the Titles and Claims of ſuch Princes, as they think will ſupport their Power.

The Archbiſhop in the Name of the Synod, returned the King their Thanks, and deſired of his Majeſty the Prohibition of the Pope's Bulls of Proviſions. For the Pope's detruding him from the Archbiſhoprick was remembred longer, and made a deeper Impreſſion upon him, than his reſtoring him to it.

A. D. 1403, he married King Henry the IVth to the Widow of the Duke of Britain.

A. D. 1404, the King demanded a Tenth of the Clergy, which coming very hard, the Commons in this Parliament, which was called Parliamentum Indoctum, moved for taking away the Temporalities of the Clergy, and giving them to the Crown, without which it was not poſſible for the Laity to ſupply the King with ſufficient Taxes, the Clergy poſſeſſing almoſt all the Wealth of the Kingdom. To this the Archbiſhop anſwered, and among other Things ſaid, that if that were done, the Crown would be no richer, ſince it would all be gotten away in Grants and Gifts by the Courtiers, as were the Lands of ſome Houſes of Priors Aliens, which had been formerly given to the Crown.

A. D. 1405, he viſited the Univerſity of Cambridge, reforming many Abuſes, and ordaining new Statutes for ſeveral Colleges.

A. D. 1412, there being Two Popes oppoſing one another, the Archbiſhop wiſely propoſed in a Synod, that all Payments to Rome ſhould be ſtopt, and paid into the King's Exchequer, 'till it ſhould be determined which of the two contrary and contending Infallibilities was in the Right; which was agreed to by the King and the Clergy. And the Year after, an Embaſſy was ſent to acquaint both their Holineſſes, that unleſs they agreed, England would pay no more Money to Rome.

A. D. 1413, a general Council, as they were pleaſed to call it, was ſummoned to meet at Piſa, to unite theſe Two Heads of the Romiſh Spread-Eagle; and Robert Biſhop of Sarum, and Henry Chichley, Biſhop of St. David's, with the Prior of Canterbury, were ſent from a Synod in London thither; and here when they could not join theſe Two Heads into one, they cut them both off, and clapp'd a new one upon the Church, by the Name of John the Twenty Third.

In England, the Wickliſian Doctrines gain'd Ground ſo faſt, that a Synod of the whole Clergy was called to give that another Condemnation, and Arundell and the Prieſts exerted themſelves againſt them with all Severity and Cruelty. And one Badby, a Taylor, in Worceſterſhire, being condemned as an Heretick by the Biſhop of that Dioceſe, was brought up to this Convocation; whom when Arundell could not confute, nor make recant, he took the ſhorteſt way with him, delivered him over to the Secular Power, and had him burnt in Smithfield.

And one Sautre, a Prieſt, being condemned as a Relapſe, was degraded by Arundell, and burnt, in the Firſt of King Henry the IVth. And though it was the firſt Inſtance of this Kind in England, yet in the Writ for his Execution, Burning is called the common Puniſhment.

This way of refuting Hereticks did now, as it always will, increaſe their Number; for Men will always be apt to think thoſe in the Right, who can ſuffer Torments and Death for their Faith; and natural Compaſſion will incline all Perſons to pity them and eſteem them.

For now this Doctrine began to get Footing among Perſons of Quality; and how barbarouſly this Archbiſhop dealt with the Lord Cobham on this Account, I have already ſhewed you, Page 80, when I gave an Account of the Pariſh of Cobham. The wiſe Clergy finding theſe Opinions thus to increaſe, gueſſed rightly at the Cauſe of it, which was the Reading of the Holy Scriptures; and therefore that the common People, not knowing any Thing of God's Will and Law, might the better ſubmit to theirs, they in this Synod forbid the Bible to be Tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue.

I wiſh, ſaith Archbiſhop Parker, that when Arundell got this Decree to paſs, he had remembred what he once ſaid himſelf, in a Sermon at the Funeral of Queen Anne, Wife to King Richard the IId; for he there celebrated her with great Encomiums, becauſe, though a Bohemian by Birth, ſhe carefully ſtudied the Four Goſpels, which ſhe had gotten Tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue.

The Death of this Archbiſhop, which happened ſoon after this Prohibition of the Uſe of the Word of God, had ſomething in the Manner of it, which look'd like a Puniſhment from Heaven upon him, and was ſo interpreted at that Time, as all our Hiſtorians agree. For Arundell was ſtarved to Death, A. D. 1414, by a Swelling or Stoppage in his Throat, which rendred him unable to ſwallow any Thing down into his Stomach. And the Writers of King Henry the Vth's Reign ſay, that this ſeized upon him, as he was actually paſſing Sentence of Excommunication againſt the Lord Cobham. So that, as Archbiſhop Parker obſerves, This Man, that would not let the People be fed with the good Word of God, nor taſte of the Bread of Life, was himſelf deprived of ſubſiſting by common Food, and ſo periſhed by Hunger.

He was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, in the North Side of the Nave, in a Chapel which he had built for himſelf.

When he died, he was Owner of the Caſtle of Leeds in Kent; but whether as his own Eſtate, or not, I don't find.

This

This Archbiſhop was Four Times made Lord Chancellor, viz. in the Tenth and Fifteenth of King Richard the IId, and in the Fourth of King Henry the IVth. And again A. D. 1412. Spelman.

He built a new Steeple at the Weſt End of Canterbury Cathedral, which is ſtill called Arundell Steeple.

To prevent the ſpreading of Wickliffe's Doctrine, Arundell obtained ſome new Conſtitutions to be made in a Synod, whereby the Parochial Clergy were enjoined to preach in their Churches; and yet in another Synbd before held, A. D. 1408, he had prohibited them to do it, in order to make Room for the Friers Preachers; by whoſe Means the Parochial Clergy were repreſented as ſo Ignorant, as that they were not fit to be truſted any further than to read ſome Expoſitions upon the Creed, and the Decalogue, &c. and this only Four Times a Year. But now, to hinder the Growth of Truth, they grew learned all of a ſudden, and were not only permitted to preach (without Licenſes) in their own Pariſhes, but enjoined expreſly ſo to do.

If the Reader pleaſes to conſult Batteley's Cantuar. Sacra, in Append. Numb. XIII. d. and e. he may find an Abſtract of the Will, and an Inventory of the Goods of this Archbiſhop.

62. HENRY CHICHLEY.

HE was born at Higham-Ferrers in Northamptonſhire, and Educated in New-College in Oxford, where he was Fellow, and commenced Doctor of LL. Some Time after he was made, firſt Archdeacon, and then Chancellor of the Church of Salisbury. By King Henry the IVth he was employed in ſome Foreign Embaſſies, and by him made Biſhop of St. David's, A. D. 1408; he was then Abroad, and was Conſecrated by the Pope himſelf.

The next Year he was ſent as one of the Delegates to the pretended General Council at Piſa, where both the Heads of the Infallible Church of Rome, the two contending Popes, were depoſed; ſtiled Schiſmaticks, Hereticks, and Perjurers, and a new one ſet up in their Room; whoſe Name being Peter Philardus, he called himſelf Alexander the Vth. See Duck's Life of Chichley.

He was choſen by the Monks of Canterbury to be Archbiſhop, A. D. 1414, the King's Licenſe firſt obtained; but Chichley foreſeeing how the Pope would reſent that, would not accept of it on the Monks Election; alledging, that he could not leave St. David's without the Pope's Leave, but ſubmitted himſelf entirely to the Pope. Who as ſoon as ever he heard of this Choice, wrote to the Monks in the old Cant, That before Arundell's Death he had, in Deſign, provided for them another Archbiſhop, and therefore he vacated their Election, and put Chichley in by his Bull of Proviſion, who accepted it on thoſe Terms, and had his Pall ſent him from Rome.

And thus the Eminent Clergy, in other Caſes as well as this, preferring the Pope's Power to that of their Sovereign, notwithſtanding the Statutes of the Land againſt it, ſubmitted to be made Biſhops and Abbots by the Authority of the See of Rome, though at a very great Expence, rather than take it from the King, whoſe Right alone it was to beſtow ſuch Dignities.

In his firſt Year, finding the Commons in Parliament inclined to bear hard on the Clergy, and to leſſen their Revenues, he conſulted with the Biſhops, and they agreed (in order to divert this Storm) to put the young King on a War with France, and to give him from among themſelves, a large Supply for this Purpoſe; which was done, and did much endear the King to the Clergy, and made him ſtand by them in their Perſecutions of the Lollards.

And Chichley began This by a Speech in Parliament.

The Pope would not let Chichley exerciſe any Authority in his See, or Province, till he had ſworn Fidelity to the See of Rome; which on receiving his Pall he did. But then he was to Encounter with the King, who would not inveſt him with the Temporalities of his Archbiſhoprick, till he had renounced all ſuch Clauſes in the Pope's Bulls of Proviſion, which were to the Prejudice of the King's Prerogative. And ſuch a Difficuliy as this, muſt the Prelates be under, as long as their Heart was at Rome, and their Temporalities here, in the Power of a Prince of Spirit and Senſe.

A. D. 1415, a Synod being called at London, the Biſhops and Abbots met in St. Mary's Chapel in St. Paul's-Church; and the Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, and Proctors of the Parochial Clergy, withdrew into the Chapter-Houſe, where they conſulted and debated ſeparately; and hence came the Diſtinction between the Upper and Lower Houſe of Convocation. See Duck.

A. D. 1417, a Murder in a Riot being committed in St. Dunſtan's-Church in London, by the Servants of the Lord Strange; Chichley interdicted the Church, and Excommunicated all Perſons concerned, and made the Lord, and his Lady, and all their Servants, do Penance, and give Offerings in the Church.

A. D. 1421, he called a Synod at London, where a Tenth was granted by the Clergy; but then Lyndwood got ſome Conditions for them, as that they ſhould not be Impriſoned but for Theft, or Murder; and that it ſhould be Felony in any one to Caſtrate a Prieſt.

A. D. 1527, The Biſhop of Winton being made a Cardinal, and deſigned as Legate à Latere, Chichley wrote to the King about the Danger and Inconvenience of ſuch a Legantine Power, and prevailed with the King to forbid it. This much enraged the Pope, who henceforth became Chichley's Enemy.

A. D. 1428, the Biſhop of Winton, after long Application, and many Promiſes, was made a Cardinal and a Legate by Pope Martin the Vth; but before he exerciſed any of his Legantine Power, the King, by his Proctor, proteſted againſt any ſuch Power being exerciſed without his Conſent; and Chichley in Form made a Declaration, that he pretended to no ſuch Thing, nor to do any Thing which ſhould be inconſiſtent with the King's Prerogative, or the Laws of the Land.

He was alſo made to lay down his Office of Lord Chancellor, and he ſhould have been removed from the Privy-Council, had not his Noble Birth, and near Relation to the King, kept him in by Favour. However it was agreed he ſhould never be preſent, when any Matters between the King and the Pope came to be debated.

A. D. 1429, the Clergy granted the King a Tenth, and then obtained the ſame Privileges for themſelves and Servants, during a Convocation, as the Commons claim in a Seſſion of Parliament.

A. D. 1429, the Pope having by his Bulls of Proviſion Tranſlated Richard Biſhop of Lincoln to the See of York, the Dean and Chapter of that Church bravely oppoſed him, and forced the infallible Pope to tranſfer him back again to Lincoln by a contrary Bull.

Chichley called a Synod at London, A. D. 1430, in which the Clergy ſeem to have gone an uncommon Length, and a little out of their Ways; for they made an Order that all Tradeſmen ſhould ſell their Goods of a full Weight; and prohibited any one, under Pain of Excommunication, to uſe a certain deceitful Ballance, with which they cheated their Cuſtomers. (a)

What would not Church Power do, if it were duly eſtabliſhed? There would need no other Laws.

A. D. 1438, this Archbiſhop complained heavily in a Synod then ſitting at London, of the Injury offered him by Pope Eugenius, who had by his ſole Power given the Biſhoprick of Ely (after the preſent Biſhop's Death) to be held in Commendam, by the Archbiſhop of Roan. This he ſaid was a Thing never attempted by any Pope before, and would be a very pernicious Precedent. I don't find what the Synod could do to help him; but the Biſhop of Ely outliving the Archbiſhop of Roan, did thereby fruſtrate the Pope's Deſign for that Time.

Chichley died very Aged, A. D. 1443, and was buried in his own Cathedral, in a Tomb which he had before cauſed to be built for himſelf, on the North Side of the Choir; on the upper Part of it his Effigies was Carved in White Marble, and on the Side of it is his Epitaph.

His Life is written by Dr. Arthur Duck, in Latin, London 1687, Quarto, and was Tranſlated into Engliſh, and Printed by Chiſwell, in Octavo, 1699.

I have ſeen a Seal of this Archbiſhop's to a Deed, which is now in the Hands of Mr. Hare, Richmond Herald, where his Arms are born with Supporters. The only Inſtance of an Archbiſhop's ſo bearing them, who was not Noble.

Duck labours much to make him appear an Oppoſer of the Papal Power; but he ſeems to me to have been very tender, at leaſt unequal and inconſtant that way. One Inſtance I have mentioned above: Another is, that when Pope Martin ſuſpended his Legantine Power, becauſe he did not exert himſelf ſtrenuouſly in oppoſing the Statue of Proviſors, Chichley humbled himſelf to him, and procured the Biſhops, and the Univerſity of Oxford, to write to the Pope in his Behalf; and at the opening of the next Parliament he went, accompanied with ſeveral Biſhops, and Abbots, and exhorted the Commons to bring in a Bill to repeal thoſe Statutes, but they refuſed it; however, no Care was taken to put them in Execution, and ſo they ſignified little.

And this Behaviour of his pleaſed and ſatisfied the Pope ſo, that he received him into Favour, and reſtored him to his Legantine Power. (b)

His publick Benefactions were very conſiderable. For firſt, he built a large and ſtately Square Edifice in the North Part of the Suburbs of Oxford, which he deſigned for a College; but when it was near finiſhed, he diſliked it, and gave it to the Monks of St. Bernard, for a Place of Education for the Novices of that Order. In King Henry the VIIIth's Time this was ſeized on by the Crown, and being purchaſed by Sir Thomas White, an eminent Merchant in London, was by him altered and improved into that fine College which is now Dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, in that Univerſity.

After he had given this Building away to the Bernardine Monks, he choſe another Place to build a College on in the Middle of the Town, near St. Mary's-Church; and pulling down the Houſes, which he had purchaſed, together with the Land, he laid out a Square Court, and founded there the College of All-Souls in Oxford, purchaſing other Lands and Manners for its perpetual Endowment.

There having been alſo ſome Time before, a lofty and magnificent Structure built at Oxford, chiefly by the Munificence of the Duke of Glouceſter, the Upper Part of which was deſigned for a Library, and the Lower for the Publick Schools of Divinity; Chichley gave a great Sum of Money himſelf, and begg'd a good deal more from others, and got it compleated in that Noble Manner which it now appears in.

He gave alſo Two Hundred Marks to the Publick Stock of the Univerſity; and did very much Adorn and Enrich his own Cathedral of Canterbury with Buildings, Repairs, and other good Gifts.

He gave alſo very liberally towards the Repairs of Rocheſter-Bridge, and of the Church at Croyden in Surrey.

And at Higham-Ferrers in Northamptonſhire, the Place of his Birth, he founded a fine College for Secular Prieſts, and an Hoſpital for the Poor.

63. JOHN STAFFORD.

HE was the Son of Sir Humphrey Stafford, a Relation of the then Duke of Bucks; ſome ſay he was Son of the Earl of Stafford, born in the Pariſh of Abbotsbury in Dorſetſhire; and he was in Oxford bred up to the Study of the Civil and Canon Law, and Practiſed in the Court of the Arches, where Archbiſhop Chichley made him Vicar-General; he was alſo Dean of St. Martin's in London, a Prebendary of Sarum, Lincoln, and of Wells, of which latter Church he was alſo made Dean; and was ſo much in the Favour of King Henry the Vth, as to be made a Privy-Counſellor, and Treaſurer of England, A. D. 1422, and at length Biſhop of Bath and Wells; during which Time he was for a while Keeper of the Privy-Seal, and afterwards Lord Chancellor; and as ſome ſay, held that Office Eighteen Years, which I believe is longer than any other Perſon ever did: He had the Seal in December, 1432, and kept it till A. D. 1450.

He was Tranſlated to Canterbury, A. D. 1443, by the Pope's Bull of Proviſion.

The Year following, throughout his whole Province, he prohibited keeping of Fairs and Markets in Church-Yards; and unleſs in Time of Harveſt, on the Lord's-Day.

And A. D. 1445, he married King Henry the VIth to his Queen Margaret.

The next Year Pope Eugenius ſent to King Henry the VIth, the moſt valuable Preſent of the Golden Roſe, by a Pompous Embaſſy; and hoped by that Trifle to have obtained a Tenth of the Engliſh Clergy; and ſent over accordingly Bulls to raiſe it, and Officers to Collect it.

it. But the King would not permit any ſuch Impoſition on his Subjects, and prohibited the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from receiving the Bulls, or raiſing the Tax.

And again, A. D. 1452, the Clergy having granted the King Two Tenths to carry on his Wars, and to recover his Dominions in France; the Pope thought to get ſomething for himſelf too, from ſo generous a Convocation; but after a very artful Speech made on that Subject by one of the Emiſſaries of Rome, in that Synod; the Engliſh Clergy ſtood firm to their Point, and gave him in Return a great many good Words, and fine Speeches, but not one Farthing of Money.

While this Synod was Sitting, the Archbiſhop died at Maidſtone, A. D. 1452, and was buried in his own Cathedral at Canterbury, by the Martyrdom, and before the New Chapel Dedicated to the Virgin Mary, under a flat Marble Stone inlaid with Braſs, and with an Inſcription.

64. JOHN KEMP.

ON Stafford's Death, the Monks of Canterbury ſent to the King to deſire his Licenſe to Elect John Kemp, Archbiſhop of York, and Cardinal of Balbina, into their See; which having obtained, they regularly elected him, and notified it in Form. But Pope Nicholas would not acquieſce in this Choice; and being deſirous to trim the Matter as well as he could, ſo as not to diſoblige the King, nor the Chapter, and yet to preſerve his own Power, he conſtitutes Kemp Archbiſhop, by the now uſual Method of Proviſions, and accordingly ſends over Six Bulls on this Occaſion; and leſt this ſhould not be expenſive enough to him, nor bring Griſt enough to the Roman Mill, ſoon after other Bulls came over, by which Kemp was removed from the Cardinalſhip of Balbina, to that of St. Ruffina; and after theſe expenſive Tricks, he had his Croſs delivered him, his Pall ſent him, and was Inthroned in great Pomp, a Solemn Proceſſion being appointed on this Occaſion.

This Gentleman was born at Wye, in this County; and being Educated in the Study of the Canon and Civil Law, commenced Doctor in that Profeſſion, and was made Archdeacon of Durham. Afterwards, he was in a ſhort Time, made Dean of the Arches, and Vicar-General.

A. D. 1418, he was made Biſhop of Rocheſter: And A. D. 1422, was Tranſlated to Chicheſter; and from the See of Chicheſter to that of London the ſame Year. Three Years after, he was made Archbiſhop of York: And now A. D. 1452, he was Tranſlated to Canterbury.

There is nothing with regard to the Publick, remarkable, related of him by our Hiſtorians, in the ſhort Time that he continued in this High Station; for he died at Lambeth, A. D. 1454, and was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, on the South Side of the Choir, with a Monument, and an Inſcription Fair and Legible, inlaid in Letters of Braſs.

He founded a College for Secular Prieſts at Wye in Kent; of which more in its proper Place.

And as Hollingſhead ſaith, (a) repaired the Pulpit in St. Paul's Church-Yard, (I ſuppoſe he means that at Paul's-Croſs) and provided Maintenance for a Sermon there every Sunday. And ſome ſay he either built, or added to the Building of the Divinity School in Oxford.

He left a good Eſtate to his Relations, and advanced ſome of them to the Degree of Knighthood.

Some write that he was Lord Chancellor in the Fourth of King Henry the VIth, when he was Biſhop of London, and he continued in that Office to his Death. Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 795.

(a) Vol. I. Page 140.

65. THOMAS BOURCHIER.

In the Hiſtoria Elienſis, Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. Page 671, he is called Bowcer.

AS ſoon as Kemp's Obſequies were over, the Convent of Chriſt-Church ſent ſome of their Body to wait on the King, and to deſire his Licenſe to Elect an Archbiſhop; which the King gave them freely, without recommending any Perſon at all to them. They proceeded accordingly on the Congè de Eſlire, and unanimouſly choſe Thomas Bourchier, then Biſhop of Ely, a Gentleman of a great Family, being Brother to the Earl of Eſſex; and he had been, before he was made Biſhop of Ely, Chancellor of Oxford, and Dean of St. Martin's in London, and Biſhop of Worceſter. And as the King did not, ſo neither did the Pope now intermeddle with this Election; but he confirmed the Monks Choice by his Bulls, and ſo Bourchier was Confirmed, and Conſecrated, and ſoon after made a Cardinal; and was moſt magnificently Inthroned, A. D. 1454.

When theſe Things were over, he began to viſit his Church, and the Dioceſe of Canterbury, and made ſeveral good Regulations.

He was made Lord Chancellor, A. D. 1445, and reſigned the Seal the Year following.

A. D. 1461, he Crowned King Edward the IVth; and 1464, married him to Elizabeth, Daughter of Sir Richard Woodvile; and the Year following, he entertained the King and Queen at Canterbury, for ſeveral Days together, very Splendidly and Nobly; the Deſign of their Journey was to pay their Devotions at Becket's Shrine. And Two Years after, the whole Court made another Pilgrimage to that then celebrated Saint's Tomb, and offered there very great Gifts.

A. D. 1476, the Pope demanded a Supply from the Engliſh Clergy, to carry on his War againſt the Turks; but the King would not permit it, and wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to acquaint the Pope with his Reſolution.

And again when in the Year 1481, a new Demand was made from the Pope for Money on the ſame Account; and though the Pope urged his being ſo impoveriſhed by that War, that he was forced to ſell his Plate, Jewels, &c. yet he could here obtain no Supply.

A. D. 1483, on King Edward the IVth's Death, his Executors exhibited the Royal Will before this Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and deſired Time to conſider whether they ſhould act as Executors of it or not; during which Time Bourchier ſequeſtred all the King's Goods and Chatels, and took into his own Cuſtody the Great and Privy Seals, and the Signet.

The

The next Year this Archbiſhop, who did not much trouble his Head about Titles, Crowned the Uſurper Richard Duke of Glouceſter, King of England: And after King Henry the VIIth had overcome and ſlain him in Battle, he married that Victorious Prince to the Lady Elizabeth, eldeſt Daughter of King Edward the IVth, (by which Match the Houſes of York and Lancaſter were united) and Crowned them both King and Queen of England. And now after having been Archbiſhop Thirty Two Years, and paſſed a long Life without doing any Thing of himſelf very remarkable; he died at Knoll, A. D. 1484, and was buried on the North Side of the High Altar in Canterbury Cathedral, where ſtill remains a large and noble Monument of him.

He left by Will Two Thouſand Pounds to his Succeſſor for Dilapidations; and he gave alſo to the See, the Manor and Seat of Knoll, by Sevenoke in Kent, which he had purchaſed of Sir William Fiennes, and nobly enlarged and beautified: He gave alſo to each Univerſity One Hundred Pounds, to be kept to lend to poor Scholars. With the Encouragement of King Henry the VIth, he ſent over William Turner, Maſter of the Robes, and William Caxton, Merchant in London, to Harlem, to learn the Art of Printing, which was now in its Infancy. Theſe Two Men privately prevailed with one Frederick Corteles, an under Workman, for a Sum of Money, to come over into England, and to ſet up a Printing-Preſs at Oxford. This was before Printing was uſed in any other Place, except at Mentz and Harlem, and except indeed alſo at Rome; for I take it to be plain, that Printing was there practiſed in the Palace of the Maximi by Conrade Sweynham, and Arnold Pannurtz, both Germans, in the Year 1455.

As to this Preſs thus ſet up at Oxford, there is a Book Printed there, viz. Ruffinus upon the Creed, A. D. 1468, which is about Three Years before the Edition of Tully's Offices at Metz; and probably this Oxford Book is one of, if not the very firſt, of Books Printed upon Paper; for that of Tully's Offices is Printed on Vellum.

66. JOHN MORTON.

THIS Archbiſhop was born at Bere in Dorſetſhire, and educated in the Univerſity of Oxon, in the then moſt faſhionable and advantageous Learning, the Civil and Canon Law. He came to London, after having taken his Degrees, and practiſed in the Court of the Arches: Here he became known to, and intimate with his Predeceſſor Bourchier, who not only heaped Benefices upon him, but carried him to Court, and made him known to King Henry the VIth, to whom he was a uſeful and faithful Counſellor: And his Loyalty and Fidelity to his Sovereign was ſo Eminent throughout all the Difficulties and Viciſſitudes of Fortune which befel that Prince, that he never deſerted him in any of his Diſtreſſes. Which did him Service even with his Maſter's Enemies, when they came into Power: For it endeared King Edward the IVth ſo to him, that he employed him in Matters of the higheſt Truſt, and rewarded his Services proportionably. By this King he was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Ely; and when he died, he appointed him one of the Executors of his Will. This produced him the Hatred and Malice of the Uſurper Richard the IIId; ſo that he accuſed him of Treaſon, and clapp'd him up in the Tower of London; and after ſome Time, not being able to produce any Treaſonable Facts againſt him, diſcharged him from thence at the Requeſt of the Univerſity of Oxford, whom he was not willing to diſoblige, and committed him to the Cuſtody of his Brother in Iniquity, the Duke of Buckingham, who ſent him to a Caſtle of his at Brecknock in Wales; where, after King Richard the IIId and Buckingham had fallen out, he did in Conſort with Buckingham contrive that Scheme, which ended in the Uſurper's Death, and the Eſtabliſhment of King Henry the VIIth upon the Throne. The Particulars of this you may find in Sir Thomas More's Hiſtory of the Life and Reign of King Edward the Vth, and Richard the IIId, with the Supplement to it, taken out of our Chronicles, in the Firſt Volume of the Hiſtory of England, lately put out by a very judicious and faithful Hand.

As ſoon as the Deſign to bring in King Henry the VIIth was thoroughly formed, Moreton went over into Flanders to him, and returned hither with him; and after the King was placed on the Throne, he was made by him Chancellor of England, and on Bourchier's Death, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; procuring him to be Elected by the Monks of Chriſt-Church, and to be confirmed by the Pope's Bulls, A. D. 1486.

A. D. 1494, he was created a Cardinal.

He died A. D. 1500, at his Manor of Knoll, by Sevenoke in Kent, and was buried in the Undercroft of the Cathedral of Canterbury, under a Marble Stone, but without any Inſcription, in a Place where he had built a very ſumptuous Chapel.

This Great Man had a truly Publick Spirit, and has left a great many Inſtances of it upon Record. When Rocheſter-Bridge was broken down, A. D. 1489, he contributed liberally towards its Repair, and made one of the beſt Uſes that can be, of a Pious Fraud; for knowing it would go down with, and be believed by the People of that Superſtitious Age, he publiſhed Remiſſion of all the Pains of Purgatory to all People within his Province, for whatever Sins they ſhould commit within Forty Days Time, if they would contribute any Thing towards its Rebuilding or Finiſhing.

He beſtowed a great deal of Coſt on the Houſes belonging to the Archbiſhoprick at Lambeth, Canterbury, Ford, Charing, Allington-Park, Maidſtone and Knoll.

He compleated the new Building of what they call at Canterbury, Bell-Harry-Steeple, as appears in many places by his Rebus carved in the Stonework; which, according to the Punning Heraldry of thoſe Times, was the Word Mor written upon a Tun.

He gave the Lands in Mote-Park by Maidſtone, to the See of Canterbury for ever, for the Maintenance of a Chantry Prieſt in the Nunnery of St. Sepulchre's in Canterbury.

He gave One Hundred Twenty Eight Pounds, Six Shillings and Eight Pence, to be paid Annually for Twenty Years ſucceſſively, towards the Maintenance of Twenty Students in Oxford, and Ten in Cambridge.

And Sir William Dugdale, in his Hiſtory of Imbanking and Draining, ſaith, That the very firſt Attempt which was made in England for the general Draining of thoſe vaſt Fenns which lie in Cambridgeſhire, and the adjacent Counties, were made by the Encouragement of this this wiſe and great Prelate, when he was Biſhop of Ely.

His Life was particularly written by Dr. Budden, Principal of Newin-Hall in Oxford, and Printed in Octavo, London, 1607.

On Morton's Death, the Monks of Canterbury, by the King's Licenſe, Elected Thomas Langton, Biſhop of Winton, to ſucceed him; but he died of the Plague, (which then was very Riſe) before his Confirmation.

67. HENRY DENE, alias DENNY.

THIS Gentleman, ſome ſay, was born at, but doubtleſs educated in Oxford, where he commenced Doctor of Divinity, and was made Abbot of Lanthony. By King Henry the VIIth, he was made Chancellor of Ireland; where he behaved himſelf ſo well againſt the Impoſtor Perkin Warbeck, that the King made him Biſhop of Bangor. Dene found that See in a very poor and ſhattered State; the Biſhops of it not having uſed to reſide there for a long while, but lived upon ſome good Abbey or other, which they uſually held in Commendam.

But he took great Pains in recovering the Lands, which by his Predeceſſor's Neglect had been torn away from the See; and particularly with regard to the Iſland of Seals: And after he had recovered it by Law, he reduced it by an armed Force, and drove out the uſurping Poſſeſſors.

The Church and Palace which had been deſtroyed and burnt in King Henry the IVth's Reign by Owen Glandower, he repaired at a great Expence; and though he was made Biſhop of Sarum before the Work was quie finiſhed, yet he left a Mitre and Croſier of great Value to his Succeſſor, to enable and oblige him to go on with the Buildings. He ſtaid but a little while at Sarum, before he was tranſlated hither.

Which he was by the Election of the Monks of Chriſt-Church, A. D. 1500.

The Pope ſent him the Pall by his Secretary, which the Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry, being ſpecially Commiſſioned from his Holineſs, delivered to him in this Form of Words, A. D. 1501.

"Ad honorem Dei omnipotentis & Beatæ "Mariæ Virginis ac beatorum Petri & Pauli "Apoſtolorum, & Domini Noſtri Alexandri "Papæ VI. & Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ, nec "non & Cantuarienſis Eccleſiæ tibi commiſ"ſæ, tradimus Pallium de corpore Beati "Petri ſumptum; Plenitudinem videlicet Pon"tificalis Officij, ut uteris eo infra Eccleſiam "tuam certis diebus qui Exprimuntur in Privi"legijs ei ab Apoſtolicâ ſede conceſſis.

And after the Reception of this far fetch'd and dear bought Bauble, in this ſolemn manner delivered to him, Dene took the following Oath.

"Ego H. Arch. Cantuarienſis, ab hâc horâ "ut antea fidelis & obediens ero Beato Petro "Sanctæque Apoſt. Rom. Eccleſiæ & Domino "meo Domino Alexandro Papæ VI. & ſuis "ſucceſſoribus Canonice intrantibus. Non "ero in conſilio aut conſenſu vel facto ut "vitam perdant vel membrum, ſeu capiantur "malâ Captione. Sic me Deus ad"juvet, & hæc Sancta Dei Evangelia.

And this Oath every Biſhop alſo was obliged to take at his coming into his See; by which he became a perfect Slave to Rome, and was obliged to obey the Pope, even in Oppoſition to his Sovereign, and the Laws of his Country.

One of the Obituaries cited by Wharton, ſaith he was never Inſtalled in Perſon.

He died at Lambeth, February the 14th, 1502. His Body was carried to Feverſham by Water, and thence to Canterbury Cathedral, where it was interred under a flat Marble Stone, in the Place called the Martyrdom.

Wever hath preſerved his Epitaph, but the inlaid Braſs on which it was Engraved is now gone.

He died Rich, but met with very knaviſh Executors, who defrauded his Legatees.

68. WILLIAM WARHAM.

HE was of a good Family in Hantſhire, and I believe born at Okeley, and was Educated at Wincheſter, and New-College in Oxford, where he commenced LL. D. and practiſed in the Court of the Arches in London. He was firſt made Rector of Barley in Hertfordſhire.

A. D. 1494, he was made Keeper of the Rolls, and as ſome ſay was Chancellor of Oxon. King Henry the VIIth ſent him on an Embaſſy to the Dutcheſs of Burgundy, about the Affairs of the Two Impoſtors and Pretenders, Lambert Symnell, and Perkin Warbeck; which he diſcharged ſo much to his Maſter's Satisfaction, that at his Return he was made Biſhop of London.

He was Tranſlated to Canterbury, A. D. 1503: And it appears by his Regiſter, cited by Dr. Gibſon in his Code, Page 122, that before and after his Conſecration, he had all theſe Bulls and Inſtruments from Rome, which are flagrant Inſtances of the Uſurpations and Exactions of the See of Rome, and what vaſt Sums of Money muſt be ſent thither on ſuch Accounts before the Reformation.

1. Bulla Tranſlationis. 2. Bulla Abſolutionis; i. e. from his Church of London. 3. Bulla Suffraganeis Cant. 4. Bulla Clero Civitatis & Diœceſeos Cant. 5. Bulla Vaſſalijs Eccleſ. Cant. 6. Bulla Populo Civitatis & Eccleſ. Cant. (all which which were only to oblige the Suffragan Biſhops, his Clergy, People, and Vaſſals, to receive and obey him.) 7. Commiſſio ad Recipiendum Juramentum Papæ præſtandum. 8. Bulla Deſtinationis Pallij. 9. Commiſſio ad Tradendum Pallium. 10. Certificatorium ſuper Juramentum præſtit. 11. Certificatorium ſuper Traditione Pallij. And the ſame Number of Bulls, now very much increaſed, in Compariſon of what they had formerly been, had his Succeſſor Cranmer.

His Inthronization was performed at Canterbury, with very great Pomp and Magnificence; the Duke of Buckingham executing in Perſon the Office of his High-Steward; and delegating that of Chief Butler to Sir Thomas Bourchier, and came attended with One Hundred and Forty Horſe. He rode on Horſeback Bareheaded into the great Hall of the Archbiſhop's Palace in Canterbury, before the firſt Meſs of Meat that was carried up, then made his Obeyſance, and retired. The Feaſt was very Sumptuous. Antiq. Brit. Page 304.

He married Prince Arthur, and Catharine Daughter of Ferdinand King of Spain; and on the Death of the former, which happened ſoon after, it was concluded, that in order to keep her great Portion here, and to ſtrengthen the Kingdom by ſuch an Alliance; that Prince Henry, the younger Brother, ſhould Marry her, and he did ſo; but Warham rightly declared againſt the Lawfulneſs of the Marriage, notwithſtanding the Pope ſhould grant a Diſpenſation for it: But after it was granted, Warham married them.

He was made Lord Chancellor by King Henry the VIIth, and held that Office till about the Eighth of King Henry the VIIIth. But A. D. 1515, Woolſey got the Seal from him into his own Cuſtody, who as Cardinal and Legate from the Pope, ſet up a Superior Juriſdiction to that of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and hated Warham perſonally for telling the King of ſome of his irregular Proceedings; and when in 1522, a Convocation or Provincial Synod had been called by Warham, he diſſolved it by Virtue of his Legantine Power, and then called it again; pretending that as Legate, he only had a Right to ſummon ſuch Aſſemblies.

Though, as is above ſaid, he had declared the Match between Prince Henry and his Brother's Widow to be unlawful, and poſſeſs'd the King ſo againſt it, that when the Prince came of Age, he declared by his Father's Order, that he took it to be null; yet was this Warham one of Queen Catharine's Council, and was againſt the Divorce. But King Henry the VIIIth at laſt got him over to his Side. And Baily, the Writer of Biſhop Fiſher's Life, ſaith that he put that Biſhop's Hand to an Inſtrument, expreſſing his Judgment to be for the Divorce. But Fiſher declared in open Court, that it was done without his Knowledge or Conſent; and the ſame Thing Biſhop Burnet ſaith alſo in his Hiſtory of the Reformation; ſo that it ſeems probable that Warham was guilty of that Forgery.

Baily ſaith alſo, that after Warham had heard what Elizabeth Barton, the Nun of Kent, had Propheſied againſt the King; and that he had talked with her himſelf, he died of Grief. But Warham ſeems to me rather to have been in a Combination with that Wench, than otherwiſe, unleſs you can excuſe him, by ſuppoſing him to be impoſed upon by thoſe about him, which indeed is no uncommon Caſe; for the Commiſſioners which he ſent out to enquire into that Affair, certainly contributed to the carrying on the Impoſture; ſo that either he was let into the Secret, or elſe was a very careleſs and credulous Man, which is not anſwerable to his Character in other Reſpects. For Eraſmus, a good Judge, ſaith, he was a moſt accompliſhed Prelate, and eminent for his Learning, Piety, Humanity and Integrity. But Biſhop Burnet ſaith, he was inclined to believe Fanatical Stories.

He came in at laſt into the Approbation of King Henry the VIIIth's Title of Supreme Head of the Church; and declared againſt the univerſal Authority of the Pope, becauſe perhaps he would have had a larger Share of it himſelf: And yet he was a violent Papiſt, as appears by the Acts of the laſt Provincial Synod in his Time; and by what Cranmer ſaid to Brooks, Biſhop of Glouceſter, not long before his Martyrdom, in the Hearing of a great Aſſembly. That he was of a perſecuting Spirit, is apparent from hence, that Forty Eight Perſons, moſt of them of and near Tenterden in Kent, being brought into his Court for Hereſy, Forty Three abjured, but Five of them, Four Men, and One Woman, were condemned; and after this, a Certificate was ſent by the Archbiſhop into the Court of Chancery; and there being no Pardon on Record, 'tis highly probable that they were burnt. The Popiſh Clergy, as Biſhop Burnet obſerves, ſeldom being guilty of any Mercy in ſuch Caſes.

He died, A. D. 1532, at his Brother, the Archdeacon of Canterbury's Houſe, in St. Stephen's near Canterbury, where he had laid out a good deal of Money; and was buried in that part of the Cathedral which they call the Martyrdom, on the North Side, where there is a ſtately Monument for him, but the Inſcription and his Arms are defaced.

He deſigned to have built a noble Palace for himſelf and his Succeſſors at Canterbury, (I ſuppoſe on the old Foundation) but the Town and he differing about ſome Ground which he would have had laid to it, he changed his Purpoſe, and laid out Thirty Three Thouſand Pounds on the Houſe belonging to the Archbiſhoprick at Otford; of which now ſcarce any Thing remains.

He is ſaid alſo to have made the Iron Work for the Coping on Rocheſter Bridge, but ſome aſcribe it to his Predeceſſor Dene.

69. THOMAS CRANMER,

WAS the Son of Thomas Cranmer, Eſq; of a very Ancient Family. He was Born at Aſlacton in Nottinghamſhire, July the 2d, A. D. 1489; (a) and at firſt put to School to a rude Pariſh Clerk, from whoſe harſh Temper he ſuffered more than he learnt by his Teaching.

His Father dying when he was very young, his Mother ſent him to Cambridge, A. D. 1503, when he was but Fourteen Years Old; where he loſt a great part of his Time in ſtudying the quibbling Sophiſtry, and Squabbling Logick of thoſe Times. But when he came to be Twenty Two Years of Age, he enured himſelf to read good Latin Authors; and when Luther began to write, finding thoſe Controverſies in Religion to be of the greateſt Moment,

ment, he ſet himſelf haſtily to enquire into them, and to form a right Judgment about them: And in particular he made the Sacred Scripture his Principal and Conſtant Study; in the Knowledge of which he became very ready and Learned. He was made Fellow of Jeſus-College in Cambridge, which he quitted ſoon after, on the Account of his having contracted Marriage; but his Wife and Child both dying within a Year, or thereabouts, he was rechoſen into his Fellowſhip again. Here he ſtaid and reſided, and refuſed to be preferred by Cardinal Wolſey, in the College he had newly erected in Oxford, whither he was invited, together with ſeveral of the ripeſt and moſt ſolid Scholars at that Time in Cambridge.

A. D. 1523, He commenced Doctor of Divinity.

He was made Divinity Lecturer in his own College, and by the Univerſity was appointed one of the Examiners of thoſe that went out Bachelors, and Doctors of Divinity.

When King Henry the VIIIth began to doubt in good Earneſt about the Lawfulneſs of his Marriage with Queen Katharine, his Brother Arthur's Widow; he ſent to Six of the moſt Learned Men in each Univerſity, to know their Judgments about it. Cranmer was one of theſe in Cambridge, but was not Reſident at the Time when the King ſent to that Univerſity, and ſo another was pitched upon inſtead of him.

But ſome Time after, I believe in the Year 1529, when Fox and Gardiner, the King's Almoner and Secretary, meeting by Accident with Cranmer at Mr. Creſſie's of Waltham-Abbey in Eſſex, they deſired to know his Judgment about that now famous Caſe.

Cranmer with all Readineſs adviſed, that the King ſhould firſt conſult the Opinion of the moſt learned Divines, in order to ſatisfy his own Conſcience, and then after that proceed as his Majeſty liked beſt; without carrying for ſuch tedious Methods and Delays, as he would certainly meet with, if he applied to the Spiritual Courts. They liked this very well, and acquainting the King with it, he approved much of it alſo.

Baily, the Writer of Biſhop Fiſher's Life, places the Scene of this at St. Tooſes, a Houſe of the Lord Darcy, near Colcheſter, where Cranmer was with one of his Pupils, to avoid the Plague then raging at Cambridge; and he makes him ſay, That if the King knew but his own Power and Office, neither Pope, nor any other Power, had any Thing to do with it, nor with any Thing in his Dominions, where he was Supreme Governor in all Cauſes: This he ſaid with regard to the King's Application to the Pope. And when the King was told this, Baily ſaith, he ſwore he would not Sleep till he had ſeen Cranmer, who had got the Sow by the right Ear; ſent for Cranmer to Court, deſired him to put his Judgment into Writing; and in the mean Time diſpoſed of him in the Family of Sir Thomas Bolen, then Earl of Wiltſhire and Ormond, and Father of the Famous Anna Bolen, afterwards Queen of England.

This Nobleman was a Religious, Learned, and Ingenious Man, well read in the Sacred Scriptures, and in Philoſophical Studies, as appears by ſeveral Paſſages in Eraſmus's Epiſtles, to whom he was well known, and a good Friend and Patron; as he was indeed of all Men of Virtue and Learning.

And no doubt it was a happy Providence that Cranmer was placed in this Family, for hereby he became more confirmed, as well as better inſtructed in the Principles of the Reformed Religion; of the Promotion of which, Sir Thomas, and his Family, were great and happy Inſtruments. Biſhop Burnet adds on this Occaſion, that Cranmer alſo ſaid, it was certain the Pope's Diſpenſation could not derogate from the Laws of God, and therefore the Marriage muſt have been unlawful. And he ſaith alſo, that the King was ſo pleaſed with Cranmer's Learning, Prudence, Sincerity and Courage, that it made a deep Impreſſion on his Mind; and which no Artifices nor Calumnies were ever able to remove.

A. D. 1530, Cranmer was ſent Abroad into France, Italy, Germany, &c. with the Earl of Wiltſhire, and ſeveral others, to Reaſon and Diſpute the Affair of the King's Divorce with the Divines and Canoniſts at Paris, Rome, &c. which he did with very good Succeſs; maintaining both that the King's Marriage was in itſelf unlawful, and that the Pope's Diſpenſation could not make it otherwiſe.

In this Courſe of his Travels he was conſtituted ſole Ambaſſador to the Emperor, and he viſited the eminent Divines of Germany; and married the Niece of Oſiander, Paſtor of Norimberg.

In this Embaſſy he ſhewed himſelf alſo a curious Obſerver of the Political Affairs of the Courts which he Viſited; and he was employed alſo in ſettling the Traffick between the Engliſh Merchants, and thoſe of the Low Countries; and in ſeveral other Affairs of no leſs Importance.

While he was Abroad on this Affair, Archbiſhop Warham died A. D. 1532. On which the King immediately reſolved that Cranmer ſhould ſucceed him in that great Station; and accordingly he wrote to him to haſten Home, but without acquainting him with the Reaſon of that Command. (a) At his Return, the King with much Difficulty made him accept of that great Preferment; and yet his Income could not be very great; for beſides what the King might allow him as his Chaplain, and as employed in theſe Affairs of Truſt, he was only Archdeacon of Taunton in Somerſetſhire; the Pope indeed had given him the Title of Pœnitentiary General of England; but what Profit it brought I don't know.

Biſhop Burnet ſeems to think that the King did let Cranmer know the Reaſon of his ordering him to haſten Home, and yet he returned very ſlowly to England; for a Promotion ſo far above his Thoughts, had not the common Effect upon him; he had a true and Primitive Senſe of ſo great a Charge, and did not think only how Rich he ſhould grow by it: Inſtead of aſpiring to it, he was afraid of it; and when he came Home, uſed all Endeavours to be excuſed from that Advancement. And this declining of Preferment being a Thing of which the Clergy of that Age were ſo little guilty, diſcovered that he had Maxims very different from moſt Churchmen.

When at laſt he was prevailed upon to take the Archbiſhoprick, Bulls were ſent for to Rome, in order to his Conſecration; which the Pope granted, though it could not be very grateful to him, ſaith Biſhop Burnet, to ſend them to one who had ſo publickly diſputed againſt his Diſpenſing Power; all the Compoſition that was paid for them was but Nine Hundred Ducats, which perhaps was according to the Regulation made in the Act againſt Annats.

(a) Strype's Life of Cranmer.

There

There were Eleven ſeveral Bulls ſent over, as Warham had, but with different Titles. 1. To confirm the King's Nomination. 2. To require him to accept the Archbiſhoprick. 3. To abſolve him from Cenſures. 4. To the Suffragan Biſhops to receive and obey him. 5. To the Dean and Chapter to do ſo. 6. To his Clergy. 7. To the Laity. 8. To the Tenants of the See to do the ſame. 9. To certain Biſhops to Conſecrate him. 10. To give him the Pall. And 11. To require the Archbiſhop of York to put it on upon him.

The taking the Oath above-mentioned, of Obedience to the Pope, was hard of Digeſtion; wherefore he made a Proteſtation before he took it, That he conceived himſelf not bound by it in any Thing that was contrary to his Duty to God, to the King, or to his Country; And this he repeated when he did take the Oath: And as our Author obſerves, if in this he acted a little too artificially for a Man of his Sincerity, yet he did it fairly, and above board. But it was a pretty large Stretch, and is more capable of Palliation than Excuſe.

He was Conſecrated in St. Stephen's-Chapel in Weſtminſter, A. D. 1533.

On May the 23d of the ſame Year, at Dunſtable, he pronounced the Sentence of Divorce of King Henry the VIIIth from Queen Katharine, the Biſhops of London, Winton, Lincoln, Bath and Wells, &c. being joined in Commiſſion with him; and among the Archbiſhop's Titles he is ſtiled Legate of the Apoſtolick See; which perhaps was now put in without the Pope's particular Cogniſance, as if he were Legatus Natus, to add the greater Sanction to this Judgment, in Point of Law.

A. D. 1534, The Supremacy of the King was ſettled by Act of Parliament; in the carrying and paſſing of which Matter, Cranmer labour'd hard, the Task of anſwering almoſt all the Popiſh Objections lying upon him.

A. D. 1535, He was very zealous for the Viſitation and Diſſolution of the Monaſteries; and as he had been mighty diligent in getting a Tranſlation of the Holy Bible into Engliſh, ſo he expreſſed great Joy at its being finiſhed Two Years after; and by Cromwell preſented one to the King.

And when A. D. 1538, he obtained a Declaration that the Bible might be read in Engliſh, it was received every where with mighty Joy and Satisfaction.

But the large Engliſh Bible was not finiſhed till the Year 1540.

The Popiſh Biſhops were terribly, and that juſtly, alarmed at the common Peoples thus having the Knowledge of the Sacred Scriptures allowed them: And in about Two Years after this, obtained a Prohibition of the common Uſe of it, by the Power that they then had over the King; who yet, though he thus complied with his Biſhops for Reaſons of State, was in his Judgment entirely for the free Uſe of the Sacred Scriptures; as appears by what Udale ſaith of him, who Tranſlated Eraſmus's Paraphraſe upon the Goſpel of St. Luke into Engliſh.

About this Time Cranmer was in many Troubles, by the baſe Contrivances of Gardiner Biſhop of Winton, and others; but the King graciouſly acquainted him with the whole Deſign againſt him, and ſtood very firm in his Favour and Friendſhip to him, by which Means the Storm blew quite over.

A. D. 1541, this Archbiſhop obſerving the Exceſſes in Biſhops Tables; by which, under the Name of Hoſpitality, ſo much was conſumed in great Entertainments, that they were diſabled from more neceſſary and profitable Acts of Charity, he made a Regulation, that an Archbiſhop ſhould not have above Six Diſhes of Meat, and Four of Banquet, as the Word was then; a Biſhop not above Five, and Four of Banquet; a Dean, or an Archdeacon, not above Four in all; and inferior Clergymen not above Two. But it had not its deſired Effect.

He did alſo this Year a very bold, though an honeſt and faithful Thing to the King his Maſter; which was to acquaint him with the Laſcivious Life of the Queen, (Katharine Howard) which one Laſſely had diſcovered to him, by Means of his Siſter; for it ſhock'd the Amorous King very much; but on further Enquiry it proved too true, and ended in her Deſtruction.

1542, The Biſhops in Convocation took great Pains to ſuppreſs the Engliſh Bible, which they knew let the People daily into Diſcoveries prejudicial to the Hierarchy: And when they could not prevail on the King to call it in, they complained much of the bad Tranſlation of it, and would fain, to gain Time, have had that been prohibited, and a new one made. But Cranmer ſaw through all this, and therefore got an Order from the King to refer the Correction of the Verſion to the Two Univerſities; which the Biſhops took ſo ill, that all of them but Ely and St. Davids, proteſted againſt it.

The next Year Cranmer, and ſome other Biſhops, brought in a Bill for the Advancement of True Religion, in which were ſeveral good Regulations.

About this Time Cranmer was in great Danger again, by the Contrivances of Biſhop Gardiner, and one Doctor London, who had dreſſed up Informations againſt him, as the chief Promoter and Abettor of Hereſy; and had gotten them ſhewed to the King; but the King would not deſert him, and communicated the whole Deſign to him. And yet Cranmer did not preſs the King to give any Reparation; and was ſo noted for his Forgiveneſs of Injuries, and to do Good for Evil, that it was commonly ſaid, the beſt way to obtain his Favour was to do him an Injury.

All that he did upon this Affair, was to promote the Acts which paſſed the Year following, to qualify the Severity of that which eſtabliſhed the Six Articles, and to Authorize Thirty Two Perſons to reform the Eccleſiaſtical Laws; and to ſet this latter Deſign the more vigorouſly on Foot, he drew out a Collection from the Canon Law, of many Things which were againſt the Regal, and for the Papal Authority, &c. But with all his Endeavours he could bring nothing to bear on this Head, during the King's Reign; though the Act paſſed, and the Commiſſioners came to a good Concluſion about it, by forming a new Book of thoſe Laws: But Gardiner, and the other Popiſh Biſhops, influenced the King to ſuſpend his Aſſent to theſe Regulations. The Archbiſhop alſo in King Edward the VIth's Reign revived this Affair, and was very deſirous of making a good Body of the Canon and Civil Laws, but he could never get it effected.

A. D. 1546, on the Peace and Reconciliation between the Two Kings of England and France, and during the Time that the Council of Trent was Sitting; it was agreed between them, that the Maſs ſhould be turned into a Communion, and Cranmer was ordered to prepare an Office for it; but both the Kings being in Years, and in the laſt Periods of their Reigns, it came to nothing.

This Year alſo the cruel Popiſh Party were contriving again to ruin Cranmer, and preſſed the King to put him into the Tower, and then he ſhould ſoon ſee that they had Matter enough againſt him. The King ſeemed to conſent to this, and they reſolved to execute it the next Day: But he kindly ſent for Cranmer in the Night, and told him what was reſolved about him. Cranmer thanked the King for giving him Notice of it, and not leaving him to be ſurprized: He ſubmitted to it, and only deſired that he might anſwer for himſelf, and before indifferent and intelligent Judges. The King wondred to ſee him have ſo little a Regard for his own Safety; and told him, That he muſt take Care of him, ſince he took ſo little for himſelf. And accordingly the King ordered him to appear before the Council, and to demand to ſee his Accuſers before he ſhould be ſent to the Tower, and that he might be uſed by them as they would deſire to be done by in the like Caſe; and that if he could not prevail by the Force of Reaſon, then to produce the King's Seal Ring, which he then took off from his Finger and gave him. Cranmer obeyed, and being ſent for next Morning to attend the Council, they had the Inſolence to let him, though Primate of all England, and one of their own Body, to wait an Hour without Doors, before they would admit him into the Council; when he was there he reaſoned with them, as the King had commanded him; but finding it all in vain, and that they were reſolved to condemn him right or wrong, he produced the Ring, and put them all into Confuſion.

And when after this they went and complained to the King, he chid them ſeverely, and expreſſed his Friendſhip for Cranmer in ſuch high Terms, that his Enemies were forced to get off, by ſaying, by the Duke of Norfolk, that they would only have brought him to a fair Trial, where his Innocence might the more eminently appear; and after this they never dared to attempt any Thing againſt him with the King.

Who after this ſent to Canterbury, to enquire whether any real Faults could be objected againſt Cranmer, and found it all the Malice only of the Papiſts.

As ſoon as his Godſon, King Edward the VIth, came to the Crown, Cranmer, who was one of his Guardians by King Henry the VIIIth's Will, took out a Commiſſion under the Great Seal to execute his Archiepiſcopal Power; which you may ſee in Hiſt. Reform. Part. II. Page 90; and ſoon after he performed the Ceremony of Crowning that Prince: A Book of Homilies was by his Means prepared to be read in Churches in the Engliſh Tongue, as was alſo Eraſmus's Paraphraſe on the New Teſtament, appointed to be ſet up in all Churches in the ſame Language, that all the People who pleaſed might read it.

And ſoon after, a Convocation being called, the Archbiſhop was very active in aboliſhing the Remains of Popery; and in getting good Laws for the Eſtabliſhment of the Reformation: He put forth alſo a Catechiſm for the Benefit of the younger People, and appointed good Preachers in Canterbury, and other Parts of his Dioceſe. He obtained alſo a Royal Viſitatorial Power to make Enquiries into the Manners and Abilities of the Clergy, and to remove Superſtitious Worſhip.

The next Year, A. D. 1549, by the great Care and Vigilance of this Archbiſhop, the Book of Common-Prayer was finiſhed, and eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament; and about the end of the Year following a Review of it was made by Cranmer, in Concurrence with ſome other Biſhops, and with the Judgment of ſeveral Foreign Divines, as Bucer, &c. whereby ſeveral Things were altered and amended in it, which were deemed to ſavour ſomething of the old Superſtition.

And A. D. 1551, the New Book of Common-Prayer was authorized by Parliament, and was ſoon after Printed.

And now alſo Cranmer, and the other Commiſſioners, went on again in Earneſt about finiſhing the Book of Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and brought it to a good Degree of Perfection; but ſtill through other Buſineſs intervening, or by the artful Malice of ſome, who were Enemies to the Deſign, it never had the King's Ratification.

1. In the firſt Parliament of King Edward the VIth it was Enacted, that all Proceſſes out of the Spiritual Courts ſhould be iſſued in the King's Name only, and under the King's Seal of Arms; in which Law our Archbiſhop was Inſtrumental. But this Statute being repealed in Queen Mary's Reign, and being neither revived by Queen Elizabeth, nor any of our Princes ſince, the Biſhops and their Officers have gone on to exerciſe all Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction in their own Names, and under the Seals of their ſeveral Officers, as before that Act.

2. After this, by the Advice and Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops, he drew up Articles of Religion, which were publiſhed by the King's Authority, and the Clergy were obliged to Subſcribe them.

About this Time Cranmer ſent over for many Eminent Foreign Divines of the Reformed Religion, and maintained them here in a great Meaſure at his own Expence.

A. D. 1553, Cranmer heartily oppoſed the new Settlement of the Crown, that was propoſed to be made in Behalf of the Lady Jane Grey, though at laſt, at the King's importunate Requeſt he was prevailed upon to Sign it: In which, as he ſhewed a good deal of Courage in oppoſing the great Duke of Northumberland, ſo it ſhould have influenced Queen Mary to have treated him with more Mercy than ſhe did afterwards. He alſo once before in her Father's Reign, ſtood up for her, and interceded with the King for her, when no body elſe dared to do it; and when his Rage was ſo great againſt her, that he deſigned to deſtroy her. But Acts of Friendſhip are ſooner forgot than Injuries; ſhe could never forgive his being ſo Inſtrumental as he was, in the Divorce of her Mother, and for his coming in at all to the Affair of the Lady Jane.

However, after her coming to the Crown, though he could expect no Quarter from a Princeſs of her Religion and Reſentment, yet he would not fly, though he adviſed others ſo to do; but he ſaid, that would much miſbecome one of his Station in the Church. So he only retired to his Houſe at Bekesbourn in this County; where ſome Papers written with his own Hand, were found behind the Wainſcot, when that Palace was demoliſhed; they were of a private Nature, and related only to the Affairs of his Family. From hence he removed to Ford, where he received a Summons to appear before the Council.

In this his Retirement, he was ſlandered with the Deſign of turning Papiſt, and of ſetting up the Maſs in Canterbury. This was done by the Artifices of Thornton, then Suffragan Bishop of Dover. Against this he wrote a Paper, and designed to publish it, declaring the Report to be all false; and that himself, and Peter Martyr, with Four or Five more whom he could name, were ready to prove, and shew the Errors of the Mass, and to defend the Doctrine set forth by King Edward.

A Copy of this being got from him, was read publickly in Cheapside, for which he was cited to the Starchamber, where he owned it, and his Design of publishing it. But nothing was yet done to him.

In the first Parliament of that cruel Queen, he was attainted of High-Treason, and judged guilty at Guild-Hall; and consequently his Archbishoprick was immediately Sequestred. He was likewise excommunicated and deposed by the Pope, as a notorious Heretick; by a Sentence mentioned in Pole's Bull of Provision to succeed him; and there he is called the Child of Iniquity.

He Petitioned the Queen for a Pardon, about the Affair of the Lady Jane; she stood out a good while, but at last it was resolved that he should be pardoned the Treason, but prosecuted for Heresy; with which he appeared to be very well satisfied. But soon after this, both He, Ridley, Latimer, and Bradford, were all committed to the Tower, which was then so full of Prisoners, that these Four were all confined to one Room.

A. D. 1554, the Convocation met at St. Pauls in London, and then was adjourned to Oxford, whither Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, were removed from the Tower of London, in order to hold a Disputation with a Committee appointed for that Purpose. The Questions on which they were to dispute, were sent to Cambridge also, that some subtle Disputants might come from thence to teaze and bait these Three Prisoners, and expose them to the Contempt of the young Scholars. And accordingly, after the Dispute began, much Tumult and Noise was made by the Papists, on purpose to confound and disturb them; but our Three Bishops managed themselves severally with so much Judgment, Boldness, Temper, and Address, that they maintained their Point, and gained the Approbation of the sober Part of the Audience, notwithstanding all these Arts and Tricks to baffle and expose them. These Disputations may be seen in Fox his Acts and Monuments, whither I refer the Reader.

Within Two Days after they were over, Cranmer, and his Two Friends with him, were condemned as obstinate Hereticks, by Commissioners appointed to set in Judgment upon them in St. Mary's Church in Oxon; and after that were remitted to the Bocardo-Prison. In this Confinement Cranmer employed himself vigorously in the Defence of his Writings about the Sacrament, against the Bishop of Winchester, and in disputing with Romish Priests and Fryars; he sent also a Petition to the Council, complaining of the Disorder and Rudeness of these Disputes, for the Prolocutor had called him Names.

In September following, a new Commission was brought from Rome for the Conviction of Cranmer; and these Commissioners, who were Brooks, Bishop of Glocester, and Two Delegates from the Queen, that sate also in St. Mary's Church, ordered Cranmer to be brought before them; for the other Two excellent Bishops and Martyrs had been tried, and burnt before, by a Commission from Cardinal Pole, as the Pope's Legate, and Cranmer saw them in the Flames out of his Window.

Before these Commissioners Cranmer was examined on Interrogatories, and Depositions of Witnesses were taken against him; but he would pay no Obedience nor Regard to Brooks, because he sate there by the Pope's Authority.

After which he was cited to appear at Rome in Person, within Eighty Days; which he said he was content to do, if he could have the Queen's Leave, and enjoy his Liberty, but he could not do it while a Prisoner. But the good Pope either believed he would not, or could not come, and therefore within less than Twenty Days, sent Letters to the King and Queen that he should be condemned, and then delivered over to the Secular Power.

And some Time after this, viz. in February following, the Pope sent a Commission to the Bishops of London and Ely, to degrade him from his Sacerdotal Orders, as well as his Archiepiscopal Dignity, because he had been put into the See by the Pope's Authority, and to give him to the Civil Magistrate to be burnt. And the Pretence was, that he was guilty of Contumacy, for not appearing at Rome; that is, for being confined in a Prison at Oxford, and not breaking Gaol. This Sentence Bonner and Thirlby executed upon him with great Pomp; but Cranmer denied the Pope's Authority, and appealed to a Free General Council; and he wrote Two Letters to the Queen, which were answered by Pole. When they found him thus resolute, they were afraid to burn him, without they could fix some Mark of Disgrace or Infamy upon him.

And therefore all possible Arts were used, and all Engines set at Work to make him Recant: Many English and Foreign Divines had Conferences with him on this Subject; and great Hopes both of his Life, and also of his being restored to his Preferment, were given, if he would do so: This, and the miserable Condition his Body was in at that Time, for he had been Two Years and an half in Prison, was Aged, half starved, and worn almost quite out, had that unhappy Effect on his Mind, that he was prevailed upon to Sign a Recantation of all his former Opinions; and he was made to declare also, that he did it voluntarily, and only to discharge his Conscience. So weak a Thing is Human Nature, under some Circumstances, even in the best and greatest of Men.

And now having gained their vile Design upon him, they were resolved to burn him notwithstanding, and had no more Regard to their Promises to him, than they had to Truth in general. The Queen canted, and declared, She was glad for his Soul's Health that he had repented; but that having been the chief Promoter of Heresy all over the Nation, it was necessary to punish him for it, and to make him a publick Example; and accordingly a Writ was sent down to burn him. And after some Stop made in the Execution of it, new Orders were sent to do it suddenly; and this was piously designed, that he might be brought to the Stake all of a sudden, and without his previous Knowledge, that so he might be surprized, and seem to die in Despair. So kind and Christian-like are the Treatments we are to expect from a Popish Prince, if ever the extravagant and unaccountable Endeavours of some amongst us should succeed.

Cranmer however had either some Intelligence, or some Suspicion at least, of this kind of Usage from them; and therefore he wrote a long

long Paper, containing a Confeſſion of his Faith in good Earneſt, ſuch as his Conſcience now, and not his Hopes and Fears had dictated before.

But now they drove on a-main to deſtroy him; for on March the 21ſt, he was brought out of Priſon to St. Mary's-Church in Oxford; where one Dr. Cole preached a Sermon, in which he vindicated the Queen's Juſtice in condemning Cranmer; but, wonderfully cried up, and celebrated his late Converſion and Repentance, gave him great hopes of Heaven, and promiſed him all the Relief that Maſſes could give him.

During all this wicked and barbarous Pageantry, the good Archbiſhop was in the utmoſt Agony and Confuſion, (as they deſigned he ſhould be) and Floods of Tears ran from his Eyes; and at laſt he was called up to ſpeak for himſelf. He began with a Prayer, in which he expreſſed great Remorſe and Sorrow; and then having exhorted the People to a good Life, to Obedience and to Charity, he moſt pathetically confeſſed and lamented the Sin of his late Recantation; owning and declaring his Weakneſs, and that hopes of Life made him Sign a Paper contrary to the Truth, and againſt his Conſcience. And therefore he reſolved that that Hand which Signed it ſhould be burnt firſt.

He declared alſo, that he had the ſame Belief concerning the Sacrament, which he had publiſhed in the Book he had written about it.

On this there was a mighty Conſternation in the whole Aſſembly, but it was reſolved he ſhould be burnt preſently; and accordingly away they hurried him immediately out of the Church to the Stake, and gave him all the Diſturbance they poſſibly could by vile Reproaches and Clamours.

But he was now got happily above all this, and therefore returned them no manner of Anſwer, but appeared perfectly eaſy and reſigned to meet his now near approaching Torture and Death.

As ſoon as the Fire was kindled about him, he thruſt his Right Hand out into the Flame, and held it there till it was burnt; often ſaying, That unworthy Hand! but the Fire being large, ſoon put an End to the Life of this excellent Man, great Prelate, and glorious Martyr, in the Sixty Seventh Year of his Age.

After his Body was quite burnt, his Heart was found whole in the Aſhes; from which his Friends made this Inference, that though his Hand had erred, yet it appeared his Heart had continued true. But they did not make a Miracle of it, as the Papiſts would have done, had ſuch an Accident happened to one of their Faith.

The Place of his Execution was before Baliol College, near the great Gate in Oxford. The Time A. D. 1556, March the 21ſt, in the Sixty Seventh Year of his Age.

A full Account of the Writings of this great Man may be ſeen in the excellent Hiſtory of the Reformation, Part I. written by Dr. Burnet, late Biſhop of Sarum.

He was, ſaith Biſhop Burnet, a Man of great Candor, and a firm Friend; which appeared ſignally in the Misfortunes of Anna Boleyn, Cromwell, and the Duke of Somerſet. He rather excelled in great Induſtry, and a good Judgment, than in quickneſs of Stile. He employed his Revenues on Pious and Charitable Uſes; and in his Table he was truly hoſpitable, for he entertained great Numbers of his poor Neighbours very often at it. The Gentleneſs and Humility of his Deportment were very ſingular. His laſt Fall was the greateſt Blemiſh of his Life, but it was expiated by a ſevere Repentance, and a very patient Martyrdom.

Thoſe who compared Ancient and Modern Times, did not ſtick to compare him, not only to the Chryſoſtoms, Ambroſes, and Auſtins, who were the chief Glories of the Church in the Fourth and Fifth Centuries, but to thoſe of the firſt Ages, that immediately followed the Apoſtles, and came neareſt to the Patterns which they left to the World; viz. to the Ignatius's, the Polycarps, and the Cyprians. And it ſeemed neceſſary that the Reformation of the Church, being the reſtoring of the Primitive and Apoſtolical Doctrine, ſhould have been chiefly carried on by a Man thus Eminent for truly Primitive and Apoſtolical Virtues.

The Author of the Antiq. Britan. Page 241, ſays, that Cranmer's Arms were at firſt (Three Cranes between a Chevron charged with Three Mullets pierced:) But King Henry the VIIIth ſeeing with what Care and Tenderneſs he took Care of the Intereſt of Religion, changed them to Three Pellicans pecking their Breaſts, which are ſuppoſed by the Vulgar, to nouriſh their Young with their own Blood.

On the very ſame Day that Cranmer was burnt, Pole took Prieſts Orders at Greenwich, and the next Day, as the Writer of Queen Mary's Life obſerves, Naboth being deſtroyed, he took Poſſeſſion of his Vineyard, and was Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and but Three Days after this, ſo ready had he got all Things, he had his Pall given him in Bow-Church in London with great Pomp and Solemnity.

Among other baſe Contrivances, which in a late Reign were uſed to put theſe Kingdoms under the Government of a Popiſh Pretender, one was to make the giddy Multitude ſwallow down Popery; and in order to this, ſome ſervile Clergymen were employed to cry up High-Church, and to call all true Proteſtants Preſbyterians; and a vile Rhiming Scribler was employed to Ridicule the Reformation in Dog-rell; indeed both the Author and the Performance are ſo contemptible, that nothing but Biſhop Burnet's Example can juſtify my taking Notice of him. But this I know, that a fine Quarto Edition of this Garret-Rhymer's Book, called Reformation, was ready to be Publiſhed, if Things had gone right, as they called it. In this ſordid Imitation of Hudibras, Ward, the Popiſh Author, abuſes this great Man, Archbiſhop Cranmer, as he doth every Thing that is Good and Serious; and by ſuch Arts as theſe, our poor People were to be tricked into Popery, and inured to Ridicule the Proteſtant Faith.

70. REGINALD POLE.

THIS Gentleman was of very high Extract; he was the Son of Sir Richard Pole, who was Couſin German to King Henry the VIIth; and his Mother was Margaret Counteſs of Salisbury, Daughter of George Duke of Clarence, who was Second Brother to King Edward the IVth.

His Education was at Magdalen College in Oxford, where he diſcovered a ſweet affable Temper, and a good Diſpoſition to Letters. The Obſervation of which made King Henry the VIIIth prefer him to the Deanery of Oxon; and he gave him beſides ſome other Preferments, for the better carrying on his Studies; which he likewiſe encouraged by a Penſion, being being reſolved to advance him to the higheſt Dignities in the Church. Theſe Preferments he kept while he travelled Abroad, for he lived many Years both at Paris, and at Padua; in the latter of which Places he joined himſelf in Society with Cantureno, Bembo, Caraffa, Sadoletti, and ſeveral others who applied themſelves to the Study of Eloquence, and of the Roman Learning.

But while he was at Paris he incurred King Henry the VIIIth's Diſpleaſure, for ſiding with thoſe who were againſt his Divorce from Queen Katharine. However, after this, being preſent at London when that King was by Convocation declared Supream Head of the Church, 'tis probable that he fell in with thoſe Meaſures, becauſe he kept his Deanery ſeveral Years after this; which that ſturdy Prince would hardly have ſuffered him to do, had he oppoſed that Title of his.

The King permitted him alſo to go again beyond Sea, but he could never get him over into England again. And ſome Time after his Departure hence, Pole wrote plainly to the King, That both his Divorce, and his Separation from the Apoſtolick See, were unwarrantable and unlawful. Upon this the King ſent him over Sampſon, Biſhop of Chicheſter's Book, in Defence of thoſe Proceedings; which ſet Pole upon writing his Book de Unione Eccleſiaſticâ; and which he filled with Invectives againſt the King. This provoked the King much, and made him to ſummon him Home, and upon his Non-appearance, to diveſt him of all his Dignities, Penſions, and Preferments here. But this happened now to be Beneficial to him, and occaſioned his being made a Cardinal, A. D. 1536.

However, though the King's Diſpleaſure could not reach Pole at Rome, yet it fell heavy upon his Kindred and Relations in England.

Pole was employed by the Pope, after his Promotion to the Purple, in ſeveral Embaſſies to the Emperor, and to the French King, whom he endeavoured to engage againſt the Intereſt of his King and Country; and by his Letters to his Friends and Relations here alſo, he engaged them to oppoſe the King's Deſigns; which loſt his Mother her Head; and Pole himſelf was attainted of Treaſon, and demanded to be ſent Home, by the Places where he reſided; but here the King could not obtain his Ends.

After theſe Embaſſies were over, the Pope made Pole Legate of Viterbo.

When Pope Paul the IIId ſummoned the famous Council of Trent, Pole, with Two more, were ſent thither as Legates by him; but he was not ſo rigid in Points of Religion, as was expected from him. And when this Pope died, which was about Four Years after, there was a great Faction among the Cardinals, Pole ſiding with the Imperialiſts againſt the French: Cardinal Farneſe propoſed Pole for Pope; though as Father Paul ſaith in his Hiſtory of Kent, he was ſuſpected of Lutheraniſm; and though it was objected againſt him in the Conclave; and ſome ſay that he was twice Elected Pope by a fair Majority; for the Conſideration of his own and his Family's Sufferings in England, had a great Weight in their Conſideration, and wiped off an Imputation of Incontinence (a) which was then alſo objected againſt him. Pole received the News of his Election to the Papacy, with the Affection of Indifference, and with the cool Philoſophy of one of the Ancients; for being told that the Election was made in the Night, he ſaid that God loved Light, and adviſed them to defer it till Day. But this the Italians took for Meanneſs of Spirit, and meer Dulneſs and Stupidity, and ſo dropp'd him immediately, electing the Cardinal De Monte, who took the Name of Julius the IIId. (a)

On this Pole retired to a Monaſtery of the Benedictines, in the Territories of Verona, where he was ſcarce ſettled in a State of Mortification for loſing the Popedom, before he heard of Queen Mary's Acceſſion to the Engliſh Throne. This Princeſs had been bred up a good while under the Care and Tuition of his Mother, and had a very great Value for him. This therefore awakened his Ambition, and made him get himſelf to be conſtituted the Pope's Legate, in order to go over with that high Character into England. He managed his Affairs ſo well alſo, that he got the Pope to ſend over hither firſt one Commendone; who in the Habit of a Merchant, got Acceſs to the Queen, and carried Letters from her back to the Pope, in which ſhe aſſured him of her Reſolutions to reconcile her ſelf entirely to the Apoſtolick See; and deſired that Pole might be ſent over hither with a Legantine Power. And the Queen liked this Project, and the Cardinal too, ſo well, that ſhe asked Commendone whether the Pope might not diſpenſe with Pole to Marry, he being only a Deacon. But the Offer of the Spaniſh Match put the Cardinal out of her Thoughts, as to thoſe Regards. And though he made all the Haſte he could hither, yet the Queen wrote to him her ſelf, and adviſed him to ſtop his Journey for ſome Time; he anſwered her; but it availed nothing againſt the Ambitious Deſigns ſhe had now newly formed; for the Spaniſh Match went on and was conſummated.

A. D. 1554, a Parliament was ſummoned, and Pole was ſuffered to come as near as Flanders; and the Queen ſent Two Lords, Paget and Haſtings, to meet him, and conduct him hither. The firſt Bill that paſſed, reverſed his Attainder; and November the 24th he came to London; but privately, becauſe the Pope's Authority not being yet eſtabliſhed, he could not be received as Legate. After this he made a Solemn Speech to the King and Queen, and then to the Parliament; and then in the Name of the common Paſtor, the Pope, perſuaded them to return to the old Sheepfold, the Romiſh Church. The good Queen was ſo moved at this Speech, and it may be not a little at the Speaker, that ſhe felt ſuch Emotions of Joy, as perſuaded her a Child was juſt then Quickening within her; which Opinion was preſently confirmed in her by the Flattery of the Court Ladies; and it went ſo far, as that the Council ordered Bonner to Sing Te Deum for it; and the ſervile Prieſts ſaid, That another John Baptiſt was come, and leap'd in his Mother's Womb upon the Salutation of Chriſt's Vicar.

After this, both Houſes Addreſs'd the King and Queen, that they would beg the Legate to reconcile the Kingdom to the See of Rome, and offered to Repeal all Laws made againſt the Pope.

On this the Cardinal went to the Houſe, and after a long Speech, gave them and the whole Nation a Plenary Abſolution.

Gardiner managed all Things with great Dexterity at this Time; and to obviate the Fears which ſome were under, that the Nation was going under ſuch a Tyranny from Rome, as their Anceſtors were not able to bear; he declared that all the Old Laws againſt Proviſions from Rome ſhould ſtill continue in Force; and to ſhew that the Legates ſhould exerciſe no dangerous Authority here, he made Pole take out a Licenſe under the Great-Seal, for his Legantine Power.

Pole was thought at this Time to be an utter Enemy to all ſevere and cruel Proceedings againſt Hereſy; and to think that the beſt way to eſtabliſh the True Religion, was to reform the Lives and Manners of the Clergy.

On Pope Marcellus's Death, the Queen endeavoured (without Pole's Conſent) to engage the French Intereſt for his Promotion to the Papacy: But at Rome they were afraid of him, leſt he would ſet up for a Reformer of Abuſes, as Marcellus had done; and ſo haſtily choſe Caraffa, who took the Name of Paul the IVth, and was a moſt Inſolent and Ambitious Tyrant.

A. D. 1555, Pole called a Convocation, having firſt obtained the Queen's Licenſe; wherein ſeveral Things were propoſed by him, and aſſented to by the Clergy; as the Abrogation of the Yearly Feaſts, in the Dedications of Churches: That Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould take Care of their Dioceſes and Cures; to avoid Simony, and Dilapidations, and to perform Reſidence, &c. And he deſigned to have ſet forth Four Books of Homilies, by which Methods he hoped Hereſy might have been extinguiſhed better, as he was fond of making the World believe, than by Racks and Fires: But yet he was ſo mean-ſpirited, that though, as ſome will have it, he condemned cruel Proceedings himſelf; yet 'tis certain that he gave Commiſſions to others to act that way, and ſuffered great Cruelties to be exerciſed in his own Dioceſe. But he was afraid of the Pope, who puſhed on all manner of Severities. Another Thing alſo blemiſhed him in the Opinion of many judicious Perſons; and that was, as I obſerved above, his being Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury the very next Day after Cranmer's Martyrdom. And that very Day that Cranmer was burnt, he took Prieſt's Orders at Greenwich.

A. D. 1557, Pole ſent Ormaneto, an Italian, and intimate Friend, with ſome Engliſh Divines, to viſit Cambridge; theſe put the Churches, in which the Bodies of Bucer and Fagius lay, under an Interdict; and cauſed the Two dead Hereticks to be taken up, and burnt with great Solemnity, after having formally and ridiculouſly cited them to appear, and examined Witneſſes about their Teners. The Dead had nothing to ſay for themſelves, nor any Living People Courage enough to take their Parts, and ſo they were condemned as obſtinate Hereticks, and I believe continue ſo to this Hour.

After, the Commiſſioners went to Oxford, and viſited there, and were very hard upon poor Peter Martyr's Wife, for they dug up her Heretical Body, and buried it in a Dunghill.

This Year the Pope recalled Pole's Legantine Power, becauſe the Queen engaged in a War againſt France; and would not be wrought upon by the Queen's Ambaſſadors, nor any other Perſuaſions, to reſtore it; he went alſo ſo far, as to require him to come to Rome, and there to anſwer to ſuch Complaints as ſhould be brought againſt him, for ſhewing Favour to Hereticks. But he was afterwards reſtored again to his Dignity by the Interceſſion of Ormaneto, the Pope's Datary.

At Archbiſhop Pole's Conſecration here to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, aſſiſted Dr. Thomas Thirlby, Biſhop of Weſtminſter, who was Conſecrated Biſhop after the Act of the Twenty Fifth of Henry the VIIIth, for Electing and Conſecrating Archbiſhops and Biſhops: And this was an Argument that even the Papiſts themſelves allowed thoſe Biſhops ſo made, to be truly and lawfully Conſtituted, as indeed they did at that Time, becauſe the Act made no Alteration as to the Rites and Ceremonies of Conſecration, but only appointed the Conge d' Eſlire to be ſent to the Chapter; the King's Conſent to be previouſly had to ſuch an Election, and his Writ to be ſent to the Metropolitan afterwards, to proceed to Conſecration.

Pole ſate Archbiſhop but Two Years and Eight Months; and died November the 17th, 1558, the very ſame Day with his Miſtreſs, Queen Mary, but ſome Time after her: His Diſeaſe was a Quartan Ague; but 'twas then thought, that the News which was brought to him of the Queen's Death, haſtened his own.

He was buried in Canterbury Cathedral, on the North Side of that Part called Becket's-Crown, in the Eaſt End of the Church, under a plain Tomb; and was the laſt Archbiſhop that was buried there.

His Life was written in Italian by Ludovicus Betellas, or Bacatellus Biſhop of Raguſa, and Tranſlated into Engliſh by Andreas Duditius Stondellatius; and Printed at Venice A. D. 1563, and again at London 1690. And there is a large Account of him in Fox's Acts and Monuments.

Bacatellus gives us a Catalogue of his Writings; but omits one that he wrote againſt King Henry the VIIIth's Divorce from Queen Catharine; which appears indeed not to have been Publiſhed, but only given or ſent to the King privately. An Account of it you may ſee, as given by Cranmer, in Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Parker, Page 7. Appendix, Numb. I.

Biſhop Burnet ſaith he was a learned, humble, prudent, and moderate Man; which Character he gives him, becauſe the Clergy were then all ſo bad, that there could not one be found beſides to ſpeak well of.

But as to his being addicted to Lutheraniſm, I doubt it was but a Compliment upon his Underſtanding: For though when he retired to Viterbo, he gave himſelf much to the Study of Controverſy, and aſſociated himſelf with Tranellius, Flaminio, and ſome others, who were judged to be a little Unorthodox; and though Biſhop Burnet ſeems to think that he did not love ſevere Proceedings againſt Hereticks, yet 'tis certain Fact that he did not only permit the cruel Prebendaries of Canterbury to do what they pleaſed, as his Expreſſion is, but he did alſo himſelf Underhand, haſten Cranmer's being burnt; (a) and Encourage and Countenance, nay, give out Commiſſions to proceed in ſuch barbarous Methods againſt others; and perhaps the Reaſon was, as the Biſhop obſerves, that he was afraid of falling under the Pope's Rage; who was a violent Profecutor of Hereticks, and had clapp'd up Cardinal Marone, Pole's great Friend, in Prifon, upon Suſpicion of Hereſy: But I think this Meanneſs of Spirit is no Excuſe for him at all.

He procured Nineteen Benefices from the Queen to the See; and he built a Gallery, and ſome Rooms on the Eaſt Side of the Houſe at Lambeth; and ſome ſay, had he lived longer, he would have built much at the Palace in Canterbury.

71. MATTHEW PARKER.

HE was Born at Norwich, and Educated in Bennet College in Cambridge, and was Fellow there. He was made Chaplain to Queen Anne, and after her Death to King Henry the VIIIth her Husband, and was by him preferred to the Deanery of Stoke by Clare in Suffolk, a College afterwards ſuppreſs'd by King Edward the VIth.

He had a Licenſe to Preach in the Dioceſe of Canterbury, granted by Archbiſhop Cranmer, and a Patent from the King alſo to the ſame Purpoſe. But he had like once to have paid dear for his Preaching; for he ventured to tell Ket, and his fellow Rebels, in 1549, ſuch bold Truths as had likely to have produced his Deſtruction.

After this he became Canon of Ely, and Maſter of Corpus Chriſti College in Cambridge. By King Edward the VIth he was made Dean of Lincoln, and Prebendary of Coldenham in the ſame Church.

In the Second of Queen Mary he retired; but though he eſcaped Burning, he loſt all his Preferments, being deprived for being a Married Man. Once being purſued, in order to be apprehended, he got a Fall from his Horſe, which brought a Lameneſs upon him that he never perfectly recovered; and this he made one Reaſon afterwards, for his refuſing the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury.

For ſo he was made on Queen Elizabeth's coming to the Throne; on her particular Eſteem for him, and the Character which Cecil and Sir Nicholas Bacon both gave of him to her, to whom he was very well known, for ſhe had been in a good Meaſure Educated by him.

But as ſoon as he had Notice of that Deſign, he endeavoured all he could poſſible to avoid that great Preferment, both on the Account of his Weakneſs of Body, and alſo his general Unfitneſs for ſo great a Charge; and deſired only to be put into ſome ſmall Benefice of Twenty Nobles per Annum; and was ſome Months before he could be prevailed with to accept it; and did it not at laſt till he was threatned with Impriſonment if he perſiſted in his Refuſal.

When he was Archbiſhop Elect, on Occaſion of the Detection of an Impoſture of Rood at Dublin, which the Papiſts pretended did ſweat Drops of Blood, becauſe the Litany was read before it in Engliſh; (for it would vex any Sacred Piece of Wood to ſuppoſe it did not underſtand Latin as well as Engliſh.) On the Diſcovery of this to be a Cheat, Parker ſollicited the Queen very zealouſly to lay aſide the Crucifix, and the Tapers which ſhe uſed in her own private Chapel: Thoſe Idolatrous Toys had been removed out of the Publick Churches in moſt Places; but the Queen would not be perſuaded to part with them, which gave great Offence to ſome of her Biſhops, whoſe Duty it was to attend her in her Devotions.

The ſenſeleſs Stories of his being Conſecrated at the Nags-Head Tavern in Cheapſide, which the Papiſts invented and told, was firſt refuted by Francis Wilſon, in his Book of the Conſecration of the Biſhops in the Church of England, Folio, London, 1613, from the undoubted Regiſters of the Church of Canterbury; and there is alſo a full Diſcovery of the Villany of the firſt Coiners and Inventors of it.

Afterwards in King Charles the IId's Time, it was again cleared up by Biſhop Bramhall, in his Book called The Conſecration and Succeſſion of the Proteſtant Biſhops, (a) London, Octavo, 1664. And after this, the Univerſity of Cambridge Publiſhed an Account of the whole Proceeding, from the Original Record in Bennet College Library.

This Legend of the Nags-Head Ordination, was firſt trump'd up in King James the Iſt's Reign, above Forty Years after Parker's Conſecration, when the Romaniſts hoped all who had ſeen it were dead. But the Old Earl of Nottingham was then Living, and remembred the Thing very well, and that it was done in the Chapel at Lambeth, according to the Order of the Church of England; and this both the Records of the Crown, and the Regiſters of the See of Canterbury do fully atteſt. And in the Life of this excellent Prelate, written by the Reverend Mr. Strype, a yet fuller Account of the whole Affair may be ſeen.

As this Conſecration of Archbiſhop Parker was performed with great Solemnity, before a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes, in the Chapel at Lambeth, and by Four Biſhops, ſo it was the firſt that was free from the Fopperies and Superſtitious Ceremonies of the Romiſh Church: For he had no Mitre, nor Pall; no Paſtoral Staff, nor Ring; no Sacred Gloves, nor Holy Sandals; nor was there any Bull or Authority from the Pope either ſent for, or brought from Rome to Confirm or Eſtabliſh it. Which, no doubt, is the true Reaſon why the Papiſts have Coined ſo many Lies about it; for this Conſecration by our own Biſhops, without any Bulls from the Pope, was an entire cutting off the Popiſh Yoke, which had lain ſo long on our Shoulders, and ſetting up a Church entirely independent upon it.

And yet this Story, ſenſeleſs as it is, was revived again in the late Reign, by Thomas Ward, in his Grubſtreet Dogrell Poem, called, Reformation; and the Thing from Sanders, and other Popiſh Writers, is pretended to be proved by Marginal Notes in Proſe. And I don't doubt but that tedious Collection of Rhimes was to have been ſent all over England, and to have been read to the Mob by the Exciſemen, and Commented on by the Curates, in order to laugh our poor deluded People out of that Religion which their Forefathers Sealed with their Blood. Oh Engliſhmen! will you never ſee whither you are driving? How comes Popery to be ſo eaſy to you now, which you ſo juſtly dreaded and abhorred at the Revolution? I hope you will be preſerved whether you will or no; but Woe to thoſe that have, and do ſtill miſlead you.

Parker was a Man of great Learning, and Modeſty, and yet of real Courage and Reſolution: He was very well acquainted with the

Hiſtory

Hiſtory of his own Country; and a curious Collector of Manuſcripts, which upon the Diſſolution of the Monaſteries, were diſperſed up and down in private Hands; and thoſe he gave to the College where he had his Education.

Almoſt all Parts of the Reformation paſſed through his Hands; and he perfectly well underſtood the State of the Church, when King Henry the VIIIth began that Work, and the ſeveral Steps which were taken towards it afterwards: And now in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, his Piety, Wiſdom, and Moderation, were ſo well known Abroad, and to the Foreign Princes, and their Principal Miniſters of State, that all the Methods uſed to carry on that great and glorious Deſign, were under his Cognizance, Care, and Management.

He was alſo an excellent Governor of that Part of the Church which was here committed to his Charge, and ſtrictly adhered to its Doctrine and Diſcipline; by which he incurred the ill-will of Leiceſter, and ſome others in Power, and of moſt of the Puritans: But he was ſo ſtiff in what he took upon him to defend and maintain, that he would neither be frighted nor diſſuaded from his Purpoſe and Reſolution.

He made it his Buſineſs to encourage and promote Learning every where, which he knew would be, next to God's Bleſſing, the beſt Support of the Reformation: And accordingly he founded Grammar-Schools, regulated the Colleges in the Univerſities, and got a true Account of the State of Learning there, and countenanced and preferred Men of Letters.

A. D. 1566, he publiſhed a Saxon Homily, and Two Epiſtles in the ſame Language, written by Ælfrick, firſt Abbot of Malmsbury, and then of St. Albans. And by theſe Treatiſes it appeared plainly, that the monſtrous Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation was not known to the Ancient Saxon Chriſtians of this Kingdom.

A. D. 1568, he put out a large Engliſh Bible for the Uſe of Churches, and a ſmaller one for Families.

A. D. 1571, he publiſhed an Edition of Matt. Paris the Hiſtorian, from the beſt Manuſcripts, as he had the Year before done by the Flores Hiſtoriarum of Matt. of Weſtminſter.

A. D. 1575, he cauſed to be Printed, Alfredi Regis Res geſtas ab Aſſerio Shirburnenſi Epiſcopo conſcriptas: And alſo Thomas Walſingham's ſhort Hiſtory. And the Antiquitates Eccleſ. Britannicæ, which were chiefly compiled by his careful Hand, remain a laſting Monument of his Skill and Diligence, in peruſing all ſuch Books and Manuſcripts as could any way let him into the Knowledge of our Engliſh Hiſtory, either with Regard to Church or State.

In his Benefactions he was munificent. He repaired, or in a manner rebuilt the Great-Hall, and other Buildings of the Archbiſhop's Palace in the City of Canterbury, laying out upon it One Thouſand Four Hundred Pounds; and when he had done ſo, he lived there with great Hoſpitality, often entertaining the Gentlemen of Kent, that he might have an Opportunity of knowing, and being known to them: And A. D. 1573, he entertained the Queen and all the Court there, with great Magnificence, on her Birth-Day. And his Arms are now to be ſeen at the South End of the Palace, in the Stone-work of the upper Part of the Wall. But this Palace being pulled down in the Civil Wars, is now quite either decayed, or turned into private Tenements. He built alſo, and repaired much at Lambeth, as Biſhop Godwin ſaith.

He founded a Grammar-School at Rochdale in Lancaſhire: He procured Thirteen Scholarſhips to Corpus-Chriſti College in Cambridge, and built the inward Library, and Two fair Chambers there; and he gave many valuable Books, both Printed, and in Manuſcript, to the College Library. He left them alſo a good Benefaction in Plate, the Patronage of St. Mary-Abchurch in London, and Land for the Maintenance of Two New Fellows, a Leaſe for Seventeen Years to come, of Fourteen Pounds per Annum, and One Hundred Pounds to keep a Fire in the Hall.

He appointed Six Sermons to be preached in Rogation Week, in Five of the Churches in Norfolk; and to the City of Norwich he gave a large Baſon and Ewer double Gilt, and Two Hundred Pounds in Money; for which the City was to grant an Annuity of Ten Pounds per Annum to Bennet-College in Cambridge; and out of this the Maſter and Fellows were to appoint Eight Pounds per Annum to be divided in Exhibitions, to Three Boys to be nominated by the Mayor of Norwich.

He gave alſo ſome Plate and Books to Caius-College, and Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, and to the latter added one new Scholars Place.

He founded a Grammar-School alſo at Stoke, when he was Dean there, to Inſtruct Youth in true Religion and Learning; and the Scholars were alſo to be taught Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick, by Maſters appointed for that Purpoſe. He repaired, new pewed, and beautified the Chancel of Bekesbourn Church; and got an Augmentation of Four Quarters of Wheat, Eighteen of Barley, and Ten Pounds in Money, to be paid annually to the Miniſter there. He gave One Hundred Pounds to the City of Canterbury to ſet the Poor to Work, and Thirty Pounds to the Poor of Lambeth and Croyden. He made fair what is now called the Regent-Walk in Cambridge, once called Univerſity-ſtreet, and St. Mary Hoſtle; which is the Avenue leading to the Publick Schools. He was a great Promoter, if not the firſt Propounder, of making the River Stoure Navigable from the Sea to Canterbury; and the Charge of this being Eſtimated A. D. 1568, at One Thouſand Five Hundred Pounds, a Sum too great for the City to raiſe alone, he endeavoured to get Supplies towards ſo uſeful a Work from the Court, and elſewhere among his Friends; and I believe ſucceeded in it, becauſe the Work went on.

And indeed wherever he was preferred, and wherever he reſided, he always ſet himſelf to be doing ſome Good: To maintain the Rights, to improve the Revenues of the Church; to make good Laws, Statutes and Rules to inſtruct and govern ſuch as were under his Care; as he eminently did at Bennet-College, while he was Maſter of it.

He died A. D. 1575, and was buried in the Chapel of Lambeth; but his Bowels were by his own Order put into an Urn, and buried in the Duke's-Chapel in Lambeth-Church, where his Wife and his Son Matthew lay. But in the Rebellion in 1648, Lambeth-Houſe falling into the Hands of Scott, one of the Regicides, he deſigned to turn the Chapel into an Hall for Dancing; Parker's Monument, which was placed in the Wall on the South Side of the Chapel ſtood in his way, and ſtared his Jollity in the Face; wherefore he pulled it down, and made it be broken all to Pieces; and he took up alſo the Archbiſhop's Body, ſold the Lead Coffin that encloſed it, and buried his Bones in a Dunghill, and there they lay buried till Sir William Dugdale acquainted Archbiſhop Sancroft with it, who ordered them to be taken up and put in their proper Place, and a new Monument to be erected for him there.

72. EDMUND GRINDALL,

WAS born in Cumberland, A. D. 1519, went to Cambridge, firſt to Magdalen-College, then to Chriſt's, and at laſt to Pembroke-Hall, where he became Fellow, and was afterwards Preſident.

A. D. 1549, he was made Margaret-Publick-Preacher in Cambridge; and the next Year he became Chaplain to Biſhop Ridley, who in a Year more made him Chanter of St. Paul's in London, and one of the King's Four Chaplains, who had Forty Pounds per Annum Salary apiece. In 1552, he was made Prebendary of Weſtminſter, and nominated for a Biſhoprick in the North, which probably was one of thoſe Two, into which Durham was deſigned to have been divided.

On King Edward the VIth's Deceaſe, he fled Abroad to avoid the Perſecution which Queen Mary introduced, and ſettled at Strasburgh in Germany; where, and at ſome adjacent Places, he ſtudied the German Language, in order to be uſeful to the People by his Preaching: and he learned it perfectly.

A good part of his other Employment here, was collecting the Writings, and compiling the Hiſtories of ſuch Engliſh as then ſuffered Perſecution at Home. And in this Matter he aſſiſted Fox, who was then alſo in Exile with him in Germany.

On Queen Mary's Death he was ſent for Home; for he had behaved himſelf ſo well, and acquired ſo good a Character for his Learning, Integrity, and Diligence, Abroad, that he was thought to be of neceſſary Uſe here in the Eſtabliſhment of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth. And his firſt Employment was to help compile and compleat the Liturgy, a Form of Prayer for Publick Worſhip.

In the Year 1558, he was appointed one of the Eight Diſputants to maintain the Doctrine of the Reformation againſt the Popiſh Biſhops. And he preached the Sermon at St. Pauls, before a great Audience, when the new Service was firſt Read.

The Year after, he was one of the Queen's Commiſſioners for the Royal Viſitation in the North.

When he was now about to be made a Biſhop, he had ſome Scruples about the Revenues of the Biſhopricks ariſing from Impropriations; and about wearing the Sacred Veſtments, as they were called, which had been in Uſe in the Popiſh Times, and he wrote to Peter Martyr about it, who adviſed him to comply, and to take the Biſhoprick.

The Parliament having now, A. D. 1559, empowered the Queen to make Exchanges with Archbiſhops and Biſhops, for their Manors, and Eſtates, and Houſes belonging to their Sees; Grindall, and the Three other Biſhops Elected, offered the Queen a Penſion of One Thouſand Marks per Annum to prevent it, but it would not be accepted.

He was made Biſhop of London this Year, being Forty Years of Age: And he had a Coat of Arms aſſigned him by Delbock, then Garter King at Arms; which were Quarterly Or and Azure a Croſs Or and Ermine, in each Quarter a Dove, Or, and Azure counterchanged, as the Field.

He was alſo this Year made one of the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners to Inſpect the Manners of the Clergy, and to regulate other Matters in the Church.

A. D. 1560, he had the Care and Inſpection of the Foreign Churches in London committed to him, in which he made ſeveral Regulations.

When the famous Convocation in A. D. 1562 was ſummoned to meet, Grindall was previouſly employed in preparing Heads and Chapters for the Regulating of the Diſcipline of the Church; and this Work being finiſhed by him, and ſuch others as were in Committee with him, was at their Meeting ſent down to the Lower Houſe of Convocation.

A. D. 1563, he did an handſome and generous Thing by old Miles Coverdale, who had been Biſhop of Exeter, and was deprived by Queen Mary: He was famous in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, for tranſlating the Bible into Engliſh, and for other good Services, with regard to the True Religon; but was now grown very old and decrepit, and being poor, was Friendleſs, and perfectly neglected by the Men in Power. This venerable Old Man Grindall recommended to be Biſhop of Landaff, but he had it not; and therefore he collated him to the Pariſh of St. Magnus at the Bridge-Foot, in London, where he enjoyed enough to keep him from ſtarving, and was very well pleaſed.

A. D. 1564, he commenced Doctor of Divinity, not having taken that Degree before.

Towards the End of this Year, he received a Letter from the Archbiſhop, acquainting him with the Queen's peremptory Command for Uniformity in the Clergy, as to Habits and Ceremonies; in which the Biſhop laboured hard, and brought it to its deſired End; but by Tenderneſs and Gentleneſs, and uſing as little Severity as was poſſible: Which occaſioned him a Letter from the Queen to excite and quicken him in theſe Proceedings. The Archbiſhop carried on his Attempt for Conformity, by a Writing called the Book of Advertiſements, which conſiſted of Articles and Directions, which the Clergy were bound to obſerve by the Letter from the Queen; this he ſent to Grindall, and finding him not forward to proceed to Extremities, and that therefore the Puritan Party loved him, he required and charged him to ſee the Injunctions obeyed, as he would anſwer it to God.

A. D. 1569, he was nominated to the Archbiſhoprick of York, by Archbiſhop Parker, and by Cecill; the former not thinking him reſolute nor ſevere enough for the Government of London Dioceſe, and the Year following he was tranſlated thither: But before that, he viſited the Hoſpital of the Savoy, which by Means of the ill Management of the Maſter, was in a very bad Condition; he deprived the Maſter. After his going to York, he began a Viſitation of his Dioceſe, and of his Province; and then his Dean and Chapter.

A. D. 1575, the Queen, at the Treaſurer's Recommendation, made him Archbiſhop of Canterbury without his Knowledge, or Application for it. And after his Tranſlation, a Convocation of the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury was held at London, where a Subſidy was granted, and ſome Articles of Religion agreed upon.

The Year after this the Archbiſhop viſited his Dioceſe and Church, and began his Metropolitical Viſitation. And now ſome of the Puritans making Diſturbances in Northamptonſhire and Warwickſhire, and endeavouring to ſet up their way of Worſhip in the Pariſh Churches, Three Letters were written from the Court to Grindall, to enquire into theſe Things; which he did, by writing to the Biſhops in whoſe Dioceſes theſe Stirs and Commotions were, to ſuppreſs them in the beſt manner they could; and he told them, that if they wanted more Power, they ſhould have it either from him, or from the Civil Magiſtrates.

So that he was very far from being an Encourager of Fanaticks, or Seperatiſts, but did always endeavour to cure ſuch of their Errors, and to bring them over to the Eſtabliſhed Worſhip by mild and gentle Methods, and by Reaſoning and Perſwaſion, though he was againſt Perſecution, and all violent and cruel Means.

But now a Matter very well intended by this great Prelate, brought him into great Affliction and Trouble.

He knew his Clergy were many of them very ignorant, and that there was great Need of more frequent and able Preaching to inſtruct the People in the Principles of true Religion, and to remove their Regard to Tradition, and the Superſtitious Invention of Men. And therefore in order to mend both Paſtors and People, he encouraged a very good Practice, which then was uſed in many Places of England, and allowed by many Biſhops in their Dioceſes: It was then called Exerciſe, or Propheſying; and the manner of it was, that the Miniſters of ſuch a Diviſion met at a certain Time in ſome publick Church, where in their Turns, each explained a certain Portion of Sacred Scripture allotted to them before; and at laſt one of the moſt Learned and Judicious of them, acted the Part of a Moderator, made his Obſervations on what had been ſaid, and gave his Judgment upon the whole. To theſe Exerciſes came great Confluxes of People; by which Means, as Mr. Strype in the Life of this Prelate honeſtly notes, Page 219. The Miniſters and Curates were forced to Read Authors, and to conſult Expoſitors and Commentators, and to follow their Studies, that they might ſpeak to the Purpoſe when they preached to the Publick; and hereby they conſiderably profited themſelves in the Knowledge of the Sacred Scriptures.

I wiſh ſome ſuch Exerciſes were on Foot to produce the ſame good Effect now. But ſome little Inconveniences there were, which were ſaid to accompany theſe Meetings, ſuch as too great Rivalties, Warmth and Oppoſition between the Propheſyers; Contradictions to Orthodoxy, (that is, what a Government pleaſe to call ſo) Diſputes and Enquiries even among Laymen, who I ſuppoſe it was ſaid ought to leave all ſuch Things to their Teachers, and to mind their Secular Employments. Upon theſe and the like Objections, the good Archbiſhop iſſued out Orders and Rules for the better Regulation of theſe Exerciſes, and to prevent the objected Inconveniencies, which you may ſee in Mr. Strype's Book.

The Queen did not at all like theſe Things, and therefore reſolved to have them ſuppreſs'd, and wrote accordingly to Grindall on that Subject. But he thinking theſe Exerciſes to be of the greateſt Uſe for the ſupporting of the Reformation, and for the Propagation of Truth, could not in Conſcience comply with her ſo peremptory Commands, and therefore wrote her a long and handſome Letter, acquainting her with the Reaſons why he could not. (a)

This Letter had no manner of Effect as to its Deſign of altering the Queen's Judgment, but produced on the contrary her Diſpleaſure againſt the Biſhop.

And this Diſpleaſure of the Queen againſt him, Camden in his Life of Queen Elizabeth, ſuppoſes to be heightned, if not principally created, by Grindall's condemning the unlawful Marriage of one Julio, an Italian, and Favourite Phyſician to the Earl of Leiceſter, who cohabited with the Wife of another Man, as his own. But Mr. Strype, though he owns the Fact to be true, that Grindall did order that Man to be proſecuted in the Spiritual Court, yet thinks that Mr. Camden formed his Judgment about it too ſlightly, from the Writer of the Leiceſter's Commonwealth; where 'tis ſaid, that this Archbiſhop's Overthrow was principally wrought by this Tyrant, (meaning Leiceſter.)

As Mr. Strype leaves this Matter doubtful, I muſt adhere to Camden's Judgment; and do believe that Leiceſter, upon Grindall's proſecuting of Julio, did actually become his Enemy, and incenſe the Queen, over whom he had then too great an Influence, againſt the Archbiſhop.

For ſhe never afterwards ſhewed any Eſteem for Grindall, but perſecuted and plagued him all ſhe could.

A. D. 1577, ſhe wrote to all the Biſhops to do what Grindall had refuſed; and who now was out of Favour at Court: And in June following, he was by Order of Star-Chamber, confined to his Houſe, and his Revenues Sequeſtred.

The Lord Treaſurer wrote a kind Letter to him, perſuading him to make his Submiſſion to the Queen, and to own himſelf in a Fault for diſobeying her Orders.

But as he did not apprehend that he had committed any Crime, ſo he refuſed to comply with this Advice. However, though he would not appear in Perſon before the Lords in the Star-Chamber, yet he wrote a Letter to them, deſiring them to intercede with the Queen for his Liberty, and that his Sequeſtration might be taken off. But no ſuch Thing could be obtained for him; but inſtead of Favour to him, it was debated whether he ſhould be deprived, or not; and theſe Things, together with the loſs of his Sight, diſpirited him ſo, that he thought ſometimes of reſigning up his Archbiſhoprick. But perhaps ſome little Favours might now be obtained for him, for he was either permitted to go, or went by Connivance to Croydon, where he exerciſed his Archiepiſcopal Function, by the Conſecration of Wolton, Biſhop of Exon.

A Convocation being called ſoon after this, wrote a Petitionary Letter for the Enlargement of their Preſident; and by ſome Means or other, A. D. 1582, he was induced to make a Submiſſion, and conſequently was ſet at Liberty, and had his Sequeſtration taken off.

Soon after which he grew quite Blind, without any hopes of recovering his Sight; and then the Queen ſent the Lord Almoner to him, to tell him that it was her Pleaſure he ſhould reſign his Archbiſhoprick, thereby enjoy her Favour, and have an honourable Penſion aſſigned him; and this was ſignified to him again alſo ſoon after by the Lord Treaſurer.

(a) See Fuller's Church Hiſtory, Book I. Page 123, and Mr. Strype's Appendix to Archbiſhop Grindall's Life, Numb. VIII.

With this he gladly complied in general, but desired for several Reasons, that he should not be obliged to resign before the next Audit of the See for the whole Year. This Favour one would think had been granted him; for the Queen sent him a Piece of Plate for a New-Years-Gift soon after. But in a little Time she insisted upon his resigning at Lady-Day: Grindall Petitioned it might be delayed till Michaelmas, and desired the Use of the House at Croydon. When Lady-Day came, the Queen seemed not to have determined upon his Successor, and therefore Grindall's Resignation was not then made; though it was drawn up and sent to the Lord Treasurer to Peruse. In May following he made his Will, and died the 6th of July following, without having actually resigned his Bishoprick: And was buried in the Chancel of Croydon Church, where is, or was, a fair Monument of him.

His Benefactions were considerable: In the Place of his Birth he founded a Free-School, which he endowed with Thirty Pounds per Annum. To Queen's-College in Oxford he gave Twenty Pounds per Annum in Land; forgave them a Debt of Forty Pounds, and gave them most of his Books, and Eighty Seven Ounces of Plate. To Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge, he gave Twenty Two Pounds per Annum, and some Books and Plate. And to Magdalen-College there, he gave Five Pounds per Annum. He gave One Hundred Pounds to the City of Canterbury to set their Poor to Work, and Fifty Pounds to Croydon.

After this Account of his Life, little need be said to set the Character of this excellent Man in a true Light: And it would be too mean a Thing to take Notice of his having been called a Perfidious Prelate, by a late Ignorant Incendiary, had not some odd Circumstances made what he said publickly taken Notice of. But they were indeed the Virtues of this Man, that made that poor Creature call him so. For our Prelate, as the Reverend Mr. Strype observes, led an unblemished and useful Life, and his Religion was free from all Dregs of Popish Superstition: He was mild, courteous and affable in his Temper, not insolent, touchy, and soon angry. He laboured to Cure, with all his Might, the Ignorance and Sloth of the Clergy: And as he knew nothing would more effectually contribute towards it, so he vigorously encouraged those Exercises above-mentioned, though they were so offensive to the Queen, as to excite her Displeasure against him.

And yet when these Exercises run into Excesses, or occasioned any Disorders, he set himself heartily to correct and mend them; and also to convince the Separatists of those Times of their Error, in not complying with the Established Forms of Worship; in which, though he himself did not like many Things, as retaining a Savour and Shew of Popery, yet by the Advice of the most learned Divines of that Age, he was induced to comply with them for Peace and Unity Sake; and that he might not put himself out of a Capacity of doing more Good in a great Station. But indeed he was against Fury and Rage, Violence and Persecution, and against having Recourse to what some have called Wholesome Severities: And which though they should be inflicted on Rebels and Traytors, on Preachers and Promoters of Sedition, yet should never be used against those that differ from us only in such Notions and Opinions as do no way injure or endanger the Good of the Constitution, and which are purely Matters of Faith and Conscience.

73. JOHN WHITGIFT,

WAS born 1530, at Great-Grimsby in Lincolnshire, his Father a Merchant, but came of a good Family: He went to School at St. Anthonies, an Old Religious House between Breadstreet and Threadneedlestreet, in London; and from thence was sent to Peter-House in Cambridge; (a) where he commenced Doctor in Divinity, and became afterwards Master of Pembroke-Hall, and after that of Trinity-College in that University.

He was Chaplain to Cox, Bishop of Ely, who made him a Prebendary in his Church, and gave him the Rectory of Teversham by Cambridge. Twice he was Vicechancellor, and first Margaret, and then Regius-Professor of Divinity. After this being made one of the Queen's Chaplains, she gave him the Deanery of Lincoln, which he held Seven Years.

And during this Time obtained an Alteration and Amendment of the University Statutes, viz. A. D. 1570.

In 1572, he Printed an Answer to a Book then Published, and called an Admonition to the Parliament.

This Book of Whitgift's was answered by Cartwright, and he replied to it under the Title of his Defence; all these Disputes you have a large Account of in Mr. Strype's Life of Whitgift.

A. D. 1577, he was made Bishop of Worcester, and was in such Favour with the Queen, that she forgave him his First Fruits, and allowed him to collate to all the Prebends in his Church. A Year after his Consecration he was made Vice-president of the Marches of Wales, under Sir Henry Sidney, then Lord Deputy of Ireland, and President. When Grindall was in Disgrace at Court, for the Reasons above given, the Queen had Thoughts of making him Resign, and of preferring Whitgift to Canterbury, for whom she had a great Value; and especially for his being unmarried; for she did not like that Bishops should have Wives, nor indeed any of the Clergy; which was no Compliment to her great Wisdom in other Things; for Cælibacy necessarily makes the Clergy independant on the State, as the Church of Rome well knows: But he was so honest and generous, that he would not hearken to it while Grindall lived.

A. D. 1583, he was Translated to the See of Canterbury; and as soon as he was settled there, the Queen growing jealous of the Puritans, ordered him to see, that strict Conformity was every where used in his Province, to the Discipline of the Church of England: He obeyed her with Inclination, but executed her Commands with Temper, Moderation and Prudence. He required a Subscription to Three Articles, which were these.

1. That Her Majesty, under God, hath, and ought to have, the Sovereignty and Rule over all Persons, &c.

2. That the Book of Common-Prayer, &c. containeth nothing contrary to the Word of God.

3. That he alloweth also the Articles of Religion set forth in 1562.

Many

Many Incumbents in Kent were ſuſpended by him, for not ſubſcribing to theſe Articles; the Particulars of which you will find at Large in Mr. Strype's Book, as alſo his many Troubles and Conteſts with the Puritans, and Separatiſts, and ſometimes with the great Men at Court, whom they got to eſpouſe them. In all which he ſhewed great Temper and Judgment, as well as Reſolution and Courage, but theſe Things are too large to be Particularized here.

Some Time after this he was Sworn of the Privy-Council; and on Sir Thomas Bromley's Death, the Queen would have honoured him with the Cuſtody of the Great-Seal, but he refuſed it, and recommended Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, who was made Lord-Chancellor, 1557. The Univerſity of Oxford, did now alſo deſire him for their Chancellor, in the Room of the Earl of Leiceſter deceas'd, but he declined this alſo, and recommended Hatton, whom they choſe.

Having contracted a Friendſhip with the Earl of Eſſex, he ventured to intercede for him when he was under the Queen's Diſpleaſure, which occaſioned her to exert it alſo againſt him; but when Eſſex was actually ordered to be ſeized, the Archbiſhop ordered Sixty of his Servants, (out of whom Sir George Paul ſaith he could Arm Fifty Horſe, and One Hundred Foot) to go to Court, and to wait Cecill's Commands, who ordered one to lead them; and they went and ſeized on the Earl of Eſſex in his own Houſe, brought him to Lambeth, and from thence he was ſent to the Tower. And this preferring the Judgment of the Queen, before his own private Sentiments and Friendſhip, endeared him to her all the Remainder of her Life. And in Truth it was an Effect of Loyalty, that nothing but his deſiring to be in Favour again could excuſe, in an Archbiſhop, who might have let his Friend have been taken Priſoner by other Hands: But perhaps the Queen's Treatment of Grindall, made him fear his Fate, had he countenanced any that ſhe hated, as ſhe grew old and peeviſh; for not long after this ſhe died.

A. D. 1603, he Crowned King James the Firſt, and his Queen Anne, and managed the Conference at Hampton-Court, between the Biſhops and the Puritans, in the King's Preſence; who was ſo well ſatisfied with the Reaſonings of the former, that he ordered the Liturgy to be Reprinted, and the Rules and Orders of the Church to be obſerved.

But this Conference at Hampton-Court, was only a Blind to introduce Epiſcopacy into Scotland.

Soon after this the Parliament ſate, and the Archbiſhop previous thereunto, appointing a Meeting with ſome Judges and Biſhops at Fulham-Houſe; and going thither in his Barge, he got Cold, and was not long after ſeized with a Fit of the Dead-Palſey, (a) and died at Lambeth, February ult. 1603, and was buried at Croydon; where a fair Monument was erected for him in the South Iſle of the Church, by the Wall.

He did a great many good Things when he was Archbiſhop; one was, the Improving of poor Vicarages; which he did Two Ways, both by leſſening their Fines in their Renewals with him, and alſo increaſing their Penſions and Salaries.

During his Life-time he Erected and Endowed a Fair Hoſpital, and a School, at Croydon, and gave ſeveral Gifts to Peter-Houſe, Pembroke-Hall, and Trinity-College in Cambridge, when he died.

His Character is thus given by the great Camden, in his Life of Queen Elizabeth. He was an Excellent and Learned Man, who gained ſingular Commendation, both by his Juſtice in the Vice-Preſidentſhip of Wales, and by maintaining the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England; and this Commendation he further merited by his Courage, Prudence and Patience: And by Wilſon, the Author of King James the Iſt's Life and Reign; he is ſaid to have been a Grave, Holy, and Pious Man, leaving a Name like a ſweet Perfume behind him; leaving Bancroft a ſturdy Piece to ſucceed him, but not with the ſame Spirit; for what Whitgift ſtrove to do with Gentleneſs and Sweetneſs, Bancroft carried on by Rigor and Severity.

(a) Camden in his Annals of King James the Iſt ſaith, that when that Prince began to find Fault with ſome Things in our Liturgy, and thought it convenient that it ſhould be altered, Whitgift, Archbiſhop of Canterbury died for Grief.

74. RICHARD BANCROFT,

WAS born at Famworth in Lincolnſhire, and Educated at Cambridge, and he had the Rectory of Taverſham near that Univerſity; he was alſo Prebendary of Durham, and of Weſtminſter, Treaſurer of St. Paul's Cathedral in London, and Canon of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury.

A. D. 1597, he was Conſecrated Biſhop of London, and in 1604, tranſlated to this See of Canterbury.

When he was Biſhop of London, A. D. 1603, he had, ſaith Heylin, a Principal Share in the Conferences at Hampton-Court, (which the Author of the Notes on Wilſon's Life of King James the Iſt ſaith, was only a blind to introduce Epiſcopacy into Scotland;) the Scotch Nobility being ſummoned by Letter from the King to attend there.

And he ſaith, that Bancroft alſo had the ſole Management of the Convocation which was held that Year; and there paſſed the Body of Canons and Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſtical, which are now received in the Church of England.

As there were in this Archbiſhop's Time, are now, and will always be, different ways of forming Judgments upon Men; ſo very different Accounts are given of Bancroft.

" The Earl of Clarendon ſaith, he underſtood " the Church excellently, and had almoſt reſ- " cued it out of the Hands of the Calvinian " Party, and very much ſubdued the Unruly " Spirit of the Non-Conformiſts, by, and after " the Conference at Hampton Court; counte- " nanced Men of the greateſt Parts in Learn- " ing, and diſpoſed the Clergy to a more ſo- " lid Courſe of Study, than they had been " uſed to; and had he, ſaith the Hiſtorian, " been ſucceeded by any one who underſtood " and loved the Church, that Infection would " eaſily have been kept out, which could not " afterwards be ſo eaſily expelled. And Heylin ſaith, " With him fell the Uniformity of the Church " of England.

On the other Hand, the Author of the Life of King James the Iſt calls him a Sturdy Piece; and ſaith, that he ſtrove to do that with Rigor and Severity, which his Predeceſſor attempted with Sweetneſs and Gentleneſs; as I have before obſerved.

And

And in another Place Wilſon ſaith, That Bancroft's Roughneſs gained little upon thoſe who deſerted the Ceremonies. And indeed Experience hath ſufficiently taught us, that ſuch a Method is not the way to gain upon any one; and therefore 'tis as improper to obtain the End propoſed, as 'tis certainly contradictory to the Spirit of the Goſpel.

The ſame Author ſaith, that Bancroft influenced King James to found the College of Chelſey. But as the Notes upon that Paſſage informs us, it ſeems to have been a Miſtake; the Founder of that College being one Dr. Sutcliffe. And though perhaps Bancroft might favour his Deſign, 'tis not likely that he went very far in it; and that both becauſe he knew King James did afterwards diſcourage it, and Laud neglect it. And yet Laud had Bancroft in the higheſt Veneration, and purſued his Maxims, as it afterwards fell out, to the Ruin of himſelf, and of King Charles the Iſt.

This Archbiſhop publiſhed a Book, called Dangerous Poſitions and Proceedings Publiſhed and Practiſed within this Iſland of Great-Britain, under Pretence of Reformation, and for the Presbyterial Diſcipline.

And A. D. 1593, another, called a Survey of the Pretended Holy Diſcipline.

He died November the 2d, 1610, and was buried under a flat Stone in Lambeth-Church. One would think he was deemed to be a very covetous and ſtingy Man by this Epitaph, which Wilſon tells us, was made upon him by ſome unlucky Wit,

Here lies his Grace, in cold Earth clad,
Who dy'd with Want of what he had.

But ſaith he, of his Predeceſſor Whitgift, and his Succeſſor Abbot, I never heard nor read any Thing tending to their Diſparagement.

75. GEORGE ABBOT,

WAS a Clothworker's Son, and born at Guilford in Surrey, A. D. 1562. He was Educated at Oxford, being firſt Fellow of Baliol, and after that Maſter of Univerſity-College there. His next Preferment was the Deanry of Wincheſter, and after that he had the ſame Dignity in the Church of Glouceſter.

A. D. 1609, he was made Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield: Soon after this he was Tranſlated to London. And A. D. 1611, made Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

In which high Station he met with many Difficulties and Ruffles, and according to the different Sentiments of Men in thoſe and the ſucceeding Times, hath very different Characters given of him.

Some celebrate him for his Diligence and Elegancy in Preaching; but others give an Account of him very much to his Diſadvantage; for which the Reaſons don't lie very deep, to any one who will impartially look into the Hiſtories of thoſe Times, read Books written on both Sides, and form his Judgment not according to Party Affection, but to candid Love of Truth.

A. D. 1621, while he was Hunting in Burnhill-Park near Hertford-Bridge, at that Time belonging to the Lord Zouch; he had the Misfortune by a perfectly Chance Shot, to kill the Keeper with a Croſs-Bow.

This was a dreadful Affliction to him; and upon it, writing to the King for Leave, he retired to Guilford, where he was Founding and Building an Hoſpital; and he made a very ample Proviſion for the Widow and Children of the Man that he killed.

On this ſad Accident it became a great Query, whether by ſuch an involuntary Manſlaughter, he ſhould incur the Penalty of Irregularity, or Suſpenſion. And this Matter was ſolemnly referred to a Court of Delegates, who about Six Months after gave their Judgment, That he had incurred no Irregularity, was liable to no Penalty, nor had brought any Scandal upon the Church: And ſo Laud was forced to wait for Canterbury a while longer.

On this he had the King's Pardon; but was not free from his Diſpleaſure; which perhaps was begun againſt him a good while before, when he refuſed to ſit in the Court of Delegates, upon the Affair of the Counteſs of Eſſex's Divorce; for which he gave his Reaſons; and which were mix'd with ſome Reflections on the Lady's Conduct. But the King took the Part of his Favourite Somerſet ſo much at that Time, as to anſwer theſe Reaſons himſelf, which ſilenced the Debate.

Some Time after this, no doubt alſo he incurred the King's Diſlike, as well as that of his new Favourite Villers, when being at Croydon the Day that the Book of Sports was ordered to be Publiſhed, he flatly forbad it to be read there: But that Prince could diſſemble his Reſentments as long as he pleaſed.

As no Doubt alſo he did, with Regard to this Prelate, when he ſo openly declared himſelf againſt the Spaniſh Match; and ſo boldly and honeſtly wrote to him againſt tolerating the Romiſh Religion; for King James ſo cajoled the good Archbiſhop, that after all that, he ſet his Hand as a Witneſs to the Articles with Spain.

A. D. 1627, being accuſed by ſome Perſons at Court, of Remiſneſs in his Government of the Church, and of favouring the Puritans; and in particular for his refuſing to Licenſe Dr. Sibthorp's Sermon about Apoſtolical Obedience; King Charles the Iſt, ſequeſtred him from his Metropolitical Viſitation, confined him to his Houſe at Ford in this Country, and granted a Commiſſion to the Biſhops of London, Durham, &c. to execute that Juriſdiction. But about a Year after he was ſent for to Court, reconciled to the King, and ordered to attend the Council-Table Twice a Week; which was done to quiet the Minds of the People, who had a very great Eſteem for this Archbiſhop, as indeed had all the moderate Clergy.

He died at Croydon, A. D. 1633, and was buried at Guilford, where a fair Monument was Erected for him.

The Earl of Clarendon ſaith, (a) "He ſate "too long in the See, and had too great a "Juriſdiction over the Church, though with-"out any Credit in the Court, from the Death "of King James, and with but little for many "Years before.

"He owns he had Learning enough for a "Head of a College, and yet leſſens his "Character, on the Account of that Preferment; "forgetting it was Archbiſhop Laud's Caſe.

"He ſaith alſo, that he was of very moroſe "Manners, and of as ſowre an Aſpect, which "in that Time was called Gravity; but totally "ignorant of the true Conſtitution of the Church "of England, and of the State and Intereſt of "the Clergy. And under the Opinion of that

(a) Vol. I. Page 88.

"Virtue,

" Virtue, and by the Recommendation of the " Earl of Dunbarr, the King's Scotch Favourite, " he was preferred to the Biſhoprick of Litch- " field and Coventry, and ſoon afterwards to that " of London: Whence alſo he was haſtily " ſnatched, and promoted to Canterbury. He ſaith " alſo, that he conſidered Chriſtian Religion " no otherwiſe, than as it abhorred and re- " viled Popery; and he valued thoſe moſt, " who did that moſt furiouſly. He ſeems to blame Abbot alſo, for preferring Men that prudently forbore a Publick Railing at the Hierarchy, and Eccleſiaſtical Government, let their Opinions and private Practice be what it would; and ſaith alſo, that his Houſe was a Sanctuary for ſuch Men, and that he Licenſed their Books: By which perhaps he commends him much more than he was aware of; for that ſhewed him an Impartial Promoter of Truth, that he was willing Books might appear on both Sides, and Mankind, by that Means, be capacitated fairly to judge for themſelves. But the Earl ſaith, he adhered only to the Doctrine of Calvin; and for his Sake, did not think ſo ill of the Diſcipline as he ought to have done: That is, he ought to think ill of that which he thought well of; and becauſe he liked Calvin's Doctrine, therefore he ſhould have been againſt it: For let his Judgment have been what it would, he ſhould have been for encouraging another Sort of Learning. But by this famed Hiſtorian's Leave, I think Abbot ought to have followed his Conſcience's Direction, and acted according to what he believed and judged to be right; for every one can't change their Judgment ſo eaſily, as one Mr. Hyde parted with his, to Compliment the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

I ſhall end this ſhort Account of this Archbiſhop, with what Mr. Speed ſaith of him, an Hiſtorian perhaps leſs Partial than the laſt named: In his Hiſtory of Great-Britain, Book 10. Page 1227.

The firſt Preacher, and the firſt in that Ambaſſage which King James ſent into Scotland, to Eſtabliſh thoſe Neighbouring-Churches, was He, whoſe Eminency both for Place, and Piety, is now worthily foremoſt in guiding our own; and whoſe bleſſed Travels in that Service, as they were acceptable to God, his Majeſty, and that Nation; ſo are they a Document to others, how powerful and admirably ſucceſsful true Learning is, where 'tis guided with true Prudence, and where Piety, and the Love of God's Glory, is linked with Charity, and Zeal of Man's Good.

76. WILLIAM LAUD,

WAS born at Reading in Berks, 1573, his Father being a Clothier there; being ſent to Oxford, he was firſt Scholar, next Fellow, and afterwards became Maſter, or Preſident, of St. John's-College there.

A. D. 1602, he was Divinity Lecturer in his College, and as Heylin (a) ſaith, maintained the Perpetual Viſibility of the Church, derived from the Apoſtles to the Church of Rome, and continued therein to the Reformation.

A. D. 1606, the ſame Author of his Life tells us, that Laud was queſtioned by Dr. Airy, then Vice-Chancellor, about a Sermon which he preached at St. Mary's, as containing in it ſeveral Popiſh Tenets; and on this Account, he was ſo hated and perſecuted, ſaith he, by Dr. Abbot, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that it was accounted a kind of Miſpriſion of Hereſy, to give him a civil Salutation as he walked the Streets. And on this Occaſion a Letter was written to him by Joſeph Hall, afterwards Biſhop of Norwich, from Cambridge, accuſing him ſharply of halting and wavering between the Romiſh and Reformed Opinions, and preſſing him to an open Declaration one way or other.

His firſt Eccleſiaſtical Preferment was the Vicarage of Stamford in Northamptonſhire; after which Richard Neile, Biſhop of Rocheſter, made him Rector of Cuckſtane in Kent, on which he reſigned his Fellowſhip. And upon the Account of the Unhealthfulneſs of the Air, exchanged Cuckſtane for Norton, in the ſame County, a Place lying between Sittingbourn and Feverſham.

The Biſhop got him alſo the Reverſion of a Prebend of Weſtminſter, (which he enjoyed about Ten Years after) and laid the Foundation of his being Preſident of St. John's College. But herein he was oppoſed by Dr. Abbot, now Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry, who wrote to the Chancellor of Oxford, that Laud was a Papiſt, in his Heart at leaſt, and ſo warmly addicted to Popery, that he kept Company with none but profeſt and ſuſpected Papiſts.

After he was ſettled in his Headſhip, Biſhop Neile got him to preach at Court before King James, A. D. 1609; and Two Years after he was made one of that King's Chaplains in Ordinary.

Here, ſaith Heylin, he waited Four Years in continual and warm Expectations of Preferment; but none fell to him, becauſe Abbot had given a bad Character of him to the King, and to the Lord Chancellor Egerton: So that he had Thoughts of retiring to his College. But his old faſt Friend Neile, now made Biſhop of Lincoln, to keep him in Heart and Spirit, gave him the Prebend of Bugden, and the Archdeaconry of Huntington.

Some Time after this the King took Notice of him, and made him Dean of Glouceſter: But before he was Dean, ſaith Heylin, he uſed ſome Expreſſions in a Sermon at Oxford, importing, that the Presbyterians were as bad as the Papiſts; which gave great Offence to the Vicechancellor, Dr. Robert Abbot, Brother to the Biſhop of that Name, ſo that he publickly preached againſt that Doctrine at St. Mary's.

When he came to Glouceſter, he ſet about the Repair of his Cathedral, and particularly took Care to remove the Communion Table out of the Body of the Church, and to place it at the Eaſt End of the Quire, cloſe to the Wall, Altarwiſe; and he recommended Bowing towards it, to the Prebendaries, &c. All this was very much to the Diſlike and Offence of the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, Dr. Miles Smith; whoſe Chaplain White, having wrote a Letter againſt it to the Chancellor of the Dioceſe, in which he ſaid, that it would rejoice the Papiſts, &c. Laud alſo wrote to the Biſhop of Lincoln in Defence of it, and moved that the High Commiſſion Court would make ſome ſpeedy Order in it, that he might not be brought into Contempt, by ſuch his firſt Reformations, as he called them. Tho' methinks it was not a very proper Word, ſince the Reverſe was thought to be ſo by our firſt Reformers. But I own his not being brought into Contempt by it, was the very beſt Reaſon why the High-Commiſſion Court ſhould Countenance ſuch Practices.

(a) Life of Archbiſhop Laud.

A. D. 1617.

A. D. 1617, the Biſhop of Rocheſter gave, or got him the Rectory of Ibſtock in Leiceſterſhire, in Exchange for his Benefices in Kent.

A. D. 1620, he was made Prebendary of Weſtminſter, which he held with his Deanery and Living.

A. D. 1621, he was made Biſhop of St. David's; and at Aberguilly, the Place of the Reſidence of the Biſhop, he built a new Chapel, and Conſecrated it, giving a good deal of Plate, and rich Furniture to it.

At the Coronation of King Charles the Iſt, being appointed by the King to officiate for the Dean of Weſtminſter, (viz. Williams, Biſhop of Lincoln, then out of Favour at Court) Laud placed the Old Crucifix upon the Communion-Table, (which he called the Altar) as was uſual in Times of Popery. For 'tis not unlikely that he, as well as his late Maſter, King James, might fall in with the Senſe of that Paſſage in the Conference at Hampton-Court, Page 77, and which Heylin, in the Life of this Prelate, calls a Golden Aphoriſm, viz. That no Church ought further to ſeparate it ſelf from the Church of Rome, either in Doctrine or in Ceremonies, than ſhe had departed from her ſelf when ſhe was in her beſt and flouriſhing State: Which was, I ſuppoſe, when ſhe was higheſt, and had the moſt Power: But I would fain know how the Church of Rome comes to be thus a Standard, and to have a Right to be followed by others: Any more than to be obliged to Copy after them?

A. D. 1626, Laud was made Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and the ſame Year Dean of the Chapel, and a Privy-Counſellor.

A. D. 1627, one Sibthorp, Vicar of Brackley in Northamptonſhire, preached a Sermon in Juſtification of the Loan then required by the King; and aſſerted that Our Kings might raiſe Money without their Parliaments, &c. which Sermon was refuſed to be Licenſed for the Preſs by Archbiſhop Abbot, but was approved of by Laud, and afterwards Printed with the Title of Apoſtolical Obedience.

A. D. 1628, the Houſe of Commons in their Remonſtrance charged Laud, and his old Friend Neile, now Biſhop of Winton, of being in the Arminian Faction, which they ſaid, was a cunning way to bring in Popery; for that the Profeſſors of thoſe Opinions were Proteſtants only in Shew, but Jeſuits in Opinion and Practice.

This Year Laud was Tranſlated to London; and now he drew up ſeveral Statutes for the Regulating of the Univerſity; which were recommended by the King, and received by the Univerſity. And he procured Two Hundred and Sixty Greek Manuſcripts for their Publick Library, Two Hundred and Forty of which were given by the Earl of Pembroke, and Forty by Sir Thomas Rowe.

A. D. 1630, he was Chancellor of that Univerſity. And the Year after he exerted himſelf vigorouſly in the Rebuilding of his Cathedral of St. Paul's, and allowed towards it One Hundred Pounds per Annum out of his Biſhoprick. And this Year he began alſo to build Three Sides of the New Quadrangle in St. John's College in Oxford.

A. D. 1632, One Sherfield, Recorder of Salisbury, was proſecuted in the High-Commiſſion-Court, for taking down and breaking the Glaſs of a Window in that Cathedral, wherein was a Picture of God in the Shape of an Old Man. In which Affair Laud exerted himſelf much, juſtified the Uſe of Pictures in Churches, and in particular ſaid, that the Reaſon why God was ſo repreſented, was becauſe he is called in Sacred Scripture the Ancient of Days, and that the Hair of his Head is ſaid to be as white as Wool, in Dan. 7. 9.

A. D. 1633, he accompanied the King into Scotland, (a) and was ſworn one of the Counſellors for that Kingdom; and this Year alſo he was made Chanceller of Dublin. And Abbot now dying, he was Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury in his Room, September the 19th, 1633. But before that Ceremony was performed, Heylin, to his great Honour, reports of him, that he was offered a Cardinals Cap, which I dare ſay was never done to his Predeceſſor, and ſhewed that he was very well thought of at Rome.

But Heylin ſaith, the good Man gave the Popiſh Emiſſaries this Anſwer; That there was ſomething dwelt within him, which would not ſuffer him to accept the Offer, till Rome were otherwiſe than it was. He ſaith alſo, that Laud acquainted the King with this Offer, and with the Perſon that brought it; as he did alſo when he was offered it a Second Time, but he doth not tell us what Anſwer the King made at either Time.

A while after this, Laud endeavoured to get the Engliſh Liturgy to be uſed in our Factories and Settlements Abroad, and by the French and Dutch Churches here; he gave out alſo now, his Orders for ſetting the Communion-Table Altarwiſe at the Eaſt End of the Chancel, for railing it in, &c. and in order hereunto, he viſited himſelf in the Dioceſe of Lincoln; and put the Biſhops of his Province on the Purſuit of the ſame Deſigns: And as much Stir was made about this Tranſpoſition of the Communion-Table from the Body of the Church, to the Eaſt End of the Choir, or Chancel, and placing it there cloſe to the Wall, as if it had been of the very Eſſence of Religion; for they engaged the King to ſtrengthen it with his Authority. But after all, it gave much Offence, both becauſe it ſtood in the Place, and after the manner of the Popiſh Altar, and alſo, becauſe it had Adoration paid towards it by Appointment, as Heylin ſaith in his Life of this Prelate, Page 274. And indeed it was Enacted in the New Statutes, which Laud got now to be confirmed under the Great-Seal, as he did for ſeveral Cathedral Churches.

By this Archbiſhop's Authority alſo and Order, the Biſhops now enjoined their Clergy to read in their Churches, the King's Declaration about uſing Sports upon the Lord's-Day: And when many boggled at it, and ſome refuſed it, Books were ordered to be written in its Defence; and ſuch were ſo written by Biſhop White, and by Heylin of Weſtminſter.

A. D. 1634, Laud was appointed one of the Commiſſioners of Trade, and ſoon after, on Weſton's, the Earl of Portland's Death, he was put into the Commiſſion for the Management of the Treaſury: Which, ſaith Lord Clarendon, he had Reaſon to be ſorry for, becauſe it engaged him in Civil Buſineſs, and Matters of State, in which he had little Experience, Book I. Page 98. And occaſioned Cotton and Windebank, who were in the ſame Commiſſion, to differ with him, and deſert him; and eſpecially when he had prevailed upon the King to give (a) Lord Clarendon ſaith, that the Reaſon of the King's taking Laud with him, was to bring Scotland to Uniformity with the Church of England, and in this was he no leſs ſollicitous than the King himſelf; to this End he preached in the Royal Chapel in Edinburgh, which ſcarce any Engliſhman had ever done before in the King's Preſence: But this Attempt of obtruding the National Form of Religious Worſhip in one Kingdom, upon another which did not like it, proved very fatal both to Laud and his Maſter.

the Treaſurer's Staff to Juxton, Biſhop of London.

And this Promotion of his to the Archbiſhoprick, or rather that of his being Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, exceedingly provoked the Envy and Reproach and Malice of Men of all Qualities and Conditions, who agreed in nothing elſe, Page 102.

A. D. 1635, he finiſhed, got publiſhed in, and received by the Convocation there, a Body of Statutes for the Univerſity of Oxford. And he obtained of the King, the annexing a Canonry of Chriſt-Church in that Univerſity to the Hebrew Profeſſorſhip; by which means the Knowledge of the Hebrew and Chaldee Languages began to diffuſe it ſelf there. He got alſo another Canonry of that Church to be annexed to the Univerſity-Orator's Place, and eſtabliſhed alſo an Arabick Profeſſor.

About this Time alſo, he was employed, (in Conſort with the Biſhops of London and Norwich) in compiling, or getting made, a Book of Canons, and afterwards a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland; which being through a fatal Inadvertence, ſaith Clarendon, never preſented to the Kirk, nor tendred to the Approbation of any General Aſſembly in that Kingdom, as had been the Caſe in the Reſtitution of Epiſcopal Government, and in the Introduction of the Five Articles of Perth before, occaſioned great Stirs and Diſorders in Scotland; for ſaith Lord Clarendon, Tho' it was almoſt impoſſible any ſuch new Thing could be introduced, which would not much concern the Government of the State: And though Laud had always declared to the Scottiſh Biſhops, that it was their Part to be ſure that nothing contrary to the Laws of the Land ſhould be propoſed to the King; and that they ſhould never put any thing in Execution, without the Approbation of the Privy-Council: Yet theſe Proceedings were never ſo much as communicated to the Lords of the Council of that Kingdom, Page 104, 105. to whoſe Examination, he ſaith, That theſe Three managing Biſhops did not dare to ſubmit them. And he owns, that this was what occaſioned the War from Scotland. Ibid.

A. D. 1637, One Hubbard, an Alderman of London, dying without any Heir at all, his Eſtate fell to the Crown; out of which Laud begged ſo much as ſerved to endow Three Fellowſhips, in the Colleges of Exeter, Jeſus, and Pembroke, in Oxon; and for educating ſo many of the Natives of the Iſlands of Jerſey and Guernſey; and indeed he did on all Occaſions ſtudy to promote the Intereſt of Learning.

A. D. 1639, the Scots having outwitted the King, and obtained a Pacification at a Time when they were in great Danger of being ſubdued, they grew more bold in their Demands and Enterprizes. To Fence againſt which, the King ſent for Wentworth out of Ireland, made him Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom, Earl of Strafford, &c. and conſtituted a Junto of Three Perſons to conſult about the Affairs of Scotland: This Triumvirate was Canterbury, Hamilton, and Strafford.

This Year alſo Laud built the Convocation-Houſe at the Weſt End of the Divinity School in Oxford; and furniſhed the Room over it with great Numbers of curious and valuable Manuſcripts, many of which were in the Hebrew, Greek, Perſick, and Arabian Languages. He gave alſo now above Two Hundred Pounds per Annum to the Grammar-Shool at Reading, the Place of his Birth, for the placing of Boys out to Apprentice, to the marrying of Maids, and to an Augmentation of the Living of St. Laurence Church in that Town: The Advowſon of which he purchaſed alſo, and gave it to his College of St. John's in Oxford.

A. D. 1640, a Convocation was called, wherein ſeveral Canons and Inſtitutions were made; and a Benevolence in lieu of a Subſidy was granted to the King from the Clergy; in all theſe the Archbiſhop had ſo great a Share, as rendred him obnoxious to thoſe Men that were then forming Deſigns againſt him, and which afterwards were moſt effectually and fatally put in Execution againſt him: And Heylin ſaith, that herein both Papiſts and Puritans were engaged.

Not long after this, it became the general Opinion, that Laud adviſed the King to diſſolve the laſt Parliament; which going current among the common People, a Paper was fix'd up on the Royal-Exchange, to animate the Mob to go and pull down his Houſe at Lambeth; which was attempted the Monday following: And one Beuſtede, a Ringleader in that Riot, was executed for Treaſon, and hang'd and quarter'd.

On theſe Tumults the Archbiſhop removed from Lambeth, and lay in his Lodgings in Whitehall, and ordered the High-Commiſſion to be kept in St. Paul's Church, which however did not protect it; for it was inſulted there by above Two Thouſand Mob, and the Judges and Officers were forced to fly and ſhift for themſelves. The Prime Leader of this Riot, though known, was not puniſhed; becauſe the Scots had juſt then invaded England, and remonſtrated againſt Laud, as one of thoſe that did their Nation ill Offices with the King. And ſoon after they got a Book publiſhed, called Laudenſium Auto catacriſis; in which they pretended from the Books and Speeches of the Archbiſhop, to prove him a Friend to Arminianiſm, Superſtition, and Popery.

About this Time alſo there was a Petition preſented to the King, by about Twelve Engliſh Peers; in which, among other Grievances, they complained of the Canons made by Laud, in the late Convocation.

Soon after the meeting of the Parliament, and the Impeachment of the Earl of Strafford, the Commons alſo began to condemn thoſe Canons, and charged Laud as their Contriver and Author: The Scotch Commiſſioners alſo charged him in the Houſe of Lords, with doing ill Offices between England and them: On which, on December 18. he was impeached of High-Treaſon by the Commons, and committed to the Cuſtody of the Black Rod; and in February following was ſent to the Tower. But though in ſome Time after this, the Scots Commiſſioners preſented a Declaration againſt him to the Parliament, it was laid aſide; and Lord Clarendon ſaith, that then there was no Thoughts of Reſuming it; becauſe they hoped that his Age and Infirmities would quickly free them from further Trouble; Book I. Page 192. And he lay in the Tower a Priſoner near Four Years.

About the Middle of the Year 1641, he reſigned his Chancellorſhip of the Univerſity of Oxford; and in October following, the Houſe of Lords Sequeſtred his Juriſdiction, conferring it on Brent, and other Officers under him, and debarred him from beſtowing any Benefice on any one without their Approbation.

In the End of the Year 1642, it was voted that the Biſhops Revenues ſhould be appropriated to the Publick Uſe; and accordingly the Palace of the Archbiſhop at Lambeth was ſeized on by ſome Soldiers: But upon his Petition he had Liberty to ſecure his Goods and Books; though after this his Houſe was ſeveral Times broke into, and Inſults done to the Chapel, &c.

A. D. 1643, on October the 23d, the Commons brought Ten Articles of Impeachment againſt him; the Subſtance of which was,

That he had endeavoured to perſuade the King to ſet up an Arbitrary Government, and to deſtroy Parliaments: That he endeavoured to ſet up the Power of the Council-Table, the Canons of the Church, and the King's Prerogative, above and againſt the Laws of the Land; and of this they gave Inſtances: And they further charged him with advancing Superſtition and Popery within the Realm, and of harbouring Popiſh Prieſts, &c. And alſo that he had held a Synod, and therein had made Canons contrary to the Laws of the Kingdom, and to the Rights and Privileges of Parliament.

About the Middle of January following, he put in his Anſwer and Plea; which was, that he claimed the Benefit of the Act of Pacification for all Matters relating to Scotland; and to the reſt he pleaded not Guilty.

His Tryal came not on till the 12th of March following, when Wilde made a long-ſtudied Speech to repreſent him guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge by the Articles: Which the Archbiſhop anſwered by another; and therein aſſerted his Innocence in general, and his Regard to the Laws and Conſtitutions of the Realm; and firmly denied his having any Deſign to introduce Popery; he ſhewed alſo the Unreaſonableneſs of ſuch a Suppoſition, and produced many Inſtances of his having brought over Perſons from the Romiſh Religion to that of the Church of England.

The next Morning the Lords contracted all the Articles of Impeachment againſt him to theſe Four.

1. That he had traiterouſly endeavoured to alter and ſubvert the Eſtabliſhed Religion, and in its Room to bring in Popery.

2. That he uſurp'd a Papal and Tyrannical Power in the Church, to the Derogation of the Prerogative, and to the Deſtruction of the Subjects Liberties.

3. That he endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Temporal Laws and Government, and to introduce Arbitrary Power, contrary to Law, and to the Liberties of the Subject.

4. That he endeavoured to ſubvert the Rights of Parliament, and the ancient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings, and by Evil and falſe Suggeſtions, to incenſe his Majeſty againſt them.

The Management of the Evidence againſt him, was committed to Maynard, Wilde, and Nicholas, all Members of the Houſe of Commons; who drew it out to ſuch a Length, that it took up in all, tho' not all together, Seventeen Days, and the Pleadings were not finiſhed till the End of July. At the end of all, he pleaded the King's Pardon under the Great-Seal; but the Houſe declared it to be of no Effect, and that the King could not Pardon on a Judgment of Parliament.

His Enemies agree that he made a handſome Defence, and ſpake well for himſelf with great Oratory and Boldneſs; and it looks as if they had not ſufficient Evidence to make good their Charge of High-Treaſon againſt him, and to influence the Lords to find him guilty; that they took the Matter out of their Hands, and that the Commons were forced to bring in a Bill of Attainder at laſt, which was done; and though he, for Form-ſake, was brought before the Commons on November the 11th, under a Pretence of favouring him with the Opportunity of alledging Reaſons why that Bill ſhould not paſs againſt him, yet the Ordinance paſſed within a few Days after. The Lords ſtuck at this a while, and they conſulted the Judges, who anſwered, That nothing brought againſt him was Treaſon, by the known and eſtabliſhed Laws of the Land; whereupon the Lords declared they could not find him guilty of Treaſon; but by Petitions, Clamour, and other ſuch like Arts, they were forced to come into it, and ſo it paſſed indeed the Upper Houſe; but it was at a Time when not above Seven or Eight Peers were preſent.

The paſſing of this Ordinance was notified to the Archbiſhop, by the Lieutenant of the Tower; and he accordingly prepared himſelf for his Execution; which was performed on Tower-Hill on the 10th of January following, A. D. 1644.

He made a pretty long Speech on the Scaffold, in which he vindicated the King from having any Deſign to bring in Popery. He complained of the way lately fallen into by the City of London, to Petition the Parliament, and to Clamour for Juſtice againſt ſuch Things and Perſons as they did not like; he aſſerted his own hearty Affection to the Church of England, and his utter Abhorrence of that Treaſon for which he was condemned to Death; and denied that ever he had any Deſign to ſubvert the Eſtabliſhed Laws or Religion, or that he was an Enemy to Parliaments; though he owned that he diſliked the Proceedings of ſome of them. He concluded with forgiving, and praying for his Enemies; and though he was interrupted by ſome very unſeaſonable Queſtions put to him juſt before the Stroke, yet he received it with Temper and Compoſure.

He was Beheaded in his Seventy Firſt Year, and his Body was buried in the Church of Allhallows-Barking.

This Account of this unhappy Prelate is as Impartial as I can form it, being taken from ſuch as have written in his Defence; but indeed it is not an eaſy Matter to make an exact Judgment upon the Character of this Man. He was certainly a Man of Learning in his Way, and a great Encourager of it in all Reſpects: But then the Roughneſs of his Temper, and his Heat and Paſſion, defeated him in many of his good Purpoſes, and made him a great many Enemies. (a) The Number of which was increaſed, by his neglecting to entertain the Gentlemen of his Dioceſe at Canterbury, or at Lambeth, as his Predeceſſor uſed to do; as alſo his neglecting to adviſe with his Brethren the Biſhops in any Matters, but depending too much upon his own Judgment and Opinion, which was far enough from being always the beſt; (b) for hardly any Man in ſo high a Station, knew leſs of Life, and (a) Lord Clarendon ſaith, that he was too much prejudiced againſt ſome Men, and treated them as if they were Enemies to the Diſcipline of the Church, only becauſe they held ſome Doctrinal Points, as Calvin did; whereas, ſaith the Hiſtorian, they abhorred his Diſcipline, reverenced the Government of the Church, and prayed for the Peace of it, with as much Zeal and Fervency as any in the Kingdom, Book I. Page 91.

(b) Hiſt. of Rebellion, Book I. Page 100. where he tells the Story of Lord Cottington's impoſing upon him, or bantring him, as the Word is now. See alſo Page 142. about his Friendſhip and Intimacy with Lord Conway.

how to behave himſelf in the World, and in a Court, and yet he was fond of publick Buſineſs. I can't ſay, nor do I believe on the whole, that he was in his Secret Judgment a Papiſt, in the proper Senſe of that Word, as it implies one that owns the Authority of the Pope, for I fancy he would have had no Power ſuperior to his own, and therefore perhaps the Papiſts might not love him much neither; but I can't help thinking, that he was for carrying that as far as any Pope ever did: And there appears good Grounds to charge him with having been alſo a Friend to the Religion, or Doctrines, of thoſe that we call Papiſts.

Heylin, (a) in his Life, excuſes, or rather applauds, his Compliance with many Popiſh Tenets and Practices; becauſe, ſaith he, he hoped by this, to bring over the Papiſts to the Engliſh Communion. And when you conſider his odd Behaviour at the Conſecration of Catherine-Creed-Church in London; his allowing that of Rome to be a true Church; his denying the Pope to be Antichriſt; his encouraging Sparrow to preach up Auricular Confeſſion; Watts to do ſo by Penance; Heylin to defend Adoration towards the Altar, as they called the Communion-Table; and Mountague, to preach up praying to Saints, &c; theſe Things, I ſay, and his preferring Windebank to be Secretary of State, who was an entire Creature of the Queen's, and a noted Favourer of Popiſh Prieſts, Jeſuits, &c. Who can doubt him to have been ſo too?

Militiere, in his Victory of Truth, Page 8, 9. a Book written to perſuade King Charles the IId to declare himſelf a Papiſt, thus ſpeaks of Laud; Every one knows that this Archbiſhop, nouriſhed in the Schiſm from the Catholick Church, had no other Deſign than to re-unite under one Body, the People divided into Sects among themſelves, as well as from the Church; and to make himſelf Chief Head of this Schiſmatical Body.

Which will ſerve ſomething to confirm what a late Writer of Secret Hiſtory hath ſaid, viz. That he would have had King Charles the Iſt to have drawn his Sword in the Defence of that Whimſical Deſign.

Heylin in his Life, Page 212, owns that Laud was an Enemy to the Marriage of the Clergy; (which is one of the moſt artful Conſtitutions of Popery, as rendring the Clergy thereby independent on the State) and that he declared he would in all his Promotions prefer ſingle Clerks to ſuch as were married. But indeed when he found that theſe publick Declarations gave Offence, he endeavoured to ſet all right again, by promoting a Match for Turner, one of his Chaplains, and by marrying him himſelf: Which ſhewed, that in the Judgment which he had formed for the Cælibacy of the Clergy, there was more of Deſign than Conſcience.

Thoſe who pleaſe to have a fuller Account of this Eminent Prelate, may conſult Ruſhworth's Collections, and Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory; Laud's own Diary, Publiſhed by Prynne; the Athenæ Oxonienſes, and Heylin's Life of this Archbiſhop. As alſo the Hiſtory of his Troubles and Tryal, written by himſelf, and publiſhed by Wharton, the Author of the Anglia Sacra; to which Hiſtory a Supplement hath been ſince added, and Printed at London 1700.

There was alſo a Tract in Quarto, written by J. B. Miniſter of the Word of God, Entituled, A Relation of the Troubles of the Three Foreign Churches in Kent, cauſed by the Injunctions of William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Printed at London, A. D. 1645, on which Foreign Churches he ſeems to have born a little too hard. And Heylin in his Life ſaith, that Laud offered to the Lords of the Council, that neither French nor Dutch Churches ſhould be any longer Tolerated here.

77. WILLIAM JUXTON,

WAS born at Chicheſter in Suſſex, Educated at Oxford, and became Fellow of St. John's-College there. He ſucceeded Laud in the Preſidentſhip of that Houſe; and was afterwards made Dean of Worceſter, Clerk of the Cloſet to King Charles the Iſt; and A. D. 1633, Dean of the Chapel-Royal, and Biſhop of Hereford; but before his Conſecration to that See, he was Tranſlated to that of London; and ſoon after was made one of the Privy-Council, and at length Lord Treaſurer: All which Preferments, and his entire Riſe, he owed to his faſt Friend, Archbiſhop Laud.

Lord Clarendon ſaith, Page 99, of Vol. I. "That when the White-Staff was thus ſuddenly "put into his Hands, Juxton was a Man ſo "unknown, that his Name was ſcarce heard "of in the Kingdom; having been within "Two Years before, but a private Chaplain "to the King, and the Preſident of a Poor "College in Oxford: And this, he ſaith, inflamed more Men than were angry before; "and no doubt did not only ſharpen the Edge "of Envy and Malice againſt the Archbiſhop "(i. e. Laud) but moſt unjuſtly indiſpoſed "many towards the Church it ſelf, which "they looked upon as the Gulf ready to ſwallow all the Great Offices; there being others "in View, of that Robe, who were ambitious "enough to expect the reſt."

But in the Adminiſtration of this Invidious Office, I don't find him charged with either want of Capacity or Integrity.

He attended King Charles the Iſt in his Sufferings and Death: And after that unfortunate Prince's Murther, retired and lived privately till the Reſtoration; and then in September, 1660, was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury: The Management of which Province, he being Aged and Infirm, was committed in a great Meaſure to his Succeſſor, Gilbert Sheldon, then Biſhop of London, for the ſmall Time that he lived after this. For Archbiſhop Juxton died at Lambeth, A. D. 1663, and was carried to Oxford, and buried in St. John's-College, to which Houſe he had been a conſiderable Benefactor.

78. GILBERT SHELDON,

WAS born at Staunton in Staffordſhire, and was bred a Commoner in Trinity-College in Oxford, and from thence removed to All-Soul's-College in that Univerſity, being firſt choſen Fellow, and afterwards Warden of it, 1635.

Soon

(a) And yet Lord Clarendon ſaith, Book I. Page 91. That his Doctrinal Opinions were nothing ally'd to Popery; and that (Page 93.) None of his Party were at all inclined to it; which I fear is aſſerted with a little too much Partiality: Nay he goes further, and ſaith, that no Body believed him to be that way inclined.

Soon after which he was made Clerk of the Closet, Canon of Worceſter, and in ſome Time, Maſter of the Savoy; but that, the Rebellion prevented his enjoying.

A. D. 1648, he was Impriſoned at Oxford, for his Zeal for the Royal Cauſe; but being after ſome Time releaſed, he retired into the Country, and there lived privately till the Reſtoration of King Charles the IId; upon which he was made Biſhop of London, and Dean of the Chapel, and afterwards, on Juxton's Death, in 1663, he was Tranſlated to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury.

A. D. 1665, he was the principal Promoter of that ſevere Act againſt the Diſſenters, which is called the Corporation Act, and was eſtabliſhed at Oxford, in the Parliament then held there.

A. D. 1669, he was principally Inſtrumental in obtaining that Proclamation which then came out, to ſuppreſs Conventicles, and in putting the Laws in Execution againſt Diſſenters.

A. D. 1672, the Dutcheſs of York died a Papiſt; and in a Paper which ſhe left behind her, charged Sheldon, and Blanford Biſhop of Worceſter, with telling her, that there were many Things in the Roman Church, which it were very much to be wiſhed had been kept; as Confeſſion, Praying for the Dead, &c. But the Author of the Life of King Charles the IId ſaith, they denied the Words. Page 293.

For ſome Years before his Death, Sheldon retired to Croyden, and there lived privately, not concerning himſelf in any State Affairs.

And there he died, A. D. 1677, and was buried in Croyden Church, where there is a very fine Monument for him, erected by his Nephew, Sir Joſeph Sheldon, who was Lord-Mayor of London.

The Author of the Athenæ Oxon. ſaith, that between his being made Biſhop of London, and his Death, which was about Seventeen Years, he gave away above Sixty Six Thouſand Pounds to Charitable Uſes.

His Theatre at Oxford coſt him Sixteen Thouſand Pounds Building, beſides Two Thouſand Pounds which he gave to buy Lands to keep it in Repair.

He rebuilt, or rather repaired, the Library at Lambeth-Houſe at his own Charge. He gave Two Thouſand Pounds towards building St. Paul's Church, and conſiderable Sums to Trinity-College in Oxon, and to that of the ſame Name in Cambridge. And at his Death he bequeathed One Thouſand Five Hundred Pounds more to Charitable Uſes.

79. WILLIAM SANCROFT.

THIS Gentleman was Fellow of Emanuel-College in Cambridge, and afterwards from being Dean of St. Paul's Church in London, was, when King Charles the IId was under ſome Difficulty who to make Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Duke of York recommended to ſucceed Sheldon in this See; and accordingly was Conſecrated in the Abbey-Church of Weſtminſter, in January 1677.

A. D. 1686, he was firſt named in King James's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, but honeſtly refuſed to act in it. And Two Years after, when that King publiſhed his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, and enjoined the Clergy to read it in their Churches, a Conſult was held at this Archbiſhop's Palace at Lambeth by the Biſhops, and ſuch of the Superior Clergy, as were then in Town; and there it was honeſtly and bravely agreed to ſave the Parochial Clergy from that great and miſchievous Penalty which muſt have fallen upon them, if they had been (as 'tis probable they would have been) ſuſpended for not reading it in their Churches; and generouſly to take the Blame and Puniſhment upon themſelves, by refuſing to ſend the Declaration to their Clergy; accordingly, the Archbiſhop, and Six more Biſhops, agreed on an Addreſs or Petition to the King to excuſe their not Diſtributing and Publiſhing the ſaid Declaration, becauſe it was founded on ſuch a Diſpenſing Power, as had been often declared Illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672; and even in the beginning of his preſent Majeſty's Reign. (a) This Petition being delivered by the Six Suffragan Biſhops, St. Aſaph, Ely, Chicheſter, Bath and Wells, Peterburgh, and Briſtol, and Signed by his Grace's, and all their Hands, they were all ſummoned before the Council, to know if they owned that Petition; they anſwered, That they humbly hoped, if they ſtood there as Criminals, His Majeſty would not take any Advantage againſt them, for they were always ready to obey his juſt Commands: They made the ſame Anſwer, when after withdrawing, they were called in a Second Time; and when preſſed a Third Time, they owned it, and added further, That they had done nothing but what they were ready to juſtify: On this the Chancellor (Jefferies) fell into Anger and Reproaches, and at laſt asked them whether they would give Recognizance to appear before the Court of King's-Bench? This they all refuſed to do, and inſiſted on the Privilege of their Peerage, which they were reſolved to maintain, as well as the Rights of the Church, being equally bound by their Callings to oppoſe all Innovations both in Government and Religion. On this bold Anſwer Jefferies threatned to ſend them to the Tower, unleſs they did immediately withdraw their Petition: To which they unanimouſly anſwered, That they were ready to go wherever the King ſhould pleaſe to ſend them; and they hoped, that the King of Kings would be their Protector, and their Judge; they feared nothing from Men; for having acted according to the Law, and to their Conſciences, no Puniſhment ſhould ever be able to ſhake their Reſolutions. Upon this they were immediately ſent to the Tower; and to avoid Diſturbance, conveyed by Water. The Court, to ſoften the Matter, Publiſhed its Reaſons for this Commitment of the Biſhops, declaring it to be for Contriving, Making and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt his Majeſty, and his Government: For ſo the Miniſtry thought fit to call their Petition. And the Attorney and Sollicitor-General were ordered to proſecute them next Term. At which Time their Tryal came on in Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Jury brought them in Not Guilty: On which, great Acclamations, and Shouts of Joy, were univerſally made, and the Streets and Windows illuminated with Bonfires and Candles; and the Clergy, encouraged by theſe bright and glorious Examples, did generally refuſe to read the King's Declaration all over England; and ſuch as did do it, were diſtinguiſhed by Marks of Diſgrace.

In October, 1688, when there was an Aſſurance at Court, of the Glorious Prince of Orange's deſigned Expedition into this Kingdom, King James ordered this Prelate, and the reſt of the Biſhops who were in Town, to aſſiſt him with their Advice and Direction. And accordingly this Archbiſhop, by the Conſent, and in the Name of the Reſt, made a Speech to him, wherein he boldly and honeſtly gave him the following Advice.

Speceh

1. That the King would pleaſe to put the Management of the Government into ſuch Hands only as were Legally qualified for it.

2. That he would vacate the Commiſſion for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and never let any ſuch other be iſſued out.

3. That he would grant no Diſpenſations; and Reſtore the Maſter and Fellow of Magdalen-College in Oxford.

4. That all Licenſes to Popiſh Schoolmaſters be taken away, and none ſuch granted any more.

5. That he would ceaſe from the Exerciſe of ſuch a Diſpenſing Power as had been of late uſed.

6. That he would Inhibit the Four Foreign Popiſh Biſhops, who called themſelves Vicars Apoſtolical, from exerciſing any Juriſdiction here.

7. That he would fill up the Archbiſhoprick of York, and other vacant Sees, with good Men.

8. That he would ſuperſede all Quo-Warranto's, &c.

9. That he would ſpeedily call a Free Parliament.

10. And laſtly, That he would permit his Biſhops to give him Motives to perſuade him to leave the Church of Rome, and return to the Communion of that wherein he was Born.

The Exigencies of the King's Affairs were ſuch, that though at another Time he would have been very angry, yet now he thank'd them, and promiſed to comply with their Requeſt.

Soon after this, ſome of the Prince of Orange's firſt Declarations coming to the King's Hands, by the Seizure of one Captain Langham's Papers; and there being this Clauſe in it, That He had been earneſtly invited over into England by divers of the Lords, both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen, and others: The King ſent for Sancroft, and Two or Three more Biſhops, who were then in Town, and asked them whether the ſaid Aſſertion of the Prince were true: They were very cautious to anſwer to it, and therefore the King required of them to Sign a Paper, expreſſing their Abhorrence of the Prince's Invaſion, which they refuſed to do; and failed the King's Expectations ſo much, that he told them, he would truſt to his Army: And now the Biſhop of Durham left the Council-Board, ſaid he was ſorry for having ſo long concurred with the Court, and deſired to be reconciled to his Grace of Canterbury, and the other Biſhops.

As ſoon as the Prince of Orange was happily Landed, and that the Gentlemen of Dorſetſhire, and Somerſetſhire firſt, and, after that, many of the Engliſh Nobility and Gentry, and even many of King James's Army had gone in to him at Exeter; this Archbiſhop, in Conſort with that of York, and ſeveral other Biſhops, and Noblemen of Rank, preſented a Petition November the 17th, to King James, repreſenting, that the only way to preſerve him, and his Kingdom, would be to call a Parliament, Free, and Regular in all Reſpects; and that he would pleaſe to uſe all poſſible Means to avoid the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood. But the King's Anſwer did not ſatisfy them, and indeed ruined the little remaining Intereſt he had.

After the King came back from Salisbury, where his Noſe bled him into a Fright, and his Army left him in the Lurch; this Prelate, with the reſt of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, adviſed him to grant a general Pardon to all thoſe who had gone in to the Prince; to depute ſome Lords to wait on the Prince, to treat about a Suſpenſion of Arms, and an Accommodation, and to turn all Papiſts out of all manner of Employments. And in December following, when King James, had withdrawn himſelf, Sancroft met with the other Lords Spiritual and Temporal at Guild-Hall, and there Signed the Declaration, in which they reſolved to apply to the Prince of Orange, to reſcue the Nation from Popery and Slavery; and he concurred in depriving Skelton of the Government of the Tower, and placing the Lord Lucas in his Room.

Theſe were great Lengths to go againſt a Lawful Sovereign, actually in Poſſeſſion of the Crown, if one could be of the Opinion that his Right was Indefeaſible, and that he could do nothing to forfeit it.

And my excellent Friend and Patron, Dr. Simon Patrick, late Biſhop of Ely, and then of Chicheſter, aſſured me, that this Archbiſhop went ſo far againſt King James after this as to ſay, he ought to be depoſed. What it was that after this changed his Mind, perhaps no one certainly knows; 'tis probable it was the Wheedling and Promiſes of King James, when he came back to London, after his firſt going away: But this is certain, that ſome how or other Sancroft was ſo altered, as very much to ſurprize his Brethren the Biſhops, and thoſe other Lords, with whom he joined in every Thing before. But he thought fit now to abſent himſelf from the Convention, when the great Debate about the Vacancy of the Throne was on Foot; and indeed none of the Biſhops came into the Opinion of filling up the Throne, but London and Briſtol; ſuch Whimſical Notions of Loyalty, are apt to take Lodgings in ſome Mens Heads.

In March following, the Prince and Princeſs of Orange having been declared King and Queen of England, by Act of the Convention Parliament, this Archbiſhop, and ſome others of his Suffragans, refuſed to take the Oath of Allegiance to them. For as our Hiſtorian obſerves, (a) This Archbiſhop, ſome Biſhops, and many of the Clergy, had been ſo addicted to the High Notions of Paſſive-Obedience, Non-Reſiſtance, and the Divine Right of an Hereditary Monarchy, that they knew not how to reconcile the Revolution to thoſe Bigotted Principles. And indeed it will be as difficult to reconcile the Behaviour of this Archbiſhop, ſo as to make it conſiſtent with it ſelf.

But now he went on in the ſame Manner, for he would not Conſecrate that excellent Hiſtorian, Divine, and Patriot, Dr. Gilbert Burnet, Biſhop of Salisbury, himſelf, and yet he granted a Commiſſion under the Seal of his Office, to Six Biſhops to perform it; thereby ſhewing that he thought a Man may Commiſſion others to do that for him, which he cannot lawfully do himſelf. And being afterwards upbraided by his Party for this, he got the Commiſſion back out of the Clerk's Hands, and the Biſhop had ſome Difficulty in retrieving it. King William gave the Non-Juring Biſhops a ſufficient Time to conſider, and to come in and take the Oaths to the Government, if they pleaſed; but when he found that their Obſtinacy diſturbed the Peace of the Church, and the Tranquility of his Government, in May, 1691, he filled up the vacant Sees; and made Dr. John Tillotſon Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the Room of this Gentleman, who now retired to Fretchingfeild in Suffolk, the Place of his Birth, and there died A. D. 1693, and was buried, by his own Order, in the Church-yard of the ſaid Pariſh, where a Monument with his Effigies on it, was erected for him.

Biſhop

80. JOHN TILLOTSON.

ON the Deprivation of Dr. Sancroft, as above, Dr. John Tillotſon, then Dean of St. Paul's, was on May the 31ſt, 1691, Conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury in his Room; he was ſoon after Sworn of the Privy-Counſel, and both the King and Queen did always repoſe an entire Confidence in his Wiſdom and Integrity.

This Gentleman had for many Years before been Preacher at Lincoln's-Inn, and he had alſo as long had the Tueſdays Lecture at St. Laurence-Jury's Church by Guild-Hall, in the City of London.

He was once Fellow of Clare-Hall in Cambridge, and in 1663, Rector of Ketton, alias Keddington in Suffolk; made Canon of Canterbury A. D. 1669, and Dean of that Church 1672.

The Late Biſhop of Sarum, Dr. Burnet, gives a large Account and Character of him, in the Sermon which he preached at his Funeral, which I ſhall here Contract. He had his firſt Education and Impreſſion among thoſe who were then called Puritans, but of the beſt Sort; yet even before his Mind was opened to clearer Thoughts, he had a Diſpoſition to larger Notions, and a better Temper: And he could ſcarce brook the Books which in thoſe Days were placed in the Hands of Young People. But happily lighting on Chillingworth's, he received a Turn from that excellent Author, which put him on a true Scent, and gave his Mind a ſolid Foundation to fix upon. He received alſo great Advantage from his Acquaintance with Dr. John Wilkins, Biſhop of Chicheſter, the moſt Univerſal Scholar of that Age.

When he had Dedicated his Studies, and himſelf, to the Service of the Church, he began firſt with a cloſe and careful Application to the Sacred Scriptures, in the Study of which he ſpent Four or Five Years. And next he read over carefully all the Ancient Philoſophers, and Books of Morality; and among the Fathers, Chryſoſtom and Baſil were thoſe he chiefly liked. On theſe Foundations he ſet himſelf to compoſe the greateſt Variety of Sermons, and on the beſt Subjects, that perhaps any one Man ever publiſhed. And his joining with Biſhop Wilkins in purſuing the Scheme of an Univerſal Character, led him to conſider exactly the Truth of Language and Stile; in which no Man was ever happier, nor knew better the fine Art of preſerving the Majeſty of Things, under the moſt plain and unaffected Simplicity of Words; tempering thoſe Two ſo equally together, that he neither let his Thoughts ſink, nor his Stile ſwell, always keeping the Due Mean between a low Flatneſs, and the Dreſſes of falſe Rhetorick.

Looking upon Popery to be a Corruption of the very Deſign of Chriſtianity, he ſet himſelf againſt it with the utmoſt Zeal, Courage and Conduct, which produced many Enemies among ſuch as were hankering that way (a); and theſe were not wanting in all the uſual Arts of Calumny.

They repreſented his glorious and honeſt Endeavour to make out every Thing in Religion from plain and clear Principles, as the Reſult of an Infidelity, that would make him believe nothing which lay beyond the Compaſs of Human Reaſon. His tender good-natured Method of treating the Proteſtant Diſſenters; (whoſe Principles no Man in the World did ever more effectually confute, but indeed without Violence, Railing, and Abuſe,) and his Endeavours to effect an entire Union among Proteſtants, were called want of Zeal in the Cauſe of the Church, and an Inclination towards ſuch as ſeparated from it. But he regarded theſe Things as little as they deſerved, and went ſteadily on in his own way.

After the Reſtoration, when Things ran very high againſt all that did not go almoſt mad for the Church, he was about retiring to a Benefice in the Country, and did ſpend about a Year there: But when the Society of Lincolns-Inn offered him their Preacherſhip, he left his Country Living, and betook himſelf entirely to the conſtant Diſcharge of the Duty of that Place.

After he obtained this higheſt Station in the Church, his Enemies increaſed in Proportion to his Advancement; and though in the Courſe of Thirty Years, he had done perpetual good Offices and Services to all Perſons whom he could oblige, without ever being chargeable with doing a hard Thing to any one; nay, tho' he had a Sweetneſs and Gentleneſs of Temper, which diſcovered it ſelf on all Occaſions, and in all Converſations, yet he met with the moſt rude and inſolent Treatment from a Set of Men, then, and ever ſince, too well known in our World, that perhaps 'tis poſſible for Malice and Falſity to produce. But he bore all this with an Equanimity, and true Chriſtian Patience, which ſet him perfectly above all theſe little Efforts; he paſſed over all Injuries, and was always ready to forgive even the greateſt, and to do Good even to thoſe that uſed him worſt: And the happy Sedateneſs of his Temper, made him incapable of the Practices of either Craft or Violence.

In a word, nothing need be ſaid more of him, than what King William, of ever Glorious Memory, declared to his Son-in-Law, Mr. Chadwick: To whom ſome Time after his Death, he ſpake thus, Mr. Chadwick, I loved your Father; I never knew an honeſter Man, and I never had a better Friend.

He died at Lambeth, November the 22d, 1694, and was buried in the Church of St. Laurence-Jewry in London.

Queen Mary was very ſenſibly afflicted with the Loſs of ſo great a Man; and though ſhe did not ſurvive him above a Month, yet found a way to Reverence his Memory, by ſettling an honourable Penſion on his Relict, who by her Lord's Generoſity and Charity, had the leſs Proviſion made for her.

He built ſome new Apartments at Lambeth, which have rendred that Place much more convenient;

(a) See Dr. Hicks's Diſcourſes on Burnet and Tillotſon, where he calls him Socinian and Atheiſt, &c.

venient; and Biſhop Burnet makes this Compariſon between him and his Predeceſſor, That the latter carried a good Eſtate out of Lambeth, and the former ſpent a good one in it. (a)

81. THOMAS TENISON.

HE was born in the County of Norfolk, A. D. 1634, and had his firſt Education in the Grammar-School in Norwich, where he was admitted one of Archbiſhop Parker's Six Scholars; and at Seventeen Years of Age, was Elected Scholar of Corpus-Chriſti, alias Benet's-College in Cambridge, and was afterwards Fellow of that Houſe. On the Reſtoration he took Orders, and had a College Living, and married the Daughter of Dr. Love, then Maſter of that College. In this Station he was a careful and faithful Pariſh-Prieſt, as he was not long after in the great Cure of St. Martins in the Fields, London; to which Living he was preſented by the Crown; and in a little Time commenced Doctor in Divinity. And now having a large Field to exerciſe his good Talents in, and being Capacitated by a good Income to exert himſelf in his Darling Inclination to Works of Charity and Beneficence; He contrived to ſet up the Free-School in his Pariſh, and to build the School-Houſe, and the Noble Library over it; which, beſides the general Benefit of ſo uſeful a Charity, he then particularly deſigned to erect, in order to defeat the Deſigns of the Popiſh School, which was then opened by Pulton, the Rector of the Jeſuits in the Savoy. And indeed this munificent Act of his, gave Riſe to all the Charity-Schools which have been ſince erected; for a Combination was then entred into by many zealous and wealthy Proteſtants, to erect voluntary Charity-Shools to preſerve the Youth of the City from being tainted with Popery; which in thoſe Times there was great Danger of. And in very many other Inſtances did he, while Miniſter of this Pariſh, diſcover his Propenſion to charitable Acts, though with as great a Care to conceal them from publick Notice: And particularly in the terrible Hard Froſt in the Year 1683, I am informed he gave away Three Hundred Pounds towards finding Coals, and other Conveniences for poor and diſtreſſed Families. And ſo vigorous and diligent was he in taking care of the Souls of his People too, as well as of their Bodies, that upon King James's Acceſſion to the Throne, he preached conſtantly againſt the Errors of Popery; by which, and by Viſits, and Perſonal Conferences, he ſo preſerved the People committed to his Charge, that in all that great Pariſh, ſo near adjoining to the Court, there were not above Two Perſons who apoſtatiſed into Popery. And he foil'd Pulton, the Jeſuit, above-mentioned, at an open and fair Conference.

In the Year 1689, being then Arch-Deacon of London, he was named one of the Commiſſioners to Review the Canons of the Church of England; the Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, and Juriſdictions; to find Means to remove ſcandalous Miniſters, and to prevent ſuch to come into the Church for the Future, &c. in which he exerted himſelf with Vigor and Temper.

And a Scheme for theſe good Purpoſes was prepared to be laid before the Convocation; but that Aſſembly called this an impoſing upon, and limiting the Power of a Convocation; and though they had a Royal Licenſe ſent them to debate about this Affair, they came to a previous Reſolution to admit of no Alterations at all; and ſo that excellent and moſt uſeful Deſign came to nothing.

Some Time after this, Dr. Teniſon was made Biſhop of Lincoln in the Room of Barlow, who vacated the See by Death; but, as he ſought not this Preferment, ſo he accepted of it with Reluctancy.

However, in this Station he behaved himſelf with his wonted Diligence and Care, making a ſtrict Inquiſition into the Behaviour of his Clergy, and into Breaches made on the Canons of the Church by Pariſh-Officers; which latter he enquired into, that he might the better provide for the Wants and Neceſſities of the Poor; and in one word, he reſtored a large and long neglected Dioceſe to very good Order.

Here he continued for about Three Years, and then was Tranſlated to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury on the Death of Dr. Tillotſon, 1694, and his Election was confirmed in Bow-Church, January the 16th.

One of the firſt good Things which he did after this high Promotion, was to endeavour a Reconciliation between the King, and the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, which he effected ſo well, that the good King, as a Token of his Eſteem for her, gave her Royal Highneſs moſt of the late Queen's Jewels.

On the Death of that excellent Queen, the King appointed the Archbiſhop to Preach her Funeral Sermon, which he did, and Printed the Diſcourſe: Which offended the Non-Juring Clergy very much; and Dr. Ken, formerly Biſhop of Bath and Wells, wrote a very angry and impertinent Letter to him about it; in which he upbraided him for not putting the Queen in Mind of her Breach of Duty to her Father, when he attended upon her in her laſt Hours. For the poor peeviſh Man had forgot, that her Duty to her Country was of a higher Nature, than that ſhe ow'd to the Perſon of her Natural Father; and that it could not be any Crime in her to accept of that Crown, which he had Abdicated and Forfeited, when offered her by the Repreſentatives of the whole Nation, ſince by it her Royal Conſort, and her ſelf, were capacitated to ſave and defend that Country, which her Father, by his unhappy Councils, and Meaſures, was going to ruin and deſtroy.

Our good Archbiſhop was wiſer than to make any Anſwer to ſuch a Reproachful Letter, and immediately applied himſelf to the King to take care of reſtoring and preſerving the Diſcipline of the Church, which his Majeſty anſwered, by Publiſhing Eighteen Articles of Injunctions for that Purpoſe, and which were directed to the Archbiſhop, that he might tranſmit them to the Biſhops, in order to their being communicated to all the Clergy.

And ſoon after this, when the King went over into Flanders, the Archbiſhop was made the firſt of the Lords Juſtices in England for the Adminiſtration of the Government during His Majeſty's Abſence; and this high Honour he had for ſeveral Years afterwards.

After this Time, the Diſpute about the Doctrine of the Trinity ran very high, and had a great Spread; and a very rude and angry Book was written by Dr. South, Prebendary of Weſtminſter, againſt another of Dr. Sherlock's, Dean of St. Paul's, on that Subject.

And this Matter went ſo far, that our good Archbiſhop thought it proper to apply to the King, to put a Stop to ſuch Writings and Diſputes; putes; which accordingly His Majeſty did, by Publiſhing Four Articles of Directions to the Biſhops and Clergy, to regulate that Affair.

And his Grace himſelf had alſo a little before this, iſſued out, by the King's Command, a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of his Province, to recommend ſuch Rules and Orders, as if they had been well obſerved, would have much conduced to the Peace and Honour of the Church of England.

And again in the Year 1699, when an Addreſs was preſented to the King by the Houſe of Commons, that he would pleaſe to iſſue out his Proclamation for the ſuppreſſing of Vice and Immorality, and for putting the Laws in Execution which related thereto; this excellent Archbiſhop wrote another ſerious and preſſing Circular Letter to the Biſhops of his Province on that Subject, ordered them to communicate them to the Clergy, and gave them particular Directions and Inſtructions how they ſhould act, in order to obtain the deſired Succeſs, in thoſe great and important Matters.

When that Great and Excellent Prince, King William the IIId, of Glorious and Immortal Memory, was near his Death, he was attended upon by this Pious Prelate, with the utmoſt Duty and Aſſiduity, and he Adminiſtred the Sacrament to him in his laſt Moments.

His Grace was appointed the Firſt Commiſſioner for ſettling the Union between England and Scotland, and in this good and great Deſign he was very Active and Zealous, though his Age and Infirmities made it very uneaſy to him: And at laſt forced him to a Confinement at Lambeth, where his Miſeries and Pains were ſo great, as for ſome Years were exceeded by nothing but by his Chriſtian Patience, and excellent Temper and Reſignation of Mind; and the only Pleaſure he had left, was in doing Acts of Charity and Beneficence, in which he was as Profuſe as his Prudence would permit him to be.

On her late Majeſty's Death, he exerted himſelf beyond Expectation, conſidering how very Weak, Aged, and Infirm he was, in the Execution of that Commiſſion, by which our Excellent King GEORGE, His Title and Rights was Eſtabliſhed to the Crown, and the Regency ſettled till his Majeſty's Arrival in England; whom he waited upon in Perſon, tho' he had not ſtirred out for a long Time before, and I ſaw him perform the long Ceremony of His Coronation, with that Patience and Alacrity, under ſuch a Degree of Pain and Weakneſs, that nothing could have ſupported him under, but the great Mercy and Favour of Heaven, and the great Satisfaction in ſeeing that excellent Prince Eſtabliſhed on the Throne, whoſe Intereſt he had ever moſt heartily and invariably eſpouſed, and whom he did not doubt but God had raiſed up, to retrieve the Honour and Proſperity of Great-Britain, which ſome late Councils and Meaſures had very much leſſened and endangered.

And now, having been ſo happy to live to ſee this Day over, he was very willing and deſirous to leave this troubleſome World, whenever it ſhould pleaſe God to take him out of it; and departed this Life on December the 14th, 1715.

He was a Man of ſteady Reſolution and Integrity, which nothing could vary nor corrupt, nor any Changes of Times or Intereſts ever make him deviate from what he thought to be his Duty to God, and to his Country: His Learning was as univerſal as his Charity, Goodneſs, and Beneficence; and as there was no uſeful Part of Knowledge to which he was a Stranger, ſo there was none he did not encourage by his Bounty and Liberality; nor was there any Species of Charity, in which he did not exert himſelf ſo very liberally, that his Power and Ability to do ſo many great Things, was almoſt as wonderful, as his Inclination was Great and Glorious.

I hope one Time or other, a large Account of theſe Things, and of the various Paſſages of ſo excellent and uſeful a Life, will be made Publick by a better Hand; the Dean of Peterborough having by him ſufficient Materials for ſuch a Work, with the Particulars of this great Prelate's Charities, communicated to him by himſelf. I can only in ſhort ſay, that beſides the School, and excellent Library of St. Martins, above-mentioned, I know he gave very great Sums of Money to the French Proteſtants, to the Iriſh Refugees, and to thoſe who were made ſo by the Perſecutions in Orange and Savoy.

To the diſtreſſed Palatines he not only gave large Sums at divers Times, for their immediate Support; but he lodged alſo very large Quantities of Money in the Hands of the Reverend Dr. Kennet, now Dean of Peterborough, and of Dr. Butler, lately Deceaſed, to buy them Wool to ſet them to Work, and Cloaths to cover them.

And ſo extenſive and diſintereſted was this excellent Man's Charity, that, as I am well informed, it reached even to his Enemies. For he gave ſeveral large Sums at ſeveral Times to the Non-Jurors, when reduced to Want and Extremity; and in particular to Biſhop Sheridan; who was ſcandalouſly neglected by his own Party, and could not have died in Peace, if he had not (on his Letter of Requeſt) obtained this Archbiſhop's Bounty to diſcharge his Debts for Bread and Small Beer.

He gave alſo ſeveral Hundreds of Pounds towards purchaſing the Library of St. Paul's.

And when once there was a Deſign of building a new Church at Chatham in Kent, on my acquainting him with it, he voluntarily offered me Fifty Guineas towards it; which I could not then take, becauſe our Deſign was not ſufficiently advanced, and did afterwards unhappily miſcarry.

Deans of Canterbury.

N.B. There were before Lanfranc's Time, Governors of this Church under the Archbiſhop, who had the Title of Dean, of whom I ſhall ſpeak among the Priors.

A.D. 1540. THE Priory of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury being diſſolved, of which I ſhall ſpeak largely in its proper Place, and the Prior and Monks being ejected by King Henry the VIIIth: In their Room was conſtituted a Cathedral Metropolitical and Collegiate Church of Secular Prieſts under the Name of a Dean and Twelve Prebendaries.

The Names of whom and their Succeſſors do here follow.

1. Nicholas Wotton, the firſt Dean, was a Man of great Learning and Note; having been employed in great and honourable Offices. King Henry

Henry the VIIIth made him his Reſident in France, diſpenſing with him to be Non-Reſident on both his Deaneries (for he had York too, and was Treaſurer of the Church of Exeter, and Prebendary of Osboldwick in the Church of York;) and he was in France when King Henry died. He was alſo Privy-Counſellor to that Prince, and his Three next Succeſſors; and was ſo abſolute a Courtier, that he kept in Favour with them all, and appears to have been very indifferent as to one Religion, or the other, keeping his Ground whether Popery, or Proteſtantiſm were uppermoſt.

There is a fine Monument for him, with his Effigies moſt accurately cut in Stone, at the Foot of that of King Henry the IVth, and his Queen, in Canterbury Cathedral.

At the Time of this new Foundation of the Church of Canterbury by King Henry the VIIIth, it took a new, or rather reaſſumed its old Name of Chriſt-Church; for ſince Becket's being Sainted, till now, it had been Dedicated to him, and called St. Thomas's; and on its Seal was the Repreſentation of Becket's Murder; but now it had a new Seal, expreſſing Chriſt's Crucifixion, and with a new Motto, which it ſtill preſerves, and uſes.

2. Thomas Godwin, D. D. 1556, he had been before Dean of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and was made Biſhop of Bath and Wells 1584. In his Time the Houſe and Buildings of the Deanery were ſo damaged by Fire, that he left them, and the Houſe at Chartham, which belongs to the Dean, in ſo dilapidated a Condition, that his Chapter threatned him with a Suit at Law, unleſs he put them into Repair; which I ſuppoſe he did, becauſe Batteley cites the Regiſter of this Church, as expreſſing that he Rebuilt the Deanery.

He was born at Okingham in Surrey, and being Educated at Oxford, was Choſen Fellow of Magdalen-College; and in King Edward the VIth's Reign, taught a Free School at Brackley in Northamptonſhire.

3. Richard Rogers, A. D. 1584, Suffragan of Dover. He died 1597, and was buried in the Chapel of the Bleſſed Virgin, near the Place called the Martyrdom, under a fair Marble-Stone.

4. Thomas Nevil, D. D. 1597, died 1615, and was buried in Brenchley's Oratory, on the South Side of the Nave of the Cathedral, which Place he rebuilt, and deſigned it as a Burying-Place for himſelf and Relations. When he was Maſter of Trinity-College in Cambridge, he erected a Fair Building there, which is called to this Day Nevil's-Court.

5. Charles Fotherby, B. D. was one of the Prebendaries here, and made Dean A. D. 1615. He died 1619, and was buried in the abovementioned Chapel of the Virgin Mary, where there is a fair Monument for him in Black Marble.

6. John Boys, D. D. Fourth Son of Thomas Boys of Eythorne, Eſq; died 1625, and was buried by his Predeceſſor, having a fair Monument erected for him.

7. Iſaac Bargrave, D. D. Son of Robert Bargrave of Bridge, Eſq; was firſt Canon, and then made Dean, A. D. 1625; died 1642, and was buried by his Predeceſſor. On the Wall, near his Grave, is his Picture, painted upon Copper, with an Inſcription under it.

8. George Eglionby, was made Dean A. D. 1642; but the Wars and Troubles coming on, he was never Inſtalled, and died in a Years Time: He was buried in Chriſt-Church in Oxford.

9. Thomas Turner was Inſtituted Dean 1643; he outlived the Civil Wars, and enjoyed this Dignity ſeveral Years after in Peace. He died 1672, and was buried by his Predeceſſors.

10. John Tillotſon, formerly Prebendary of this Church; in the Year 1672 he was made Dean of this Church; and afterwards, 1689, Dean of St. Pauls, and after that Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

11. John Sharp, Educated at Chriſt's-College in Cambridge; in 1672 was made Archdeacon of Berks; and then being Chaplain to Lord-Keeper Finch, was made Rector of St. Giles's in the Fields; after Dean of Norwich, and was Inſtituted Dean of Canterbury A. D. 1689; and A. D. 1691, was advanced to the Archbiſhoprick of York.

12. George Hooper, having been Chaplain to that moſt excellent Princeſs, Queen Mary the IId, in Holland, was made Dean of Canterbury 1691.

13. George Stanhope, D. D. now Living.

Archdeaconry of Canterbury.

FROM Auſtin, the firſt Archbiſhop, (a) to Lanfranc, which was about Four Hundred Sixty Two Years, there was no Archdeacon in the City or Dioceſe of Canterbury; as ſome Authors aſſure us.

But from Theodore's Time, to Lanfranc, a certain Biſhop was Conſtituted (at firſt) by the Authority of Pope Vitalian, who reſided at St. Martins, in the Suburbs of Canterbury; and who, in the Archbiſhop's Abſence, executed all Offices for him, both in the Dioceſe and City; and in the Vacancy of the See, by Authority from the Chapter of Canterbury, he did the ſame through all the Province, for about Three Hundred Ninety Nine Years.

But though all this be clear from the Antiq. Brit. and other good Authors, that Lanfranc firſt laid aſide the Biſhop of St. Martins, (b) and appointed an Archdeacon in his Room; yet 'tis equally certain, ſay ſome other Writers, that there was an Archdeacon of Canterbury long before. For it appears from Two Saxon Manuſcripts in the Library at Canterbury, that as long ago as A. D. 805, one Wilfred Subſcribed in a Synod at Cloveſhoe, or Cliff, together with the Archbiſhop, thus, Wilfræd Archdeacon. And the Records in that Church make Mention of no leſs than Eight Archdeacons more, giving us their Names, and the Times of their being ſo. 'Tis plain alſo, that Almar, or Almerus, was Archdeacon when the Danes ſack'd Canterbury, and carried away Archbiſhop Elphege, for he is accuſed by ſome Writers, for betraying the City to the Enemy. Other Archdeacons, as well as ſome of theſe, are mentioned by Harpsfeild. From all which there can be no Doubt, but that there was a ſettled Archdeacon of Canterbury long before Lanfranc's Days; but 'tis more than probable, that then, he that was the Archdeacon, was alſo the Biſhop of St. Martins; that is, beſides his Archidiaconal, he had alſo an Epiſcopal Power and Juriſdiction in the Metropolitan's Abſence, and was to him a kind of Chorepiſcopus: But the Office of the Chorepiſcopi being about that Time aboliſhed Abroad, Lanfranc, who was a Foreigner, and who made great Innovations and Alterations in our Church-Diſcipline and Uſages; did accordingly ſtrip Godwin, the laſt Archdeacon that was Ordained a Biſhop, of his Chorepiſcopal Authority, Power and Title; and in his Room ſubſtituted his Chaplain Valerius, reſtraining him, and all ſubſequent Archdeacons of Canterbury, to the Exerciſe only of the Office of that Denomination. Thus Mr. Somner.

'Tis probable, that the firſt Archdeacon of Canterbury was Conſtituted by Archbiſhop Theodore, about the Year 670; and that he is the ſame Perſon whom the Monks make to have been Biſhop of St. Martins. (a)

But One of theſe Biſhops of St. Martins dying in Lanfranc's Time, he would not ordain any other; and after ſome Time, gave to one Valerius, a Chaplain of his, all Juriſdiction in the City of Canterbury, only excepting in Matrimonial Cauſes, and in thoſe Churches which belonged to his Patronage; which Clerk began then to be called the Archdeacon of Canterbury; and he had a Houſe without North-Gate, by St. Gregory's Monaſtery, where he and his Succeſſors lived for about One Hundred Fifty Nine Years; ſo the Fragment. (b)

But it doth not appear that Lanfranc was ſo fond of Archdeacons; his Authority in his Abſence he gave to Gundulf, Biſhop of Rocheſter; and this Houſe he gave to the Archdeacon, was to get him out of the Way.

On the Death of any Archbiſhop, the Chapter of Canterbury had all the Archiepiſcopal Authority, except what was granted to this Archdeacon.

When Stephen Langton was Archbiſhop, Henry Sandford, Archdeacon of Canterbury, being made Biſhop of Rocheſter, he put his Brother, Simon Langton, into that Place; and becauſe the Archdeaconry was then reckoned but a ſlender Income, he granted to him all Dioceſan Juriſdiction in the Rural Deaneries; excepting in Matrimonial Cauſes, and in ſuch Churches as belonged to the Manors of the Archbiſhop, and of the Monks.

After his, and his Succeſſor Richard's Death, Sede vacante, the Chapter of Canterbury exerciſed all manner of Juriſdiction, except what was reſerved to the Archdeacon before.

And again A. D. 1240, on the Death of Edmund, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and in the Vacancy of the See, the Chapter claimed and exerciſed all manner of Juriſdiction, both Provincial and Dioceſan; by Peter Lambard, their Official: But Simon Langton, the Archdeacon, oppoſed it, and ſaid, that all manner of Power of both thoſe Kinds, belonged to him by Virtue of his Archdeaconry. After ſome Buſtle and Stir, this Matter was amicably made up by a Perſonal Compoſition.

The ſame Conteſt happened again on Boniface's Death, and was ended the ſame way.

Again, on Archbiſhop Kilwarby's Removal, (Sede vacante) the ſame Controverſy aroſe, but was not ended the ſame way; for Archdeacon Robert Gernemath, appealed to Rome, and a Cauſe commenced upon it; but Robert died pendente Lite.

After this, on the Death of Archbiſhop John Peckham, the ſame Conteſt again ariſing, the Suit at Rome was revived by Richard Feringes, Archdeacon of Canterbury: And Pope Boniface ſent a Bull about it, which referred the Cauſe to Delegates in England; who reported, that they could not bring the Cauſe to a plain Determination, and therefore ſent the Evidences and Inſtruments to Rome. But not long after, this Archdeacon being made Archbiſhop of Dublin, the Matter dropp'd for a while. Tho' Harpsfeild ſaith, it was revived again by the next Archdeacon, John de Langton; but he alſo being made a Biſhop, (viz. of Chicheſter) the Controverſy ended, and was never ſtarted again by any ſucceeding Archdeacons. (a)

This Archdeacon hath one Privilege which ſtill continues to him, and that is, the Inſtalment of all the Suffragan Biſhops of the Province of Canterbury; which Anciently he celebrated in Perſon, and had peculiar Fees and Claims, as the new Biſhop's Palfrey, Saddle, &c. his Riding-Coat, Hat, and Boots, and the Silver Cup he drank out of at Dinner, &c. But afterwards it came to be done by Letters of Deputation only.

He is Patron of theſe Vicarages or Curacies; viz. Hakynton, Tenham, Linſtede, Dodington, Iwade, Stone, Limne, Weſthithe, St. Mary's and St. Clement's in Sandwich, Stodmerſh, and St. Margarets in Canterbury.

lived

lived about the Year 798; for he ſubſcribed at a Council called by Archbiſhop Athelard, and which was held at Baccanceld, now Bapchild in Kent, that Year.

And again he ſubſcribed at another Synod held at Cloveſhoe, or Cliffe at Hoo, A. D. 803, and he was Witneſs to a Charter of Athelard's, concerning the Manner of Burn, A. D. 805, and ſigns there Archdeacon of Canterbury. All theſe Things appear from the Records of the Church of Canterbury.

'Tis probable he was afterwards made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, there being one of his Name that ſucceeded Athelard.

'Tis likely there were other Archdeacons of this Church before him, but their Names are loſt, as are many of his Succeſſors.

2. Beornoth, A. D. 844.

3. Athelwald, 853.

4. Ealſtan, 864.

5. Sigifrith, 866.

6. Living, 866.

All theſe Five were during the Time of Ceolnoth, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; part of which was exceeding Troubleſome, by the Daniſh Piracies and Invaſions, and by the Plague which raged in Canterbury.

7. Wearbald, A. D. 890.

8. Almar, A. D. 1010.

The Saxon Chronicle ſaith, That one Ælmer, which moſt think 'was this Man, betrayed the City of Canterbury to the Danes; but as he is there not called Archdeacon, but an Abbot, ſo 'tis more likely that it was Ælmer, Abbot of St. Auſtins, who was guilty of that Treachery; ſince 'tis certain that Abbey was ſpared, when the Danes ſacked and burnt all the reſt of the Town. To take off the Odium of this Action, the Monkiſh Writers ſay it was one Ælmar, an Archdeacon. But it ſeems probable that there was one

9. Brinſtan, who was Archdeacon at this Time, and whom Leland calls the Archdeacon of Elphege that was then Archbiſhop; and that he was not his Archdeacon only while he was Biſhop of Winton, ſeems plain, from his being buried, as he was, in the North Porch of St. Auſtin's Church in Canterbury.

10. Haimo, A. D. 1054, born in England, and of good Parentage; was a good Preacher, and a Learned Man. He wrote a Commentary on Geneſis, which 'tis ſaid was in the Library of Lincoln-College in Oxon.

11. Valerius, made, as is ſaid, Archdeacon by Lanfranc, who gave him alſo a Houſe to dwell in, near the Priory of St. Gregories in Canterbury.

12. Anſchitillus, 1075.

13. William, A. D. 1101; he was ſent by Anſelm to enquire whether Maud, Daughter of Malcolm, King of Scots, were really a Nun or not; ſhe was propoſed in Marriage to King Henry the Iſt; and there are ſeveral Epiſtles of Anſelm's to him, extant.

14. John, Nephew to Archbiſhop Ralf, who made him Archdeacon with very great Pomp and Solemnity; and A. D. 1119, ſent him to Rome for his Pall; and to the Council held at Rhemes; and A. D. 1125, he was made Biſhop of Rocheſter.

15. Aſcelinus, or Asketinus: this Man Somner thinks was afterwards Biſhop of Rocheſter: But Mr. Batteley corrects it as a Miſtake, and I think juſtly; but his Name is found in an Ancient Charter of the Church of Canterbury.

16. William II. That he ſucceeded Asketine, appears from a Charter of Theobald, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Printed in Somner's Appendix to his Hiſtory of Canterbury.

17. Helewiſus, or Helewinus; but in our Textus Roffenſis, his Name is uſually written Herwiſus; A. D. 1142, he was ſent by Archbiſhop Corboyl, together with the Biſhops of St. Davids and Rocheſter, to put the Monks of Dover in Poſſeſſion of their new Monaſtery of St. Martins, which that Prelate had new built for them; but they were oppoſed by the Chriſt-Church Monks, who ſent one of their Body, Jeremias, to ſtop their Proceedings, and to appeal to Rome, in Behalf of the Right of their Church.

A. D. 1138, he was ſummoned to a Legantine Synod held at Weſtminſter by Albricus, the Pope's Legate.

18. Walter, A. D. 1147, made Biſhop of Rocheſter. He was Brother to Archbiſhop Theobald: He was Elected to Rocheſter by the Monks of that Church, in the Chapter-Houſe of Canterbury, in the Preſence of, and at the Nomination of the Archbiſhop, 1148.

19. Roger of Biſhopsbridge; he was made Archdeacon by Archbiſhop Theobald; and afterwards by his Intereſt, became Archbiſhop of York. He was a Secular, and no Monk, and therefore became very diſtaſteful to the Monks of Chriſt-Church, becauſe he would notwithſtanding be preſent at their Chapters and Aſſemblies, as if he had been one of their Society.

20. Thomas Becket; in the Third of Henry the IId, he had the Cuſtody of the Great-Seal, and was made afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury: He would not reſign his Archdeaconry for a good while after he was Conſecrated Archbiſhop, though the King importunately deſired him; but after ſome Time he conferred it on Riddell, at the King's Requeſt.

21. Geofrey Riddell, he continued Archdeacon all Archbiſhop Becket's Reign, being ſent by the King into France, to ſollicit the French King not to let Becket ſtay in his Kingdom, for which Becket hated him; and becauſe he eſpouſed the King's Cauſe, he was by that Archbiſhop Excommunicated; who calls him Arch-Devil, and a Limb of Antichriſt, in a Letter to the Biſhop of Hereford. Afterwards he was (A. D. 1174,) made Biſhop of Ely: And being charged with being Acceſſary to Becket's Death, he ſolemnly declared, in the Chapel of St. Catherines in Weſtminſter, his entire Innocence as to that Matter.

This Man was Baron of the Exchequer in the Eleventh of King Henry the IId, as I conclude from Madox's Hiſtory of the Exchequer, Page 743; for I don't find any other, and perhaps Galfride was the ſame with Geofrey.

22. Herbert.

Archbiſhop Richard for a Time made Three Archdeacons in his Dioceſe; viz. Savarinus, Nicholaus, and this Man; but this continued not long, before Herbert was the only Archdeacon; and was Elected Biſhop of Sarum 1193.

Harpsfeild brings in here Petrus Bleſſenſis, as Archdeacon of this Church; but 'tis probably a Miſtake: He was Archdeacon of London.

23. Rybert, made afterwards Biſhop of Sarum.

24. Henryde Caſtilion, Archdeacon in Archbiſhop Hubert's Time, 1199. 'Tis likely this is that Henry de Caſtillan, who, it appears by the Exchequer Rolls, was a Juſtice in Eyre, in the Counties of Bucks and Bedford.

And in a Charter made by King James, to Herbert Biſhop of Sarum, he is ſtiled the King's Chancellor.

25. Henry de Sandford, or Stanford, and Saltford; or as Harpsfeild writes him, Stafford; he was Conſecrated Biſhop of Rocheſter, A. D. 1227. They ſay he was a Man of Learning, and much addicted to Philoſophical Studies.

26. Simon Langton, Brother to the Archbiſhop Stephen Langton. The Pope, by the King's Inſtigation, Langton having ſided with Lewis the Dolphin againſt him, put him by from being Archbiſhop of York, to which he was Elected by the Monks; and therefore his Brother gave him this Archdeaconry a little before he died; and he was alſo Chancellor of Dauphiny. And whereas the former Archdeacons had only Perſonal Grants, this Man had a Real and Perpetual one; whereby he was capable of, and actually did much enlarge and improve the Archdeaconry; for by the Conſent of the Chapter, he not only united to it the Churches of Hakynton, and Tenham, but got the Juriſdiction to extend over the whole Dioceſe, without any Exceptions to particular Churches.

He Founded the Hoſpital of Poor-Prieſts in Canterbury; an Account of which ſee in the Chapter of Religious Houſes, &c. in Vol. II.

27. Stephen de Vicenna, 1248.

28. Othobonus, a Genoueſe, Nephew to Pope Innocent the IVth, had this Archdeaconry for ſome Time, and was afterwards made Pope.

29. Stephen de Monte Lucelli, A. D. 1257.

30. Hugh Mortimer.

Somner ſaith he was the firſt that was made Official of Canterbury, about A. D. 1244, which he was by Boniface, when but Archbiſhop Elect, on his going to Rome: For he then ordered ſome Woods to be felled, and certain Taxes and Impoſitions to be levied in his Dioceſe, and appointed Mortimer to take Care of thoſe Affairs, under the Title of his Official. He held this Office a great while, as long as the Year 1270. But the Year following he was made Archdeacon, and continued ſo about Fourteen Years.

31. William Middleton continued about Two Years, and then was made Biſhop of Norwich; he was very Learned in the Canon and Civil Law.

32. Robert de Gernemutha, or Yarmouth. Fox calls him Gernemine: He was Archdeacon but Two Years, and then Deceaſed at Rome.

33. Richard de Ferrings, after Fifteen Years, was removed to the Archbiſhoprick of Dublin, but died in his Return from Rome, whither he went for his Pall, as ſome ſay; but it ſeems rather, that he had been there ſome Time before, to proſecute his Suit about the Juriſdiction of his Place, and was made Archbiſhop of Dublin by the Pope's Bull of Proviſion.

34. John Langton, A. D. 1299; he was before Chancellor of England, A. D. 1293, and again in 1297, and Treaſurer to King Edward; when being Elected Biſhop of Ely by the Monks, he was put by by Pope Boniface the VIIIth. To make him ſome Amends for this, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury gave him this Place; from whence A. D. 1305, he was made Biſhop of Chicheſter.

35. Simon de Feverſham, made Archdeacon by Archbiſhop Winchelſey, and is reckoned a Learned Man; but the Pope made him quit his Archdeaconry, and put in another by his Bull of Proviſion.

36. Bernard de Eyci, A. D. 1305, by ſome written Eyci de Labredo, and de la Brito, or rather de la Barton, for he was Son to the Lord Aumeny de Barton; he was but a Youth when he had his Bull of Proviſion, being not old enough to go into Deacons Orders.

37. Gutterdus Labredus.

38. Simon Convenius, or de Cominges; he is ſtiled in the Bull Chaplain of the Apoſtolick See.

39. Johannes Brutonius, Chaplain to the King, was Treaſurer of the Church of Wells, and Rector of Saltwood in Kent; he was alſo Chancellor to the Archbiſhop, and by him made Archdeacon, but the Pope turned him out, and by a Bull of Proviſion put in Raymond.

40. Raymond, Nephew to Pope Clement the VIth; he was made a Cardinal before he had this Place; and the Bull ſaith, this was given him, in order to help bear the Expences of that Dignity.

41. Hugo de Engoliſma, A. D. 1327.

To this Man Nicholas Trivet Dedicated his Hiſtory. In the Year 1324, under the Character of Envoy of the Lord Pope, or of the Apoſtolick See, he came over hither out of France, where the Pope's Court then was, and ſo got this Preferment.

42. Robert Stratford; he was Chancellor of England in the Eleventh, and then again in the Four-

Fourteenth of King Edward the IIId, and afterwards made Biſhop of Chicheſter, and held his Archdeaconry with it for ſome Years: He was Brother to Archbiſhop Stratford, and was Chancellor of Oxford, and of the Exchequer.

43. Bernardus Siſtre, A. D. 1339.

44. Petrus Rogerus, A. D. 1346; he was at Seventeen Years of Age, Cardinal Deacon Sanctæ Mariæ Novæ; Earl of Beaufort, and Nephew to Pope Clement the VIth. And A. D. 1371, was Elected Pope, and took the Name of Gregory the XIth: And after the Seat of the Papacy had continued about Seventy Years in France, he removed it back to Rome.

He never came into England, though he was many Years Archdeacon of Canterbury.

45. William Indicis, a Cardinal, was Archdeacon 1374.

46. Henry Wakefield; he was made Archdeacon, Sede vacante, by the Prior and Convent of Chriſt-Church, and took an Oath of Canonical Obedience to them, during the Vacancy of the Archbiſhoprick.

A. D. 1375, he was Treaſurer of the Houſhold to the King, and Elected Biſhop of Ely; but the Pope vacated the Election, and afterwards by a Bull of Proviſion made him Biſhop of Worceſter.

47. William; (ſome place him before Wakefeild) and then he muſt be William de Indicis: He was a Foreigner, and is by Fox called Lord William, and a Cardinal.

48. Audomar de Rupy; was in the 35th of King Edward the IIId, made Archdeacon by a Bull of Proviſion.

49. William Packington, A. D. 1381, on Archbiſhop Sudbury's Murder, made by the Convent of Chriſt-Church; he was alſo Chancellor to the Archbiſhop.

50. Adam de Mottrum, A. D. 1390, and Chancellor to the Archbiſhop (Courtney); he was alſo Precentor of the Church of Sarum.

51. Richard Clifford, A. D. 1396, afterwards Biſhop of Worceſter, and then of London, A. D. 1407; he was Keeper of the Privy-Seal while Archdeacon.

52. Robert de Hallum, A. D. 1401; he was Vicar-General alſo to Archbiſhop Arundel, Prebendary of York, and Rector of Northfleet in Kent, made Biſhop of Sarum 1408, and afterwards a Cardinal.

53. John Wakering; he was alſo Keeper of the Privy-Seal to King Henry the IVth, and after made Biſhop of Norwich 1416.

54. Thomas Rumnoth, ſome write him Henry; he queſtioned, and called before him John, Biſhop of St. Aſaph, as not legally holding his Biſhoprick, becauſe he was not inducted by the Archdeacon of Canterbury: For the Induction of all Biſhops in the Province he claimed as his Right: And Harpsfeild ſaith, his Fee for ſo doing, was Anciently Twenty Pieces of Gold, and the Biſhop's Horſe and Furniture, and that he uſed to induct him in Perſon; but that of late it is done by Letters Mandatory, and now he hath only the Twenty Pounds.

55. William Chichley, near Kinſman to the Archbiſhop of that Name. He was a Notary of the Apoſtolick See, as the Word was then, and died at Rome 1424, on which the Pope gave the Archdeaconry to his Nephew.

56. Proſper de Columna, a Boy under Fourteen Years of Age; and being an Alien, he was by the Royal Favour made a Denizen here; he was afterwards made a Cardinal.

57. Thomas Chichley, a Kinſman of Archbiſhop Chichley; he was alſo Prothonotary to the Pope, and Provoſt of Wingham-College, Maſter of St. Thomas's Hoſpital in Canterbury; died 1486, and was buried at Wingham.

58. Thomas Wittembourne, or rather Winterbourne, 1448; he was alſo Dean of St. Pauls.

59. John Bourchier, near Kinſman probably to the Archbiſhop of that Name: He died 1495.

60. Hugh Penthin, 1495.

61. William Warham, 1520, Kinſman to Archbiſhop Warham; he was alſo Provoſt of Wingham-College, Rector of Wrotham, and Prebendary of St. Pauls. He was alſo Rector of Hayes in Surrey: He went with Woolſey in his Embaſſy to France. On his Brother the Archbiſhop's Death, and Cranmer's ſucceeding him, he reſigned to Cranmer's Brother both this and the Provoſtſhip.

62. Edmund Cranmer, the Archbiſhop's Brother, A. D. 1554, he was deprived of this his Prebendary and Provoſtſhip of Wingham, and Parſonage of Ickham, for being Married, and ſaved his Life by flying into Germany. In his Room was placed,

63. Nicholas Harpsfeild, D. LL. Rector of Saltwood in Kent, and Prebendary of St. Pauls. When a Priſoner, he wrote his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England; for he was deprived in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, for not acknowledging her Supremacy; and was by her ſent to the Fleet Priſon, where he continued Twenty Four Years.

64. Edmund Gueſt; he was made Biſhop of Rocheſter A. D. 1559, and after that of Salisbury A. D. 1571.

Additions

Additions and Emendations.

IN Page 23. after the Account of Adiſham; add,

Cooting is a Manor in this Pariſh, omitted by Philpot; which hath been a long Time in the Family of Oxenden, and is now in the Poſſeſſion of Sir Henry Oxenden, Baronet, of Dean-Court in Wingham.

Page 25. Bekesbourn, Philpot ſaith there was once a ſmall Navigation out of the Stour to this Place. That after the Bechs went out, the Hauts had Poſſeſſion of the Manor of Bekesbourn; but that on Sir William Haut's leaving Two Daughters Coheirs, by Elizabeth it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Colepeper; and he exchanged it with Thomas, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for Biſhopsbourn. The Trouts here are eminently good.

Page 36. After the Account of Garwington Manor, add,

Howlets is another Manor here, quite omitted by Philpot, which is now the Eſtate and Reſidence of Sir Thomas Hales, Baronet, one of the Burgeſſes for the City of Canterbury; and one of the Commiſſioners appointed by Parliament, for the Enquiry into the Eſtates forfeited in the late Rebellion, againſt our moſt Gracious Sovereign King George.

At Page 39. after Bethriſden, add,

BETSHANGER lies at the Eaſt Side of Kent, about Two Miles and a half from Sandwich, in the Baliwick and Hundred of Eaſtry, Lath of St. Auſtin, Eaſt Diviſion of the County, and Diviſion of Juſtices in that Lath; in the Deanery of Sandwich, and Dioceſe of Canterbury. In this Church are ſeveral Memorials of the Family of Boys.

Sir Robert Porch, one of the Eight Chief Captains, or Lieutenant Governors of Dover-Caſtle, under John Lord Fynes, was Lord of this Place in the Time of King William the Firſt.

Betſhanger was once very Anciently the Eſtate of a Family called Marin, afterwards Marney: John de Marney, in ſome old Deeds called Manwarren, had a Charter of Free-warren for his Lands here, in the Firſt of King Edward the Iſt; but after this it was Sold to John de Soles, who died poſſeſs'd of it, in the 49th of King Edward the IIId. In the Beginning of King Richard the IId, it was the Eſtate of Bertram de Tancrey, Lord of Tancry Iſland in Fordwich, whoſe Deſcendants enjoyed it till the End of King Henry the IVth, and then it was Sold to Rutter; and thence to Leichfeild, about the Beginning of King Edward the IVth; the Arms of which Family are, or were in Philpot's Time, to be ſeen in the Glaſs Windows at Dane-Court in Tillmanſtone, hard by: And here it ſtaid ſtill King Henry the VIIIth, and then by an Heir General went to Thomas Cox, Eſq; Cuſtomer of Sandwich; who about the End of that Prince's Reign, ſold it to John Boys, Eſq; whoſe Eldeſt Son Edward dying without Iſſue, it went to John, the Second Brother, and from him to the Third Son, Jeffery; whoſe Son Edward Grotius Boys, dying alſo without Iſſue, A. D. 1706, bequeathed it by Will to his Kinſman, Thomas Brett, of Spring-Grove in Wye, Eldeſt Son of Leticia, his Father's only Surviving Siſter of the whole Blood; who in the Year 1711, Sold it to Salmon Morrice, Eſq; Captain of a Man of War, and he is the preſent Poſſeſſor.

Little Betſhanger was an Ancient Seat of the Family of Cliderow; Roger de Cliderow flouriſh'd here in King Edward the IId's Time. Richard Cliderow was Sheriff of Kent in the Fourth and Fifth Year of King Henry the IVth, and Knight of the Shire, in the Seventh Year of that Prince; he was ſoon after alſo made Admiral from the Thames Mouth all along the Saxon Shore, to St. George's Channel. But after this Eſtate had ſtaid in this Honourable Family till near the End of King Henry the VIIIth, it went by a Daughter to Thomas Stoughton, Eſq; who left Three Daughters, Elizabeth, that married Thomas Wild, Eſq; Helen, Wife of Edward Netherſole, and Mary wedded to Henry Paramour; theſe all joined in a Sale to Mr. John Gookin; who about the Firſt of King James the Iſt, ſold it to Sir Henry Ludlow, and he to Mr. Edward Boys, of Great Betſhanger, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Page 44. Bobbing-Place once was in the Tuſton Family; but during the Minority of an Heir, was by Truſtees ſold to Major Cook, who parted with it the ſame Way to Mr. Sole, Father of Mr. Cocking Sole, Barriſter, the preſent Poſſeſſor.

Page 45. After Sutton-Bam in Borden, this Account of the Manor of Poſiers is to be added.

Poſiers is a Manor here, which Anciently had Owners of its own Name, who continued here till King Henry the VIIIth's Reign; and then were ſucceeded by Wolgate, a Name of good Standing in Rucking, for Rumſted-Court did belong to it. By a Female Heir of the Name of Wolgate, Poſiers went in Marriage to Mr. Henry Genery, whoſe Deſcendant was of London, and the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Page 46. In Seaton, &c. in Bocton Aluph, carry the Manor down to Sir Chriſtopher Hales, as 'tis there, and then add,

From whom the Property devolved to his only Son, John Hales, Eſq; who died without Iſſue; but left Three Siſters; of which Mary married John Colepeper, Elizabeth became the Wife of John Stocker, and Margaret continued unmarried, till ſhe and Stocker joined together, and ſold their Part, (as appears by a Fine levied in the Fifth of King Edward the VIth,) to their Brother John Colepeper; who, with the Concurrence of his Elder Brother, Sir Thomas Colepeper, to whom he had before alienated his Share, ſold the whole to Sir Thomas Moyle, &c.

Page 49. Under Bocton Malherbe, the Manor of Bolley, or Bouley, is omitted; which ſupply thus,

Bolley, or Bouley, did Anciently hold of the Priory of St. Andrews in Rocheſter, by the Payment of a Buſhel of Wheat, (might not this give Name to Bolly-Hill there?) and had Owners of the Name of Bolle; and Gerverſe Bolle died poſſeſſed of it, in the 13th of King Richard the IId. Afterwards it came into the Poſſeſſion of the Cheneys, and ſtaid here till by Cicely, Daughter ter of Sir Thomas Cheyney, it went in Marriage to Sir Thomas Kempe, and by his Daughter Alice, it went the ſame way to Sir James Hales, whoſe Son, Sir Cheyney Hales, ſold it to Mr. John Hales of Lenebam; his Succeſſor alienated it to Mr. Samuel Hales, and his Son, Mr. Edward Hales, was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Page 49. (Numb. 3.) After this Imperfect Account of Wierton, I can only get Information to add,

That this is now become the Seat of Sir Chriſtopher Powell, Baronet; a Plate of whoſe Seat you will find in Vol. I. Page 49.

Numb. 4. There is another Seat in this Pariſh omitted by Philpot, and as I am informed, on this Occaſion: That Writer going to Captain Alchorne, the Poſſeſſor of it at that Time, a great Loyaliſt, and deſiring to ſee his Writings, &c. was feared by him to come with an ill Deſign, (i. e. of making ſome Diſcoveries which might ſerve the Sequeſtrators, &c. it being then the Time of Rebellion;) and therefore was denied all Information: And perhaps this may have been one Reaſon for ſome other Deficiences and Omiſſions in his Villare Cantianum.

This Captain John Alchorne, the laſt Poſſeſſeſſor of that Name, was lineally deſcended in the Sixth Generation from John de Alchorne, of Ulchorne, a Manor at Uckfeild in Suſſex. His great Grandſon bought this Seat. His Wife was Alice Walſingham, an Heireſs; and his Mother, Bennet, Daughter and Heir of Turner, of Sutton Valence.

In this Church, on a Pillar, is a fair Monument, in Memory of this Captain John Ulchorn, and Mary his Wife, Daughter of Thomas Aynſcomb, Eſq; of Mayfeild in Suſſex; and alſo of Richard Savage, Gent. their Grandſon, who died in his Travels at Prague in Bohemia, A. D. 1669.

There is alſo another Memorial of John Alchorn, his Son, Barriſter of the Inner-Temple, who married a Colepeper, of the Aylesford Family, and died A. D. 1636; he left an only Daughter, Anne, Daughter and ſole ſurviving Coheir of the above-mentioned Captain Alchorn, was married to John Savage, of Lyons-Inn, Gent. by which Means this Eſtate and Seat came into that Name, and is now in Poſſeſſion of their Eldeſt Son, John Savage, Eſq;.

This Branch of the Family of the Savages, came from the Savages of Blexworth in Dorſetſhire, and thoſe from a Branch of the Savages of Rock Savage in Cheſhire, the Noble Family of Earl Rivers.

The preſent Mr. Savage, is a Juſtice of Peace for Kent, truly Loyal, and a Gentleman of good Senſe and Learning, and one to whom I have been particularly obliged for many Communications in the Compoſition of this Work.

From which Family 'tis now become by Purchaſe the Eſtate of the Right Honourable the Earl of Stanhope, one of His Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Page 77. At Chiſtlet, the Manors of Greys and Ores are omitted; of which Philpot ſaith that they were,

A. D. 1317, given to the Abbey of St. Auſtin in Canterbury, by William Pontesbury, John Grove, Laurence Cornwallis, and Michael Baſterville; where they ſtaid till the general Diſſolution of the Monaſteries, and then were granted to Sir Chriſtopher Hales; whoſe Son and Heir John, dying without Iſſue, they were parted between his Three Siſters, who joined in the Manner as you will find above-mentioned in Seaton, in Bocton Aluph, in a Sale of it Whole to Sir Thomas Colepeper; and he ſent it the ſame way to Sir Henry Criſpe, of Quekes in Birchington, in the Iſle of Thanet; and his Deſcendant, Henry Criſpe, Eſq; was the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Page 139. In Hackington, Shelford, and Medgrove, are Two Manors mentioned; and it ſhould be noted further of them, that they had the ſame Proprietors with Broadoke, till the Beginning of King Henry the VIIIth; and then by Hardreſs they were ſold to Sir Edward Boughton of Woolwich; who in the 36th of that Prince, exchanged them with the Crown, for the Manor of Plumſtede, and there they ſtaid till Queen Elizabeth, as is there ſaid, granted them to Sir Roger Manwood for Life, &c.

Page 149. In Herne, the Manor of Lougting is omitted;

4. Louting is a ſmall Manor here, which was formerly part of the Eſtate of the Greenſhields: Henry Greenſheild enjoyed it at his Death, which was in the laſt Year of King Edward the IVth, who ordered it by Will to be Sold, and accordingly it was ſo to John Goddard; and his Deſcendant ſent it the ſame Way to Sir Henry Criſpe, of Quekes in Birchington, in the Iſle of Thanet, from whom it collaterally devolved to Criſpe, of Ore in Suſſex; the Executors of one of whoſe Deſcendants, ſold it to Mr. Monger of Surrey, the Poſſeſſor in Philpot's Time.

Page 193. After the Account of the Manor of Maidſtone, add,

From which Family 'tis now become by Purchaſe, the Eſtate of the Right Honourable the Lord Romney.

Page 208. In Milton this Manor is omitted;

6. Groveberſt; this Manor was once the Inheritance of a Family of this Name: Sir William de Groveberſt flouriſhed in the Reign of King Edward the Iſt and IId, and it continued in this Name 'till the Beginning of King Henry the VIIth, and then Sir Richard Groveburſt ſold it to Finch; who was deſcended from the Finches of Netherfeild; and in this Family it continued in Philpot's Time, being in the Poſſeſſion of John Finch, Eſq;.

In Newington by Hithe; The Manor of Black-Oſe, Philpot found afterwards to belong to the Priory of St. Radegund; and on the general Diſſolution of the Abbeys in K. Henry the VIIIth's Reign, coming to the Crown, it was exchanged for other Lands with Thomas, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and in the Firſt Year of Queen Elizabeth, it was reſumed by the Crown, and ſoon after granted to John Honiwood, Eſq; whoſe Deſcendant was in Poſſeſſion of it in Philpot's Time.

Page 223. After the Note from Domeſday, add this from Textus Roffenſis, Fol. 193.

De conſtitutione Capituli Roffenſis, eſt proviſum; Quod quicquid percipit Epiſcopus tam in Veſtiarijs quam in Calcearijs per manum Camerarij; & quicquid percipit in Cereis, & exenijs & conſuetis per manum Sacriſtæ, de Proventibus Eccleſiæ de Northflete recipiet.

Page 226. In Orpington, this Manor was omitted by Philpot, viz.

5. Mayfeild, or Mayville; this had very Anciently Proprietors of its own Name; but about King Edward the IIId's Time, it was come into the Poſſeſſion of Rokeſley and Scroop;

the former ſold his Part to Sir John Peche, deſcended from Sir William Peche, who with Sir Robert Peche, attended King Edward the Iſt at the famous Siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, and were Knighted there; and their Father, Gilbert de Peche, had been famous for his Service againſt the Welch, under King Henry the IIId, in his 42d Year. In Proceſs of Time Scroop ſold his Part in this Manor to Peche; but Sir John Peche, Knight and Banneret, who was Deputy of Calais, dying without Iſſue, it went by the Marriage of Elizabeth, his Siſter, to John Hart, Eſq; and in Philpot's Time was in the Poſſeſſion of William Hart of Lullingſton, Eſq;.

Page 227. In Penſhurſt: In 4. Salmons, this ſhould be inſerted;

This Manſion Houſe was Anciently called Salmannis; and was in the Ninth of King Henry the VIth, in the Poſſeſſion of William Salmon; whence Three Years after it was ſold to Rowe; and from that Name, in the Seventh of Henry the VIIth, it paſſed the ſame way to Walter Darkinghall, alias Darknolde; whoſe Son Robert, in the 24th of King Henry the VIIIth, alienated it to Thomas Willoughby, Eſq; Serjeant at Law. And Twelve Years after, Sir Thomas Willoughby deviſes it by Will to his Second Son, Mr. Chriſtian Willoughby: But by Clement, Daughter and Heir of Kenelme Willoughby, his Son, it went to Thomas Willoughby, a younger Brother of Sir Percival Willoughby; and his Son, Thomas Willoughby, ſold it in the 13th of Charles the Iſt, to John Seyliard of Penſhurſt, Eſq; who was the Owner of it in Philpot's Time.

Page 242. In 1. Poſtling, after the Word Columbers, in the Third Line, add this;

Which came to them by the Marriage of Amabilia, one of the Daughters of Sir Robert de Montfort, with Philip de Columbarijs; as Adelina, the other Siſter married Sir Robert de Vere. The Son of this Philip de Columbers, was of his Fathers Name, and he died poſſeſs'd of this Eſtate, in the 5th of King Edward the Iſt, &c.

P. 28. N. IV. An Account of the Family of Sackville, from Vincent's Review of York's Second Edition, Page 679, and ſome other Books and Mannſcripts.

HErbran de Salchevilla, Salcavilla, Saccavilla, or Sacvill, (which is a Town in Normandy) came hither with King William the Iſt, and afterwards returned back thither, and was Living in Normandy, A. D. 1079.

He had Three Sons, Jordan, William, and Robert; and a Daughter Avice, who was married to Walter, Lord of Alfage and Hugh-Ville in Normandy; ſhe had Iſſue by him Richard Jordan, Walter and Helias, who were all Educated in Normandy by their Uncle Herbran. But then William de Sacvill, Knight, the Second Son of Herbran, lived in England; and by his Wife Albreda, had Three Daughters and Heirs; Hodierna, who married Matthew de Gernon; Agnes, the Wife of Richard de Aneſtye, and Beatrix whoſe Husband was William de Glanville, Lord of Bromholme, and Founder of the Church there in King Henry the Iſt's Reign.

Sir Robert Sacvill, Knight, Third Son of Herbran, had the good Luck to go on Shore in France with the Earl of Morteign, who was not well, out of that unfortunate Ship, in which King Henry the Iſt's Eldeſt Son, and a vaſt Number of the Nobility were Shipwrecked and Drowned. He was living Anno Dom. 1119; but was ſo uneaſy at the Perfidiouſneſs of the Nation in forſaking Maud the Empreſs, and ſetting up King Stephen, that he turned Religious, and went into Colcheſter Abbey; where he died, and was buried, and to which he was a good Benefactor.

By Leticia his Wife he had Iſſue, Jordan, Stephen, Nigell, and Helias de Sacville. Nigell was Parſon of the Church of Barges, in the 18th of King Henry the IId, and was Anathematiſed by Becket, for Curtailing his Graces Horſe.

Helias was Witneſs to the Charter of Gilbert Earl of Clare, by which he gave the Church of Tunbridge to the Abbey of Lewes in Suſſex.

Jordan, the Eldeſt Brother, married Ela, Daughter and Coheir of Ralph de Den, Lord of the Manor of Buckhurſt in Suſſex. This Ralph de Den, was Son of Robert Pincerna, alias Den, who held Six Knights Fees in Chalvington, of which Manor Buckhurſt was Parcel.

This Ela de Sacvill, in her Widowhood, Founded the Abbey of Begham, or Beyham, lying between Suſſex and Kent; and had Iſſue by her Husband above-named, Jordan, Richard, Geffrey, Ralph, Guy, and Warren; of whom Sir Jordan de Sacvill, the Eldeſt, was a Baron in King Richard's the Iſt's Reign; his Lady's Name was Clementia; Richard, the Second Brother, was alſo a Baron, as Vincent believes. Sir Geffrey, the Third Son, and Ralph de Merſey, his next Brother, incurring King John's Diſpleaſure, had their Eſtates Seized, and were fined a Thouſand Marks. Geffrey had the Manor of Buckhurſt, was Knighted, and had Iſſue Jordan and Guy; and a Daughter called Johann, who was Married to Sir William St. Leger. Jordan was a Baron, and unhappily engaged with others of that Rank againſt King John, loſt his Lands in Ireland by it, but was reſtored to it again by King Henry the IIId.

By his Lady Maud he had Two Sons, William and Bartholomew; the former, William Sacvill of Buckhurſt, married Clara, Daughter of Matthew de Haſtings, and had by her a Son, who was Sir Jordan de Sacvill; who joining with the Barons againſt King Henry the IIId, was taken Priſoner at the Battel of Eveſham. He married Margery, Daughter of Robert de Aguillon, and died in the Firſt of King Edward the Iſt. His Son Sir Andrew de Sackville, eſpouſing, I ſuppoſe, the ſame Cauſe which his Father had done, was Impriſoned by King Henry the IIId in Dover Caſtle; and though by Friends he got his Liberty, yet he was forced by the King into other Bonds; and made to Marry, without any Dower, the Lady Ermyntrude, of the Houſhold of Queen Eleanor: And by this he regained not only the King's Favour, but alſo a good Part of his Father's Eſtate. His Son was Sir Andrew Sackville, who ſerved King Edward the Iſt in the Wars in Scotland ſo well, that he rewarded him with a Charter of Free-warren, for his Lands in Oxfordſhire; he died in the 9th of King Edward the IId; and left a Son, Sir Andrew Sackville, who was High-Sheriff of Suſſex and Surrey, in the 42d of King Edward the IIId, and attended on the Black Prince in his Wars in France. He had Iſſue Sir Thomas Sackville of Buckhurſt, and a Daughter Alice, who married John de la Zouch. Sir Thomas was Sheriff of Suſſex and Surrey in the 8th of King Henry the IVth, and in the 11th of King Henry the VIth. He was Abroad in the Wars in France for a good while. His Lady was Margaret, Daughter of Sir John Dalingrugge, of Bodyham in Suſſex; by whom he had Andrew and Edward Sackville; he was buried in Beyham Abbey.

Edward outlived his Brother, and ſucceeded his Father in the Eſtate; and married Margaret, Daughter of Richard Wakehurſt, of Wakehurſt in Suſſex, Eſq; his Son was Humphrey Sackville, of Buckhurſt, Eſq;, who married Katherine, Daughter of Sir Thomas Brown, Knight, and Treaſurer of the Houſhold to King Henry the VIth; by whom he had Iſſue Richard Sackville of Buckhurſt, Eſq; Twice High-Sheriff of Suſſex and Surrey in King Henry the VIIth's Time. His Lady was Iſabella, Daughter of John Diggs, of Barham in Kent, Eſq; and his Son by her, John Sackville of Buckhurſt, Eſq; was Thrice Sheriff of both the Counties above-mentioned. He married Margaret, Daughter of Sir Thomas Bullen, of Bickling in Norfolk, who was Siſter to the Earl of Wiltſhire and Ormond, the Father of Queen Anna Bullen. By her he had Iſſue Sir Richard Sackville of Buckhurſt, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Privy-Counſellor to King Edward the VIth, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth. His Lady was Winifride, Daughter of Sir John Bruges, by whom he had Iſſue Thomas Sackville, and Anne, who was Baroneſs of Dacres in the South. Thomas was employed Abroad, and thereby became well verſed in Foreign Languages and States. He was ſometime a Priſoner at Rome; but being releaſed, and ſent for Home by Queen Elizabeth, to whom he was allied in Blood, he was created Baron of Buckhurſt, made a Privy-Counſellor, and Knight of the Garter, and at laſt Lord High Treaſurer, and Earl of Dorſet: And he was after this, in King James the Iſt's Reign, made Lord Treaſurer for Life. He married Cicely, Daughter of Sir John Baker, of Siſinghurſt in Kent; and by her had Four Sons, Robert, the Eldeſt, Lord Buckhurſt, Henry, William, and Thomas, and Three Daughters. Robert was Earl of Dorſet, and married Margaret, only Daughter of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk. He founded an Hoſpital at Eaſt-Grinſted in Suſſex, and endowed it with Three Hundred and Thirty Pounds per Annum, to maintain Thirty One poor Perſons for ever. His Second Son Richard outliving the Eldeſt, Thomas became Earl of Dorſet, and married the Lady Anne Clifford, Daughter and ſole Heir of George, Earl of Cumberland, by whom he left only Two Daughters; Margaret, married to John Earl of Thanet, and Iſabella to James Earl of Northampton. Upon his Deceaſe, his Brother, Sir Edward Sackville, who was made Knight of the Bath at the Coronation of Prince Charles, ſucceeded him in the Earldom of Dorſet. He married Mary, Daughter and ſole Heir to Sir George Curzon, of Croxall in the County of Derby, Knight, and left Iſſue by her Two Sons, Richard Lord Buckhurſt, and Edward Sackvill, Eſq;. He was Privy Counſellor to King Charles the Iſt, Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold, Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Suſſex and Middleſex, and Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter (a). His Eldeſt Son Richard, ſucceeded him in his Honours, 1652: He married the Lady Frances Cranfield, Daughter to Lionel Earl of Middleſex, Lord High-Treaſurer of England; and at Length ſole Heir to her Brother Lionel, Earl of Middleſex; by whom he had Iſſue Four Sons, Charles, Edward, Richard and Thomas, and Three Daughters; Mary, married to the Earl of Orrery in Ireland; Anne to the Earl of Hume in Scotland; and Frances to Sir George Lane, Knight, afterwards Viſcount Laneborough, in the Kingdom of Ireland.

His Eldeſt Son, Charles Lord Buckhurſt, was in the Life-time of his Father, upon the Death of his Uncle Lionel, Earl of Middleſex, created by King Charles the IId, Earl of Middleſex, being at that Time one of the Lords of his Majeſty's Bedchamber. He married Elizabeth, Widow of Charles Earl of Falmouth, by whom he had no Iſſue: In the Year 1677, by the Death of his Father, he became Earl of Dorſet. His conſtant and firm Adherence to the Proteſtant Intereſt, and the great Share he had in bringing about the happy Revolution, juſtly Entitled him to the Favours that were conferred upon him by their late Majeſties, King William and Queen Mary, upon their happy Acceſſion to the Throne: He was made Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold, one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, Lord Lieutenant of the County of Suſſex, and had the Honour to be Conſtituted one of the Lords Juſtices of England in the Abſence of the King, for Four Years ſucceſſively. His Second Wife was the Lady Mary Compton, Daughter to James Earl of Northampton, by whom he had Iſſue Lionel Cranfeild, Lord Buckhurſt, the preſent Earl of Dorſet and Middleſex; who is alſo Knight of the Garter, one of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, and Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports; and Mary, who married Henry Duke of Beaufort.

Page 572. I might add to the Honour of good Archbiſhop Grindal, what Mr. Strype had not ſeen; that in a Collection of Papers purchaſed by the Reverend and Learned Dr. Kennet, Lord Biſhop of Peterborough, for the Uſe of Archbiſhop Teniſon, and by his Grace repoſited in the Library at Lambeth, for publick Service, there is an Original Letter from Mr. Nicholas Fante, to Anthony Bacon, Eſq;. Dated from the Court at Greenwich, the 6th of May, 1583; running thus,

" The good Archbiſhop of Canterbury is pre-
" ſently to reſign his Place, being now alto" gether Blind in Body, but moſt vigilant in " Mind to do Good ſo long as he liveth. And " therefore having made great Suit to be " removed, and to obtaine Licenſe to Founde
" certaine Schooles, and Places of Learnynge
" in the Univerſitye, hath to that Purpoſe diſ-
" charged his Trayne, and employed all the " Profittes he hath ſpared of his Livinge, beſides
" his ordinarye Expences, reſervinge ſome
" litell to maintayne him, and a few Seruantes,
" the reſt of his Life, which cannot be longe.
" It is thought that Whytgyfte, now Byſhoppe
" of Worceſter, will ſucceed him, but wherein
" beſides his Place, it is eaſily gueſſed.

Page 573. I might add, That as to this Account of Bancroft, it is the Opinion of ſome Great Men, that the Character given by Lord Clarendon in his Hiſtory, of this Archbiſhop, has, like many other Turns, been owing to the Editors, rather than to the Honourable Author of that Work; who in other Parts of it, ſufficiently implies his better Opinion of Archbiſhop Abbot, than either of Bancroft that preceded, or of Laud that followed after: I much ſuſpect that the Phraſe of, had he been ſucceeded by one who underſtood and loved the Church, was of a later Stamp, and Coined in or near the Oxford Preſs. If this Conjecture be Wrong, let the Original Copy be produced, and it will oblige the World in many Things; and poſſibly, among other Inſtances, will help to diſcover that in the Printed Work there is a greater Slight put upon Archbiſhop Abbot, than was really the Judgment of that Noble Earl.

Page 282. Paſters, alias Plainers, and Sepham, are now both in the Poſſeſſion of David Polhil, Eſq;.

Page 331. At the End of the Account of Weſtwell, add this,

A. D. 1575, Mildred Nerrington of this Pariſh, was thought by ſome to have been poſſeſs'd; and accuſed one Old Alice for ſending the Devil to her. Roger Newman, then Vicar of this Place, and John Brainford, Vicar of Kennington, tried to diſpoſſeſs the Spirit by Faſting and Prayer, and thought they had done it, Printing the Relation, back'd by the Atteſtation of Six others.

But Mildred being examined before Mr. Thomas Wotton, and Mr. George, confeſſed the Impoſture, and ſhewed her Trances, and all her Tricks before them. Vid. Scot's Diſcourſe of Witchcraft, Book 7. Cap. 1, 2. and Dr. Hutchinſon's Eſſay on Witchcraft, Page 27. and 189.

Sandwich, Page 375. add; There was Anciently a Place near Sandwich called Caſtle-Mead.

In the 8th of King Richard the IId, was a Royal Order for encloſing and fortifying the Town.

In the 6th of King Edward the IIId, was a Grant to Nicholas Champneys, to encloſe a Piece of Ground near Sandwich Harbour, called Ho-Sand, of Thirty Acres.

In the Firſt of King Richard the IId, the Staple of Wool was removed from Queenborough to Sandwich.

In Sandwich was formerly an Officer called the Virger of the Town and Caſtle; he carried a Virge; he had an Houſe appointed him near Dam-Gate, and Caſtle-Mead alſo belonged to his Office in the 30th of King Henry the VIth.

In the 15th of King Edward the IId was an Order, allowing the Borough of Sandwich to turn the Courſe of the Water of Geſtling; in which was a Fiſhery in the 24th of King Edward the IIId.

Theſe from the Tower Records.

Page 378. Towards the bottom of the Firſt Column, this Note might have been added in the Margin.

The Reverend and Curious Mr. Lewis, Rector of Minſter, in the Iſle of Thanet, thinks that the Eaſtern Mouth, or Opening into this Harbour, was Anciently at or near Ebbes-Fleet; where there is now a Sluice for the draining of the Level. And 'tis the Ancient Tradition, that Ships uſed formerly to come in here. If ſo, all the Tract of Land between thus and Sandwich, muſt have then been under Water; of which indeed there are now manifeſt Signs; all the Road being to this Day Sea-Beach and Sand: And at Stonar, the Beach is caſt up one Fourth of a Mile almoſt from the preſent Chanel. This was done on the falling off of the Sea; which, at Time of Low-Water, about this Place, is now above a Mile from the Shore. On this Deſertion of the Sea, the Low-Land on each Side was Inned, as we call it, or recovered from it, and the Water confined to the preſent Chanel.

Nota de Regula quo modo Curia de Shipweia Ordinetur & Obſervetur.

Firſt, IT is to be underſtood, that when and as often as the King's Majeſty by his Letters Patents under his Great Seal pleaſeth to make, ordain and conſtitute any Lord or Knight of his, Conſtable of his Caſtle of Dover, and Warden of his Five Ports, the ſaid Warden at his Pleaſure, and Time convenient for him, ſhall ſend his Precept under the Seal of his Office, from the ſaid Caſtle of Dover, unto every Port Town, and Village, of his ſaid Five Ports, and Members of every of them, ſuch as be Corporate; commanding every Mayor and Bailiff of the ſame, to give good Summons, and lawful Warning of Forty Days unto Six, Five, or Four Jurats, of the beſt and moſt diſcreet of every of the ſaid Towns and Villages; that the ſaid Mayor, and ſuch Number of Jurats, and the ſaid Bailiffs, and ſuch Number of Jurats, do appear in their proper Perſons before the ſaid Warden, at the Court of Shipway, and the Place accuſtomed there, at ſuch Day and Times as may be expreſſed unto them by the ſaid Precepts.

At the which Court Day, and Time, the ſaid Warden muſt be in his proper Perſon, and at convenient Time, when he and all thoſe Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, be aſſembled and come together, into the ſaid Court at Shipway, at the Place accuſtomed there, and the ſaid Warden ſet in his Seat there, Three ſolemn Proclamations ſhall be made in this Wiſe here following, (that is to ſay,)

" All Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats of the " Five Ports, and their Members, that be ſum- " moned and warned to appear in their proper " Perſons, before the Lord Warden, at this the " Kings and Queens Majeſty's Court of Ship- " way, here to be holden this Day; draw you " near and attend to the Court, upon the Peril " that ſhall follow of it.

And then the Bailiffs and Jurats of Haſtings ſhall firſt be called to put in their aforeſaid Precept, and the Names of ſuch Jurats as be ſummoned of the ſaid Town, to appear at the ſaid, &c. And after that, the Mayors and Jurats of Dover and Sandwich, or which the Court pleaſeth to call firſt of them, for they be both of one Strength; and then the Mayors and Jurats of Rye and Winchelſey, or in likewiſe which the Court will call firſt of them, &c. and then the Mayor and Jurats of Hythe and Rumney, or which they will firſt of them; then the Mayors and Jurats of Feverſham, Fordwich and Folkeſtone, or which the Court will call firſt of them, &c. And then the Bailiffs and Jurats of Lidd, Pevenſey, Seaford, and Tenterden, and every of them, muſt bring into the ſaid Court his ſaid Precept, and the Names of ſuch Jurats as be warned to appear.

And

And after that the ſaid Precepts be laid into the ſaid Court, and the ſaid Perſons called have Anſwered and Appeared upon the ſame, then the Warden ſhall cauſe his Commiſſion, (that is to ſay) his ſaid Patrent to be openly Read then and there, with a Letter of Attendance under his Seal of Office annexed unto the ſame; and after that the ſaid Patent, and Letter of Attendance be Read, &c.

Then one of the Mayors of the Five Principal Towns of the ſaid Five Ports, ſhall give the Charge unto the ſaid Lord Warden in Manner and Form here following, (that is to ſay,) &c. You ſhall keep and maintain the Franchesſ. Liberties, Cuſtoms and Uſages of the Five Ports, in all that you may do, by the Allegiance that you owe unto the King of England, and by your Knighthood; and the ſaid Lord Warden ſhall hold up his Right Hand Breaſt High, and more, and ſhall ſay, yea, if God will, I ſhall to my Power.

The ſaid Lord Warden ſhall not be Sworn upon a Book, when he ſhall take his Charge, otherwiſe than is aboveſaid; nor he ſhall not need to ſay the Words above expreſſed after him that giveth the Charge, but only hold up his Hand and affirm it, and ſay, Yea, &c.

And when the ſaid Lord Warden hath ſo taken his ſaid Charge in Manner and Form as is aforeſaid, then all the Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, ſhall honourably receive him, and do unto him then and there once Reverence, and after that they have uſed to give unto him a Worſhipful Gift on Continent in the ſame Place.

And after that nothing more ſhall be done in that Court that Day, neither Writ, Return, Complaint, nor other Things, except only that there be any notable Mandament of our Lord the King's, which if any be, ſhall be openly Read and Publiſhed there, and ſo Proclamation ſhall be made to Diſſolve the ſaid Court in this wiſe here following; (that is to ſay,)

All Mayors, Bailiffs, Jurats, and all other that have had to do at this Court of Shipway, before my Lord Warden this Day, you ſhall depart, and take your Eaſe, unto a new Warning; and God ſave the King, my Lord Warden, and all the Court.

And then and immediately there muſt be made another ſolemn O Yes, and after the ſaid O Yes, the Proclaimer ſhall ſay, My Lord Warden deſireth and prayeth all Mayors, Bailiffs, Jurats, and others, whatſoever they be now here preſent, to go with him to the Caſtle of Saltwood, and there to take ſuch Repaſt as is ordained, and you ſhall be Welcome.

Finis hujus diei.

Whenſoever the Court of Shipway ſhall be holden for any other Cauſe, or Matter for Enquiry for the King, upon the Points and Articles that be enquirable of there; or by the Complaints of any Plantiffs or Defendants made unto the Lord Warden, that any Mayors, Bailiffs, or Jurats, have given erroneous Judgment againſt him or them, be it in Plea, Poll, or Perſonal.

The ſaid Lord Waryen may cauſe a Court to be holden at Shipway, ſo that he do ſend his ſeveral Precepts to every Mayor and Jurats, and to every Bailiff and Jurats where that ſuch Bailiff is by Election, or elſe to the Jurats of ſuch Town or Place, where neither Mayor nor Bailiff is by Election, that they and every of them, upon good Summons, and lawful Warning of Forty Days, do appear before him at the ſaid Court of Shipway, at the Place accuſtomed there; at the which Court, the ſaid Lord Warden muſt alſo needs be in his proper Perſon, for no Court may be holden at Shipway, except the King's Grace, or the Lord Warden be there in proper Perſon, &c.

Item. &c. Three Proclamations ſhall be made, as is aboveſaid, &c. Item, an Inqueſt of Twelve Barons of the Ports and Members ſhall be Empannelled, Elect and Sworn, to enquire, &c. Firſt if any have ſpoken Treaſon againſt our Lord the King, or his Queen. Item, The Second, if any have counterfeited the King's Seal or Seals. Item the Third, If any have made falſe Money, waſted, clipped, or diminiſhed the King's Coin. Item the Fourth, Is of Treaſure founden and concealed. Item the Fifth is, if any Mayor, Bailiffs, or Jurats, have given falſe and erroneous Judgments. And the Sixth is, if the Ports, or any of them, have withdrawn or withholden any Part of their Service to the King's Navy, for and upon due Summons and Warnings of Forty Days, &c. and if that any Man be found guilty of Treaſon-ſpeaking, or of falſe Money-making, Waſhing or Clipping, &c. Death; and as to the Reſidue, Fines and Impriſonment.

And if it happen any of the ſaid Mayors, or Bailiffs, to make Default for lack of Appearance

ance of the ſaid Court of Shipway, yet ſuch Mayor or Bailiff may make and depute a ſufficient Attorney to appear for him, and in his Name at that Court the ſame Day, ſo that ſuch Mayor or Bailiff have ſufficient Cauſe, and a lawful Excuſe of his ſo being abſent from the ſaid Court; and that ſaid Cauſe or Excuſe, muſt be declared and apparent in Writing under the common Seal of that Town, that ſuch Mayor or Bailiff is of; or elſe every ſuch Mayor or Bailiff be amerſed at a Mark of Money; that is to ſay, Thirteen Shillings and Fourpence, to be levied of his Goods and Chatels, that ſo maketh Default, to the Uſe of the ſaid Lord Warden.

And if that it happen any Jurat to make Default for lack of Appearance at the ſaid Court of Shipway, that hath been lawfully Summoned and Warned to appear in his proper Perſon at the ſame Court, be he amerſed at a Demy Mark of Money, that is to ſay, Six Shillings and Eight Pence, to be levied of his Goods and Chatels that ſo maketh Default, to the Uſe of the ſaid Lord Warden; except only that ſuch Jurats, ſo making Default, have any lawful Let, and ſufficient Excuſe, of and for his ſo being abſent from the ſaid Court; which lawful Let, and ſufficient Excuſe, muſt be declared and juſtified by Affidavit; that is to ſay, by the Oaths of the Mayor and Jurats, or Bailiffs and Jurats of that ſaid Town that ſuch Jurats is of.

And if that any Man be Indicted of any of theſe Three Points and Articles here following, that is to ſay, of Treaſon wrought, done, or purpoſed to be done or ſpoken againſt the King's Grace, or his Heirs Apparent, or againſt the Queen's Grace, or hath arreſted the King's People, and diſturbed them againſt the King's Peace.

Or if that any Man hath made, falſed, waſhed, clipped, or miniſhed, the King's Coin, or Money.

Then anon, if he be then and there preſent, be he immediately arreſted by the Lord Warden's Marſhal of the King's Caſtle of Dover; and then the ſaid Lord Warden, by his own Mouth, with the Aſſent of the Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, there ſitting in open Court, ſhall give Judgment, that he ſo Indicted ſhall be drawn about the Place of Shipway, and then incontinently in the Preſence of the ſaid Lord Warden, and all the Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, be hanged in the ſame Place till he be Dead.

And if it happen any Man to be indicted of any of the ſaid Three Points or Articles that ſhall not fortune to be then and there preſent, that then the ſaid Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats of the ſaid Two Towns of Hethe and Rumney, ſhall be ſtraightly charged and commanded upon all that they may forfeit unto the King's Grace, that he or they that firſt may take or find him that ſo is Indicted at any Place or Time within the Franchiſes and Liberties of the ſaid Five Ports or Members elſewhere, ſhall take him, and him ſafely hold and keep, and then immediately thereupon, ſhall give Warning, and ſure Knowledge unto the ſaid Lord Warden of the ſame, whereupon a Court ſhall be holden at Shipway, and thither ſhall the ſaid Felon be brought or led, and there he ſhall have his Judgment as aforeſaid, &c.

Item. If any Mayor or Bailiffs, or the Jurats of any of the Towns of Hethe and Romney, be Indicted of falſe and erroneous Judgment given, then anon, that Mayor or Bailiff, or that Jurat, or any of the ſaid Towns of Hethe or Romney, ſhall riſe out, and depart from his Seat that he ſit in, and ſhall ſtand before the ſaid Lord Warden; and all the other Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats, in the Face of the Court, then and there the ſaid Lord Warden, by his own Mouth, with the Aſſent of the other Mayors, Bailiffs, and Jurats aforeſaid, then and there Being and Sitting with him, ſhall reverſe the ſaid Judgment, and award Damages to the Party Plaintiffs that hath ſuſtained the Wrong; and then that Mayor, Bailiff, or Jurat, that did give the ſaid falſe and erroneous Judgment, anon ſhall be depoſed of his Office, and all the Franchiſes of that Town that he was of ſhall be ſeized into the King's Hands, ſo to remain till that they have made Fine with the King's Grace at his Pleaſure for the ſame.

And if that the ſaid Judgment aforeſaid, be found ſufficient and true, then anon he that made the Suit ſhall be Arreſted by the ſaid Lord Warden's Marſhal, and be put into the Priſon of the ſaid Lord Warden, there to abide and remain, without Bail or Main-Prize, till he hath made Fine with the King's Grace, and with the Mayor and Commoners, or Bailiffs and Commoners, or Jurat and Commoners of the ſame Town that the ſaid Suit was againſt, after the Taxation of the ſaid Lord Warden, and other Mayors and Bailiffs; neither may no Man make Attorney in ſuch Place, more than in Appeal.

Item. If any Mayor, Bailiff, Jurat, Combaron or Commoner be Indicted of that, that he hath withdrawn and withholden the King's Service with Ships on the Sea, when after lawful Summons hath been given to do the ſame, then he or they that ſo be Indicted, ſhall have ſuch like Judgment as is aforeſaid, of him that is attainted of falſe Judgment.

Item. If any Man be Indicted of Treaſure that he hath founden under the Earth, and hath concealed it, then anon he ſhall be arreſted by the ſaid Lord Warden's Marſhal, and be put into the Priſon of the ſaid Lord Warden, there to remain and abide without Bail or Main-Prize, till that he hath made Fine with the King's Grace for the ſame, &c.

Item. If any Bailiff be Indicted of that, that he hath taken any unreaſonable and unlawful Cuſtom of any Perſon, otherwiſe than the Cuſtom and Uſage hath been of old Time paſſed; or of that, that he hath not done due Execution after the Judgments of the Mayors there, as Mayors is of the Jurats; whereas no Mayor is by Election within any Town or Village of the ſaid Five Ports and Members; or and if he hath done any Execution againſt ſuch Judgments aforeſaid; or contrary and againſt the Liberties and Franchiſes of that Town that he is of, then anon be he arreſted by the aforeſaid Marſhal, and put into the Priſon of the ſaid Lord Warden, there to remain till he hath made Fine for the ſame unto the King's Grace, and alſo to the Commoners of that Town he is of.

Note. That at the Court of Shipway ſhall be no manner of Plea, nor Pleadings, but only in Engliſh, which hath been ſo uſed without Time of Man's Mind.
